F 157
S7
S86+

Cornell University Library
Ithaca, New York

BOUGHT WITH THE INCOME OF THE JACOB H. SCHIFF
ENDOWMENT FOR THE PROMOTION OF STUDIES IN HUMAN CIVILIZATION
1918

FRAGILE PAPER
Please handle this book with care, as the paper is brittle.

CENTENNIAL HISTORY

OF

SUSQUEHANNA COUNTY,

PENNSYLVANIA.

BY

RHAMANTHUS M. STOCKER.

ILLUSTRATED.

PHILADELPHIA:
R. T. PECK & CO.
1887.

5161
E92

A676779

Copyright, 1887,

BY R. T. PECK & CO.

All Rights Reserved.

PRESS OF
JAS. B. RODGERS PRINTING COMPANY, PHILADELPHIA.

DB

PUBLISHERS' PREFACE.

AFTER more than a year, the history which we undertook to publish has been prepared by careful writers. The book is larger, by several hundred pages, than was advertised in the announcement.

The engraving and mechanical execution of the work have been in the hands of capable artists.

Early in the preparation of this volume, arrangements were made by the publishers with Miss Blackman, whereby any facts in her work could be used by the compilers of this history, by giving her due credit for the same. Miss Blackman's book has been particularly valuable in preparing pioneer history in the several localities, some of the matter having been obtained by her from persons now dead, facts that could not easily be duplicated. We cheerfully make this acknowledgment to the general value and accuracy of Miss Blackman's work.

The compilers are indebted for courteous treatment and assistance to the county, township and borough officials, the clergy, the press, members of the bar, many school teachers, Hon. F. C. Bunnell and hundreds of others whose names are sometimes mentioned in connection with the information given by them. Especially are we indebted to the aged people of Susquehanna County (of whom there are many on her healthful hills) for the cheerful manner in which they have contributed of their knowledge of events happening in their childhood days; and some of the pleasantest reminiscences of the compilers will be the remembrance of the aged men and women who have contributed to these annals.

Among those who have thus assisted in this work, it may not be invidious to mention Rev. A. L. Benton, Rev. E. A. Warriner, Captain H. F. Beardsley, Superintendent B. E. James, Professor S. S. Thomas, Professor C. T. Thorpe, E. A. Weston, Esq., Deacon E. T. Tiffany, James T. Du Bois, Elder William C. Tilden, James C. Bushnell, Mrs. S. B. Chase and Mrs. H. D. Warner. Others who have contributed are mentioned in connection with the matter furnished. John L. Rockey, of Lebanon, Pa., wrote many of the townships and boroughs, and the whole work, in a comprehensive sense, has been under the editorial charge of Rhamanthus M. Stocker, Esq., of Honesdale, Pa.

THE PUBLISHERS.

The original of this book is in the Cornell University Library.

There are no known copyright restrictions in the United States on the use of the text.

http://archive.org/details/cu31924028854689

EDITOR'S PREFACE.

SUSQUEHANNA COUNTY belongs to that northern tier of counties that was claimed by Connecticut; consequently the pioneer settlers were largely from Connecticut and other New England States. Settlements were begun in Susquehanna County one hundred and sixty-seven years after the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock, and soon after the close of the Revolutionary War in 1787. In presenting this CENTENNIAL HISTORY of the county to the public, we have endeavored to trace the history of the aborigines who inhabited or roamed over this region; also the treaties between them and the whites, and the battles finally terminating with Sullivan's victory over the Six Nations, which forever destroyed the power of those confederated tribes over the territory embraced in this history. Although no part of Susquehanna County was engaged in the Pennamite War, yet it was a portion of the territory contended for, and the early settlement of this county was made largely by Revolutionary soldiers under the impulse of the Connecticut claimants, as represented by the Delaware and Susquehanna Companies; hence a brief history of the contentions between Connecticut and Pennsylvania for dominion, and lastly by individuals of those States for right of soil, have been given. While the dominion of Pennsylvania was established by the Trenton decree in 1782, the rights of individual owners to the soil which they had improved, was a subject of controversy for many years thereafter; and individuals claiming under Connecticut title in Susquehanna County were prosecuted under the Pennsylvania Intrusion laws, and compelled to pay Pennsylvania owners for their lands.

Realizing that the pioneer settlement of this county constitutes its heroic age, the compiler has endeavored to obtain the names of all the pioneers possible, with such incidents connected with their settlement as are deemed worthy of preservation in a history of the people, within the limits undertaken by the publishers of this volume. In so doing we do not claim to give every incident of interest that has happened in the many families of Susquehanna County; to do that would require many volumes the size of this, and the details would become too burdensome for the general reader; but it is our intention to give sufficient details of the privations, sufferings and hardships of the pioneers and subsequent settlers, with biographical sketches of men, in many cases accompanied by portraits, and such chapters on general history as shall make a very full and complete history of the county. To that end one chapter is devoted to the Legal, another to the Medical Profession. The Press and Authors, Education, Customs and Manners of the Pioneers and Military matters are considered in separate chapters. These general chapters, together with the borough and township histories, are intended to be sufficiently comprehensive to include all that is desirable to preserve for the general reader of the history of Susquehanna County.

The New England States are justly proud of their history, and have preserved with religious care every incident obtainable in connection with the Pilgrim Fathers, but their pioneer history is that of foreign colonists settling their States. They were sturdy men and true, with a high conception of liberty for their age, but with some of the spirit of intolerance and persecution which they had learned from their adversaries characteristic of that time; but Susquehanna County is a child of liberty, settled after freedom's battle had been fought, largely by heroes who helped gain our independence. In 1787 Susquehanna County was a vast wilderness, unbroken and untrodden by any one save the Indians, and perchance an occasional hunter or trapper of the white race. In that year commencements were made at Great Bend, Harmony, Oakland and Brooklyn, and from those rude pioneer beginnings the settlement of Susquehanna County has proceeded until it now contains a thriving population of forty thousand or more inhabitants. The Federal constitution was adopted in 1787, so that the county had its growth and development under the American form of government; and her citizens have ever been tolerant in religion, progressive in education and liberty loving. During the anti-slavery contest, Montrose was the home of the fugitive slave, and in the temperance reform Susquehanna County has ever taken an advanced position. Her farming population are among the most intelligent in the State, and she has produced a large number of teachers, lawyers and doctors, and her full share of authors, statesmen, judges and clergymen. In the late war Susquehanna, true to her Revolutionary ancestry, contributed at least three thousand of her sons to preserve the Union. Surely this county has reason to preserve her history, and teach it to her children; and it is believed that the perusal of these pages will increase a love of home and native land, and a veneration for the pioneer fathers who wrested homes from the wilderness and planted the school-house and the church side by side, and established a healthful condition of society which should be perpetuated and improved as knowledge and light increase from generation to generation.

If any one thinks that his ancestors or his family have not received the notice they deserve, let him remember that that there are no ten men in Susquehanna County or out of it that would agree as to the relative merit of the different individuals in it; that doubtless many facts of interest have escaped the closest scrutiny of the compiler and his assistants. It has not been our intention, however, to omit any person or fact that deserves notice in this work. Our thanks are due, and are most heartily extended, to all that large number of persons who have encouraged and assisted us in the preparation of this history.

"One Cæsar lives, a thousand are forgot;"

R. M. STOCKER.

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I. PAGES

Aboriginal Inhabitants—Lenni Lenape—Six Nations—Extinguishment of Indian Title—Historical Map of Northeastern Pennsylvania 1–5

CHAPTER II.

Charles II. Charters—Connecticut, Susquehanna and Delaware Indian Purchases—Pennamite War—Westmoreland County, 5–11

CHAPTER III.

Battle of Wyoming—General Sullivan's March—General Clinton at Great Bend—Defeat of the Six Nations—An Indian Claim—Adventures of Hilborn 11–20

CHAPTER IV.

Connecticut Claimants—Trenton Decree—Second Pennamite War—Erection of Luzerne County—Act of 1795—Drinker's Letters—Bartlet Hinds Mobbed 20–26

CHAPTER V.

Land Titles—Warrantee Map—Names of Warrantees 26–37

CHAPTER VI.

Topography—Geology, Forests, Zoology 38–43

CHAPTER VII.

Lines of Travel—Indian Trials—Pioneer Roads—Turnpikes—Stage Routes—Railroads 43–61

CHAPTER VIII.

Erection of Susquehanna County—County Map—Erection of Townships and Chartering of Boroughs—Census—Court-House—Civil List 61–70

CHAPTER IX.

Bench and Bar—Personal Sketches 70–101

CHAPTER X.

The Press—Editors 101–116

CHAPTER XI.

Authors, Productions of 116–130

CHAPTER XII.

Medical History and Dentistry—Early Reminiscences—Medical Society—Personal Sketches 130–179

CHAPTER XIII.

Manners and Customs of the Pioneer Fathers and Mothers . . 179–184

CHAPTER XIV.

Temperance—Early Societies—Woman's Christian Temperance Union 184–189

CHAPTER XV. PAGES

General Education—Pioneer Schools—Public Schools—Academies—County Institutes—Superintendents and Teachers . 189–196

CHAPTER XVI.

Agriculture—Granges—Stock Breeding 196–210

CHAPTER XVII.

Revolutionary Soldiers—Militia—Soldiers of 1812 210–213

CHAPTER XVIII.

War of the Rebellion—Companies and Rosters of Soldiers—Sanitary Work 213–264

CHAPTER XIX.

Grand Army Republic Posts—Women's Relief Corps—Monument Association—Sketches of Officers—Sons of Veterans—Colored Volunteers. 264–264*p*

CHAPTER XX.

Borough of Montrose 265–321

CHAPTER XXI.

Bridgewater Township 321–352

CHAPTER XXII.

Jessup Township 352–366

CHAPTER XXIII.

Dimock Township 366–388

CHAPTER XXIV.

Springville Township 388–417

CHAPTER XXV.

Auburn Township 417–436

CHAPTER XXVI.

Rush Township 436–453

CHAPTER XXVII.

Middletown Township 453–463

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Apolacon Township 463–470

CHAPTER XXIX.

Choconut Township 470–479

CHAPTER XXX.

Forest Lake Township 479–496

CHAPTER XXXI.

Friendsville Borough 496–499

CHAPTER XXXII.

Silver Lake Township 499–507

	PAGES
CHAPTER XXXIII.
Liberty Township	507–514
CHAPTER XXXIV.
Franklin Township	514–528
CHAPTER XXXV.
Great Bend Township	528–538
CHAPTER XXXVI.
Great Bend Borough	538–546
CHAPTER XXXVII.
Hallstead Borough	546–554
CHAPTER XXXVIII.
Oakland Township	554–569
CHAPTER XXXIX.
Harmony Township and Lanesboro'	569–588
CHAPTER XL.
Susquehanna Borough	588–612
CHAPTER XLI.
New Milford Township	612–630
CHAPTER XLII.
New Milford Borough	630–648
CHAPTER XLIII.
Brooklyn Township	648–676
CHAPTER XLIV.
Lathrop Township	676–687
CHAPTER XLV.
Hopbottom Borough	687–696
CHAPTER XLVI.
Lenox Township	696–712
CHAPTER XLVII.
Harford Township	712–745
CHAPTER XLVIII.
Gibson Township	745–768
CHAPTER XLIX.
Jackson Township	769–787
CHAPTER L.
Clifford Township	787–806
CHAPTER LI.
Dundaff Borough	806–813
CHAPTER LII.
Herrick Township and Uniondale Borough	713–823
CHAPTER LIII.
Ararat Township	823–837
CHAPTER LIV.
Thomson Township and Borough	837–846

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Page
Adams, A. J	735
Adams, James W	669
Ainey, Dr. D. C	160
Avery, S. C	825
Bailey, Amos	653
Bailey, Obadiah	654
Bailey, Frederick	655
Bailey, Henry L	656
Baker, I. P	387
Barnes, Amos	580
Barnes, S. H	582
Beardsley, Albert	404
Beardsley, Captain H. F	264*g*
Beebe, Bradley	560
Beebe, Charles	561
Bell, Elisha	689
Bell, Truman	690
Blackman, Miss E. C	122
Blakeslee, Dr. E. L	97
Blakslee, B. F	393
Blakslee, L	394
Bloxham, J. B	831
Booth, William	490
Boyd, William H	289
Boyle, Judge John	634
Bradshaw, John	486
Brandt, H. W	584
Breed, R. F	661
Brewster, Horace	333
Brush, Calvin	564
Brush, B. L	384
Brush, Samuel	558
Bunnell, Kirby	352
Bunnell, William	388
Burdick, Philip	791
Bush, M. K	348
Callender, J. M	798
Cargill, James	774
Chase, Hon. S. B	188
Churches, Montrose Presbyterian	309
Montrose Baptist	305
Montrose Episcopal	316
Great Bend Methodist Episcopal	544
Harford Congregational	737
Susquehanna Catholic	605
Coach, Old-Time Stage	50
Cook, Judge J. H	592
Corse, Lieutenant A. D	781
Court-House	65
Curtis, C. J	339
Curtis, Gaylord	596
Dayton, Frederick	366
Dimock, Elder Davis	306
Dixon, C. B	534
Doctor, Olden Time	130
Du Bois, J. T	115
Easterbrook, W. W	783
Estabrook, S. H	567
Ellis, Hon. C. H	820
Falkenbury, Hon. Samuel	594
Fargo, Frederick	372
Fitch, Hon. L. F	89
Fordham, D. C	291
France, J. M	428
French, Myron	264*k*
Follet, Elkanah T	732
Gardner, L	342
Gardner, J. F	344
Gardner, Dr. P. H	143
Gerritson, A. J	108
Gillet, J. L	750
Gray, A. W	447
Griffis, Byron	356
Grimes, J. K	563
Grow, Hon. G. A	702
Guile, S. B	724
Hall, Major Martin	771
Hallstead, John	794
Halsey, Dr. C. C	148
Handrick, H. F	484
Harding, William	625
Hartley, M. J	697
Harvey, W. S	489
Head-Dress (Lady, 1776)	181
Hinds, Major D. D	324
Hine, Dr. E. P	158
Hillis, J. S	445
James, B. E	195
Jeffers, Watson	728
Jessup, Hon. William	77
Jewett, Rodney	660
Johnson, John	684
Jones, H. M	723
Jones, William H	208

	Page
Kent, H. J	346
Kent, A. W	571
Kent, David	658
Kistler, Stephen	542
Lake, J. L	384
Lamb, Dr. F. D	156
Lamb, C. W	565
Larrabee, Hon. M. J	95
Lathrop, Dr. I. B	154
Lathrop, Benjamin	329
Lathrop, Azur	284
Leslie, John	734
Little, Ralph B	85
Loomis, Samuel	532
Loomis, G. O	705
Lowry, J. W	795
Lyons, B. R	281
Lyons, S. A	579
Lyons, David	577
McCollum, Hon. J. B	81
Maps Northeastern Pennsylvania	5
Warrantee	33
County	63
Marsh, Kirby	510
Merriman, J. L	520
Messenger, E. K	843
Newton, J. M	666
O'Reilly, Very Rev. J. V	606
Oakley, Millbourn	725
Oakley, D. K	727
Old Log School-House	784
Peck, Levi R	730
Penn's Tea Service	180
Pickering, Jotham	778
Pickering, John D	768
Post, Isaac	269
Post, David	270
Post, William M	91
Pratt, Ezra A	638
Prichard, Orrin	207
Richardson, Rev. Lyman	741
Richardson, Dr. W. L	146
Riley, Rev. Henry A	310
Riley, Minot	407
Rogers, Dr. William	159
Sartell, Rev. N. P	836
Saunders, Lyman	685
Schlager, Jacob	586
School Building, Susquehanna	601
Searle, Daniel	51
Searle, D. W	93
Searle, R. S	201
Sherer, Samuel	374
Sherman, H. K	395
Sherwood, W. H	443
Smiley, John	758
Smith, Dr. L. A	140
Smith, Dr. E. N	139
Smith, R. W	518
Streeter, Dr. J. B	136
Strickland, Ezra	398
Strickland, P	400
Strickland, Ira A	401
Stoddard, Chester	845
Stone, O. W	360
Stephens, Benjamin	411
Stephens, J. B	801
Squier, Albert	412
Sweet, Captain A. T	264*d*
Sweet, Lorenzo	682
Tarbell, J. S	294
Taylor, James P	105
Taylor, Jacob	575
Taylor, David	576
Tewksbury, Samuel	425
Tewksbury, John	426
Tewksbury, Franklin	652
Thorpe, C. T	603
Tiffany, E. T	715
Tiffany, E. M	692
Tiffany, M. L	693
Tilden, Elder W. C	494
Tingley, Norman	626
Tingley, Deacon F	720
Titus, Leonard	718
Turrell, Hon. W. J	87
Turrell, Abel	282
Turrell, H. F	292
Vail, Dr. J. D	163
Van Cott, James	642
Very, Zerah	721
Walker, George	376
Walker, Sarah M	264
Warrantee Map	33
Washburn, Oscar	747
Watrous, Spencer	350
Watrous, D. S	667
Wells, E. C	327
Westfall, Levi	557
Weston, E. A	650
Wheaton, N. P	522
White, William	427
Whitney, F. M	776
Whitney, M. T	840
Williams, Hon. W. W	748
Williams, Dyer	680
Williams, John	766
Wilson, Mason S	279
Woodward, George	764
Wright, Dr. Samuel	174
Wright, Myron B	593

HISTORY

OF

SUSQUEHANNA COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA.

CHAPTER I.

ABORIGINAL INHABITANTS.

Lenni Lenape Six Nations—Extinguishment of Indian Title.

WHEN the territory now comprised in the county of Susquehanna was first known to the white man it contained no Indian settlement, but was a wilderness waste, occupied temporarily by the hunting parties of the Six Nations or Iroquois, who held dominion to the northward, and the Lenni Lenape, who lived on the south. The Lenni Lenape, or original people, as they called themselves, were one of the noblest tribes of Indians in North America. When Henry Hudson rode at anchor on the majestic river which bears his name, just above the Highlands, in the ship "Half Moon," September 15, 1609, he was met by the Lenni Lenape. "Full of simple sublimity and lofty poetry was the conception these savages first formed of the strange, white-faced men, in dress, bearing and speech different from their own, who came in the winged canoe to their shores." They welcomed them as superior beings sent to them as messengers of peace from the abode of the Great Spirit, and honored them with sacrificial feasts and with gifts.

Hudson recorded that above the Highlands "they found a very loving people, and very old men and were well used." The Lenni Lenape claimed that they had existed from the beginning; that they were the original people. "The Miamis, Wyandots, Shawanese and many others admitted their antiquity and called them grandfathers." They have a legend that centuries before the white man came to their shores their ancestors, who lived beyond the "Father of Waters"—the Mamaesi Sipu or Mississippi—near the wide sea where the sun sank every night, traveled eastward in search of a fairer land, of which their prophets had told them. That near the Mississippi they met the Mengwe or Iroquois. They journeyed eastward together, neither in warfare nor friendship, until it became necessary for them to unite their forces against the Allegwi, whom they finally defeated and nearly exterminated, "sweeping them forward as the wind does the dry leaves of the forest." Both tribes wandered eastward until the Mengwe struck the Hudson and the Lenni Lenape the Delaware or Lenape Wihittuck (the river or stream of the Lenape). Here, in the beautiful Minisink Valley, they established their council-fire, and made it the central seat of their power, being satisfied that this was the fair land of which their prophets had told them. Considering their faith in these traditions, which made this the loved home of the Lenni Lenape, can we wonder at the resentment which these simple and peaceable Indians felt, when they saw the pale-faces, whom they had befriended, defraud them out of this very home by the unfair construction which they put upon the Walking Purchase.

The Lenape were divided into three tribes—the Turtle or Unamis, the Turkey or Unalachtgo, who inhabited the coast from the Hudson to the Potomac, settling in towns, on the streams and river flats, which their women sometimes cultivated, under chiefs who were subordinate to the great council of the nation. The Minsi or Wolf division of the Lenape, called by the English "Monseys," were the most warlike of these tribes. "[1] They dwelt in the interior, forming a barrier between their nation and the Mengwe. They extended themselves from the Minisink on the Delaware, where they held their council-seat, to the Hudson on the east, the Susquehanna on the southwest, the headwaters of the Delaware and Susquehanna Rivers on the north, and to that range of hills now known in New Jersey by the name of the Muskenecum, and by those of Lehigh and Conewago in Pennsylvania." Many tribes proceeded from these and obtained local names. Such, probably, were the Shawanese, Nanticokes and Susquehannas. The Six Nations occupied the country extending from the Upper Hudson to the St. Lawrence and the great lakes. They consisted of the Mohawks, Senecas, Cayugas, Onondagas and Oneidas, and the Tuscaroras from the Carolinas, who came north and joined the Five Nations about 1712. In process of time, according to the tradition of the Lenni Lenape, there were wars between them and the Mengwe, in which the former were generally successful. As Susquehanna, Wayne and Bradford Counties were on the border line between these powerful tribes, it is not unreasonable to suppose that there may have been many a savage conflict within the borders of what is now Susquehanna County.

It is known that they had paths or Indian trails through the county. At Great Bend there was an old [2] Tuscarora town, and Indian trails led from this town to the Lackawanna and Wyoming Valleys, another led more easterly to Easton and Philadelphia, and one led east through Mt. Pleasant, Wayne County, to the Delaware River. At the time when the whites first knew of the territory embraced in the present county of Susquehanna, it was a hunting-ground, but was not occupied by any tribe. The Delawares were under subjection to the Six Nations and were not permitted to travel on these trails without their consent, for the Iroquois had finally triumphed over their old enemies, the Delawares, by shrewdly inducing them to cultivate peace and abandon war, until they became like women, as the Delawares allege. Whether the Delawares' account of the matter is correct or not, it is certain that the Iroquois, who have been called the Romans of North America, had gained control over them, and parties of the Iroquois occasionally occupied the Lenape country and wandered over it at their will. Brant, the Mohawk chief, was occasionally in Susquehanna County. There have been some evidences of former Indian occupancy discovered. Among these were the Painted Rocks,—"[3] About two miles above the village of Great Bend the Susquehanna River is quite narrow, with high rocks on each side of the stream. This romantic locality was known to the early settlers as the Painted Rocks, from the fact, that, high upon the face of one of these cliffs, and far above the reach of man, was the painted figure of an Indian chief. The outlines of this figure were plainly visible to the earliest white visitors of the place, but long after the outlines had faded, the red which predominated still remained, which led the inhabitants to call the place 'Red Rock,' and by that name it is known to this day."

There was once an island a short distance above Great Bend, which has been washed away by the floods until it has become a mere sand-bar. The Indians used to meet at this island and race around it in their canoes, the victor becoming temporary chieftain, whom all the hunting, or picnic party, as it might be termed, had to obey. There are further traces of the Indians in a number of the townships, especially along the rivers, where they undoubtedly fished for the speckled trout which once abounded in these mountain streams, and where they hunted the deer and bear. "[1] In the vicinity of Apalacon and Tuscarora Creeks numerous arrowheads have been found; and, in other localities, other implements of the Indians." Two of the most noted salt springs in the county were worked by the Indians. A legend has been preserved in relation to the one near Silver Creek by a writer in the Volunteer.

[1] Egle's "History of Pennsylvania."
[2] John Luken's "Report of Surveys."
[3] J. Du Bois.

It is not within the scope of this work to give a detailed account of the conflicts which led to the expulsion of the Indians from Northeastern Pennsylvania, but a brief account of the "Walking Purchase," and the dissatisfaction of the Indians which followed, will be traced, until the final overthrow of the Six Nations. The first release of title by the Indians in the Province of Pennsylvania was made in 1782, before Penn's arrival, by his Deputy-Governor, William Markham. It embraced all the territory between the Neshaminy and the Delaware, as far up as Wrightstown and Upper Wakefield —about the centre of the present county of Bucks. In 1683 and 1684 Penn himself made other purchases. On the 17th of September, 1718, the Lenni Lenape made another treaty, confirming their sales heretofore made, and extending them from the Delaware to the Susquehanna. This last-named sale was confirmed 11th October, 1736, by twenty-three chiefs of the Six Nations, who presumptuously laid claim to this land also. They pretended to sell all the lands on both sides of the Susquehanna, eastward to the heads of the branches or springs flowing into the river, northward to the Kittochtinny Hills, and westward to the setting sun. This indefinite western boundary really extended to the Susquehanna River, and the northern boundary was the Conewago Hills, South Mountain and Lehigh River.

In 1736 the Iroquois released their assumed claim to a belt of country lying north of the former purchase and south of the Blue Mountains, and extending southwesterly from the Delaware to and beyond the Susquehanna, including the northern parts of the present Northampton, Lehigh and Berks, and the whole of several counties farther west.

The Lenni Lenape grew restive under these assumptions of the Iroquois, and after consultation with the proprietaries they agreed, August 25, 1737, that a former alleged purchase, which had been made from the Delawares, should be decided in a novel manner. The proprietaries were to receive such portion of the Indian territory as should be included within a line drawn northwesterly from a point in or near Wrightstown, as far as a man could walk in a day and a half, and a line drawn from his stopping-place straight to the Delaware, which was the eastern boundary. It is said that a preliminary walk was had, and that the trees were blazed along the route in 1735, in order that no distance should be lost in wandering out of a straight line. Edward Marshall, James Yeates and Solomon Jennings, noted walkers, were chosen to make the walk. They started at a large chestnut tree near the Pennsville and Durham roads. Yeates led, with a light step, followed by Jennings, and Marshall brought up the rear, carelessly swinging a hatchet. Jennings and Yeates both gave out before the walk was finished. Jennings was injured for life by his over-exertion, and Yeates died three days after. Marshall went on and completed the walk, at noon the second day. He threw himself on the ground and reached to a sapling, which was taken as the point from which the line was run to the Delaware. The Indians who accompanied the walkers, to see that everything was done fairly, frequently called out for them to stop, not to run, and finally left in disgust before the walk was completed. They had expected that the walk would be conducted in a leisurely manner, that they would stop, and talk, and smoke, like Onas (Penn) did, but the over-reaching policy of Penn's descendants began to manifest itself, and the Indians saw that they were losing their lands. Instead of running the line directly to the Delaware River at the nearest point, Eastburn ran the line at right angles with the path taken by Marshall, which caused the line to strike the Delaware near the mouth of the Shohola. This included the Minisink, the chosen home and council-seat of the Lenni Lenape. The Indians murmured at this unfair treatment, but the proprietaries had sold ten thousand acres of these very lands to William Allen, and he in turn was selling them to settlers as early as 1733, or four years before the "walking purchase." Thus it appears that the proprietaries had determined to ignore the Lenape and their claims, and in order to make their humiliation more complete, the Governor complained to the deputies of the Six Nations, and Canasatego, one of their chiefs, repaired to Philadelphia, accompanied by three hundred warriors, in 1742, where a great council was held, at which the injured Delawares were also represented.

[1] Blackman's "History."

The Penns had applied to the Six Nations to compel the Delawares to surrender their ancient home, and Canasatego stood up and made a very insulting speech, calling the Delawares women, and upbraiding them for presuming to sell the lands. Said he, "You deserve to be taken by the hair of your heads and shaken till you recover your senses and become sober. We have seen a deed signed by your chiefs above fifty years ago, for this very land. But how came you to take upon yourselves to sell land at all? We conquered you; we made women of you." After talking for some time in this strain, he commanded them to remove from the land instantly, and gave them their choice to go to Shamokin or Wyoming. He then gave them a belt of wampum and ordered them to leave the council. These arbitrary orders they dared not disobey. They were between two great powers, —the rapacious whites whom they had welcomed to their shores as messengers of peace, on the one hand, and the powerful Six Nations, their old enemies, on the other. They left their wigwams on the Delaware and sadly took their march westward. A portion of them went to Shamokin, where Sunbury now is. A few of them settled on the Juniata, near Lewistown, but the greater number of them, under Tademe, went to Wyoming, below Wilkes-Barre, where they built a village in 1742. The Monseys occupied the Lackawanna Valley under their chief, Capoure.

Thus was the power of the once proud and warlike Lenni Lenape broken forever. True, Teedyuscung rallied a remnant of this once powerful race in 1755, and tried to expel the pale-faced intruders from their old home, but it only resulted in their committing a great many ravages in Monroe and Northampton Counties, particularly in the vicinity of Stroudsburg and Smithfield. Teedyuscung gained such prominence that the chiefs of the Iroquois were jealous of him. He participated in several great councils in Philadelphia and Easton, and ably championed the cause of his people.

Just twelve years after the unfortunate "Walking Purchase" was made, and while the contention in regard to it was still carried on, a portion of the territory which it covered and very much more was secured from the Delaware, or Lenape, and the Six Nations by purchase, the consideration being £300 "lawful money of Pennsylvania." This purchase included a belt of country stretching from the Delaware to the Susquehanna; having as its south boundary the Blue Mountains. In this scope of country thus obtained, lies the whole of the present Monroe County, the greater part of Pike, a very small portion of Wayne (the extreme tip of its southern pan-handle), the whole of Carbon and Schuylkill and parts of Lackawanna, Luzerne, Columbia, Northumberland, Dauphin and Lebanon.

The treaty was consummated August 22, 1749, at Philadelphia, the parties being Edward Warner, Lynford Lardner, receiver-general of the province, William Peters, Richard Peters, secretary of the province, and others, and the sachems and chiefs of the Six Nations, Delawares, Shamokin and Shawanese Indians. After the treaty of 1749 another purchase of lands was made from the Indians in 1768. The treaty was made between the representatives of Thomas and Richard Penn and the sachems of the Six Nations, at Fort Stanwix (now Rome, N. Y.), and concluded Nov. 5, 1768. By its terms the Indian title was released from an immense belt of country, northwest of the lands ceded by the treaties of 1749, 1754 and 1758, and extending diagonally across the entire province from the Delaware River, in the north-

HISTORICAL MAP
OF NORTH EASTERN
PENNSYLVANIA
Prepared Expressly for this Work.
NEW YORK STATE
BRADFORD
SUSQUEHANNA
WESTMORELAND WYOMING
SULLIVAN LYCOMING LUZERNE
PIKE
WAYNE
MONTOUR
COLUMBIA
MONROE
CARBON NORTHUMBERLAND
NORTHAMPTON
SCHUYLKILL LEHIGH EXPLANATIONS.
1 BRAINTRIM, WYOMING Co
2 PUTNAM "
3 NORTHMORELAND "
4 EXETER, LUZERNE Co
5 PROVIDENCE "
6 PITTSTON "
7 WILKESBARRE "
8 HANOVER "
9 NEWPORT "
10 SALEM, LUZERNE Co.
11 HUNTINGTON "
12 BEDFORD "
13 PLYMOUTH "
14 KINGSTON "
15 SPRINGFIELD, BRADFORD Co.
16 CLAVERACK " "
17 ULSTER " "
18 ATHENS " "

eastern corner, to the boundaries of Virginia on the west, and of Virginia and Maryland on the south.

All of the territory of the present Wayne County, except a very small fraction of its southern extremity, was included in this cession, which embraced the whole of Susquehanna, Wyoming, Sullivan, Montour, Green, Washington, Fayette, Westmoreland, Somerset and Cambria, and parts of Lackawanna, Luzerne, Columbia, Northumberland, Union, Snyder, Bradford, Lycoming, Clinton, Centre, Clearfield, Indiana, Armstrong, Allegheny and Beaver.

In the deed from the Six Nations, the territory of the purchase was described as follows:

"All that part of the Province of Pennsylvania not heretofore purchased of the Indians, within the said general boundary line, and beginning in the said Boundary line on the east side of the east Branch of the River Susquehanna, at a place called Owegy, and running with the said boundary Line down the said Branch, on the east side thereof, till it comes opposite the mouth of a Creek called by the Indians Awandac (Tawandee) and across the River, and up the said Creek on the south side thereof and along the range of hills called Burnett's Hills by the English and by the Indians[1] on the north side of them, to the head of a creek which runs into the West Branch of the Susquehanna; then crossing the said River and running up the same on the South side thereof, the several courses thereof, to the forks of the same River which lies nearest to a place on the River Ohio[2] called Kittanning, and from the said fork, by a straight line to Kittanning aforesaid, and then down the said Ohio by the several courses thereof, to where the western Bounds of the said Province of Pennsylvania crosses the same river, and then with the same western Bounds to the South boundary thereof, and with the South boundary aforesaid to the east side of the Allegheny hills, on the east side of them to the west line of a tract of Land purchased by the Said Proprietors from the Six Nations, and confirmed October 23, 1758, and then with the Northern bounds of that Tract to the River Susquehanna and crossing the River Susquehanna to the Northern Boundary line of another tract of Land purchased of the Indians by Deed (August 22, 1749), and then with that northern Line, to the River Delaware at the North side of the mouth of a creek called Lechawachsein, then of the said River Delaware on the west side thereof to the intersection of it by an east line to be drawn from Owegy aforesaid to the said River Delaware and then with that east Line, to the beginning, at Owegy aforesaid."

[1] At a subsequent treaty at Fort Stanwix (October, 1784), the Pennsylvania Commissioners inquired of the Indians what was their name for the range called by the English "Burnett's Hills," to which they replied that they knew them by no other name than the "Long Mountains." As to the creek called by them "Tiadaghton," they explained that it was the same known by the whites as Pine Creek, which flows into the West Branch of the Susquehanna from the northward.

[2] Meaning the Allegheny, to which the Indians always gave the name of Ohio.

CHAPTER II.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS.

Charles II. Charters—Connecticut, Susquehanna and Delaware Indian Purchases—Pennamite War—Westmoreland County.

SUSQUEHANNA COUNTY was included in Westmoreland County, and attached to Litchfield County under the Connecticut claim, which afterwards led to difficulties, under the operation of the Intrusion Laws, in respect to land titles. Although the territory comprising the county of Susquehanna was not settled until after the Trenton decree in 1782 had declared that "Connecticut had no right to the lands in controversey," it was chiefly settled by men from the New England States, and the descendants of the Wyoming settlers under Connecticut title; hence it is pertinent to our subject to briefly examine the conflicting claims between the proprietaries of Pennsylvania and the colony of Connecticut.

"To begin with, it must be stated that the contest for the possession of Northern Pennsylvania had its origin in the ignorance or indifference of the British monarchs concerning American geography, and consequent confusion in the granting of charters to the several colonies, several of them overlapping, and thus causing conflicts of authority over ownership and possession.

"The charter of Connecticut was granted by Charles II. in 1662, and was confirmatory to the charter granted by James I. to 'the Grand Council of Plymouth for planting and governing New England in America' in 1620, and also to a deed given in 1631 by the Earl of Warwick, then president of the Plymouth Council, to Lord Say and Seal, Lord Brooke and others, by which was conveyed to them that part of New England afterwards purchased by the colony of Connecticut. The charter granted to the colony all the lands west of it, to the extent of its breadth, from sea to sea, or 'from Narragansett River, one hundred and twenty miles on a straight line, near the shore towards the southwest, as the coast lies towards Virginia, and within that breadth from the Atlantic Ocean to the South Sea.'[1] This measurement would bring the southern line of Connecticut nearly or quite to the forty-first degree of north latitude (upon or near which Stroudsburg, Monroe County, is located), and thus had the claim been maintained, Pennsylvania would have been diminished to the extent of over two-fifths of its present territory. The charter included an exception of lands 'then actually possessed or inhabited by any other Christian prince or State,' and under this exception the Dutch possessions of New York, or the New Netherlands, extending to the Delaware, were exempted from the 'sea to sea' charter of Connecticut. The lands of the Dutch were never vested in the British crown until the conquest of 1664, and in 1650 articles of agreement respecting their eastern line had been made between them and Connecticut. On the conquest of the Dutch by the English—their lands having been given to the Duke of York (afterwards James II., brother of Charles II.)—the line established in 1650 was agreed upon as 'the western bound of the Colony of Connecticut,' as it was the eastern of the Duke's lands—a statement which was afterwards taken advantage of by Pennsylvania and construed into a relinquishment by Connecticut of all claim to lands west of the Delaware, although they had been distinctly included in the charter of 1662."

By the charter granted to William Penn in 1681 by Charles II., he was invested with the ownership of a vast province—greater than the present State—having the end of the forty-second degree of north latitude, or the beginning of latitude forty-three degrees north for a northern boundary, and thus overlapping by one degree the grant made to Connecticut by the same sovereign nineteen years before. The Pennsylvania charter also included a portion of the lands before granted to Lord Baltimore, just as Lord Baltimore's patent had covered lands long vested in Virginia, and thus there was error all around. The King, however, undoubtedly acted in good faith, if in ignorance. When the Quaker petitioned for his charter it was referred to the attorney-general of the crown, Sir William Jones, who reported that "the tract of land desired by Mr. Penn seems to be undisposed of by His Majesty, except the imaginary lines of New England patents, which are bounded westwardly by the main ocean, should give them a real, though impracticable right to all of those vast territories."

The Connecticut-Susquehanna Company was formed in 1753, and consisted at first of eight hundred and forty persons, including a large proportion of the leading men of the colony. Afterwards the number of proprietors was augmented to twelve hundred. "Their action," says Miner, the historian of Wyoming, "may be regarded as an unofficial popular movement of the colony itself."[2] Their purpose was to purchase the Indian title within the charter limits of the colony of Connecticut on the waters of the Susquehanna, and this they did at a council held with the Six Nations Indians in Albany, in July, 1754. The treaty was concluded and a deed executed on the 11th of the month. The consideration for and the boundaries of the purchased lands were given in the deed. After describing the grantors as "the chiefs, sachems and heads of the Six Nations and the native proprietors of the land," and setting forth that the same lies within the limits of the royal charter to Connecticut mentioning the application of the grantees being subjects of King George the Second, and inhabitants of Connecticut, and expressing the good understanding which had mutually subsisted between the parties, their wish for its continuance and the benefits which would result from a settlement, the deed contains these words: "Now, therefore, for and in consideration thereof, and for the further, full and ample consideration of the sum of two thousand pounds of current money of the province of New York, to us, to our full satisfaction, before the ensealing hereof, contended and paid, the receipt whereof, to our full content, we do hereby acknowledge, thereupon do give, grant, bargain, sell, convey and confirm to," etc. (here follow the names of the grantees), "which said given and granted tract of lands is butted, bounded and described as followeth, viz.: Beginning from the one and fortieth degree of north latitude at ten miles distance east of Susquehanna River and from thence with a northerly line, ten miles east of the river, to the forty-second or beginning of the forty-third degree of north latitude, and to extend west two degrees of longitude, one hundred and twenty miles, and from thence south to the beginning of the forty-second degree, and from thence east to the aforementioned bounds, which is ten miles east of the Susquehanna River." These boundaries did not include Susquehanna County, but they included the beautiful Wyoming Valley and a great extent of territory extending westward to the headwaters of the Allegheny River.

[1] The vaguely-known Pacific was then so called.

[2] Miner's "History of Wyoming," p. 68.

The Delaware Company, subsequent to the Susquehanna Company's purchase, bought with less formality the Indian title from certain chiefs of all the land bounded east by the Delaware River, within the forty-second degree of latitude, west to the line of the Susquehanna purchase, viz., ten miles east of that river. This purchase included Susquehanna County; and it was under the auspices of this company that the first settlement of the Connecticut claimants was made at Cushutunk, on the Delaware River, in 1757. The amount of land included in the two purchases, according to Miner, embraced territory about seventy miles wide by one hundred and twenty miles long, or some five million acres.

Both purchases were immediately made known to the Pennsylvania authorities, and, in fact, commissioners from the province were present at the Albany council. The Governor at once wrote Sir William Johnson, requesting him, if possible, to induce the Indians to deny the regularity of the purchase, and he took various other means to defeat the Connecticut scheme.

The Susquehanna Company, having completed its purchase, concluded to divide the land into shares, which were to be distributed, and called a general meeting, to be held at Hartford, for that purpose. They had very shrewdly endeavored to interest Pennsylvanians, especially those of the frontier settlements, in their enterprise, and had succeeded in some measure.

The territory purchased of the Six Nations formerly belonged to the Lenni Lenape, and it became politic for the proprietary Governors to cultivate friendship with this unfortunate people again, but they were precluded by their own acts from claiming any title through the Delawares, for it will be remembered that they called on the Six Nations to enforce the unjust Walking Purchase, thereby acknowledging their dominion over this very territory.

The first settlement at Wyoming was made in the spring of 1762—if, indeed, settlement it could be called in which the men, after planting, and, perhaps, securing some of their crops, retired to their Connecticut homes for the winter. In the following spring, however, they came back prepared to establish themselves permanently, bringing their stock, household goods and, it is probable, all that they possessed. But their hopes were doomed to early and sudden blight.

The Delaware Indians, who claimed the lands on the Susquehanna and Delaware, embraced in the Connecticut charter, averred that they had never sold any of their possessions on the former river, though they admitted that some of their lesser chiefs had, in an irregular way, granted a title to those on the Delaware, and they complained bitterly of the presence of white men upon these lands, which, they asserted, had been "bought from under their feet" of the Six Nations. The provincial authorities were constantly beset with applications to have the trespassers removed, and there were not wanting evidences that the Indians would take the matter in their own hands if the authorities did not intervene. Such was the condition of the Indian mind when Teedyuscung, king of the Delawares, was burned to death in his cabin on the night of April 19, 1763. While this deed was unquestionably committed by his Indian enemies, either by or through the influence of the Six Nations, Indian cunning ascribed the murder to the New England people. The people of the dead chief now became clamorous for the removal of the settlers, and several times importuned the government to drive them from the valley.

The Governor having, in June, 1763, received fresh complaints from the Indians at Wyoming that the Connecticut trespassers were still obstinately prosecuting their settlement on the lands there and at Cushutunk, thought proper, on the 2d of that month, to issue a third proclamation requiring those intruders forthwith to remove from the lands. He also appointed James Burd and Thomas McKee, Esqs., justices of the peace, and gave them written instructions to proceed to Wyoming, and having convened the people settled there, publicly to read his proclamation to them; to use the utmost endeavors, by expostulations and arguments, to prevail on them to relinquish their scheme of settling the lands there, and to depart peaceably without delay; otherwise to cause some of its principals to be apprehended and carried to the "Goal" at Lancaster.

Hon. James Hamilton, Esquire, Lieutenant-Governor and commander-in-chief of the province of Pennsylvania and the counties of Newcastle, Kent and Sussex upon the Delaware, issued three proclamations forbidding "all his Majesty's subjects to intrude upon any Land within the Province not yet purchased of the Indians." "And hereby strictly charging all Sheriffs, Magistrates, Peace Officers and other people within this province to exert themselves to bring to justice and condign punishment all Offenders in the Premises."

This proclamation was issued ostensibly in the interest of "the Delaware and other tribes of Indians, and also the Six Nation Indians" who, according to the proclamation, "have repeatedly made complaints and Remonstrances to me against the said Practices and Attempts, and insisted that the Intruders be removed by the Government to which they belonged, or by me, and declared that otherwise they would remove them by force and do themselves Justice, but desired that the Intruders might be previously acquainted therewith." This proclamation was either intended as a friendly warning to the so-called intruders or it was a shrewd bid for Indian support. Doubtless the Governor would have been well satisfied if the settlers had left peaceably, but he did not lose sight of Indian friendship and assistance in his shrewd proclamation.

This proclamation, like those directed exclusively against Cushutunk, availed nothing. The few Connecticut people at Wyoming unfortunately did not heed it. The Indians were sullen. A storm was portending, and upon the 15th of October (1763) it suddenly broke. The Indians, without the slightest warning, raised the war-whoop and fell with fury upon the defenceless village. About twenty men were killed and scalped, and those who escaped a horrible death—men, women and children—fled to the mountains, and after long wandering in the wilderness, destitute of food and almost destitute of clothing, found their way to older settlements and eventually to their Connecticut homes.[1] This was the first massacre of Wyoming—not a part of the Pennamite War, but an example of Indian ferocity in the resentment of real or imagined wrong. The government sent soldiers to the scene of the massacre, but they found the valley deserted by the Indians.

After this terrible experience no attempt was made by the Susquehanna Company to settle Wyoming until 1769. In the meantime the proprietary government had fortified itself with a deed from the Six Nations and other Indians of all that portion of the province, not before bought, which lay in the limits of the Connecticut claim. This was procured at the treaty held in 1768.[2] And now commenced in earnest the strife, foot to foot and hand to hand, for the occupation of the lovely valley of Wyoming and, practically, for the possession of that part of Pennsylvania between the forty-first and forty-second parallels of latitude—the struggle known in history as "the Pennamite War." To give an adequate history of this long, eventful contest between the Pennsylvania and Connecticut immigrants would alone require a volume, and, for that reason and the fact that the leading events of the war occurred on territory of which it is not our province to treat in this work, we attempt only such a brief analysis of important general movements as is necessary to a proper understanding of local events which come within the field which is our subject.

Each party, at the opening of the year 1769, was pretty well prepared to assert and defend its claims. There had been action upon each side something like that of two armies in the field as they prepare to meet for a stubborn campaign. Of the Susquehanna Company's party which determined to effect the planting of a colony at Wyoming, Captain Zebulon Butler, a hero of the French and Indian War, was by common consent regarded the leader, if not actually clothed with official power. There were a number of other strong characters among the Connecticut adventurers, and they were not wanting in friends and adherents within the limits of Pennsylvania.

[1] Miner's "History of Wyoming," p. 54.
[2] See Chapter I.

Among these were Benjamin Shoemaker, of Smithfield, and John McDowell. [1] The proprietary leaders were Charles Stewart, afterwards an efficient officer of the Pennsylvania Line; Captain Amos Ogden, the military leader; and John Jennings, Esq., high sheriff of Northampton County, civil magistrate. "These three constituted the Chief Executive Directory, to conduct the proprietaries' affairs at Wyoming. To these a lease had been executed for one hundred acres of land for seven years, upon condition that they should establish an Indian trading-house thereon, and defend the valley from encroachment." These three men were first on the ground, having arrived in January, 1769. They repaired the block-house and huts located a mile above Wilkes-Barre, on the Susquehanna, at the mouth of Mill Creek, that had been abandoned by the settlers of 1763. On the 8th of February the first forty of the Yankee detachment arrived, and, finding their expected shelter in the hands of the Pennamites, commenced to besiege the block-house by cutting off communications with the surrounding country. They also erected a small block-house across the river at Kingston, afterwards called Forty Fort. Captain Ogden, seeing that something must be done, requested a conference. Messrs. Elderkin, Tripp and Follett repaired to his quarters in accordance therewith, and were arrested by Ogden in the name of Pennsylvania and taken to Easton jail, accompanied by their thirty-seven associates, where they were released on bail given by William L. Ledley. This event clearly shows the naturally peaceful character of the pioneer Wyoming settlers, and their respect for civil process. After being liberated they immediately returned to Wyoming, where thirty-one of them were again arrested by Ogden and Jennings, who returned with a large force and took them to Easton, and they were again released on bail, and again returned to the disputed territory. In April one hundred and sixty more Yankees arrived, and erected a fort on the river-bank near Wilkes-Barre, which they named Fort Durkee, in honor of their leader. Colonel Dyer and Major Elderkin went to Philadelphia about this time, with full powers to adjust all matters in dispute peaceably; but they accomplished nothing. On the 24th of June Colonel Francis, with an armed force, demanded the surrender of Fort Durkee, which was refused. Governor Penn instructed Sheriff Jennings to raise a sufficient force to oust the Yankees without bloodshed, if possible. Ogden seized a few prisoners who were in their houses, among them Major Durkee. Sheriff Jennings, with two hundred men, was joined by Captain Patterson, from Fort Augusta, with an iron four-pounder. This, together with the loss of their commander, so appalled the garrison that they surrendered. Three or four leading men were detained as prisoners; seventeen Connecticut men were to remain and gather the ripening harvest; all others were to leave the valley immediately, and private property was to be respected.[2] Taking up their sad march, with their wives and little ones, these exiles made their way back to Connecticut. Their sufferings were great during this march, and Chapman says that one woman roasted and fed her dead child to her surviving children to keep them alive.

Captain Ogden, to his disgrace as a man and a soldier, plundered the seventeen who had been left to gather the crops of all means of subsistence, driving away the cattle, horses, sheep, etc., to the settlements on the Delaware, where he sold them. The seventeen, having been plundered in violation of the terms of surrender, were compelled to follow their exiled comrades. Thus closed the first campaign in the Pennamite War. The Yankees were three times expelled, and finally compelled to abandon the settlement.

[1] Miner, p. 106.

[2] Miner.

The Yankees, however, were not long inactive. In February, 1770, in connection with a number of people from Lancaster, they again appeared upon the ground, and they easily took possession of the fort, which had only a small garrison. Ogden remained at the place with a number of his men, fortified in a block-house, which was besieged, and he was obliged to capitulate, and, with his followers, depart from Wyoming, after which his house was burnt in retaliation for the deeds he had committed the year before. This was in April, and in September following, after Governor Penn had issued a proclamation warning the Yankees to depart from Wyoming, Ogden led an armed party against his late victors, took several of them prisoners as they were engaged, unprotected, at their farm-work, and finally captured the fort, after killing a number of their garrison. Captain Butler himself would have been bayoneted by the attacking party after they had gained an entrance had it not been for Captain Craig, who commanded a detachment of Ogden's men. During this siege the Wyoming men attempted to send messengers to Cushutunk, but the paths were watched by Ogden's scouts, who captured them.

In the fall of 1771 the Pennamites, who then had possession of the garrison, were compelled to surrender, having been reduced to a starving condition by the Yankees, who had cut off all supplies from the surrounding country. By the terms of surrender, the Pennsylvania troops were to withdraw, twenty-three of them bearing arms. The men having families were given two weeks in which to remove, with the privilege of taking their effects. Thus ended the first Pennamite War, which had been waged with varying success as a half civil and half military movement. The loss of life was not great, but the constant annoyance and distress caused to these hardy pioneers cannot now be fully appreciated. This was one of the first contests waged against monopoly in this country. On the one hand was the rich proprietor, who would only rent lands for a term of years to his adherents, for maintaining his cause in the valley, while on the other hand was the actual settler. From this time forth the Yankees began to pour into the valley, causing it to blossom as the rose.

"[1] In 1773 the government of Connecticut, which, up to this time, had left the Susquehanna and Delaware Companies to manage their own affairs, now decided to make its claim to all the lands within the charter, west of the province of New York, and in a legal manner to support the same. Commissioners appointed by the Assembly proceeded to Philadelphia 'to negotiate a mode of bringing the controversy to an amicable conclusion.' But every proposition offered by them was declined by the Governor and Council of Pennsylvania, who saw no way to prevent a repetition of the troubles in Wyoming, except by the settlers evacuating the lands until a legal decision could be obtained.

"In the meantime the people had accepted articles, framed by the Susquehanna Company, at Hartford, Conn., June 2, 1773, for the government of the settlement, and acknowledged them to be of force until the colony of Connecticut should annex them to one of its counties, or make them a distinct county; or until they should obtain, either from the colony, or from 'His gracious Majesty, King George the Third,' a more permanent or established mode of government. 'But his majesty soon had weightier matters to decide with his American subjects, which were settled by his acknowledgment of their Independence.'

"On the report of the Commissioners to the Assembly of Connecticut, after their return from Philadelphia, decisive measures were adopted by the Assembly to bring the settlement on the Susquehanna under their immediate jurisdiction. An act was passed early in January, 1774, erecting all the territory within her charter limits, from the river Delaware to a line fifteen miles west of the Susquehanna, into a town with all the corporate powers of other towns of the colony, to be called Westmoreland, attaching it to the county of Litchfield. The town was seventy miles square, and was divided into townships five miles square, though those townships comprised within the Connecticut Delaware purchase were, for the most part, six miles square."

Susquehanna County was included in this vast township and was divided into townships. Hibernia, Peru, Waterford, Ruby, Review, Cunningham, Julian, Abbas, Huniades, Dandolo, Manor, Chebar, Bidwell, Dundee, Kingsbury, Newry, Monmouth, St. Patrick and Simo are names of townships that lay wholly or in part within the present Susquehanna County.

[1] Blackman's "History."

The following is a list of

[1] MEMBERS FROM WESTMORELAND TO CONNECTICUT ASSEMBLY.

April, 1774, Zebulon Butler, Timothy Smith; September, 1774, Christopher Avery, John Jenkins; April, 1775, Captain Z. Butler, Joseph Sluman; September, 1775, Captain Z. Butler, Major Ezekiel Pierce; May, 1775, John Jenkins, Solomon Strong; October, 1776, Colonel Z. Butler, Colonel Nathan Denison; May, 1777, John Jenkins, Isaac Tripp; May, 1778, Nathan Denison, Anderson Dana; October, 1778, Colonel N. Denison, Lieutenant Asahel Buck; May, 1779, Colonel N. Denison, Dea. John Hurlbut; May, 1780, John Hurlbut, Jonathan Fitch; October, 1780, Nathan Denison, John Hurlbut; May, 1781, John Hurlbut, Jonathan Fitch; October, 1781, Obadiah Gore, Captain John Franklin; May, 1782, Obadiah Gore, Jonathan Fitch; October, 1783, Obadiah Gore, Jonathan Fitch.

MEMBERS FROM LUZERNE COUNTY TO PENNSYLVANIA ASSEMBLY.

Council.

1787, 1788 and 1789, to the 9th of October, Nathan Denison; 30th of October, 1789, to 20th of December, 1790, Lord Butler.

On the 20th of December, 1790, the Council closed its session. The State was organized under the Constitution of 1790, and a Senate took the place of a Council.

As Susquehanna County was associated with Luzerne in choosing legislators, previous to 1829, the following table of Senators and Representives to 1811, the year following the organization of the county, will be profitable for reference:

Senate.

1790 (with Northumberland and Huntington), William Montgomery; 1792, William Hepburn; 1794, George Wilson (with Northumberland, Mifflin and Lycoming); 1796, Samuel Dale (with Northumberland, Mifflin and Lycoming); 1798, Samuel McClay; 1800, James Harris; 1801, Jonas Hartzell (with Northampton and Wayne); 1803, Thomas Mewhorter; 1805, William Lattimore; 1807, Matthias Gross; 1808, Nathan Palmer (with Northumberland); 1810, James Laird.

House.

(Year of election given.)

1787, John Paul Schott; 1788, 1789 and 1790, Obadiah Gore; 1791 and 1792, Simon Spaulding; 1793, Ebenezer Bowman; 1794, Benjamin Carpenter; 1795 and 1796, John Franklin; 1797 and 1798, Roswell Welles; 1799 and 1800, John Franklin; 1801, John Franklin, Lord Butler; 1802, John Franklin, Roswell Welles; 1803, John Franklin, John Jenkins; 1804, Roswell Welles, Jonas Ingham; 1805, Roswell Welles, Nathan Beach; 1806, Roswell Welles, Moses Coolbaugh; 1807, Charles Miner, Nathan Beach; 1808, Charles Miner, Benjamin Dorrance; 1809 and 1810, B. Dorrance, Thomas Graham; 1811, Thomas Graham, Jonathan Stevens.

[1] Blackman's "History of Susquehanna County."

CHAPTER III.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

Battle of Wyoming—General Sullivan's March—General Clinton at Great Bend—Defeat of the Six Nations—An Indian Claim—Adventures of Hilborn.

WE have briefly given the overthrow of the Lenni Lenape who lived south of Susquehanna County, and visited it as a hunting-ground. It is pertinent to our inquiries to notice the overthrow of their powerful neighbors on the north, who were at last compelled to submit to the same power that they had assisted, only a few years before, in removing the Delawares from their loved home. During the Revolutionary War the inhabitants of Wyoming were very patriotic, and two hundred men were enlisted and joined the army to help fight the battles of Liberty and Independence. This took many of the bravest men from Westmoreland County, which then contained about two thousand five hundred inhabitants; and left the settlement in an unprotected condition, an opportunity which the Indians, Tories and British were not slow to improve.

On the 3d of July, 1778, occurred the world-famous massacre of Wyoming. The confederated Six Nations, who had been induced by the British in 1777 to take the war-path against the Americans, committed great ravages in New York during that year, and in the following they determined to make a murderous foray into Pennsylvania, with the especial object of striking the settlements on the two branches of the Susquehanna, which were left in an almost defenceless condition through the departure of their patriotic men for the army.

The Wyoming settlement was very naturally the object of the Englishmen's especial hatred, because of the devotion its people had shown to the cause of liberty ; and it was easily accessible by the North Branch of the Susquehanna. Late in June there descended that stream, under the command of Colonel John Butler, a force of eleven hundred men, four hundred of whom were Tory rangers and regular soldiers of Sir John Johnson's Royal Greens, with seven hundred Indians, chiefly Senecas. Jenkins' Fort capitulated, and Wintermoot's (which, as was afterwards learned, was built to aid the incursions of the Tories), at once opened its gates to the invading host. At Wyoming were several so-called forts, mere stockades, in no one of which was there a cannon or an adequate garrison, the arms-bearing men nearly all being absent, as has heretofore been stated. Colonel Zebulon Butler, who happened to be at Wyoming, took command by invitation of the people, and the little band, consisting chiefly of old men and boys, with a handful of undisciplined militia, against whom eleven hundred warriors had marched, made as heroic a stand as the world ever saw.

And so upon that fatal 3d of July they marched out to meet and fight the enemy, for a safe retreat with their families was impossible, and surrender seems never to have been thought of. It is beyond our province in this work to describe the uneven battle and the slaughter which ensued. Suffice it to say that the brave defenders, about four hundred in number, were defeated by the assailing force, outnumbering them by nearly three to one. Then followed the horrible massacre—a carnival of murder and torture performed by fiends. But who is there who knows not Wyoming? Who that does not shudder at the recall of that name? Of four hundred men who went into battle, but sixty escaped the fury of the Indians. That bloody day made one hundred and fifty widows and six hundred orphans in the valley.

And now the Wyoming Valley is a scene of pastoral quiet and loveliness, as if, in recompense for the dark deeds done, the Creator had breathed upon the bosom of nature there the benison of eternal peace.

The massacre of Wyoming thrilled the world with horror. What, then, must have been the feelings of those people who had reason to think they might at any hour meet with the same fate which had extinguished the lives of the four hundred settlers of the beautiful valley? The whole border was filled with the wildest alarm, and a fever of fear took possession of the people even as far down the country as Bethlehem and Easton.

Flight was the only recourse for the few terror-stricken survivors. Vain efforts were made to concentrate the settlement at Forty Fort, but the tide of panic had already set in, and by night of the day of battle fugitives were flying in every direction to the wilderness. It was a wild, chaotic, precipitate hegira. All was confusion, consternation, horror. The poor, terrified people, men, women and children, scarcely thinking or caring whither their trembling footsteps led, if they could only escape the savage enemy and cruel death, fled onward into the wilderness and night. The general direction pursued was towards the Delaware and the Stroudsburg settlement. Every passage into the forest was thronged. On the old Warrior's Path there were, says Miner, in one company, nearly one hundred women and children, with but one man, Jonathan Fitch, to advise or aid them. The terrified fugitives fled through the Dismal Swamp or Shades of Death, and the Great Swamp to the west and southwest. Children were born and children died in that forced march through the wilderness. Some wandered out of the way and were lost, others died from wounds and starvation, but the greater number reached the settlements about Stroudsburg and along the Delaware, where the German settlers treated them kindly, and some found their way back to Connecticut. Miner says : " In addition to those in train band, the judges of the court and all the civil officers who were near, went out. Many old men—some of them grandfathers—took their muskets and marched to the field. For instance, the aged Mr. Searle, of Kingston, was one. Having become bald, he wore a wig ; taking out his silver knee-buckles, he said to his family : 'If I fall I shall not need them ; if I come back they will be safe here.' He was killed, and the Indians kept the wig as a trophy. His son Roger fled to Connecticut, but afterwards returned to Wyoming. His sons Daniel, Leonard and Raselas became residents of Montrose. Reuben Wells' father was also killed in that battle. His widow fled to Connecticut, where they remained until 1797, when they returned to Frenchtown, and in 1812 Reuben settled in South Montrose. Elisha Williams, grandfather of W. W. Williams, was one that escaped. Perry Gardner, grandfather of Latham Gardner, and his son Jonathan, then only twelve years old, were there. Probably many more of the residents of Susquehanna County are descendants of ancestors who were in that battle."

It is not within the scope of this work to notice all the barbarities practiced upon the Wyoming settlers by Tories and Indians who had been hired by the British agents to do this dastardly work. But the hour of punishment came at last. General Washington determined to send a sufficient force into the Indian country to break up their savage haunts. To this end General Clinton, with sixteen hundred men, was ordered to advance from the Hudson to Tioga Point, and General Sullivan was ordered to rendezvous at Easton. From this point he sent a German regiment of three hundred men to reinforce Colonel Butler, and on the 19th of April Major Powell arrived at Wyoming with an additional force of two hundred and fifty men. This force was fired upon by ambushed Indians, and a number of them were killed. On the 18th of June, 1779, General Sullivan left Easton with two thousand five hundred men. He went by way of the Wind Gap, Pocono Creek, White Oak Run and Birch Hill. Arriving at Mud Run, they encamped on a knoll which they named Hungry Hill. Here they encamped for a few days waiting for provisions from Easton. From this point they cut a road through the Dismal Swamp around Locust Ridge, thence westwardly seven miles across the Lehigh to the Old Shupp road to Wyoming.

On the 31st of July, at the head of some three thousand men, General Sullivan broke camp at Wyoming and began his march up the Susquehanna. Accompanying the troops were three hundred boats laden with provisions, cannon and munitions of war. They marched up the river in good order. Following in the train were many hundred pack-horses laden with one month's provisions. On the 11th of August Sullivan arrived at Tioga Point and halted for General Clinton to come up.

"[1] When General Clinton arrived at the head of the river, Otsego Lake, he found the water very low, and the navigation of the Susquehanna on rafts, as intended, impracticable. In order to raise the water, it was decided to build a dam at the foot of the lake, which some of the soldiers, under the directions of the officers, proceeded to do, while others were detailed to construct timber rafts below, upon which the army was to descend the river. When the dam was completed, the rafts being ready, and a sufficient quantity of water having accumulated in the lake, the flood-gates were opened, away sped the fleet of rafts, with their noble burden, amid the loud cheers of the soldiers.

"Very soon new troubles arose, for not one of these sixteen hundred men knew anything about navigating the Susquehanna. The Indian canoes only had heretofore broken the stillness of its waters; consequently some of the many rafts were at almost every turn brought to a stand-still by the bars and shallows of the river. These 'shipwrecks,' as the soldiers called them, produced shouts of mirth and laughter from those who were more fortunate in drifting clear of the shoals; but, as the water was rapidly rising from the great supply in the lake above, these stranded rafts were soon afloat again, and very soon were passing some of those rafts which had first passed them, and from whose crews came shouts of derisive laughter, and now were stranded in like manner. Both officers and men enjoyed this novel campaign on rafts down the beautiful Susqehanna (to use the officer's word) 'highly.' He said that, notwithstanding they had to keep a sharp look-out for the 'Red Skins,' it did not in the least mar the great enjoyment of the sports of this rafting expedition; fishing, frolic and fun were the order of the day. Nothing worthy of mention happened to the expedition on their way to this place, and here, on a bright summer day in 1779, they landed to pass the night, and to allow some of the dilatory rafts to come up, and here at Great Bend, on the Flats near the 'Three Indian Apple Trees,' General James Clinton's army encamped, and here, for one night at least, brightly burned the camp-fires of sixteen hundred of the soldiers of the Revolution. The officer in his diary says of the three Indian Apple Trees which they found here, that they then bore the marks of great age. There were no Indians seen here by them, although there was every indication of their having only recently left. The next day they went on board of their rafts and proceeded down the river" until they arrived at Tioga Point, where they rested with General Sullivan, and together moved up the river and gave the Indians battle at Newtown, near Elmira, New York. There was not so great loss of life in this battle, the whites losing thirty killed, but the victory over the Six Nations was complete. Their wigwams and teeming fields of corn were laid waste with rigid severity, and their peach orchards were ruthlessly cut down. The fell blow broke the power of the Six Nations forever.[1] There are remnants of this once powerful confederacy on reservations in the State of New York. They occasionally visit the valley, over which they once held despotic sway, with curious bead-work which they have for sale. An Indian woman who sells these articles will usually sit apart from the rest and murmur, "Me poor Indian," "Me lone Indian," until some one will come along and half out of pity buy her trinkets. And this is all that remains of the once proud lords of the soil, whose friendship was courted by the French and British, the Governors of New York and of Pennsylvania, and the United Colonies at the time of the Revolution. The Indians occasionally visited Susquehanna County after the pioneer settlers came here. David Rittenhouse and Andrew W. Ellicott, on the part of Pennsylvania, and James Clinton and Simeon De Witt, on the part of New York, ran the dividing line between the two States in 1786. During the survey Ellicott wrote to his wife from the "[2] Banks of the Susquehanna," under date of August 6, 1786, that he had "just returned from attending divine service of the Indians in their camp. This will appear no doubt strange to you, but stranger yet when I assure you that I have found more true religion among them than with the white inhabitants on the frontier. They are of the Church of England, and have the service complete in their own language. They sing psalms to admiration. . . . Pray do not fail to inform Dr. West of this circumstance. The Indian town of [3] Shanang is about twelve miles from our present position. The head sachem, with his family, have been with us many days—he has a daughter by the name of Sally and a niece who lives with us, and share in all our amusements, such as cards and draughts, commonly called checkards. Commissioner De Witt has taken a picture of the daughter, which I intend to have copied large by Billy West."

[1] Blackman's "History."

Miss Blackman has recorded some incidents written by J. Du Bois, from which the following is taken:

"The writer, anxious to learn something about the Indians that once lived in this valley, concluded to question the doctor.[4] I again visited the Log Tavern. I found the doctor reclining on the grassy slope of the bank of the Susquehanna, near the Indian Apple Trees. Armed with a pipe and tobacco, I approached him and presented them, retreated to a respectable distance and sat down, and watched him as he drew forth the steel, the flint, and striking fire, proceeded to test the quality of the Indian weed. Boy-like, I at once commenced to question him, and as he remained silent, I piled question upon question, without even waiting for an answer, not knowing at that time that an Indian never answered a question immediately, but first smokes, then thinks, and then answers. After almost exhausting my list of inquiries, I remained silent. The Indian, after puffing away at the pipe for some time, said, 'Boy want to know much, Indian tell him some. When a boy, I lived here, many Indians lived along this valley of the Susquehanna, we belonged to the Confederate Five Nations, after-

[1] These Indians have adopted the ways of civilization and have cultivated farms.

[2] "Boundaries of the State of New York," Vol. I.

[3] Binghamton stands where Shanang formerly stood. Colonel Gere thinks that this letter was written from Little Meadows, Susquehanna County.

[4] An Indian Doctor.

wards called the Six Nations.' He then proceeded to state in his own language that this valley was for a long time the frontier of the Confederacy. At that time the Delaware Indians claimed all the lands up to the Susquehanna River, at the same time the Confederacy claimed to the Delaware River, and land lying between these two rivers was disputed ground, and many were the conflicts between the hunters on this disputed territory. After a while the Six Nations conquered the Delawares, and extended their authority as far south as the Chesapeake Bay. During the War of the Revolution the Indians quietly withdrew from this valley, and all of them, except the Oneidas, joined the British and were nearly all exterminated in the battles which followed. Before the Revolution the Indians raised great crops of corn along these river flats.

"'All over yonder,' said he, pointing to the hills on the south side of the river, 'elk, elk, deer, too, plenty, very plenty, fish in this river very plenty, Indian lived well.' I asked the doctor where the Indians buried their dead; he pointed toward Dimon's flats, saying, 'there we bury our dead.' I then told the doctor, that when the workmen were excavating the ground for the northern abutment of the first Great Bend Bridge, they discovered the skeleton of what they supposed to be a large Indian (as it was found in the sitting posture). I asked him how this Indian came to be buried there. After puffing away at the pipe as if in deep thought, he replied, 'The Delaware Indian, he die in his canoe, we bury him there.' I asked him by what death did he die, but received no answer. Not being willing to give it up so, I told the doctor that this Delaware Indian, as he called him, had a large hole in his skull, to which he replied, 'Delaware bad Indian.' Pursuing my inquiry in another direction, I asked him if a hostile Indian was detected as a spy, if by their laws it was death; he answered yes. And upon inquiring, he said that they never bury those belonging to another tribe with their own dead. He further said that the Three Apple Trees was the rallying point and headquarters for all the Indians in the neighborhood. Here councils were held, marriages celebrated, feasts observed, war-dances performed, and the fate of prisoners decided.

"An Indian Claim.—Jonathan Dimon was one of the early white settlers of this valley. He settled on the farm now owned and occupied by Mr. Carl. When Jonathan Dimon left the valley of the Hudson River, and removed to this, then called wilderness, West, his son, Charles Dimon, had not completed his education, and did not come on to his father here until some years later. A few days after his arrival his father told him to go upon the flats and plow up an old 'Indian burying-ground.' (This burying-ground was located about the centre of the lately-talked-of fair ground, and proposed race track, and on each side of what now remains of an old hedge.) More than thirty years ago the writer had this narrative from our late and much-esteemed fellow-townsman, Charles Dimon. He said that he felt many misgivings about thus disturbing the burial-place of the dead, and asked his father what he should do with those curious stones that marked the last resting-place of the Indians. His father told him that when he plowed up near enough to these stones to loosen them, to carefully take them up and pile them up by the fence. He said that with a heavy heart he proceeded to do as his father bade him, but would much rather have plowed elsewhere. After working awhile, his oxen needed rest; at this time he was very near the bank of the river, and was sitting on his plowbeam with his back towards the river. He said that, in spite of himself, his thoughts would run on about the red men who once inhabited this valley. True, his father had told him that no Indians had been here for a long time, they had long since removed to other 'hunting-grounds,' or had fallen in battle before the superior arms of the white man. He thought, and could not help thinking, what would be his fate if the Indians should happen to come along and find him plowing up the graves, and removing the stones that they had set up to mark the last resting-places of their 'fathers?' While these thoughts were troubling him, he heard a low guttural, yet musical sound, or combination of sounds, which came from the river behind him. It was different from anything that he had ever heard. He turned his face toward the river; a screen of willows partly hid from his view objects on the river nearest to him, and as these strange sounds came nearer, he peered through the bushes and—said he to the writer—'imagine, if you can, my feelings and surprise, when I tell you that I saw close to me a large canoe full of Indians, and this had barely passed the opening before another canoe full of Indians came in sight. I immediately unhitched the oxen and hurried out of that field, and away to the house. Being somewhat excited at what I had seen, I said to father, that I thought it very unsafe to plow in the Indian burying-field while the Indians were about. Father told me to explain; I did, by telling what I had seen. He told me to go down to the ferry, and see if the Indians landed. I went to the ferry, which then occupied the present site of the Great Bend Bridge across the Susquehanna River. And there, at the Log Tavern, which then stood on the site of the two-story house opposite to and near the toll-house, I found the Indians, about twenty in number.' A crowd of the curious soon collected, and an 'inquisitive' Yankee soon learned from the Indian interpreter, that they had come to claim all that strip of land lying north of the Susquehanna River, and south of the forty-second parallel of latitude, declaring that they had never sold it, and that they wanted to meet the settlers and have a talk. This declaration of the interpreter caused the crowd to disperse in every direction to notify the settlers, and when these messengers told the settlers that a large party of Indians were at the Log Tavern, and claimed their lands, they, too, left their plows and wended their way to the Log Tavern, and as they came together on the way thither, they saluted each other after this manner, 'What now, what next? here we have been trembling about our titles; Pennsylvania claims us, Connecticut claims us, and now, after all, here come the aborigines themselves, to claim our lands, and, if we should refuse, perhaps will take our scalps.'

"By evening a number of settlers had collected, and, as they had no speaker among them, they chose one for the occasion; he was a kind of backwoods lawyer of those days (his name, as well as many other interesting incidents of this meeting, have, I am sorry to say, gone from the memory of the writer). Among those early settlers that were named as having attended this meeting, and were interested therein, I can only remember the following: Captain Ichabod Buck, Captain Jonathan Newman, Jonathan Dimon, Sylvanus Hatch, Josiah Stewart, David Buck, Noble Trowbridge and James Newman. After all were seated in the old Log Tavern, the speaker for the settlers arose, and told the Indian interpreter that all were now ready to hear the talk of their chief.

"Many eyes were now turned toward the central figure of a group of noble-looking Indians. But at this time some of the whites present were whispering to each other, and at the same time, wondering why the chief rose not. After a while the interpreter arose, and gave these inattentive whispering whites a just and well-merited rebuke. 'Friends,' said he, 'I perceive that you do not understand the character of the red men, when assembled in council. No Indian will rise to speak until there is perfect silence and attention, and there is nothing he more dislikes than a whispering, inattentive audience.' After this rebuke from the interpreter, silence reigned. The chief, a man of great stature and noble bearing, soon arose, and spoke in the Indian dialect, which was well interpreted, sentence by sentence, in good English, and was, as near as the writer can remember, as follows: 'Friends and brothers, once our fathers had their wigwams on these beautiful banks of the Susquehanna; once they chased the elk, the deer, the bear, over the beautiful hills that surround us; once we had full possession of this valley, and no one disputed our right. Moon after moon rolled on, and our fathers left the valley for better hunting-grounds, north and west, but before they left, "good Father Onas" (William Penn) made a treaty with our fathers, by which they sold him a large piece of land, which is called after William Penn—Pennsylvania—he gave our fathers a copy of the treaty—large paper—which, I am sorry to say, is lost. Now our learned young men tell us, that in this treaty with good father Onas, the northern line of his purchase here was the Susquehanna River, and not the forty-second parallel of north latitude, as laid down on the "paper pictures"—maps—of the whites. Now, brothers, we come to you as the representatives of our nation to claim this land. We believe we have never sold it. We come not to take it from you, but to sell it. Our good father Onas—William Penn—always dealt fair with the red man. We would never claim anything that was wrong of the children or friends of Onas if we knew it. When famine came upon the early friends of Onas, did not our fathers supply the wants of the starving friends of Onas, by hunting and fishing for them, and when bad hostile Indians troubled them, did not our fathers place the white feather of protection over the doors of their log wigwams. And while we acknowledge that bad Indians, many bad Indians, did take the king's money and fight with the king's men, our brothers will witness, and your history of the war will witness, that the nation, or that part of the nation that we represent—the Oneidas—never raised the war-cry against our brothers. And now, if we have a good right to this land, we have great confidence in our friends, the children of our great and good father, William Penn, that they will do right and just by us. We wait your answer.'

"The speaker for the settlers, after a few words in an undertone with them, made a low bow to the chief and to the other members of the delegation who sat on each side of their chief, in the form of a semicircle, and said: 'Friends and brothers, we are pleased with the words of the noble chief who has so eloquently spoken. The settlers, who now surround me, have chosen me to answer the chief. They desire me to thank him, and the other braves who sit before us, for the kind and pacific manner in which their great chief has set forth their claim to this part of the land we occupy, and upon which we have built our wigwams. They also desire me to say, that they are not ignorant that those that you represent were always the friends of our good father, William Penn, and have always proved true to his friends, and shall always cherish in remembrance those kind offices of our red brethren in times past. And here, almost under the shade of the three "Old Indian Apple Trees," planted by your fathers, we pledge ourselves anew to our red brothers, that nothing arising out of your present claim shall mar the peace or lessen the friendship that has so long existed between us. We are very sorry, however, to inform you that our "head man," Judge William Thomson, is away on a long journey, and as to your rights to this land, we must confess that we are ignorant. We settled here holding the titles to our lands under the charter of William Penn, never doubting his knowledge as to the extent of his purchase of your fathers. When our "head man" returns, and it should prove that our good father, and your good father, Onas, was mistaken, and that your fathers never parted with this land, we pledge ourselves, as the honest descendants of the good William Penn, to buy of you these lands, on which we have settled and built our wigwams. If our brothers will tarry with us until our "head man" returns, which will be in eight or ten days, the hospitalities of this Log Tavern shall be yours, without cost to you, and in the mean time you can amuse yourselves, perhaps, in hunting the deer on these beautiful hills, where once your fathers trod. And if our brothers desire it, we will join you in the chase. But if you cannot gratify us in this, but must sooner return to your own people, then we pledge ourselves again, that you shall hear from us when our head man returns.'

"The interpreter of the Indians, after consulting with the delegates, said, that, in behalf of his companions, he returned many thanks for the very kind answer, and for their pressing invitation to remain and enjoy the hospitalities of their friends; 'but,' said he, 'we are compelled to deny ourselves this great enjoyment. Business at the Council-House of the Six Nations demands our return, where among our own people they would await a letter from our head man, and there would invoke their Great Spirit —your Great God—to shower blessings upon the head of the friends of William Penn.'

"The next day these Indians left for their homes in Northern New York. When Judge Thomson returned, the settlers soon acquainted him with this new claim to their lands. Judge Thomson sent to the capital of the State for a certified copy of William Penn's[1] treaty with the Indians. In due time the Judge received a fac-simile copy of said treaty, and many of our citizens of that day had the pleasure of seeing and examining this copy of Penn's treaty with the Indians, before the Judge forwarded the same to the Council-House of the Six Nations. This copy was described to the writer, as a great curiosity. The names of all the chiefs were plainly written out, and at the termination of each name was the sign manual or mark of the chief; at the end of one name was a bow, another an arrow, another a bow and arrow crossed, another deers' horns, another a deer's head and horns, another the form of a new moon, etc., etc., each name having a different mark representing their implements of war, hunting, game, trophies, etc.

"This treaty plainly fixed the northern boundary of our State on the forty-second parallel of north latitude, thus dissipating the fears of the settlers. This copy of Penn's treaty Judge Thomson forwarded to the address left by the Indians, since which time neither our fathers, nor we of the second or third generation, have heard anything more about the Indians' claim to these lands."

The capture and escape of John Hilborn formed one of the most notable occurrences of the Indian War of the Revolutionary period. Of this we give quite a minute account, partly because Mr. Hilborn afterwards became one of the pioneers[2] of Susquehanna County and partly because of its intrinsic and illustrative interest.

"[3] Mr. Hilborn and his few scattered neighbors had, in their isolated condition, become apprehensive of the danger of a sudden attack by the Indians, and had agreed to keep each other informed on what was taking place, by communicating as frequently as possible. Among these neighbors was John Price, a relative of Hilborn's, who lived seven miles above, on the north branch of the creek.

"One morning in the early part of June, 1779, an old woman came running down the stream in great distress, saying that her son's family were all killed or taken prisoners by the Indians, herself only escaping. This family resided on the west branch of the creek, though I am unable to give the name.

"Mr. Hilborn set out immediately to give the warning to John Price. On his way, after ascending a hill, he saw the house in flames from which the family had been captured. Proceeding in the direction of Mr. Price's, and when about one mile from the burning dwelling, on ascending another hill, he found himself suddenly surrounded by five Indians, all armed with guns, who demanded his surrender; seeing no possibility of escape, he felt that he must submit to whatever conditions they might be disposed to exact, and resolved to do it with as good grace as possible. They then informed him (as they all spoke tolerably good English) that if he would give a solemn promise not to attempt to escape, they would spare his life; if not, they would kill him on the spot. He made the promise, and, as will appear, kept it faithfully during the entire period of his captivity. They then bound a heavy burthen on his back and ordered him to march. Soon after they passed in sight of John Price's house, where a halt was made. The Indians questioned Hilborn closely as to who lived there, what sort of a man he was, whether he was rich, etc., and also whether he kept a gun. He answered truthfully all their questions; that Price was a peaceable, quiet man, that he was not rich, that he kept a gun, as every one did, to supply himself with game, that he took no part in the war, etc. After an exciting talk of considerable length they concluded to pass by the house of Mr. Price and spare him for the present, to the great relief of Mr. Hilborn. He discovered that all the family whose house they had burned were in company except one little boy, who, on account of his loud cries—as he some time after learned—was killed at the house. They made rapid marches all the way to the North Branch of the Susquehanna, crossing many streames of considerable depth, which they were obliged to wade, and proved a cause of much suffering to the women and children, who became greatly fatigued and at times nearly exhausted. They crossed the Susquehanna above the mouth of the Tioga, and found the former deep and difficult of passage, so much so that two of the young girls were only saved from drowning by the extraordinary efforts of Mr. Hilborn. He seems to have had great sympathy for this captive family, consisting of the mother and four or five children, affording them all the relief possible in their tiresome journey, and encouraging them, whenever opportunity afforded, with comforting words; and they were greatly endeared to him, confirming our observations of all similar experience in life, that community of suffering makes the sufferers kin. After crossing the Susquehanna the Indians seemed to feel themselves out of danger of pursuit, and their marches were thereafter much easier. A little girl of the captive family became a great favorite with all the Indians, and was treated with much kindness, they doing everything possible for her comfort on the journey, promising her many things on their arrival at their home in Shenango, telling her many times that she should have plenty of milk, etc. But what seemed very remarkable, in view of the care and consideration bestowed on this child, was the fact that they frequently showed her the scalp of her little brother, killed at the house, the sight of which caused her to weep bitterly.

[1] Treaty at Fort Stanwix, 1768. See Chapter I.

[2] See Harmony township.

[3] The sketch is contributed by Luke W. Brodhead, who derived it from Paul S. Preston, who, in turn, had the facts from the journal of his father, Samuel Preston, of Stockport, Wayne County, written in 1787.

"After crossing the river, a few short marches brought them to the place where their canoes were tied up; why they were not left on the opposite side of the river on setting out with their expedition, Mr. Hilborn could not understand. They placed him in one of the canoes with the larger portion of the party, and under guard, ordered him to pole it up the stream, which he did the whole distance to Shenango. They frequently went ashore, and on one occasion the old Delaware Indian, who seemed to act the part of a chief, went out hunting and killed a large buck. On his return he ordered two Indians, young men, with Mr. Hilborn, to go and dress the deer and bring it in. One of these Indians was a Delaware, a large, coarse man, the other a genteel young Mohawk, who had on several occasions before shown kindness to Mr. Hilborn. The Delaware was surly and overbearing and ordered the young Mohawk to dress the deer, which he undertook, but not succeeding very well, they soon engaged in a quarrel in their own language and finally in a desperate fight. The Mohawk, though the younger, was the more active and proved the conqueror, compelling the Delaware to finish dressing the deer.

"On the arrival of the party at the Indian settlements at Shenango, Mr. Hilborn found himself quite ill from exposure, and nearly exhausted. He was compelled to perform a great amount of severe labor for the Indians, and imposed an additional amount on himself in his efforts to relieve his fellow-captives. In this condition he learned to his horror that he was required to undergo the severe ordeal of running the gauntlet.

"The arrival of the party seemed soon to be generally known at the different Indian towns near, as a large and jubilant crowd was soon collected, composed mainly of women and children, who were to be Mr. Hilborn's tormentors, and who seemed eager to engage in the sport of lashing the poor captive. Two long lines were formed, composed of women and children armed with whips and clubs, through which Mr. Hilborn was to pass. The young Mohawk, of whom mention has been made, stood by silently watching with evident displeasure the preparations for this humiliating method of torture, so universally prevalent among his people, feeling that the prisoner in his present condition was unable to endure the punishment. Mr. Hilborn was ordered to start at a given signal; he attempted to run as well as he could, but he had proceeded but a few paces when the brave and generous young Mohawk broke in the ranks and arrested its further progress; the confusion that ensued lasted but a moment, as he boldly announced his determination, and right from custom, to offer himself to run in place of the sick captive. He was accepted, and ran the whole course; notwithstanding his remarkable agility, he was severely punished, but he endured it without a word of complaint and apparently with stoical indifference. The young Mohawk continued the friend of Mr. Hilborn throughout his captivity and was always kind and considerate towards him.

"During his stay at Shenango the Indians received intelligence of General Sullivan's intention of coming up the Susquehanna to destroy their towns and growing crops; this information produced the wildest excitement, and on the part of some of the warriors, exhibitions of violent rage.

"They had a large body of the best of land under cultivation, with the prospect of an abundant harvest of Indian corn, beans, etc., and the thought of having it destroyed was a natural cause of anxiety.

"About the time of receiving intelligence of the movements of General Sullivan they were holding a council in reference to an expedition to the settlements on the West Branch of the Susquehanna, to be commanded by the celebrated Capt. Brandt and Capt. Montour. Hilborn was informed of this contemplated expedition by his friend, the young Mohawk, who seemed to be privy to all that was taking place. He expressed his fears for the fate of Hilborn should this expedition be attended with unfavorable results, and also in case General Sullivan's army should make its appearance. The prisoners in either case would be treated badly. Hilborn now for the first time made efforts to obtain for himself and his companions release from captivity, and for this purpose had an interview with the old Delaware chief who took him prisoner. He made no attempts at misstatement, for he found the old man exceedingly shrewd and any efforts to deceive him would be fruitless. He told him that he was a Quaker, that he had taken no part in the war, that it was against his religious principles to fight, etc., and that the women and children could do them no harm; but all his arguments were in vain; the only reply was that, 'all the Yankees have the same story.' Yet they treated him with more consideration after this interview. His employment was now, and had been for some time, to attend to the cultivation of the growing corn. (As is well known, General Sullivan in a few weeks from this time rendered desolate this whole region of country, destroying forty villages, some of them containing as many as a hundred houses, together with 160,000 bushels of corn, leaving scarce a trace of vegetation on the surface.)

"Mr. Hilborn, now finding that he could not purchase his freedom by entreaties, laid a plan for his escape. He concluded to take a canoe at night and quietly push down the Susquehanna until morning, and then hide the craft in the mouth of some creek, while he watched from an elevated position to ascertain if he was pursued; if so, to take his chances by land, and if not, to again take the canoe and at night make his way down the stream. In planning his escape his mind became greatly exercised, for notwithstanding the promise made on the day of his capture was not voluntary, having been extorted from him at the peril of his life, and therefore not strictly binding, yet when he came to make the trial, he could not with a clear conscience disregard the pledges he had given and falsify his word; yet the plan of escape was deemed practical, and he had many opportunities for putting it in execution. On one occasion he was sent some distance for water; a strong impulse to regain his freedom suddenly took possession of him, and he dropped his camp-kettle and began to run. After going about half a mile he again thought of the promise on which his life had been spared, and as speedily returned to the camp with the water.

"Capt. Brandt was arranging now for his intended expedition against the settlements on the West Branch of the Susquehanna.

"Hilborn heard from his Indian friend his opinion of the high character of the Mohawk chief, whom he described as the greatest man among the Indian nations; that he had been educated in New England, had since been in London in company with Guy Johnston, and now held a commission under the crown, and that he was noted as much for his humanity as for his bravery. Mr. Hilborn now resolved to call on Brandt and state his case as well as he could. He found him in his tent, seated at a table, writing, and dressed in a calico wrapper. He was received with great politeness, and Capt. Brandt acted towards him more like an English gentleman than an Indian chief. He listened attentively to what Mr. Hilborn had to say, and seemed to have much sympathy for him, but finally told him that as he was a prisoner of the Delawares, he could not interfere for him, as he was a Mohawk. Yet Hilborn believed that the interview was of service to him, for it was ordered soon after that he should be sent to Niagara and delivered to the English there.

"After bidding farewell to his generous Indian friend, he was conducted through the Genesee country, where he saw large bodies of beautiful land under cultivation by the Indians.

"From Niagara he was ordered on board a vessel to be sent to Quebec. In passing down the St. Lawrence the water was exceedingly rapid and the navigation appeared dangerous. The vessel was conducted by a Frenchman with much skill, and he arrived safely in Quebec in just two months from the time he was taken prisoner. Here he was under no restraint and seemed to be left to take care of himself. He was now hungry, moneyless and almost naked. In this extremity he applied to an Irish colonel in the British service for relief. The colonel listened to the relation he gave of himself, and, to Hilborn's surprise, loaned him money enough to purchase a tolerably decent suit of clothes and something to eat.

"He now made effort to obtain employment, by which he might support himself for the present and discharge his obligation to the generous colonel. Happening to mention to him that he was a miller by trade, he at once sent him to a mill of his own on the opposite side of the river, to work for a time on trial. In this new situation he did everything in his power to show his gratitude by furthering the interests of his employer. He made several alterations, re-dressed the stones, etc., and after a little time had the mill doing better than it had ever done before. The colonel was greatly pleased and soon after made him superintendent of the whole business of purchasing grain, selling the flour, as well as attending to its manufacture, the sale of flour amounting to about £100 per week. He remained in this situation over a year, but with constant longing to return home; yet no opportunity was afforded. He at length made known his desire to the colonel, who seemed very reluctant to part with him, and offered to give him whatever wages he might in reason ask, if he would remain.

"But seeing he had his heart set on getting to his home, the colonel generously procured a passage for him in a transport about to sail for New York. They sailed by the Newfoundland fisheries, when, the captain receiving information of a French fleet lying off the coast, they put into Halifax. He remained in Nova Scotia a considerable time, when he again took passage and was finally landed in New Jersey, somewhere near Amboy, from which place he walked to his father's house, in Makefield, and from thence to his home on Brodhead's Creek, having been away just two years from the time of his capture."

The family captured with Mr. Hilborn were all released and returned safely home, excepting one of the children, who died at Niagara.

CHAPTER IV.

CONNECTICUT CLAIMANTS.

Trenton Decree—Second Pennamite War—Erection of Luzerne County—Act of 1795—Drinker's Letters—Bartlett Hinds Mobbed.

FIFTEEN days after the surrender of Lord Cornwallis a petition was presented to Congress "from the Supreme Executive Council of Pennsylvania, stating a matter in dispute between the said State and the State of Connecticut, respecting sundry lands lying on the east branch of the river Susquehanna, and praying a hearing in the premises, agreeable to the ninth article of the Confederation." Arrangements to this effect were made, and one year later, November 12, 1782, a court composed of five commissioners—Messrs. Whipple, Arnold, Houston, Griffin and Brearly—convened at Trenton, N. J. Messrs. Bradford, Reed, Wilson and Sergeant appeared as counsel for Pennsylvania, and Messrs. Dyer, Johnson and Root were the agents from Connecticut. The court declined to order notice to be given to the settlers at Wyoming claiming the land, as that question did not come before them, the question they were empowered to decide being solely that of jurisdiction. After sitting forty-one judicial days, in which the parties, represented by their counsel, had proceeded with their pleas, they gave their decision in these few words:

"We are unanimously of the opinion that Connecticut has no right to the lands in controversy.

"We are also unanimously of opinion that the jurisdiction and pre-emption of all the territory lying within the charter of Pennsylvania, and now claimed by the State of Connecticut, do of right belong to the State of Pennsylvania."

It is generally conceded by those who have investigated the subject, that this decision was political and had reference to the future welfare of the States. The War of the Revolution being over, the States found it necessary to unite in one general government, without loosing their autonomy as States however. Had the decision been in favor of the Connecticut claimants, it would have made a State composed of two parts, separated by New York. In placing the disputed territory under the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania, it made one compact State of contiguous territory. Geographically considered, then, the decision was correct; but legally considered, the Connecticut claim was far the stronger. The Connecticut charter was first, her Indian purchase was first and she was first by occupancy. This certainly made a strong case. The commissioners only decided the question of jurisdiction. It would have been wise and just had the Pennsylvania government shown proper respect for the rights of the hard-working pioneers who had braved every danger and suffered untold hardships to make improvements in an inhospitable, waste, howling wilderness. Had Pennsylvania presented every one of these hardy pioneers with a deed for the land he occupied, it would have been both politic and just. The unoccupied lands were increased in value by the improvements made by these settlers, so that the land speculator need not have lost anything. The Pennsylvania Legislature vacillated from one course to another, but eventually fell into the hands of the land speculator altogether and proceeded to eject the Connecticut claimants by force.

"[1] With the close of 1782, and the Trenton decree, the jurisdiction of Connecticut ceased. Before that decree the court had expressly stated that the right of soil did not come before them, and thus the settlers were content to be transferred from one State to the jurisdiction of another; but events soon made it apparent that expulsion, or the entire abandonment of their possessions, was to be preliminary to any adjustment of existing difficulties. The land had been purchased by Pennsylvania speculators,[2] while it was occupied by those who held it under title from the Susquehanna Company; and the Legislature of Pennsylvania, by its commissioners appointed in 1783, to inquire into the circumstances of the Wyoming inhabitants, expressly declared: 'It cannot be supposed that Pennsylvania will, nor can she, consistent with her constitution, by any ex post facto law, deprive her citizens of any portion of their property legally obtained.' This, of course, implied the loss to the Connecticut settlers of all they had paid to the Susquehanna Company, in favor of prior 'citizens' of Pennsylvania who had 'legally obtained' possession of the land. This was the origin of the second Pennamite War, which fortunately extended over only one year —1784—and resulted in the restoration to the 'Yankees' of the lands from which they had been cruelly driven during the spring of that year."

[1] Blackman's "History."

[2] The landholders who stimulated the Assembly to unjust measures against the Wyoming people were generally claimants under leases from the proprietaries, or warrants of 1784. The landholders under warrants of 1793 and 1794—the Tilghmans, Drinkers, Francises, etc.—are in no respect implicated in the censure.—Miner.

The decision at Trenton left the Wyoming settlers but two alternatives: either to submit to the jurisdiction of the State of Pennsylvania or openly rebel and organize a State of their own. Connecticut had evidently abandoned her children, acquiescing in the the decree at Trenton. She was afterward amply compensated by retaining over three million three hundred and sixty-six thousand acres of land in the "Western Reserve" in Ohio, for which the State of Connecticut realized one million nine hundred thousand dollars. But the Wyoming settlers were not so easily appeased.

The years 1785 and 1786 did not exhibit any abatement of the controversy between the rivals. Col. John Franklin became the leading spirit among the Connecticut claimants, and Col. Timothy Pickering appeared as the chief champion of the Pennsylvania cause. A plan was formed for carving a new State from Pennsylvania, to include the old county of Westmoreland and all of the territory claimed by Connecticut, and thus wrest Wyoming from the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania. Col. Ethan Allen, of Vermont, appeared upon the scene as one pledged to furnish means and men for the dismemberment of Pennsylvania.

Col. Franklin would not take the oath of fidelity to Pennsylvania nor accept (at that time) a post of official importance to which he had been chosen with a view to conciliating him.

The erection of Luzerne County from Northumberland, Sept. 25, 1786, was intended to conciliate the Yankee settlers by giving them an opportunity to have a direct representation in the Assembly and to state their grievances, and, in a large measure, shape their own affairs. This county included all of the Connecticut settlers, except those at Lackawack or Wallenpaupack and the few on the Delaware, principally at Cushutunk.

It extended one hundred and twenty miles north and south, or from the mouth of the Nescopec to the north line of the State, on which its extent was from the sixth mile-stone to a point fifteen miles west of the Susquehanna River where it enters the State a second time.

In March, 1787, the inhabitants proposed a compromise, in effect that if the commonwealth would grant them the seventeen townships which had been laid out, and in which settlements had been made prior to the "Trenton decree," they would relinquish their claim to all other lands within the limits of the Susquehanna purchase; what were known as the "certified townships" were thus secured to the settlers; but while most of the inhabitants were within these townships, there were others scattered here and there who had bought rights of the Susquehanna and Delaware Companies and made improvements upon their locations. There were quite a number of this class within the present limits of Susquehanna County.

Another class dissatisfied with the compromise were the Pennsylvanians, to whom the State had previously sold a portion of the lands, and who did not wish, very naturally, to be dispossessed of them. Such was the effect of the opposition that the next year the compromise act was suspended and afterwards repealed. The conflict was continued.

In 1795 "the Intrusion Law" was passed, warning off all settlers not applying for land under a Pennsylvania title. On April 4, 1799, an act for offering compensation to the Pennsylvania claimants of certain lands within the "certified townships" was passed and was known as the compromising law. On February 16, 1801, an act supplementary to the "Intrusion Law" of 1795 was passed, authorizing the Governor to issue a proclamation, forbidding all future intrusions and requiring all who had intruded to peaceably withdraw.

The State had, in 1799, appointed commissioners to adjust the conflicting claims of the Pennamites and "Yankees," to examine all of the claims, fix the amount each Connecticut settler should justly pay the State to perfect his title, and, on the other hand, the sum that the State should pay to those who were compelled to relinquish the lands they had bought from the State. The commission performed its duties fairly, but many persons were dissatisfied. On April 6, 1802, an act of Assembly provided "that no conveyance of land within the counties of Luzerne, Lycoming and Wayne shall pass any estate, where the title is not derived from this State or the proprietaries, before the 4th of July, 1776." The law was promulgated by proclamation of the Governor May 1, 1802, and from that time whatever "right" Connecticut claimants may have had, it was the veriest folly to defend it. But many persons still scorned all overtures from the State and firmly believed in the validity of the Connecticut title. They proposed to hold their claims in spite of all. Public feeling ran high. The newspaper controversy was heated and it seemed as if armed conflict must again occur. In fact, the Governor again contemplated calling out the militia of the State to enforce obedience; but milder methods finally prevailed, and the long-vexed question was eventually settled by amicable means.

Much of the credit for the peaceable solution of the problem and the adjustment of differences by bloodless means was due to the Quakers, or Friends, who were among the largest land-owners under the Pennsylvania title in the disputed territory.

The enforcement of the Intrusion Law produced some difficulty in Susquehanna County. The act of Assembly was passed April 11, 1795, and was designed "to prevent intrusions on lands within the counties of Northampton, Northumberland and Luzerne." The first section reads,—

"If any person shall, after the passing of this act, take possession of, enter, intrude, or settle on any lands" within the limits of the counties aforesaid, "by virtue or under color of any conveyance of half-share right, or any other pretended title, not derived from the authority of this commonwealth, or of the late proprietaries of Pennsylvania, before the Revolution, such persons upon being duly convicted thereof, upon indictment in any Court of Oyer and Terminer, or Court of General Quarter Sessions, to be held in the proper county, shall forfeit and pay the sum of two hundred dollars, one-half to the use of the county, and the other half to the use of the informer; and shall also be subject to such imprisonment, not exceeding twelve months, as the court, before whom such conviction is had, may, in their discretion, direct."

The second section provides that every person who shall combine or conspire for the purpose of conveying, possessing or settling on any lands within the limits aforesaid, under any half-share right or pretended title, as aforesaid, or for the purpose of laying out townships by persons not appointed or acknowledged by the laws of this commonwealth, and every person that shall be accessary thereto, before or after the fact, shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay a sum not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, one-half to the use of the county, and the other half to the use of the informer; and shall also be subject to such imprisonment at hard labor, not exceeding eighteen months, as the court in their discretion may direct. The third section provided that in case of conviction the sheriff "should expel and eject all and every the person or persons thereon intruded as aforesaid," and the Governor is to call out the militia if necessary.

This act went no further verbally than to make intrusions punishable—prohibition being only implied. An act supplementary to this, passed February 16, 1801, authorized the Governor (section xi.) to issue his proclamation, "Forbidding all future intrusions, and enjoining and requiring all persons who have intruded contrary to the provisions of the act to which this act is supplementary, to withdraw peaceably from the lands whereon such intrusions have been made; and enjoining or requiring all officers of government, and all good citizens of the Commonwealth, to prevent, or prosecute by all legal means, such intrusions and intruders," etc.

April 6, 1802, an act of Assembly provided that "no conveyance of land within the counties of Luzerne, Lycoming and Wayne shall pass any estate where the title is not derived from this State or the proprietaries before the 4th of July, 1776." It imposed a penalty upon any judge or justice for receiving proof of, or recorder for recording, a deed of different description. "No person interested in the Connecticut title to act as judge or juror, in any cause where said title may come in question," etc. An exception was made in favor of the inhabitants of the seventeen townships, only as far as related to judges, sheriffs or jurors. This law was required to be made known by proclamation from the Governor, and took effect May 1, 1802, as before noticed. But the Yankee settlers were persistent; they had left home and kindred in many instances, and put all their fortune and labor into their Pennsylvania homes. They had come into an unbroken wilderness, and commenced to make homes for themselves and their children, under a title which they supposed to be good. They were willing to yield to the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania, but it did seem like a hardship to be expelled from their lands by civil process simply to enrich a few land speculators who lived in Philadelphia. Viewing it from their standpoint, it is not singular that they resisted the enforcement of this act. The Luzerne Federalist of January, 1803, stated that "In the district of Rindaw (Rush) one hundred and fifty persons not only avowedly, but firmly and positively, believe in the Connecticut title and no other. In Willingboro, (Great Bend) perhaps thirty. But in all the districts nearer two thousand than one thousand could be found who would risk their all in defence of the Connecticut title, if Pennsylvania ever attempts to drive them off by force of arms."

The following letter from Ezekiel Hyde to Colonel Jenkins shows the persistence of the Yankees as late as 1800:

"NORWICH, Feb. 14, 1800.

"Dear Sir,—

"We have heard nothing from you since I left Rindaw, which was about the 20th of last month. My uncle Jabez and family all started for Rindaw the day before yesterday. The gang consisted of ten horse sleighs and two ox-teams—three other families besides my uncle's. I went with them seventeen miles and left them in high animated spirits, determined to reach Rindaw within seven days. Jabez, his mother and sister in one sleigh, my uncle and Stephen in another; Seril Peck, the young man that you saw at the store, drove another sleigh, and several others that you never saw—all determined to settle. What they will do with the horses and oxen after they get there, God knows. When I came from there I directed Robinson to purchase all the hay that he could obtain, but I have now sent on four more horses of my own that are good ones, and ought to be well kept. I have given Jabez particular directions about them, and am not in any fear of their suffering if there is any forage to be found on the waters of the Wyalusing. There has a number of good families gone from Litchfield County into Usher and the Manor Delaware purchase. They have taken along some of the rhino to purchase cows, etc., and they have taken with them some of the best working oxen that ever I saw. In short, there have more than fifty families gone into the Delaware purchase within the last two months; ten families from Long Island. Colonel, you will recollect what I mentioned to you respecting Seril Peck, and the vacant land adjoining Victory and New Milford in the Susquehanna purchase. I must depend upon all that there is vacant, for Peck has gone on determined to settle on them, and I am of opinion that his father and a family of eleven children will all be there within two years, and he is one of the most respectable men in the town of Franklin. I wish you to keep this request among your daily memoranda.

* * * * * *

"Please to inform citizen Palmer and family that their friends are generally well. Mr. Charles Miner will call on you and give the particulars.

"I am, sir, your friend and fellow-citizen,

"EZEKIEL HYDE.

"Colonel Jno. Jenkins."

SETTLERS ON THE WYALUSING.—Charles Miner's list of settlers upon the upper waters of the Wyalusing, with several corrections made by Miss Blackman:

Memorandum (dated April 29, 1800) of the inhabitants upon the Wyalusing waters, above the Forks, the time of their settling in the country, the number of their families, etc.:

Rindaw.

Isaac Brownson & family	8	1794
Jabez Hyde and family	5	1799
Daniel Ross and sister	2	1796
Total	15

Usher.

Daniel Metcalf and family.		1798
Joab Picket and family	3	1799
Miner Picket, born.
Wm. Lathrop and family	3	1799
Ingram Lathrop, born March 21, 1800.
Nathan Tupper and family	6	1799
James Carroll and family	5	1800
Abner Griffis and family	9	1799
Eb. Whipple and family	7	1799
Ezra Lathrop and family	4	1799
Holden Sweet and family	7	1800
Eben Ingram and family	2	1799
Samuel Lewis and family	5	1800
Samuel Main and family	7	1798
Fanny Main, born in 1800.
Meacham Main & family	3	1800
Charles Miner	1	1799
Total	64

Manor.

Jno. Reynolds and family and sister	6	1800
Daniel Foster and family	5	1800
Jer. Meacham and family.	9	1799
Nehem. Main and family	3	1799
Ezek. Main and family	7	1799
Ozem Cook and family	9	1800
Samuel Coggswell	1	1800
Robert Day	1	1800
Total	41

Dandolo.

Steph. Wilson and family	5	1799
Capt. Bartlett Hines and family	6	1800
Cap. J. Sabins and family	10	1799
Jo. Chapman and family	2	1800
A. Tracy, Esq., and family	10	1799

B. Melbourne, mother and sisters 6 1797

Total 39

Locke.

Andrew Canfield.
Ira Brister.
Albert Camp.
Joseph Ross.
Silas Beardsley.
Benjamin Abbott.

Bidwell.

Capt. Peleg Tracy and family 5 1799
Wm. Harkins and family. 6 1794
Saml Howard 1 1799
Thos. and Henry Park and family 3 1796
Capt. Charles Geer and family 3 1800
Capt. Jos. Chapman and family 5 1798
Edward Goodwin and family 3 1800
Jeremiah Spencer and family 10 1800
Thos. Giles and family . 3 1799

Total 39

Auburn.

Myron Kasson and family 3 1799
Cyril Peck 1800
Lloyd Goodsell 1799

[Wm. Harkins is put too early by one or two years at least. —E. C. B.]

[1] Newspaper controversy upon the subject was particularly rife that year, but extended over a much longer period.

The following letters of Henry Drinker, of Philadelphia, a large holder of lands in this section, under title derived from the State of Pennsylvania, reveal the intrusion on his tracts :

"PHILADELPHIA, 5 mo. 22d, 1801.

"Respected Friend,

"ABRAM HORNE, ESQ.

"There are in the hands of Timothy Pickering, Esq., two maps, one of them of a considerable body of lands situate on the waters of Tunkhannock Creek and extending to the head-waters of Salt Lick Creek; the other represents lands bounding on the State line between this State and New York, and to the eastward of the Susquehanna—these maps Col. Pickering has promised to deliver thee when called for.

"I now deliver herewith a map of a large body of lands, principally on and near the waters of Meshoppen Creek, and including branches of Wyalusing, Tuscarora and Tunkhannock.

"The townships laid out by the companies (Connecticut) are distinguished by dotted lines, which may be of some use to thee in traversing that country. I have also obtained the names of about 50 settlers from Connecticut, etc., and the parts they are settled on: tho' there may be some variation as to the particular tracts they occupy, yet I presume the following statement may be nearly right, viz :—

Town of Usher.

	No.
Ebenezer Whipple . . .	157
Abner Griffith	156
Solomon Griffith	156, 107
Holden Sweet	156
James Carl (Carroll?) .	158
Samuel Maine	107, 108
Mecom Maine	107, 108
Ezekiel Maine	107, 108
Nathan Tupper	201
William Lathrop . . .	208
Erastus Bingham	204, 205
Eli Billings	205, 206
Ezekiel Hyde (an improvement)	207
Dan. Metcalf	242

Auburn.

Lloyd Goodsell.
Myron Kasson.
Charles Morey.
Ezekiel Morey.
John Passmore.
John Robinson.

Dandoloe.

Eldad Brewster 53
Elias West 52, 54
—— Crocker 50, 51
Joseph Chapman 46

Manor.

Jeremiah Mecom 63, 105
Otis Robinson . . . . . ditto
David Harris 66
Ozem Cook 67, 68
Henry Cook 67, 68
Amos Perry 67, 68
George Morey 100, 101
Ichabod Halsey 104
Nehemiah Maine 104
Otis Robinson 104
Ezekiel Maine, Jr. . . . 106, 107, 107, 108

Foster.

David Dowd, southerly part of Manor.
Andrew Lisk, southerly part of Manor.

Chebur.

Thomas Parke, Harry Parks, } perhaps in Bidwell.
Martin Myers.
Capt. Joseph Chapman.
Ezekiel Morey.

New Milford.[2]

John Hussey 214, 264
Daniel Kinney, Jr. . . . 215
Lyman Kinney 234

Victory.

—— Spencer, agent for the claimant.
—— Avery.

Gore.

Cyril Peck.
Josiah Bass, between the Gore and Auburn.

Rindaw.

Capt. Joab Pickett . . . 240, 242
Daniel Roswell, deaf and dumb 240, 242

"There is one Isaac Brunson settled in the forks of Wyalusing Creek, just to the westward and adjoining my bounds of lot No. 239. He is on a tract survey'd to Thomas Dundas. This man has always conducted well and deserves to be kindly treated; being Town Clerk, he can give all the names of settlers in New Milford.

* * * * * * * * *

"Thy Friend,

"HENRY DRINKER."

March 24, 1802, Henry Drinker writes to Ebenezer Bowman, of Wilkes-Barre,—

"I am concerned in an extensive tract, and in the general of an excellent quality, situate principally on the waters of Meshoppen Creek, and including parts of Wyalusing, Tuscarora and Tunkhannock Creeks, in the whole near 100,000 acres, which, on receiving part payment and undoubted good security for the remainder, I would sell together at two dollars pr. acre, though I believe it cheap at double that price. There are parts, however, picked pieces, which have been intruded on, that are of very superior value, and if separately sold, must be at a very different price. I care nought about relinquishments; all that I require is pay and undoubted security, when a clear title will be made under grants from this State."

In one of his letters Drinker speaks of Jeremiah Spencer, and discusses the propriety of commencing prosecutions against him and others. A number of the settlers were indicted for intrusion, and finally all had to make settlement with the Pennsylvania land-holders and obtain title from them.

There was some mob violence used in this

[1] Blackman's "History."

[2] The reader will be careful to distinguish this from the Pennsylvania township of the same name. The Kinneys were just below the south line of Rush.

county, the most notable case being the assault on Bartlett Hinds in 1802. Captain Hinds came to Pennsylvania under Connecticut title in 1800 as the agent of ex-Governor Huntingdon. In 1801 he and Ezekiel Hyde, John Robinson, Charles Geer, Josiah Grant, Elisha Lewis, Amolo Balch, Ichabod Halsey, John Reynolds, Jeremiah Meachem, Otis Robinson, Elias West and others were indicted at Wilkes-Barre for intrusion.

The Rev. A. L. Post, grandson of Captain Hinds' wife, relates the following:

"In 1801, while on a road-view between his log dwelling and Lawsville, near the place of Joseph Williams' subsequent settlement, he met, much to the surprise of both parties, his old friend and fellow-officer of the Revolution, Colonel Timothy Pickering, afterwards one of the most prominent men in the Union, who was surveying lands which he had purchased under the Pennsylvania title. It was about noon, and so, after the 'How do you do?' Colonel P. said, 'Captain Hinds, will you take dinner with me?'

"The latter replied, 'I don't care if I do, colonel, if you can treat me to a fresh steak.'

"'That will I do,' the colonel replied, 'if you will go with me to my cabin, half a mile away;' and he conducted him thither, and entertained him in true soldier style.

"After recounting some of the scenes of the war in which they had taken part, the colonel explained to Captain H. the whole matter of jurisdiction and land title after the decree at Trenton; told him of his own purchase, which he was then surveying, and satisfied him of the probability that the Pennsylvania title must hold good. He (Hinds) thereupon went to Philadelphia; subsequently fully satisfied himself that Colonel Pickering was correct; found the owners of the land upon which he had settled; made his purchase, and returned. He was the first person in this section who became convinced of the validity of the Pennsylvania title, and yielded to its claims. He was to 'Manor,' as to its civil polity, what Colonel Hyde was to 'Usher'—the prominent man; and this fact accounts for the indignation that was visited upon the former after the step just mentioned. This was natural, and is not here referred to by way of reproach to any of the parties.

"It was probably late in 1802 that, under pretence of some kind, he was summoned before a justice in Rush. His brother, Abinoam Hinds, and Isaac Peckins (who settled here that year) went with him, expecting foul play. Whilst there a mob gathered and surrounded the house; but the three barricaded the door as best they could, and prepared for defence. The defences were forced away, and the mob entered, a number of them to be piled in an uncomfortable and bruised heap upon the floor. Isaac Peckins was a large, bony and powerful man. Failing to break out one of the posts of an old-fashioned chair, he wielded the whole of it with great success against the intruders.

"But, overpowered by numbers, the trio had to yield. A sort of sham trial resulted in the decision that Hinds should leave the country; but he refused to submit to the decision."

Mason Wilson says he was burned in effigy, and, he thinks, compelled to leave for a short time; but he was too good a man for the settlement to lose, and he returned and was a prominent man afterwards in the affairs of the county. The Connecticut claimants were angry at being deserted by their leader, and accused him of receiving compensation from Pennsylvania for yielding to her claims.

"[1] His enemies believed him leagued with the Pennsylvania land-holders, and said (though without reason) that he received five acres from them for every settler he induced to come in under their title, and he had succeeded in bringing in about one hundred. But the fact that he had acknowledged the Pennsylvania right by repaying for his own land was exerting an influence that embittered against him all who denied that claim."

Eighteen persons engaged in this disgraceful affair pleaded guilty to an indictment for riot and assault.

"Five were imprisoned for the space of three months without bail, one of whom had to pay ten dollars, and four of them twenty dollars each; and also to pay the costs of prosecution, and stand committed until the whole was paid. Nine were to pay a fine of thirty dollars each, and the court further ordered 'that they enter into recognizances each in the sum of five hundred dollars, with one good freeholder in like sum, conditioned for their good behavior for the space of one year; and that they severally pay the costs of prosecution, and stand committed till the whole sentence be complied with.'"

"One would suppose this had been enough to deter others from further assaults upon the person of B. Hinds, on account of his loyalty to Pennsylvania; but as late as 1808 another case occurred, in which he again came off conqueror.

[1] Blackman's "History."

"Anecdotes are told to this day of the perils and adventures within our own vicinity which those encountered who came still later to take possession in the name or under the sanction of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

"'A surveyor in the employment of Dr. R. H. Rose, while tracing a boundary line through the woods, placed his hand high on a tree to mark where the ax-man, who followed, should strike out a chip as an evidence of the line that had been run. The surveyor had scarcely taken his hand from the tree, when the sharp crack of a rifle rang through the forest, and the spot where the hand had been laid was "chipped" by a leaden bullet—a hint that sufficed to stay all proceedings for the rest of that day. On one occasion, to such extremities had matters proceeded, the "Yankees" had resolved to take the life of Dr. R., and information was brought to him that a meeting would be held at a particular place on a certain day named, to organize their measures. He determined at once to face the danger; and, riding boldly to a small clearing, which had been described to him as the scene of the intended meeting, he found the plotters in actual consultation on the subject. The very boldness of the step procured him a hearing. He rehearsed to them the history of the claims of the two States, and of the grounds of the final settlement; reminded them it was governmental, not individual action; that he had bought of the legal claimant; that he felt sorry for them, and wished to lighten their load in every possible way, and repeated his offers, which he said were final. He told them he was aware of their designs, but added: "Why shoot my surveyors? It is bright moonlight, and I shall ride slowly to my camp by such a track—but let whoever follows take a sure aim; he will not fire twice!" Soon one of the leaders advanced towards him, and renewed the conversation respecting the disputes that existed; the matter was freely discussed; a better temper sprang up, and from that moment may be dated the negotiations that produced the happy termination to which all the troubles arising from the conflicting claims of the two States were subsequently brought.'"

CHAPTER V.

LAND TITLES AND WARRANTEES.

Land Titles—Warrantee Map—Names of Warrantees.

THE royal charter from Charles the Second to William Penn bears date at Westminster, March 4, 1681, in the thirty-third year of the reign of that King. The extent and limits of the territory granted are therein defined. It were needless at this late day to question the validity of royal charters. A principle had obtained among the European nations that a new discovered country belonged to the nation whose people first discovered it; and all Christian princes were deterred from intruding into the countries discovered by other nations, or from interrupting the progress of their navigation and conquests. But William Penn, although clothed with powers as full and comprehensive as those possessed by the adventurers from Spain and Portugal, was influenced by a purer morality and sounder policy. His religious principles did not permit him to wrest the soil of Pennsylvania by force from the people to whom God and nature gave it, nor to establish his title in blood; but, under the shade of the lofty trees of the forest, his right was established by treaties with the natives, and made sacred to the Indians by incense smoking from the calumet of peace.

By force of the royal charter, William Penn and his successors, as proprietaries, were undoubted lords of the soil. They stipulated, however, with the purchasers under them, to extinguish the aboriginal right of the natives. They alone had that power. No individual without their authority was permitted to purchase of the Indians; and the Legislature aided them in enforcing this principle. The tenure by which the charter was held was that species of feudal tenure called socage, by fealty only, in lieu of all other services. By the abolition of quit-rents all estates derived immediately from the commonwealth are unconditional fees-simple, with a reservation only of a fifth part of gold and silver ores at the pits' mouth. Every grant of land under the proprietary government was nominally declared in the patent to be held as of some certain manor.

"The General Assembly of Pennsylvania, on the 27th day of November, 1779, passed 'an act for vesting the Estate of the late Proprietaries of Pennsylvania, in this Commonwealth;' in the preamble whereto it is set forth, 'that the claims heretofore made by the late Proprietaries to the whole of the soil contained within the charter from Charles II. to William Penn cannot longer consist with the safety, liberty and happiness of the good people of this Commonwealth, who, at the expense of much blood and treasure, have bravely rescued themselves and their possessions from the tyranny of Great Britain and are now defending themselves from the inroads of the savages.' The act did not confiscate the lands of the Proprietaries within the lines of manors, nor embrace the purchase-money due for lands sold lying within surveyed manors. The manors, in legal acceptation, were lands surveyed and set apart as the private property of the Proprietaries.

"The titles to all lands sold and conveyed by William Penn or his descendants were confirmed and made valid. But the title to all lands in the Commonwealth, which had not been surveyed and returned into the Land-Office, on or before the 4th of July, 1776, was by said act vested in the State. This act provided that the sum of one hundred and thirty thousand pounds, sterling money, should be paid out of the treasury of this State to the devisees and legatees of Thomas Penn and Richard Penn, late Proprietaries, and to the widow and relict of Thomas Penn, in such proportions as should thereafter, by the Legislature, be deemed equitable and just, upon a full investigation of their respective claims. No part of the sum was to be paid within less than one year after the termination of the war with Great Britain; and no more than twenty thousand pounds, nor less than fifteen thousand pounds, should be payable in any one year. The Land-Office was begun by William Penn, and many features of the office, as it was in his day, remain to the present time." A Land-Office, by and under the act of 9th of April, 1781, was created under the commonwealth, its officers consisting of a secretary of the Land-Office, receiver-general and surveyor-general. By the act of the 29th of March, 1809, the office of receiver-general was abolished, and his duties were discharged by the secretary of the Land-Office; and by the act of the 17th of April, 1843, this latter-named office was discontinued, and the duties pertaining thereto were performed by the surveyor-general. By the Constitution of 1874, this office is now under charge of the Secretary of Internal Affairs.

An act for opening the Land-Office and for granting and disposing of the unappropriated lands within this State passed April 1, 1784, providing "that the Land-Office shall be opened for the lands already purchased of the Indians on the 1st day of July next, at the rate of ten pounds for every hundred acres, with the usual fees of granting, surveying and patenting, excepting such tracts as shall be surveyed westward of the Allegheny mountains, &c. Every applicant shall produce to the Secretary of the Land-Office a particular description of the lands applied for, with a certificate from two Justices of the Peace of the proper county, specifying whether the said lands be improved or not, and if improved, how long since the improvement was made, that interest may be charged accordingly. The quantity of land granted to any one person shall not exceed four hundred acres." The prices of unimproved land were different under various periods under the several purchases made of the Indians. From the 1st of July, 1784, to April 3, 1792, the price of unimproved wild lands was $$26.66\frac{2}{3}$ per hundred acres in Wayne, Pike, Susquehanna and other counties. By act of April 3, 1792, the price of unimproved land was fixed at $$6.66\frac{2}{3}$ per hundred acres. The latter-named act was repealed by act of 29th of March, 1809, since which time the price of lands in the above-named counties has been $$26.66\frac{2}{3}$ per hundred acres. The laws passed relative to State lands were numerous. Under said laws the surveyor-general, or the officer acting in that capacity, was authorized to appoint a deputy-surveyor in each and every county. The following are the [1] deputy-surveyors who probably located the warrants in Susquehanna County:

[1] From Hon. J. Simpson Africa, Secretary of Internal Affairs

Charles Stewart was commissioned March 31, 1769. His district was in the purchase of 1768. William Gray appears as a deputy-surveyor as early as March 26, 1782, and located a number of surveys along the New York line in 1784. He was re-commissioned April 22, 1785, for all that part of the county of Northumberland lying on the east side of the Susquehanna River. Anthony Crothers was commissioned April 14, 1792, for a part of Luzerne County. Thomas Sambourne was commissioned April 25, 1800, for the county of Luzerne. George Haines was commissioned December 6, 1805, for the county of Luzerne. Jonathan Stevens was commissioned July 8, 1809, for the county of Luzerne, and re-commissioned May 11, 1812, for the counties of Luzerne, Susquehanna and Bradford.

"The person who obtained a warrant was called the warrantee. Upon paying the State treasurer the legal price of the land, and the office fees, $4.50, the warrant was sent to the county surveyor, whose business it was to survey the land within six months, make a draft and description, and, upon being paid for his services, make a return to the land department. Then the warrantee, upon paying $10 to the land department, would receive a patent for his land. Then, if he had the first warrant, the first survey and the first patent, the title was secure. The land department, for many years past, has required the applicant for a warrant to make oath before a justice of the peace, of the proper county, touching the condition of the lands, as to its improved or unimproved state, and proving the same by a disinterested witness, on his oath made before two justices of the peace. The act of April, 1850, provided for the election in that year, and every third year thereafter, of one competent person, being a practical surveyor, to act as county surveyor."

Among the large land-holders in Susquehanna County were Henry Drinker, Tench Francis, Thomas B. Cope, Dr. Robert H. Rose, Caleb Carmalt, Timothy Pickering, William Poyntell, William Wallace and a few others. Henry Drinker was a large land-holder in several counties. In a letter he spoke of owning one hundred thousand acres in the section that was occupied by Yankee intruders. He had a large quantity of land in this county. Thomas B. Cope purchased about twenty thousand acres of him in Auburn, Rush and Jessup. Tench Francis had about one hundred thousand acres of land in the county. He owned all of Silver Lake township, consisting of two hundred and forty-eight tracts of four hundred acres each. Dr. Rose purchased this land February 18, 1809, of Anne, widow of Tench Francis, who bought it of Elizabeth Jervis and John Peters, whose patent was obtained from the State in 1784. In 1829, Caleb Carmalt purchased one-half of the Rose lands for one dollar per acre. Timothy Pickering owned lands in the vicinity of Snake Creek, and William Poyntell owned a large quantity of land along the Tunkhannock. James C. Biddle married Sally Drinker, and, together with Henry Drinker, his brother-in-law, and grandson of [1] Henry Drinker, the elder, who became a resident of Susquehanna County, acted as agents of the Drinker estate. In 1841 Mr. Biddle died in Philadelphia, leaving Henry Drinker sole agent of the estate until he died, in 1862, when he was succeeded by William H. Cooper, who acted as agent until he was shot, June 14, 1884. Hon. William H. Jessup has been agent of the estate since that time.

Hon. William Jessup was agent for Hon. Charles S. Cox, and in 1849 he became trustee of the Dr. Robert H. Rose estate. In 1853 Hon. William H. Jessup was associated with him, and is now surviving trustee. In 1824

[1] HENRY DRINKER, THE ELDER.

Henry Drinker, at the time of his decease one of the largest land-holders in Pennsylvania, was the second son of Henry Drinker, of Philadelphia, and Mary Gottier, of Burlington, N. J. He was born 21st of February, 1734 (old style). When twenty-five years of age, he embarked for England, returning in the following year. Letters written by him during this tour are still extant among his descendants, and they bear evidence to the fact that he was a man of observation and graphic powers of description. Soon after his return, on the 13th of January, 1761, he was married to Elizabeth Sandwith.

The lands of Henry Drinker were located in Wayne, Luzerne, Wyoming, Centre, Clearfield, Indiana, Cambria, Bradford, Tioga and Susquehanna Counties, in Pennsylvania, and in Montgomery and Delaware Counties, New York.

He was a stanch member of the Society of Friends, and, for this reason, was not brought so much before the public as he, in all probability, otherwise would have been; the members of this denomination not being in the habit of taking an active part in public affairs. He was for many years a member of the firm of James & Drinker, shipping and importing merchants, of Philadelphia; they were very successful in their business previous to the Revolution.

One of the cardinal doctrines of the Society of Friends is opposition to war in every form, and a firm and decided refusal to bear arms in support of any cause, however just. In consequence, he, with nineteen other persons, seventeen of the number being Friends, were arrested and taken, first to Staunton, Va., and afterwards to Winchester, Va., where they were kept in partial confinement nearly eight months, without provision being made for their support.

His first speculations in lands were in the purchase of farms in the settled counties, principally adjoining Philadelphia County, in which transactions he was very successful, and this led him into his large purchases of wild lands He was a man of great business ability. He resided in Philadelphia, and died in 1808.

The late Esquire Raynsford, of Montrose, and Hosea Tiffany, were the first purchasers of any of his land in Susquehanna County, under the Pennsylvania title. They walked to Philadelphia to obtain their deeds. —BLACKMAN.

Isaac Post, David Post and William Jessup bought all of the Timothy Pickering unsold lands, bonds and mortgages; also S. S. Mulford and William Jessup bought the Wallace lands in Brooklyn and Bridgewater. In 1884 Hon. William H. Jessup bought the balance of the Thomas B. Cope lands of William D. Cope, and is now agent or trustee for all the lands remaining unsold of the old estates.

THE NICHOLSON LANDS.—Next in importance to the long disquiet occasioned by the Connecticut settlers resisting the enforcement of the intrusion laws "[1] was that to which settlers on the Nicholson lands were subjected for a period of nearly twenty years: firstly, by an alleged lien of a Philadelphia corporation, and afterwards by one of the State on the Hopbottom tract, as well as on that called 'Drinker's Meshoppen tract.' John Nicholson was comptroller of Pennsylvania from 1782 to 1794, and during that period was owner of about three million seven hundred thousand acres of land in the State. In 1785 he, with Dr. Barnabas Binney, purchased from the State sixty tracts, including a considerable portion of the township of Brooklyn, and paid to the State the full amount of the purchase-money. In 1789 he commenced a settlement upon the lands which, by the partition between him and Dr. Binney, had been allotted to him. In 1795 he borrowed from the Widow's Fund Corporation of Philadelphia, thirty-seven thousand one hundred and sixty-six dollars, and secured the payment by a mortgage upon thirty-five tracts in Brooklyn. The mortgage fell due in 1799. No part of the money was paid to the corporation, and Nicholson died insolvent.

"In 1805 the mortgagees foreclosed the mortgage and bought the lands and contracted the same to John B. Wallace. The purchase-money was to be paid in fifteen years from March, 1806, with interest payable annually. Mr. Wallace paid the interest for several years, and continued to sell the lands until 1823 or 1824, when he had sold about two thousand two hundred and fifty acres—the best part of the land—and for which he had received payment.

[1] Blackman.

"In 1823 the state of the title and the interest which the corporation held in the land, becoming known to the settlers, excited much anxiety among those who had paid Wallace, but who, as was then ascertained, had received no title.

"Some went to Philadelphia and requested that the business might be closed. A correspondence was continued between them until 1826 or 1827, when a committee for the corporation came and met the settlers at Mr. Breed's, in Brooklyn; but nothing was or could be effected with those who had not paid, until the question of the corporation's title was settled.

"William Jessup, Esq., had seen the officers of the corporation in Philadelphia, and obtained the assurance that no settler who had paid Mr. Wallace should be again called upon to pay for his land. He wrote to some of the settlers, and had a meeting at his office, when it was agreed that he should bring a suit upon the lot on which Jeduthan Nickerson lived in order to settle the question in Brooklyn. Those present assured him that counsel should be employed, the cause fairly tried, and thus the title might be settled. But counsel was not employed. Afterwards, another suit was brought against some settlers in Bridgewater, who doubted the corporation's title. Messrs. Case and Read examined the papers, and pronounced the title good. Obadiah Green employed Mr. Wurts, who pronounced the title bad. Those settlers who were satisfied with the decision of Messrs. Case and Read agreed to contract for their lands, having ten years in which to pay for them; but Mr. Wurts entered a plea for Green. The issue was duly tried, and a verdict was rendered for the corporation.

"Another cause was also tried, and the right by law of the corporation to call upon those who had paid to Wallace, to pay again, was fully established. But Mr. Jessup urged that the title of the settlers, as made by Wallace, should be confirmed, and that thus the fears and anxieties of those who had honestly paid their money should be quieted. In the fall of 1832 he succeeded in getting instructions which authorized him to make releases in all cases in which the settlers had paid Mr. Wallace.

"The foregoing refers to that part of the corporation's lands not interfered with by what are called the Allen surveys.

"In 1775, Benjamin Chew, Andrew Allen and others took up a large quantity of land, a portion of which lay upon the Hopbottom Creek. By the attainder of Andrew Allen, in 1778, his part of those lands was confiscated to the State, and by a decision made subsequently by the Supreme Executive Council, the share belonging to the State was located in Brooklyn, on what was called the Chew and Allen warrants. When the surveyor located the Nicholson warrants, he laid them upon part of the lands confiscated to the State.

"The State having received pay from Nicholson, it was supposed that the titles of those who held under him were good as against the State, and that the State never would claim the land from those who had paid their full price; until the decision was rendered in the case of Wallace vs. Tiffany (Amos ?), by which it was decided by the Supreme Court that the title passed by the officers of the Land-Office to Nicholson was irregular, saying, also, that legislative action would be necessary to regulate the title.

"Mr. Joseph Chapman was partly on the Allen lands, and through the procurement of Mr. Jessup, and with the assistance of Messrs. Read and Jones, an act from the Legislature was passed confirming the title of any settler who held under the Nicholson title—on application to the Legislature. But with the great body of the Allen lands Mr. J. had nothing to do, as they were covered by the Mary M. Wallace warrants."

NICHOLSON COURT.—"Thus far all that has been said refers to events prior to November, 1834. We pass on now to the panic of 1841. By an act of Legislature a year previous commissioners had been appointed to hunt up and settle the claims of the estate of John Nicholson to lands formerly purchased by him in various parts of the State. These commissioners had given notice through the papers that they would be in Montrose on a given day to adjust the respective interests of the State, the heirs and creditors, and also of the settlers of any such lands in this county.

"The streets of Montrose on the day specified (in August) were thronged, but the commissioners failed to appear; and they did not make their appearance until about the middle of November following, when, for two or three weeks, they exhibited at McCollum's Hotel their papers and maps, and drew the attention of crowds. Even those who had no personal interests in the Nicholson lands began to feel insecure against unexpected claimants to their lands, which they had long owned and occupied with a confidence not less than their more unfortunate neighbors. Several townships were in a panic.

"In order to allay the excitement, Benjamin T. Case, Esq., contributed to the same journal three pertinent articles, giving the result of his own investigations for many years as counsel for persons interested in those lands. He was induced to this step by the fact that the uncertainty in respect to titles was having a tendency adverse not only to his own interests, but to those of the county, as new-comers declined to purchase and settle where there was so little appearance that they could remain in quiet possession. Mr. Case stated that the Nicholson claims presented themselves in three points of view,—

"1. The claims of the heirs, which were barred by the statute of limitations.

"2. The claims of the creditors; but there was no mortgage upon the records of the county, and, if there were, it is presumed to be paid, in law, after twenty years, and a judgment is lost after five years.

"3. Commonwealth liens, and of these there were three—those of December, 1795 and 1796, and of June, 1800. The statute of limitations does not extend to a debt due the State; but Mr. C. was not aware of any lands in this county so situated as to raise the question about their being barred by the lapse of time. 'To us citizens of Susquehanna County it is a mere matter of speculation. To Binney's share of the sixty warrants issued to him and Nicholson, neither Nicholson's heirs, creditors nor the State can have claim. As to the residue (thirty-five tracts, called the Hopbottom lands), John Nicholson mortgaged them, January, 22, 1795—eleven months before the State obtained her first lien—to the Widow's Fund Corporation, to secure the payment of thirty-seven thousand one hundred and sixty-six dollars,[1] which settles the question; for in the event of the State lien being prior to the mortgage, only the money arising from the sale could be claimed, not the land; even if a judgment be reversed for error after a sale on it, the purchaser's title on it is not disturbed.'

"In March, 1842, the 'Nicholson Court' decided that 'the Nicholson claim to the corporation lands in Brooklyn and Bridgewater is good —FOR NOTHING!'

"It was estimated that two hundred persons in Susquehanna County paid five dollars each to the commissioners; but in Wayne, Pike and Monroe Counties they failed to raise such an excitement as they did here."

DRINKER'S MESHOPPEN LANDS.—"A part of this was in Auburn and Springville. John Nicholson took out one hundred and sixty-eight warrants of four hundred acres each of land included in what was then Luzerne County, seventy-eight of which interfered with prior surveys of Samuel Wallis, from whom Henry Drinker purchased, and were on the south end of the Meshoppen tract. Both Wallis and Nicholson paid the State for the land, but as Wallis' surveys were of an earlier date, the Board of Property decided in his favor. Nicholson appealed to the Supreme Court, and the decision was again in favor of Wallis. In view of these facts, B. T. Case, Esq., stated, 'Patents regularly issued to Drinker, who bought of Wallis, and the purchasers under him on those lands, hold under this title, and what is to disturb them?'

"Henry Drinker, George Clymer and Samuel Meredith held one hundred and sixty-eight warrants, of dates 1790, '91, '92 and '93, paid for and patented. It was to these John Nicholson laid claim by virtue of other warrants, dated August 17, 1793, a date subsequent to all the warrants issued to the above, and for more than forty years the matter had been supposed to be settled by the Supreme Court; and in a report made by Mr. Kidder, of the Senate of Pennsylvania, March, 1842, after a second investigation of the subject, it was stated that the 'Judiciary Committee cannot discern even the shadow of a claim, either in law or equity, that the Nicholson estate has upon the Drinker lands in Susquehanna and Luzerne Counties.'"

SAMUEL EWING'S LANDS.—"Ten of these tracts lay on the Lackawanna Creek, in the eastern part of the county, and were purchased from Ewing by Nicholson; but Ewing continued to hold the title in his own name, as a trustee for Nicholson. Those who purchased of Ewing without notice of a trust took the land discharged of the trust. A mortgage, August, 1795, by Nicholson to Ewing, was duly foreclosed, and sold at sheriff's sale, by Ewing. Thus, in the opinion of one of Susquehanna's ablest lawyers, 'There is no land in the county covered by the State's liens, or to which the heirs and creditors of John Nicholson have had any valid claim, and if those who compromised with the commissioners persist in claiming to hold exclusively under those contracts, lawsuits are sure to follow.' Happily, the Nicholson claim to the widow and orphans' fund and the Drinker tracts was, as stated previously, decided against them by higher authority, and from that time Susquehanna County land-owners have had 'peace.'

"Henry Drinker was the owner of what are called the Westtown school lands in Lenox, and Fields and Collins were also holders of lands in the same township. Wm. Hartley bought the Fields title; C. L. Ward, the Collins lands; and these were all settled and sold to the settlers at fifty cents per acre, which quieted the titles in this portion of the county. The titles of one-half the lands in the township were in dispute for twenty-five years."

The Nine Partners' lands were surveyed with lines running northeast and southwest. The Meredith lands were surveyed in the same way. Perhaps one-third of the lands in the county are surveyed north forty-five degrees west. These lands lie mostly in the eastern part of the county. The Wallis lands, which includes the Nicholson tract, were run north three degrees west. The variation since 1785 has been four degrees toward the west, so that these lines are north one degree west. The Drinker lands were run subsequently and require greater variation. Previous to 1800, for some years the magnetic needle was moving east; then it began to move west again, and has been moving west ever since. Most of the lines now run north one degree east.

[1] On the 1st of January, 1799, with interest annually. The money not being paid, the mortgage was duly foreclosed in Luzerne County, the land sold at sheriff's sale, and the present owners now hold that title. (B. T. Case.)

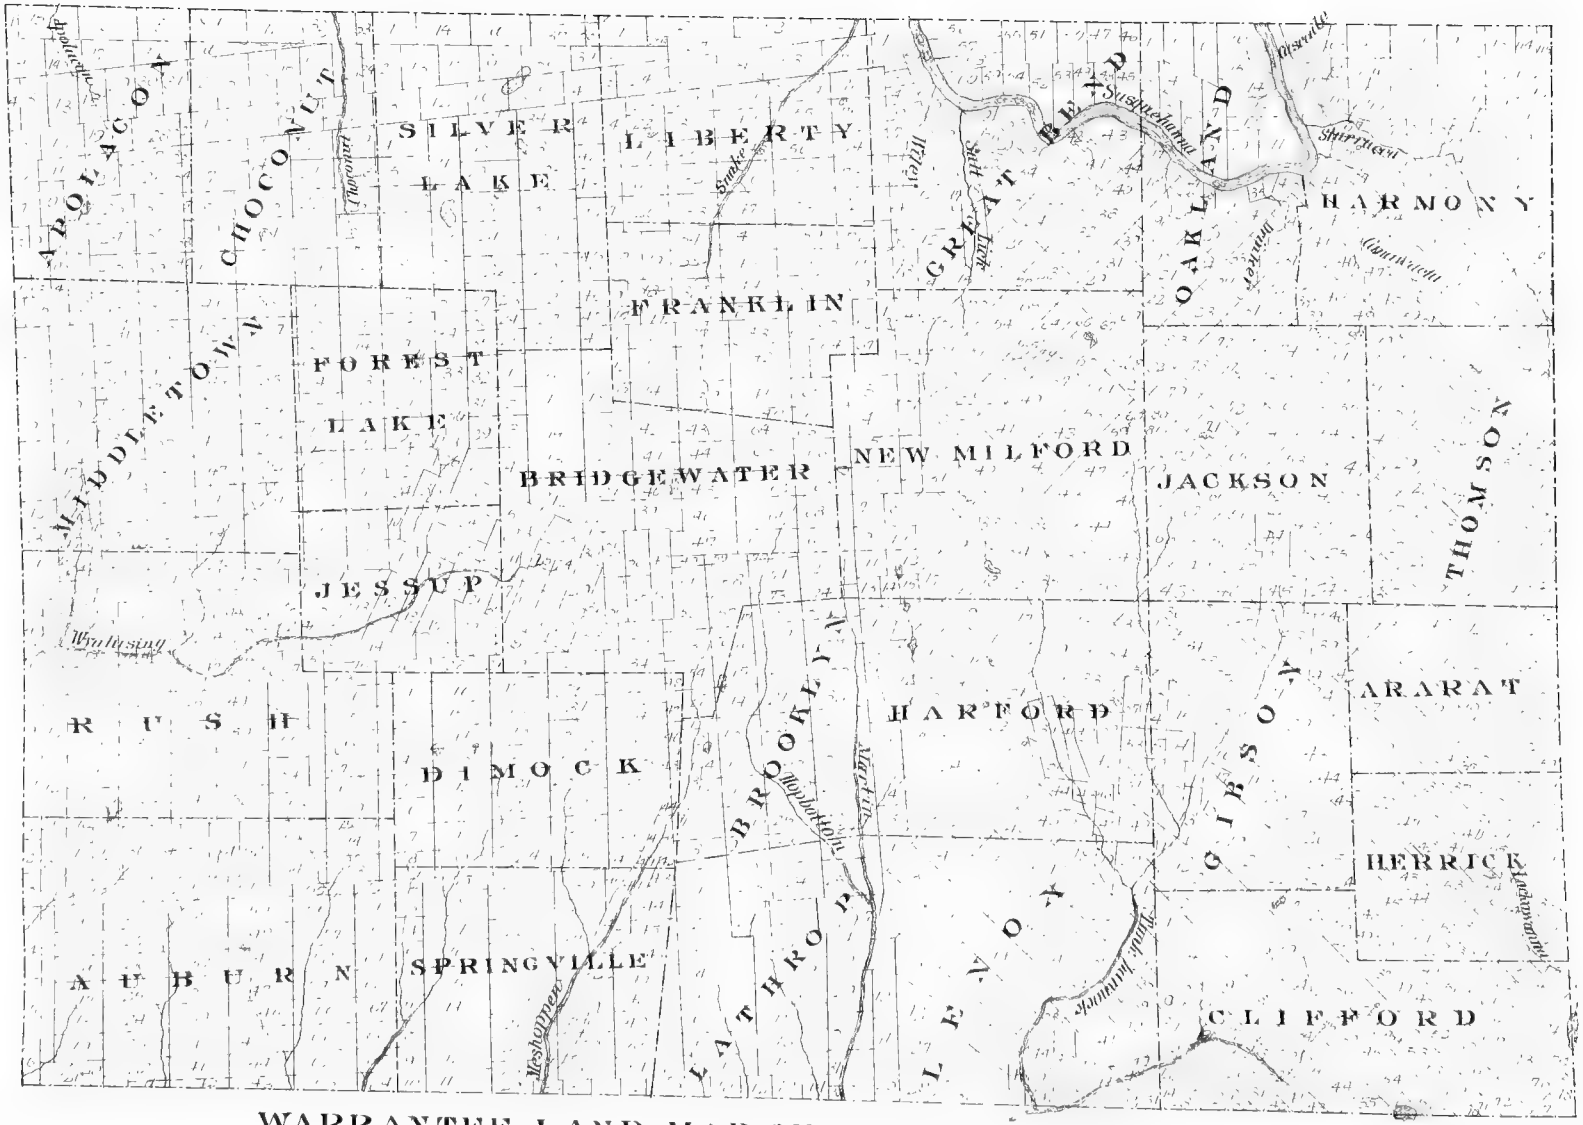
[1] WARRANTEE LAND MAP.—This is a copy (reduced in size) of the old map in the county commissioner's office, which was drawn, about 1837–8, by John and Issachar Mann, assisted by George Walker, a surveyor of much experience (now nearly ninety years old), who had re surveyed many of these lands.



Inaccuracies are known to exist in the original, owing to the difficulty of adjusting conflicting surveys and vacant strips, and of correctly connecting streams; and the proportions are not always in keeping with the amount of land given. But the map is the most authentic general one now obtainable without the very great expense of connecting the separate surveys on file in the State Department. Many of the warrantee names have become illegible on the old map; but most of these, except the lots then vacant, have been supplied from other sources. The township boundaries are not the modern ones as now established.

In Brooklyn, parts of Lathrop, Dimock and Bridgewater ("Wallace lands") the lines were run (about 1785) north, three degrees west, and so on to make rectangles. The Drinker Meshoppen tract was laid out (about 1792) mostly north and south, etc., and most of the lands in the west half of the county were first surveyed upon nearly the same plan, while in the east half the prevailing direction was northeast, etc. These lines were run according to the magnetic meridian, which then deviated about three degrees to west of north, and now about seven and a quarter degrees, the variation being a little greater in the east than in the west part of the county, and very slightly greater in the north than in the south part.

Among the prominent land-holders of the county were Thomas and John Clifford and their successors, Thomas W. Morris, in Clifford, Herrick, etc.; Samuel Meredith, in Clifford, Lenox, Harford, etc., and also in Bridgewater and Middletown; Edward Shippen, in Lenox, Gibson and Jackson; Henry Drinker and his successors, Samuel A. Law, Ephraim Kirby, David Welch, Rufus Lines, Jacob Tallman and Robert Bound, in Liberty (Lawsville), Great Bend and New Milford; Henry Drinker, "school lands" in Lenox and Clifford, and other lands in Harmony, Oakland, and in almost every township in the county; Henry Drinker and his successor, Thomas P. Cope, twenty-five thousand acres in Auburn, and part of Springville, Dimock, Jessup and Rush; Joseph and William Lee, William Poyntell and Benjamin Chew (George Walker, agent,) in Clifford, Herrick, etc.; Andrew Allen, in Harford and New Milford; John Field and Wm. Hartley, his successor, in Lenox; Timothy Pickering, in Bridgewater, Franklin and Liberty, and in Harmony; John Nicholson and Dr. Barnabas Binney, and their successors, "The Widow and Orphan's Fund" corporation, and John B. and Mary M. Wallace (Putnam Catlin, agent), in Brooklyn, Bridgewater, Dimock, etc.; John W. Robinson and Thos. B. Overton were also owners of remnants of these last-named lands; Tench Coxe and Nicholas Biddle, in Liberty, Bridgewater, etc.; Abraham Dubois, in Oakland; Elizabeth Jervis and John Peters and their successors, Ann, widow of Tench Francis, and afterward Robt. H. Rose, one hundred thousand acres in Silver Lake, Choconut, Rush, Middletown, Great Bend, Bridgewater, etc.; and Caleb Carmalt and Samuel Milligan, successors of R. H. Rose; Tench Francis also had lands in Liberty and Franklin; C. L. Ward, Collins lands in Lenox; George Clymer, in Bridgewater; Samuel Ewing, in Herrick, etc.; Thomas Cadwallader, in Ararat and Herrick, and Bridgewater; Thomas Mitchell, Brown & Ives, and Samuel Wilcox, in Middletown, etc. James C. Biddle, Wm. D. Cope, Seku Meylert, Wm. Thomson, Joshua W. Raynsford and Wm. C. Ward were also agents for various lands.

The following are the warrantee names, the [1] By E. A. Weston.

WARRANTEE LAND MAP OF SUSQUEHANNA CO, PA.

numbers being arbitrary and merely referring to the place of the lots on the map:

APOLACON.

	Acres
1. Samuel Gartley	80
2. John Ashmear	439½
3. Joseph Ashmore	424¼
4. Geo. Ashmore	70
5. Benedict Ashmore	200
6. Benjamin Town	200
7. Benjamin Thorn	261
8. Edward Westcot	230
9. David Hawes	400
a George Pickering	400
10. Samuel Langdale	401¼
11. Joseph Langdale	308¼
12. Herman Langdale	414
13. Solomon Ashmore	424¼
14. Thos. Ashmore	359
15. Jonathan Gartley	466
16. Roger Gartley	472¾
17. John Brown	418¼
18. Samuel Morris	424¼
19. Michael Hillegas	414
20. Matthew Clarkson	433¼
21. James Langdale	360¼
22. William ———
23. Daniel Humphreys	415
24. Saml. Jervis	415
25. Thos. Willing	411
26. Wm. Gray	415
27. Chas. Jervis	395¼
28. Mordecai Lewis	414
29. John Brown, Jr.	424½
b John Wilson	429¼
c Wm. Roberts	355
30. David Cooper	424¼
31. Joseph Backertraw	424¼
32. John Swanwick	414
33. Andrew Caldwell	435
34. Joseph Gray	427¼
35. Robt. Towers	415
36. Josiah Haws	415
37. June Humphreys	415
38. John Radman	415
39. Hannah Wiltingsworth	415
40. Andrew Caldwell	415

ARARAT AND HERRICK.

	Acres
1. Henry Foster	482¼
2. Roger Foster	432
3. Peter Foster	473¼
4. Peter Dobbs	491-120
5. Henry Dobbs	451-51
6. Samuel Foster	551½
7. Joseph Betz	462-32
8. —— ——
9. John Betz	483½
10. Frederick Betz	462-32
11. Lambert Cadwalader	290
12. Andrew McConnel	309-38
13. John Sargeant	301-120
14. Chas. Harrison	301-120
15. Conrad McHousland	301-120
16. Alexander Newland	301-120
17. Wm. Forbes	301-120
18. John Cadwalader	301-120
19. Henry Hill	323¼
20. Paul Betz	452-59
21. Saml. Wiley	478
22. Roger Wiley	478
23. Roger Betz	433½
24. Christopher Betz	459-59
25. Dr. T. Cadwalader	320
26. Saml. Meredith	303¾
27. Alex. Nesbit	301-120
28. Geo. Campbell	301-120
29. Joseph Rees	334-120
30. Jas. Rees	100
31. Jasper Newport	150
32. Jonathan Nesbit	347
33. Chas. Wharton	322
34. John Van Reed	342
35. Isaac Wharton	320 (?)
36. Joseph Van Reed	342
37. Peter Moore	326½
38. Wm. Wharton	342
39. Joseph Rink	501¾
40. Joseph Wharton	342
41. Judah Foulke	342
42. Saml. Richards	344
43. Peter Rink	555¾
44. James Rink	480½
45. Saml. Rink	480¼
46. Jo. Pogue	474¾
47. Wm. Wiley	478
48. Solomon Rink	480¼
49. Andrew Pyle	477
50. Saml. Meredith
51. Saml. Meredith	326½
52. Saml. Meredith	301
53. Chas. Wharton	334
54. Wm. Jones	342
55. Jas. Wharton	342
56. Chas. Stewart	342
57. John Cox	312
58. Isaac Cox	342
59. John Nesbit	200
a Grace Newport	80
60. Jesse Newport	100
61. Wm. Fishbourne	200
62. Bartler Shec	271½
63. John Shec	271½
64. John White	309
65. John Shaw	302
66 Isaac Wharton	280¼
67. Saml. Meredith	301
68. Saml. Meredith	352¾
b Saml. Meredith	326½
69. Thos. Wharton	320¾
70. Saml. Meredith
71. Ann Boher	200
72. Jane Boher	200
73. Phebe Boher	200

AUBURN.

	Acres
1. Aaron Gwinipp	100
2. Peter Pine	433-153
3. Moses French	433-153
4. Geo. Porter	433-153
5. Chas. Fields	433-153
6. Martin Hughs	422-143
7. Chas. Brady	256-92
8. Geo. French	440
9. Andrew Bitters	396-36
10. Paul Craft	433-153
11. Solomon Craft	432-50
12. Peter Craft	432-50
13. Peter Holland	493
14. Solomon Rogers	439-100
15. Jas. Rogers	439-100
16. Peter Rogers	439-100
17. Roger Boggs	439-100
18. Henry Boggs	439-100
19. Hugh Boggs	438-100
20. Ann Paschal
21. Silas Smith	150
22 Saml. Buck	369-40
23. Henry Buck	438-105
24. Peter Buck	438-105
25. Robert Buck	438-105
26. Saml. Horner	438-105
27. Joseph Crocket	438-105
28. Hugh Rogers	438-105
29. Jas. Whitecar	440-40
30. Andrew French	432-50
31. Joseph French	432-50
32. Peter Grice	433-153
33. Saml. French	432-50
34. John Whitecar	432-50
35. Peter Rogers	418-37
36. John Crocket	418-37
37. Jas. Horner	418-37
38. Geo. Warful	418-37
39. Thos. Warful	418-37
40. Joseph Warful	418-37
41. Saml. Warful	418-37
42. Jas. Warful	140-173
43. Geo. Holmes	220
44. Hugh Prichard	440-112
45. Andrew Prichard	440-112
46. Peter Prichard	440-112
47. John Weaver	440-112
48. Paul Weaver	440-112
49. Jas. Johnston	440-112
50. Arthur Johnston	440-112
51. Peter Whitecar	439-120
52. Roger Whitecar	432-50
53. Chas. Whitecar	439
54. Saml. Whitecar	439
55. Jesse Clark
56. Andrew Thompson	420-40
57. Patrick Thompson	420-40
58. Saml. Thompson	420-40
59. Henry Thompson	420-40
60. Geo. Thompson	420-40
61. Joseph Thompson	420-40
62. Henry McWilliams	420-44
63. Peter Holmes	280
64. Saml. Holmes	426-40
65. Jas. Holmes	426-40
66. Robt. Holmes	426-40
67. Philip Holt	426-40
68. Saml. Holt	426-40
69. James Holt	426-40
70. Geo. Holt	426-40
71. Jas. McWilliams	426-40
72. Peter Clark	295-122
73. Roger Boggs	412-16
74. Henry Boggs	412-16
75. Patrick Boggs	412-16

BRIDGEWATER.

	Acres
1. Abraham Marcoe	425
2. Peter Baynton
3. Robet Morris	403-158
4. John Montgomery	439-135
5. Thos. Wharton	375
6. Chas. Wharton	301-120
7. Daniel Reed	301-120
8. Geo. Towson	415
9. Conrad Ditmar	415 27
10. John Vicary	301-120
11. Isaac Wharton	301-120
12. Wm. McMoultrie	440 80
13. Peter Brown	425
14. Governeur Morris	425
15. Wm. Montgomery	425
16. John Morril	425
17. Geo. Roberts	425
18. Israel Wheeler	425
19. Henry Whysic	425
20. Godfrey Twelle	425
21. Isaac Franks	425
22. Jos. Bullock	285-120
23. Jas. Cummings	370
24. Lydia Goodwin	301-120
25. John Allen	301-120
26. Jas. Coburn	301-120
27. Geo. Goddard	417
28. Joshua Hewes	301-120
29. Wm. Gough	301-120
30. Stephen Wilson
31. Dr. Thos. Cadwallader	301-120
32. Job Brady	163
33. Jesse Waterman	410¾
34. Isaac Harris	435
35. Geo. Dunnacre	439-80
36. Lambert Cadwallader	301-120
37. John Cadwallader	301-120
38. Wm. Allen	301-120
39. Geo. Latimer	408-103
40. Benedict Dorsey	425
41. Jas. Read	425
42. Chas. French	425
43. Jas. Fisher	425
44. John Frombarger	425
45. Leonard Dorsey	425
46. John Baker	424
47. Peter Lohra	398-40
48. Jas. Allen	301-120
49. Jas. Wilson	80
50. Andrew Allen	301-120
51. John Wilson	300
52. John Scott	327½
53. Susanna Razor	407½
54. Benj. Jordan	407½
55. Jacob Anguish	407½
56. Jas. Logan	407¼
57. Joseph Abor	407½
58. Catharine Coleman	407½
59. Susannah Colliday	60
60. Joseph Anthony	425
61. David Lenox	425
62. Henry Holland	425
63. John Donaldson	425
64. Henry Pratt	425
65. Geo. Eddy	380
66. —— ——
67 John Pringle
68. Edward Shippen
69. Saml. Nicholson
70. Mary Martin	50
71. John McKinney	407½
72. Jos. Thompson
73. Abram McKinney	407½
74. Jas. Vallant

BROOKLYN.

	Acres		Acres
1. Sarah Morrison		19. John Sutton	407-80
2. Robt. Wilson		20. Ann Manning	407-80
3. John Wharton		21. Richard Manning	407-80
4. Wm. Morrison		22. John Nicholson	407-80
5. Jas. Torbit		23. Dr. Barnabas Binney	407-80
6. Jos. Torbit		24. John Dunlap	407-80
7. Jas. Craig		25. Susanna Woodrow	407-80
8. David Torbit		26. Susanna Lear	407-80
9. Elizabeth Jackson	407-80	27. Neal McCoy	407 80
10. Leonard Woodrow	407-80	28. Robert King	407-80
11. Henry Jackson	407-80	29. Robt. Lyon	407-80
12. Jas. Dunlap	407-80	30. Jos. Sabler	407-80
13. Chas. Lear	407-80	31. Sarah Stover	407-80
14. Saml. Jackson	407-80	32. Capt. Jas. Stover	407-80
15. Wm. Shaw, Esq	407-80	33. Wm. Colliday, Jr	407-80
16. Jas. Logan	407-80	34. Wm. Colliday	407-80
17. Jos. Abor	407-80	35. Jas. Valliant	407-80
18. Abm. McKinney	407-80

CHOCONUT.

	Acres		Acres
1. Geo. Simpson	437¼	18. Jos. Anthony	418
2. Henry Hill	424¼	19. Christopher Irig	414
a Thos. Shoemaker	317	20. Wm. Jones	335-120
3. Jas. Mase	424¼	21. Mary Jarvis	415
4. John Swanwick	414	22. Jacob Barges	415
5. Alex. Nesbit	414	23. Chas. Cooper	415
6. Andrew Caldwell	435	24. Chas. Smith	415
7. Jos. Gray	427¼	25. Geo. Nelson	415
8. Robt. Towers	415	26. Jas. Collins
9. John Radman	415	27. Wm. Sheaf	415
10. Andrew Caldwell	415	28. Saml. Nicholas	415
11. Saml. Coates	415	29. Benj. Skull	377-40
12. John Peters	355	30. Israel Morris	414
13. Elizabeth Jervis	414	31. Chas. Willings	389-120
14. Robt. Irwin	439¼	32. Anthony Kern	477
15. Peter Crim	424¼	33. Jacob Lowensyker
16. Edward Price	451¼	34. Henry McSwine
17. Peter Miller	424¼

CLIFFORD.

	Acres		Acres
1. Paul Harris	400	31. Walter Stewart	3 13/4
2. Henry Harvey		32. Alex. Nesbit	311¾
3. Saml. North	374¾	33. Christr. Irwin	347
aa Peter North	345¼	34. Nicholas Young	347
4. Jas. North	474¾	35. Jas. Trimble	347
5. Saml. Harvey	474¾	36. Andrew Chapman	400-100
6. Roger Harvey	474¾	37. —— ——
7. Peter Hart	474¾	38. Saml. Meredith	329¾
8. Joshua Harvey	474¾	39. Saml. Meredith	301
9. Joseph Noble	474¾	40. John M Nesbit	376-90
10. Jas. Noble	433¾	41. John M. Nesbit	311¾
11. Henry Noble	469½	42. John M. Nesbit	150
12. John Boyd	346	43. John M. Nesbit	150
13. Wm. Gray	326	44. John M. Nesbit	389½
14. Daniel Tallman	260	45. Saml. Meredith	301
15. John Higher	120½	46. Saml. Meredith	329¾
16. Wm. Garett	311-120	47. Saml. Meredith	326½
a J. Dowd	20	48. Saml. Meredith	329-13
17. Andrew Syphart	311-120	49. Saml. Meredith	326½
18. Peter Noble	467	50. Saml. Meredith	352¾
19. Peter Harvey	474¾	51. Saml. Meredith	316
20. Roger Hart	474¾	52. Saml. Meredith	332-130
21. Andrew Pyle	477	53. Saml. Meredith	329¾
22. —— ——		54. Saml. Meredith	301
23. Henry Chapman	400	55. Jas. M. Nesbit	289½
24. Geo. Noble		56. Nathan Severing	200
25. Wm. Donald	311¾	57. Saml. Meredith	347½
26. Geo. Fullerton	311¾	58. Saml. Meredith	329¾
27. Eliza Harris	410-93	59. Saml. Meredith	332-130
28. Wm. Harris	150	60. Saml. Meredith	301¾
29. Saml. Harris	150	61. Saml. Meredith
30. John Reed	100	62. Chas. Jervis	301¾
63. Thos. Wharton	320¾	71. Saml. Beach
64. Saml. Meredith	398	72. Saml. Beach	400
65. Saml. Meredith	300	73. Jas. Beach	430
66. Saml. Meredith	339-100	74. John Beach	481-22
67. Saml. Meredith	339-100	75. Philip Beach	300
68. Chas. Hunt	342-40	76. Jos. Beach	342
69. Saml. Meredith	332-120	77. Peter Beach	200
70. Chas. West	100	78. Geo. Porter	200

DIMOCK.

	Acres		Acres
1. Peter Philips	420-44	25. Jas. Bacon	417-33
2. Joseph Philips	420-44	26. Philip Snyder	417-33
3. Geo. Morris	420-44	27. Abel Holmes	417-33
4. Andrew Morris	420-44	28. John McPhail	417-33
5. Peter Morris	420-44	29. Jas Engle	417-33
6. Hugh Morris	420-44	30. John Lockhart	417-33
7. Joseph Morris	420-44	31. Thos. Miller	417-33
8. Peter White	420-44	32. John Scott	417-33
9. Andrew Mason	411-13	33. Christopher Hoot	404-80
10. Jas. Mason	411-13	34. Jas. Warner	399-120
11. Robt Mason	411-13	35. John Ditmar	402-120
12. Hugh Mason	411-13	36. Jeremiah Sullivan
13. Peter Mason	411-13	37. Wm. Rinder	425-40
14. Joseph Kunkle	411-13	38. Joseph Haines	429-80
15. Peter Kunkle	411-13	39. Saml. Haines	438-150
16. John Kunkle	411-13	40. Saml. Lock	261-120
17. John Thompson	415-27	41. Wm. Sharp
18. Geo. Reed	415-27	42. Saml. Miller	363-80
19. Wm. Knox	415-27	43. Jas. Craig
20. N. Sley (or Loyd)	415-27	44. John Wharton
21. Nicholas Schultz	415-27	45. Wm. Morrison
22. Philip Roth	415-27	46. Sarah Morrison
23. Francis Trimner	415-27	47. Jacob Anguish	407-80
24. Geo. Christhilf		48. Benj. Jordan	407-80

FOREST LAKE.

	Acres		Acres
1. Peter Marble		20. Elizabeth Matlock	378-115
2. Jas. Crawford		21. Paul Cooper	338-115
3. Adam Sickler		22. Wm. Bell	388-115
4. Geo. Sickler		23. Deborah Dawes
5. Jas Peale		24. Saml. Wetherill
6. Jos. Anthony		25. John M. Nesbitt	309
7. Stephen Paschall	388½	26. Cornelius Barnes	431
8. Wm. Gray		27. John Montgomery
9. Saml. Wetherill		28. J. Nexb(it) or Nesbit	306
10. Donald McDonald	388-80	29. Robt. Morris	403-159
11. Battis Clymer	388-80	30. Jno. Dunlap
12. Chas. W. Peale	388-80	31. Peter Baynton	425
13. Reynold Keene	388-80	32. Abraham Marcoe	425
14. Saml. Morris		33. Wm. Dawes	380-40
15. Solomon Marechie		34. Jas. Starr	410
16. Geo. Meade		35. Susannah Fisher	427
17. Joseph Casson		36. Jas Bryson	425
18. Patrick Moore	411-120	37. Garret Cottringer	427
19. Wm. Murray	371-120	38. Thos Affick

LIBERTY AND FRANKLIN.

	Acres		Acres
1. Saml. Powell	415	19. Joseph Howell, Jr	386-40
2. John McSwine	381	20. Wm. Hunter
3. Solomon De Melt	414	a Richard Butler	369-120
4. Peter Denton	413-120	21. Thos. Palmer	369-110
5. Paul Denton		22. Hermon Denton	300-40
6. John Gravel	269-120	23. Joseph Denton	388-80
7. Geo. Hunter		24. Saml. De Melt	414
8. Peter Jones	382-80	25. J. Whipple
9. Christopher Rhoan	425	26. Robt. H. Rose
10. Elizabeth Jones	436-120	27. Jos. De Melt	342
11. John Randolph	425	28. Paul De Melt	414
12. Geo. Roberts	425	29. Conrad Smith	384
13. Israel Wheeler	425	30. Thos. Affick	412-120
14. Edward Pale	425	31. John Pusey	412-120
15. Saml. Garrigues	424	32. Henry App	412-120
16. James Gallagher	425	33. Richard Hunt	412-120
17. Joseph Harrison	439-120	34. Israel Jones	412-120
18. John Henry	436	35. Saml. Jackson	412-120

	Acres
36. Adam Casey	412–120
37. Jesse Greenfield	425
38. Jonas Philips	425
39. Wm. Guncle	425
40. Henry Pratt	425
41. Wm. French	425
42. John Ross	425
43. David Wagoner	425
b Geo. Quinep	439–120
44. James Hartley	412–120
45. Jas. Hood	412–120
46. Wm. Haysham	412–120
47. Wm. Hall	412–150
c Jas. Wood	412–120
48. Wm. Pucey	412–120
49. Anthony Kern	412–120
50. Wm. Compton	397–80
51. Geo. De Melt	414
52. Wm. Drinker, Jr.
53. Edw. Price	414
54. Geo. Simpson	428–80
55. Tench Francis	423
56. Thos. Grant	412–120
57. Wm. Gregory	412–120
58. Jacob S Howell	412–120
59. Wm. Knox	412–120
60. John Rink	412 120
61. Adam Carsay	412–120
62. Isaac Wharton	426
63. John Taws	406–80
64. John Tallman	406–80
65. John Garret	389
66. Geo. Eddy	380
67. John Wall
68. Peter Holland
69. Tobias Rudolph	412–120
70. Isaac Hazlehurst	412–120
71. Jas. Hutchinson	412–120
72. Robt Haysham	412–120
73. Peter Allen	412–120
74. Edw. Garrigues	412–120
75. John Francis	425
76. Jas. White	400–36
77. John Wilson	434–80
78. Roger McGahe or McGahey

GIBSON.

	Acres
1. Saml. Cooley	479–39
2. Paul White
3. Edward Shippen
4. Edw. Shippen
5. Edw. Shippen
6. Edw. Shippen
7. Edw Shippen
8. Saml. Rinearson
9. Jas. Rinearson	451¼
10. Edw. Shippen
11. Jos. Pyle	492–114
12. Jos. North	498
13. Edw. Shippen
14. Edw. Shippen
15. James White	430½
16. Edw. Shippen
17. Thos. Morris
18. Henry North	548¼
19. Henry Hart	474¾
20. Henry Harvey
21. Amos Hart	474¾
22. Job Hart	474¾
23. Peter Hart	474¾
24. Jo. Pogue	474¾
25. Geo. Pogue	474¾
26. Peter Pogue	474¾
27. Henry Pogue	474¾
28. Philip Ross	474¾
29. Job Wiley	598
30. Jos. Shippen	611
31. Jos. Shippen
32. Peter Anderson	488¼
33. Geo. Anderson	460
34. Henry Anderson	462¼
35. Job (Robt.) Anderson.	470¼
36. Peter Cooley	479–39
37. Peter Pringle	463¾
38. Jos. Shippen	690–36
39. Jos. Foster	467½
40. Paul Moor	247¼
41. Roger Betz
42. Roger Foster	462–32
43. Patrick Wiley	478
44. John Wiley	478
45. Saml. Wiley	478
46. Henry Foster	482¼

GREAT BEND.

	Acres
1. Saml. Chalker
2. Samson Harper
3. "H —— Hale"
4. Sewel C——
5. Paul Harper	401¾
6. John Traverse	95
7. M—— ——	400
8. Roger Harper	399
9. Adam Schnack	439
10. Abraham Schrack	440–31
11. Catharine Crawford	438
12. Robt. Lawson	448
13. Saml. Holland	379–40
14. Wm. White
15. John Temple	479–39
16. Jas. Temple	383–134
17. Seth Putman	110
18. Peter Temple	375–85
19. —— ——	176¼
20. —— ——
21. James Brush
22. —— ——
23. Saml. Bowman	378
24. Jas. Morgan	400–140
25. Peter Yarrington	400–140
26. Jos. Wright	391
27. Jonathan Hancock	438
28. Abraham Duncan	400–140
29. Jas. Been	400–140
30. Chas. Butler	400–140
31. Mathias Brooks	400–140
32. Jonathan Butler	400–140
33. Putnam Catlin	400–140
34. Peter Grubb	400–140
35. Abraham Dubois.	207–150
36. Michael Dubois	226–130
37. Thos. Duane	400–140
38. Joseph Duncan	400–140
39. Wm. Smith	400–140
40. Reuben Downing	461–120
41. Jonathan Stevens	448
42. —— ——
43. Asa Stevens	448
44. Jacob Peterman	444–120
45. Samuel Ruper	401
46. Peter Knight	424
47. Thos. Prior	424
48. —— Ruper	419½
49. Fredk. Rambo	421
50. Levi Hollingsworth	424
51. John Morton	424
52. Paul Rambo	414¼
53. Solomon Rambo	401½
54. Henry Rambo	419½
55. Sharp Denny (Dewny)	414
56. John R——	4 3
57. Geo. Rambo	362¼
58. Peter Rambo	387¼
59. Saml. Rambo	201¼
60. Jo. Rambo	301¾

HARFORD.

	Acres
1. Henry Sutton
2. Jas. Benson
3. Polly Duncan
4. Seth Duncan
5. Jas. Duncan
6. —— ——
7. Jas. Barnes
8. Andrew Allen
9. Saml. Roach	479–39
10. Peter Whitney	479–39
11. Henry Benson	479–39
12. Samuel Benson	479–39
13. Robt. Sutton	479–39
14. Peter Benton	479–39
15. Geo. Benton	479–39
16. Henry Roach	479–39
17. John Pyle	479–39
18. Andrew Cooley	479–39
19. Geo. Hampton	479–39
20. Geo. Whitney	479–39
21. Joseph Benton	479–39
22. Geo. Sutton	479–39
23. Peter Sutton	479–39
24. Jos. Harmer	479–39
25. Henry Baldwin	479–39
26. John Jasten	479–39
27. Peter Harmer	479–39
28. Roger Sutton	479–39
29. John Pringle
30. Saml. Meredith
31. Saml. Meredith
32. Peter Whiterider
33. Saml. Hampton	479–39
34. Jas. Hampton	479–39
35. Saml. Cooley
36. Paul White
37. Peter White
38. Andrew Pringle
39. Edw. Shippen
40. Saml. Meredith
41. Anthony Whitney
42. Saml. Meredith
43. Saml. Meredith
44. Roger Pringle
45. Nathan Sutton	479–39
46. Robt. Harman
47. Samuel Meredith
48. Samuel Meredith
49. Jas. Rinearson
a Geo. Rinearson
50. Saml. Rinearson
51. Edw. Shippen
52. Edw. Shippen
53. Edw. Shippen

HARMONY AND OAKLAND.

	Acres
1. Wm. Moulder	425
2. Paul Ruper
3. Geo. Ruper
4. Peter Ruper	405¼
5. Jos. Smith	434¼
6. Thos. Lowry
7. Geo. McWilliams
8. Philip Ruper	293
9. Henry Ruper
10. Francis Williams
11. Peter Williams
12. Peter McGahey
13. Geo. McGahey
14. Saml. McGahey
15. Hugh McGahey
16. Philip Wilcox
17. Henry Drinker	149
18. Jacob Peterman	444–120
19. Wm. Armstrong
20. Wm Smith
21. Mathias Coplin
22. John Sahler
23. Hugh Wiley	434–53
24. Wm. Henderson
25. Wm. Potts	400–120
26. John Boyer
27. David Taylor
28. Henry Drinker
29. Henry Boyer
30. Henry Wiley	434–53
31. Jas. Norton	434–53
32. Henry Norton	434–53
33. Amos Findley	434–53
34. Paul Kugler
35. Henry Drinker
36. John Shannon
37. Jos. Henry	390
38. Jonathan Pyle	449–19
39. Peter Norton	434–53
40. Hugh Norton	369–144
41. Adam Shrak	431
42. John Kugler
43. Wm. Smith	364–147
44. Wm. Ward
45. Jacob Swink	401½
46. Peter Norcross	379–13
47. Paul Norcross	432
48. Jos. Bradley	434
49. Jas. Bradley	434–35
50. Hugh Johnson	199–120
51. Saml. Bradley
52. Geo. Bradley	434–53
53. Moses Hobson	444–14
54. Jas. Davis	408½
55. Wm. Couch	405
56. John Thomas	399¼
57. Saml. Wallace	185
58. John Perot	400
59. Danl. Trobridge
60. Nicholas Rash
61. Chas. Shultz	369–60
62. Henry Drinker	386
63. John Comfort	155¼
64. Tim. Paxon	209–120
65. Saml Emlen	100–23
66. John Comfort
67. Peter Cress	430½
68. Jacob Downing	400
69. Henry S. Drinker	400
70. Wm. Drinker	400
71. Silas Bliss	350½
72 Danl. Rees	412–15
73. Geo. Muntz	434–53
74. Patrick Johnson	270–97
75. Harmon Norcross	434–53
76. Peter Bradley	434–53
77. Jesse Evans	419–137
78. —— —— "ffield"

	Acres
79. Peter Snyder	100
80. Wm. Lane
81. Roger Muntz	434-63
82. Jos. Muntz	434-53
83. Jos. Mason	415 76
84. Jos. Drinker	431-64
85. Wm. Buckley
86. John Thomas	100-40
87. Jacob Downing	400
88. Rowland Evans	400
89. Wm. Drinker	400
90. Saml. Preston	400
100. Cadwalladder Evans	91-99
101. John Skyrin	400
102. John Drinker	167-24
103. John Morrel	407¾
104. David Beckley	403-140
105. Fredk. Barthold	400-140
106. —— ——
107. Adam Driesbic
108. Henry Drinker	414-33
109. John McCohen	411-71
110. Henry Tolland
111. Geo. Baker	428-89
112. Wm. Craig
113. Benj. Wilson	431-138
114. C. L. Ward
115. Robt. Trail

HERRICK—(See ARARAT).

THOMSON AND JACKSON.

	Acres
1. John Sargent	301-120
2. Jos. Paul	301-120
3. Andrew Porter	318
4. Jonathan Sargent	200
5. Henry Dobbs	451-51
6. Henry Drinker	401-136
7. Wm. Drinker	393-110
8. Jacob Downers	394-146
9. Kenneth Kulloth	100
10. Hannah Warner	301-141
11. Abraham Shoemaker	301-141
12. Matthew Shaw
13. Jesse Brooks	300
14. Isaac ——
15. Saml. Hodgdon	443-10
16. John Stille	443-10
17. Geo. McCall	438-52
18. Geo. Plumstead	438-52
19. Geo. Dobbs	453-120
20. Jos. Darnley	468-80
21. Saml. Darnley	470-40
22. Saml. Dobbs	482-40
23. Geo. Foster	434¼
24. Andrew Osterman	484¾
25. Henry Osterman	479-39
26. Roger Osterman	479-39
27. Jas. Darnley (or Domeley)	375 120
28. Saml. Wilson	445-120
29. —— ——	445-120
30. J. D. le Ray de Chaumont
31. Israel Pleasants	481-28
32. Robt. Benson	170
33. Peter Taylor
34. Geo. Stow	474-19
35. Isaac Miller	429
36. John Campbell	300
37. John Pleasant	440-10
38. Thos. Harrison	445-120
39. John Wilson	458 82
40. Saml. Pyatt	476
41. Henry Pyatt	476-34
42. Paul Osterman	479-39
43. Saml. Osterman	470-121
44. Jos. Shippen	464-59
45. Jos. Shippen	543-115
46. Geo. White
47. Andrew White	514
48. Peter Cooley	479-39
49. Henry Oliver	479-39
50. Andrew Oliver	479-39
51. Joseph Oliver	450-80
52. Jas. Pyatt	479-39
53. Peter Pyatt	479-39
54. Jos. Pyatt	479-39
55. Chas. Pyatt	479-39
56. Geo. Norton	479-39
57. Paul Bradley	434-53
58. Saml. Bradley	434-53
59. Hugh Johnston	199 120
60. Jas. Bradley	434-53
61. Saml. Norton	479-39
62. Jas. Norton	479-39
63. Henry Norton	479-39
64. Peter Norton	479-39
65. Andrew Norton	479-39
66. Peter Oliver	479-39
67. Geo. Oliver	479-39
68. Saml. Oliver	479-39
69. Jos. Wells	479-39
70. Henry Ross	479-39
71. Joshua Rink, Jr	434-53
72. Peter Ross	434-53
73. Saml. Norcross	434-53
74. Jos. Norcross	434-53
75. Peter Norcross	434 53
76. Jonathan Pyle	449-49
77. Henry Norcross	434-53
78. Peter Pyle	434 53
79. Peter Johnston	434-53
80. Joshua Rink, Jr	158-76
81. Jas. Rink, Jr	400
82. Saml. Findley	434-53
83. Peter Findley	434-53

JESSUP.

	Acres
1. Timothy Matlock
2. Clement Biddle
3. Mary Jenkins
4. Wm. Jackson	311-40
5. Joseph Towson	438-40
6. Wm. Plumet	309-60
7. Matthew McConnell
8. Cassandra Jacobs
9. Richard Humphreys
10. S. Wetherill
11. Thos. Fitzerman
12. Elijah Brown
13. Jas. Wilson	298¼
14. Henry Towson	360-84
15. Geo. White	412-16
16. Andrew Philips	420-44
17. Paul Towson	422-94
18. Robt. Taylor	301-120
19. Philip Johnston	302 40
20. Archibald Stewart	301-120
21. Chas. Grandowin
22. John Barclay
23. Joshua Ash
24. Robt. Morton	428-130
25. Chas. Wharton	301-120
26. Chas. Stewart	301-120
27. Peter Towson	439-143
28. Chas. Kunkle	411-13
29. Conrad Ditmar
30. Daniel Reed	301-120

LATHROP.

	Acres
1. Wm. Layton	407½
2. Joseph Knox	335-16
3. Peter Roan	439-99
4. Samuel Roan	439-99
5. Jas. Roan	439-99
6. Henry Roan	439-99
7. Chas. Roan	439-99
8. Fredk. Trott	439-99
9. Joseph Diver	433¾
10. Geo. Harvey	433-153
11. Hugh Harvey	439-99
12. Peter Harvey	433-150
13. Jas. Ross	433-153
14. Jas. Quin	434
15. Henry Ross
16. Francis Jones
17. Geo. Coxe	439-99
18. Peter Coxe	439-99
19. Joseph Coxe	439-99
20. Luke Coxe	439-99
21. Caleb Knox	439-109
22. Jas. Harvey	440
23. Chas Conner	407½
24. Catharine Frick	407½
25. Philip Frick	407½
26. Roger Harvey	474¾
27. Isaac Baldan	300
28. Samuel Baldin
29. John Graff	417
30. Ariel Tybout	417
31. Geo. Ripler	4 6
32. Matt Brook	100

LENOX.

	Acres
1. —— ——
2. Peter Baldan
3. Jas. Baldan	479-39
4. Andrew Baldan	479-39
5. Joseph Jasten	479-39
6. Henry Jasten	479-39
7. Peter Jordan	479-39
8. Henry Jordan	479-39
9 James Grumley	555½
10. John Dorsey	250
11. Robt. Paysley
12. Jas. Jordan	471¾
13. Samuel Grumley	479-39
14. Harman Grumley	479-39
15. Paul Jasten	479-39
16. Samuel Jasten	479-39
17. Samuel Harmon	479-39
18. Samuel Meredith	307-60
19. Samuel Meredith	307-60
20. Geo. Rinearson
21. Edward Shippen	294-38
22. James Coxe	406
23. Andrew Jasten	479-39
24. Jas. Jasten	479-39
25. Joshua Grumley	479-39
26. Peter Grumley	479-39
27. Samuel Jordan	450¾
28. Geo. Eddy	200
29. Thos. Jordan	450¾
30. —— ——
31. —— ——
32. Henry Grumley	479
33. Woodbury S. Wilson
34. Peter Harris
35. Henry Harris	419-79
36. Roger Harris	460
37. Paul Harris	400
38. Peter North	345¼
39. Harmon North	345¼
40. Norman Noble	473
41. Samuel Griffen	441
42. David Griffen
43. Samuel Palmer	378-35
44. Andrew Palmer	366-25
45. Adam Campher	320-100
46. Lawrence Sickler
47. Wm. Sheaff
48. John Boyd
49. Joseph Thomas	122-100
50. John Hoops
51. Daniel Tallman	200

LIBERTY—(see FRANKLIN.)

MIDDLETOWN.

	Acres
1. Edward Westcot	240
2. Stephen Madoris	40-30
3. David Daws (or Hawes)	400
4. Geo. Pickering
5. Benj. Skyhawk	422½
6. Wm. Sheaff	300
7. Jonathan Penrose	300
8. Thos. Rowan	289
9. Thos. Forest	289
10. John Rowan	289
11. Wm. Lewis	289
12. Wm. Jackson	289
13. Peter Baynton
14. Leonard Beaty
15. Robt. Carson
16. Wm. West, Jr	300
a Justus Franks
17. Philip Dunlap	400
18. John Brown	447
19. Israel Israels	447
20. Benj. Jones	447
21. Sharp Delancy	440-120
22. Obadiah Wiley	387
23. John Kunkle	415
24. Eliza Robareson	388½
25. Eleazer Oswols	388½
26. Francis Lesher	388½
27. Josiah Matlock	388½
28. Amos Cooper	388½
29. Jas Parker	388½
30. Wm. Kenley	388½
31. Guy Bryan	388½
32. Joseph Wright	388½
33. Francis Fisher	388½
34. Josiah Hewes	388½
35. Cadwalladder Evans	388½
36. Robert Smith	388½
37. Lawrence Sickle	388½
38. Jas. Carson	388½
39. Michael O'Brien	388½
40. Adam Yoke	414
41. Robt. Corvie	415
42. Wm. Moulder	388½
43. Jas. Whitehead	388½

	Acres
44. David Sickle	388½
45. Jas. Gardner	388½
46. Joseph James	388½
47. Jos. Gray	388½
48. Jonathan Price	388½
49. Joseph Stretch	388½
50. James Trimble	388½
51. Mary Ashton	388½
52. Elizabeth Chandler
53. James Chalkley	388½
54. Thos. Smith	388½
55. Peter Kuhn	388½
56. Cadwalladder Morris	388½
57. Richard Mason	388½
58. James Craig	115

NEW MILFORD.

	Acres
1. Patrick Holland	406–80
2. John Wall	406–80
3. Samuel Powell	380
4. John Eldridge	380
5. —— ——	380
6. Edward Shippen	401 142
7. Edward Shippen
8. Peter Ellis	302½
9. Edward Shippen	301–142
10. Edward Shippen	301–142
11. Andrew Allen	301–142
12. Geo. Roach	502½
13. Andrew Allen	301–142
14. Andrew Allen	301–142
15. Andrew Allen	301–142
16. Samuel Roach	479–39
17. Peter Roach	415½
18. Geo. Wells	479–39
19. John Flatt	479–39
20. Geo. Ellis	479–39
21. Wm. Forbes	231–80
22. Casper Singer	291–80
23. James Holland	424
24. Henry Holland	421
25. —— ——
26. Joseph Hood	499
27. Andrew Epple	400–140
28. John Philips	400–120
29. Peter Hood	485–80
30. Gustavus Risbergh	400–120
31. Richard Poteman	400–120
32. Andrew Ellis	238 84
33. Samuel Flatt	479–39
34. Robert Wells	479–39
35. Robert Pyle	479–39
36. James Cooley
37. Henry Wells	479–39
38. Joseph Fulton	479–39
39. Peter Flatt	479–39
40. Henry Ellis	479–39
41. Peter Eldredge	479–39
42. Joseph Flatt	479–39
43. Andrew Fulton	479–39
44. Robert Wells, Jr	479–39
45. Geo. Cooley	479–39
46. Jas. Wells	479–39
47. Peter Fulton	479–39
48. Henry Eldredge	479–39
49. Joseph Eldredge	479–39
50. Roger Hood	479–39
51. Samuel Hood	479–39
52. Joseph Temple	479–39
53. John Temple	479–39
54. Samuel Temple	479–39
55. Solomon Rink, Jr	400–60
56. Joseph Rink	195 120
57. Samuel Eldredge	479–39
58. James Eldredge	479–39
59. Joseph Ross (or Race)	479–39
60. Jas. Rink, Jr	400
61. Samuel Rink, Jr	400
62. Joshua Rink, Jr
63. Henry Rink	479–39
64. Andrew Pyle, Jr	401–60
65. Jonathan Hancock	438
66. James Chapman	400–140
67. John Barrow	400–140
68. Samuel Findley	434–53
69. Geo. Heplar	400–140

OAKLAND—(see HARMONY.)

RUSH.

	Acres
1. Samuel Nichols	489
2. Samuel Reeder	433–153
3. Peter Reeder
4. Chas. Reeder
5. Thos. Dundas	323
6. Thos. Barclay	320–40
7. Harman Lohra
8. Harman Lohra
9. Fredk. Lohra	399
10. Peter Bitters	405–106
11. Andrew Lohra	433–153
12. Andrew Bitters	396–36
13. Paul Craft
14. Samuel Bitters	358–80
15. Samuel Bitters	433–153
16. Christopher Lohra	433–153
17. Andrew Lohra	396–36
18. Joseph Lohra	375–10
19. John Lohra	400–10
20. Vacant
21. S. L. Lovel
22. Isaac Coxe	330
23. Leonard Beaty
24. Robert Carson	330
25. Hannah Humphreys
26. J. C. Biddle
27. Henry Hefferman	426–66
28. Paul Hefferman	433–153
a Ichabod Terry
29. Andrew Ingle	396–36
30. Samuel Ingle	433–153
31. Richard Bitters	433–153
32. Geo. Grice	358–80
33. Peter Grice	433–153
34. Andrew Grice	433–153
35. Paul Bitters	358–80
36. Henry Ingle	433–153
37. Joshua Ingle	433–153
38. Peter Lock	176¼
39. Samuel Hefferman	316–10
40. Alexander Boyd
41. John Heyl
42. Rebecca Jervis
43. Jas. Abercrombie
44. Jas. Lang
45. Andrew Hefferman
46. Geo. Hefferman	394–126
47. Jonathan Nesbit	310
48. Alexander Nesbit	328–40
49. Paul Ingle	433–151
50. Peter Ingle	433–153
51. Paul Whitecar	358–80
52. Andrew Whitecar	433–153
53. Peter Charles	439
54. Henry Charles	453–40
55. Job Charles	426–67
56. Samuel Towson	426–67
57. Jos. Towson	438–40
58. Fredk. Towson	402–140
59. Jas. Read	225–120
60. Robert Bridges
61. Samuel Nichols
62. Wm. Jackson	311–40
63. Geo. White	412–16
64. Samuel White	412–16
65. Joseph Boggs	412–16
66. Samuel Boggs	412–16
67. Jas. Boggs	412–16
68. Hugh Boggs	412–16
69. Patrick Boggs	412–16

SILVER LAKE.

	Acres
1. Jacob Lawensyker
2. Henry McSwine
3. Edward Lasker	414
4. Benj Chew	438 80
5. Thos. Penrose	439–120
6. John Parrott	439–120
7. John Showel
8. Joseph Coates	439–120
9. Thos. Affick
10. Wm. Nicholas
11. Magnus Miller
12. Roger Dibley	414
13. Joseph McSwine
14. Tench Francis
a Wm. Kinney
b Peter McSwine
15. Samuel McSwine
16. Joseph Dibley	344
17. Samuel Dibley	346 120
18. Peter Dibley	382–120
19. John Wueherer
20. Ricard Parker
21. Edward Duffield	427–80
22. Casper Singer	427–80
23. Garrett Cottinger	425
24. Jas. Bryson	425
25. Susannah Fisher	425
26. Wm. Craig	425
27. Wm. Brown	425
28. Jas. Coxe
29. Stephens Collins	427–80
30. Jeremiah Ward	427–80
31. Jacob Downing
32. Jeremiah Parker
33. Jas. Dibley	392–120
34. Jas. Denton	396–80
35. Henry De Melt
36. Jas. McSwine
37. Wm. Compton
38. Samuel Powell	418
39. John McSwine
40. Solomon De Melt	414
41. Peter Denton
42. Paul Denton
43. John Gravel	369–116
44. Geo. Hunter
45. Wm. Haysham
46. Christopher Roan	425
47. Elizabeth Jones	436–120
48. John Rudolph	425

SPRINGVILLE.

	Acres
1. Peter White	420–44
2. Peter Clark	295–120
3. Jas. McWilliams	426–40
4. Geo. Holt	426–40
5. Jas. Holt	426–40
6. Samuel Holt	426–40
7. Philip Holt	426–40
8. Robert Holmes	426–40
9. Jas. Holmes	426–40
10. Samuel Holmes	426–40
11. Jas. Reaver	424–40
12. Samuel Reaver	424–40
13. Geo. Reaver	424–40
14. Peter Trester	424–40
15. Joseph Trester	424–40
16. John Trester	424–40
17. Henry Trester	424 40
18. Geo Trester	424–40
19. Henry Clark	294–64
20. Jas. Pentland	439–65
21. John Clarke	439–65
22. Wm. McPhail	439–65
23. Joseph Norkey	439–65
24. Henry Norkey	439–65
25. Samuel Norkey	439–65
26. Jas. Norkey	439–65
27. Peter Emery	439–65
28. John Emery	439–65
29. Henry Hutman	40
30. Francis Hutman	65
31. Joseph Hutman	87
32. Geo. Harris	438–55
33 Peter Harris	438–55
34. Hugh Harris	438–55
35. Jonathan Harris	438–55
36. Geo. Emory	438–55
37. Jas. Teel	400
38. Samuel Teel	356
39. Jeremiah Teel	382
40. Samuel Lock	261–120
41. Wm Sharp
42. John Wilcox
43. Samuel Miller	363–80
44. Andrew Miller	398–40
45. Jonas Ramsey	419
46. Swen Warner	439–99
47. John Loder	439–99
48. Jacob Burkalaw	439–99
49. John Norkey	439–99
50. Geo. Degenhard	439–99
51. Fredk. Trott	439–99
52. Geo. Hutma	116
53. Peter Hutman	95

THOMSON—(see JACKSON).

CHAPTER VI.

TOPOGRAPHY, GEOLOGY AND ZOOLOGY.

SUSQUEHANNA COUNTY is broken by hills and valleys which follow each other in constant succession, presenting an irregular surface diversified by inland lakes and mountain streams. The landscape view from the hilltops is one of mountain repose and quiet pastoral beauty.

"[1] The county is much diversified and made irregular by erosion. This would be strikingly illustrated to any one who should make a day's journey over any of the roads of the county which do not follow the water-courses; our traveler would find his journey a constant succession of ascents and descents." This is strikingly apparent as you journey on the old Milford and Owego turnpike.

"The Elk Mountains, a northern extension of the Mahoopany, form a very striking feature in southeastern Susquehanna; the North Knob and South Knob being visible from the hilltops in most portions of the county, and attaining an altitude of two thousand seven hundred feet. The cliff sandstones, of the Catskill series, frequently form a succession of steep bluffs, with sloping benches, shale occupying the intervals. They stand out uncovered with soil and surface débris in bold, successive cliffs along the hillsides; or cap the higher summits with broad sheets of massive sand-rock. Thus, the North Knob has been preserved from destruction by its coping layer of hard, massive sand-rock; the solitary peak stands two thousand seven hundred feet above tide, in the midst of a much lower surrounding country, while the valleys around it have been excavated one thousand five hundred feet below its summit. The highest land is in the eastern part of the county, on the Moosic divide, between Susquehanna and Wayne. It forms a belt about five or six miles wide, and is the northern prolongation of the Carbondale coal basin. As nearly all the water-ways cut down through the Catskill cliff sand-stones, their slopes are usually quite steep, and the valley beds themselves very narrow. The Tunkhannock, with its narrow valley and high, steep side-walls, is a good example. In striking contrast with this is the broad and gently-sloping valley of the Susquehanna River, flowing between low, rolling hills of the soft Chemung rock. The Susquehanna River enters the county from New York at its northeastern corner, but after going south five miles it turns abruptly west, and after continuing about ten miles makes its Great Bend and passes northward back into New York. There it again veers west, and flows roughly parallel to the State line, and from three to ten miles north of it, to the mouth of the Chemung River at Waverly. Here it bends south into Bradford County, which it crosses to its southeast corner, and so keeps on southeastward across Wyoming County into Luzerne. Where it enters Wyoming County it is only four miles from the southwest corner of Susquehanna County—thus making a great circle from the Great Bend round through Bradford County.

"Its rate of fall is shown by the following table:

RATE OF FALL PER MILE.

	Fall.	Miles.	Rate.
Susquehanna Depot to Waverly,	120′	64	1′ 11″
Waverly to Towanda,	40′	19	2′ 1″
Towanda to Meshoppen,	91′	35	2′ 7″
Meshoppen to Lackawanna Junction,	74′	37	2′ 0″
Susquehanna Depot to Lackawanna Junction,	340′	155	2′ 2″

The east and west divide, which extends entirely across Susquehanna County, is highest at the east, and from its northern slope many streams pass northward into the Susquehanna River.

"Starrucca Creek, which drains the northeastern corner of Susquehanna, rises on the highest portion of this east and west divide, flows northward, and empties into the Susquehanna River at Lanesborough. The descent of its bed from the high divide," Ararat Summit, 2023′, to the mouth of Starrucca Creek (Susquehanna River), 880′, shows the fall to be about one thousand two hundred feet. The Susquehanna River, in its tortuous course, receives the waters of all the creeks that drain the county, in whatever direction they flow. There is an irregular water-shed extending from a point between Wrighter and Long Ponds westward, through Ararat, Jackson, New Milford and Bridgewater, to Montrose, forming two waterbasins, one debouching northward, the other southward. "The Starrucca, Canawacta, Drinker's, Mitchell's, Salt Sick and Wiley Creeks empty northwards into the Susquehanna within the State; Snake, Choconut and Apolacon Creeks not until they have entered New York State. The streams which drain the southern slope of this east and west divide are the following, beginning at the east:

[1] Prof. I. C. White's report of the geology of Wayne and Susquehanna.

"Lackawanna River, which flows south along the eastern line of Susquehanna County (draining the western slope of the Moosic Mountains), cuts straight through the Lackawannock range at the southeastern corner of Susquehanna County and, entering the Lackawanna coal basin, flows down its trough southwest to the Susquehanna River at Pittston.

"Tunkhannock Creek, with its numerous tributaries, comes next west from the Lackawanna River, and drains a large area from the southern slope of the east and west divide, southwestward, into the Susquehanna River at Tunkhannock, in Wyoming County. The main tributaries of this stream are the East Branch, empting into it near the southern line of the county, and Martin's Creek, which flows southward from the great gap in the east and west divide near New Milford, emptying into Tunkhannock two miles south from the county line at Nicholson.

"The descent of this stream is shown by the following barometric elevations:

	Miles.	A. T.
Divide at head of Tunkhannock Creek	0	1600′
Level of creek near D. A. Lamb's	4	1250′
" " " Gelatt P. O.	6	1150′
" " " Smiley P. O.	8½	1075′
" " at South Gibson	12½	1000′
" " " mouth of Partner's Creek	15	925′
" " " Glenwood P. O.	20	815′
" " " Nicholson (Wyoming County)	23	700′
" " " Tunkhannock (Susquehanna River)	38	580′

"Meshoppen Creek and its tributaries, Little Meshoppen, White and Riley Creeks, drain the remaining portion of the southern slope of this divide.

"Tuscarora Creek, which empties into the Susquehanna near Laceyville, drains the extreme southwest corner of the county.

"Wyalusing Creek rises on the elevated plateau near Montrose, and flowing westward with a rapid fall drains, with its tributaries (the North and Middle Branches), a large area out of the central western portion of Susquehanna County."

There are many beautiful lakes in different parts of the country that will be described in their several localities. The most celebrated lake as a summer resort is Crystal Lake, that lies partly in Clifford township and partly in Lackawanna County. A number of neat summer cottages have been erected at Heart Lake by Montrose people.

There are several mineral springs in the county. The history of the salt springs is enveloped in Indian tradition and romance. The pioneers at Great Bend observed that the squaws returned their kettles with salt in the bottom, and from such information as could be obtained, it was believed that there was a salt spring not many miles from the "Three Apple Trees." A salt spring was discovered on the south side of Silver Creek, near its junction with Fall Brook, and about a mile west of Franklin Forks. It is said to have been found by Abinoam Hinds and Isaac Peckins in 1802. The Indians kept these salt springs carefully concealed; in this case they had turned the stream from its course and made it run over the spring, the basin of which had been hollowed out of the rock with a tomahawk. They found it covered with a large spoon and a stone laid over it. Balthaser De Haert and others sunk money in sinking wells for salt, which was never found in paying quantities. In 1865 the Susquehanna Salt Works Company purchased the property and sunk a well to the depth of six hundred and fifty feet, at an expense of twenty-eight thousand dollars, erecting buildings, tanks and salt-block. At the depth of six hundred and fifty feet they found an excellent vein of brine, and manufactured about twenty tons of good dairy salt. Alanson Chalker, John S. Tarbell and others purchased the property and sunk the well deeper, or about eight hundred and twenty feet deep, and found good brine, but not in sufficient quantity to make it a paying investment, and the works were abandoned. There is a sulphur spring in Rush, not far from Snyder's Hotel, on part of the Drinker estate, which was leased to J. D. Pepper for many years. Mr. Pepper gave away the water freely to all who came for it. Many people have visited the spring and carried away water in jugs, bottles and barrels. E. S. and A. D. Butterfield purchased the property in 1869, and erected a summer hotel. The waters are said to be beneficial in many cases. Dr. A. B. Prescott's qualitative analysis shows that the constituent properties of the water are chloride of magnesium, potassium and lime; carbonate of magnesia, soda and lithia; phosphoric, silicic and carbonic acid; chlorine, protoxide of iron.

"The rocks of the county belong principally to one system, viz.: what the geologists have termed the Catskill, since these same strata make up the great bulk of the Catskill Mountains in New York State. The main characteristic of the system is the abundance of red material, in the shape of red shale and red sandstone, the red color being always due to per-oxide of iron disseminated through the rocks, or shale, as the case may be. Inter-stratified with the red shales are found frequent layers of gray or greenish current bedded sandstones, often finely laminated and forming excellent flagging material. The base of this system is seen only in Susquehanna County, and in that only along the Susquehanna River and the lower portions of the streams which flow into it, where one hundred to two hundred feet of Chemung rocks may be seen.

"The soils of the county have been largely derived from the decomposition of rocks in situ, since the hill-slopes are generally so steep that the Drift is seldom found remaining on them except in scattered patches. The Catskill system furnishes almost all of the surface rocks in this district, and the soils have been largely derived either from their gradual decay or trituration by glacial action.

"The red shales of the Catskill have probably contributed more to the formation of the soil than any other part of it, and it is the universal testimony of the farmers that the 'red shale soils' are generally stronger and richer than any others. The amount of alkalies in the shale doubtless accounts for the fertility of its soil, since the quantity of lime and phosphoric acid is not sufficient to have any marked influence for good. But while the red shale soils are usually the best in the district, it is equally true that only in isolated patches and in favorable localities are there any really first-class soils within the county. The great body of the surface is covered by a thin sandy soil of very little natural fertility, and except in the vicinity of swamps, where a great thickness of decayed vegetable material has accumulated, and along some of the larger streams, where the drift deposits are extensive, there is not much land within the district that will produce abundant crops until it has been fertilized artificially. The hill-slopes are steep and the surface generally rugged. Excellent crops of grass grow on almost any of the soils.

"The great need of the soils is lime, and the more sandy soils are furnishing it. There are no pure limestone strata in the Catskill series, but there are a great many layers of impure calcareous conglomerate, or breccia, interstratified with the shales and sandstone of this series. Huge fragments of this kind of rock lie scattered about over a large portion of the district, blackened by exposure to the air.

"These 'Nigger-heads' contain from ten to sixty-five per cent. of lime, and might often be burned to great advantage for lime manure. Many of the farmers have noticed the fact that the grass grows greener and richer near them, their lime being dissolved out by every shower to enrich the surrounding soil. But very few farmers have the least idea that these rocks contain enough lime to be of any service for burning. They have been burned in some localities and a good lime for fertilizing has been made therefrom."

FORESTS.—Susquehanna County was originally covered with a dense growth of forest trees. The principal timbers were beech, birch, maple, cherry, ash, chestnut, basswood, hemlock and pine. There was also some hickory and oak. Pine was considered the most valuable for lumber and shingles, because it is durable and is soft, and easy to smooth with the plane. The pioneer settlers were reckless in their use of the pine and lawless as to where they got it. Here, in this dense wilderness, they looked upon a good pine tree as free plunder. It is not uncommon to find in the old ceiled houses wide pine boards entirely free from knots; in fact, they would have nothing else but panel pine in their houses. The hemlocks have been destroyed, largely for their bark and lumber. The last of the large hemlock tracts that belonged to the Drinker estate, in Harmony township, is being peeled and manufactured into lumber at a rapid rate, and in a very few years the tanneries and saw-mills will be idle for want of bark and timber. The primeval forests that looked so formidable to the pioneers have nearly all fallen before the woodman's axe, or been destroyed by forest fires.

"[1] Some hills in different parts of the county were once covered with chestnut, but its value as lumber was then unknown, and the land was not particularly sought after any more than any other timber-bearing section. Thousands of rails were split, not only to fence the little clearings of the settlers who had located there, but to sell to others who had settled in places where it was not so abundant. Only the best trees were used. Others that might have made excellent lumber, but would not readily split, were cut into fallow lengths, rolled up in log heaps and burned. To-day we might call such work wasteful. In those times it was not looked upon in that light. The main object was to get rid of the timber in order to cultivate the ground. Since the railroads have been built, most of the young and thrifty chestnuts have been cut for ties. As a timber it is now comparatively scarce. The valleys of the Wyalusing, Lackawanna and the Tunkhannock, and its branches were once covered, more or less, with valuable pine timber, of a very superior quality. This was mostly cut and manufactured in the early days of the county; and although the prices of good pine lumber were exceedingly low, in comparison with present prices, it furnished a remunerative employment for many of the settlers, and kept the saw-mills busy. Scarcely anything was marketable in those days, unless it was panel—that is, perfectly clear lumber, free from all defects, and with no knots larger than a shilling. Pine lumber that would be called tolerably good now was thrown among the culls then, and sold at about the price of sawing. It was used in making fences, for roof-boards, etc., and to cut up as waste lumber. Only the best part of the tree was generally taken, and the tops, that would be likely to make only a second-grade lumber, as well as many other slightly imperfect logs, were left behind. Their remains may still be seen in some localities, and occasionally fine pine shingles are made from some of the old tree-tops that were felled forty or fifty years ago; though in most cases the logs are too rotten for use. Vast quantities of good pine timber were thus wasted, which in after-years would have commanded a fair price. But very few pine trees can now be found in the county. If the pine that once grew in this section could be replaced as it was before a blow had been struck, the land would, without doubt, be more valuable than it is now, with all its buildings and cultivated fields. The soil is usually colder in pine sections, and more or less mountain laurel is found.

"The low lands along the streams were mostly covered with a dense growth of heavy hemlock, and it was no uncommon thing to find specimens over twelve feet in circumference. In the early history of the country, before any tanneries had been erected, and when lumber was of but little account, the settlers rolled up the huge logs and burned them without being peeled. The green timber was often hard to reduce to ashes, and the sturdy pioneers sometimes used to wonder why such great trees were made. After bark and lumber began to be demanded, the prices of land began to advance, and bark-peeling and log-cutting became a considerable branch of industry. Water and steam mills, with new and improved machinery, were built in various places, and vast quantities of boards, timber and plank were manufactured and shipped. For many years after the New York and Erie and Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroads were built, a large amount of wood was required for the locomotives, and the cutting and hauling of railroad wood made a winter business of no small magnitude. Thousands of cords, neatly piled in immense ranks, at the various wood-yards, formed a prominent feature all along the line of the railway. Many enterprising farmers finished paying for their land by cutting and delivering wood and ties. But the various branches of timber industry, which had been carried on with varying success for many years, were ultimately destined to be brought to a close for want of material. Many of the saw-mills have long since gone to decay, and there is now but very little valuable timber land left in the county.

"Among the many medicinl plants and herbs found in different localities of the county are catnip, motherwort, tansy, caraway, burdock, yellow dock, wild or Indian turnip, lobelia, archangel, mouse ear, notch grass, wintergreen, nervine or swamp wintergreen, avens root, dwarf elder, valerian, smart weed, peppermint, spearmint, wild sage, boneset, sarsaparilla, wild cucumber, blood root, colt's foot, snake root, bitter sweet, cohosh, celandine, comfrey, dandelion, gold thread, white and yellow pond lily, pennyroyal, poke, prince's pine, Solomon's seal, spikenard, liverwort, elecampane, mandrake, polypody, beth root, male fern, maiden's hair fern, partridge berry, yarrow, adder's tongue, sweet fern, nettle, wild parsley, sweet flag, scabious, blue violet, blue flag, water rush, cat-tail flag, buttercup and ginseng. Sage, summer savory, wormwood, hoarhound, horse radish, poppy, saffron and mustard are commonly cultivated in gardens.

[1] Jasper Jennings.

"The following weeds injurious to agriculture are also found here: White daisy, golden rod, common and Canada thistle, barn grass, mullein, pigweed, rag weed (a large yellow daisy which has lately made its appearance), St. John's wort, bulrush, wild carrot and buttercup. Ivy and wild hops are found in some localities, and hellebore grows in marshy places along the streams. Many pests of the farm have been brought in with grass seed purchased from distant sections of the country."

Animals, Birds and Reptiles.—"The zoology of the county has undergone considerable changes, incident to the changes of the country from wilderness to cultivation. In earlier years, when the far-reaching forest was only broken here and there by little clearings, panthers, bears, wolves and wild-cats were numerous, and often proved formidable foes to the settlers. These animals have long since been exterminated, with, perhaps, the single exception of an occasional wild-cat. Deer, once so numerous, were early destroyed. Foxes still have their dens in the many different ledges in back places, and skunks, minks and weasels often make their night raids upon the farmer's poultry. Musk-rats are found along the streams; rabbits and hares abound, and red, gray and black squirrels and chipmunks are numerous. Woodchucks and raccoons sometimes injure corn and pumpkins, and rats, mice and moles are found in considerable numbers. Otters were once found along the creeks, but they have all passed away. What are called beaver meadows exist in several places, but there is no record of any of these animals being seen in this locality, and if they were ever here, they had disappeared before the advent of the white man. Elk were found here by the pioneers, especially in the vicinity of the Elk and Moosic Mountains.

"Among the more prominent birds are hen, night, fish and sparrow hawks, partridges, crows, blackbirds, cuckoos, blue jays, whip-poor-wills, horned and screech owls, catbirds, snowbirds, chickadees, kingfishers, cranes, king-birds, meadow larks, bobolinks, pigeons, quails, wild ducks, robins, chipping birds, several varieties of woodpeckers, wrens, thrushes, swallows, yellow birds, scarlet red birds with black wings, bluebirds and humming birds. One or two eagles have been killed here, but they are very rarely seen. Dr. L. A. Smith, of New Milford, has in his office a very extensive collection of neatly-stuffed specimens, representing nearly every species common to this latitude. The wild turkey was also a native of the primeval forest.

"Toads, frogs and lizards inhabit all the swamps and pools in great numbers, and occasionally a mud or land turtle is met with. Striped snakes, as well as the little brown and green snakes, are numerous. Water snakes abound along the sunny borders of ponds and water-courses, and a species of spotted adder, known as the milk snake, is common. It is sometimes nearly as large as the rattlesnake, and presents a formidable appearance. The rattlesnake, once very numerous in certain localities, is occasionally met with in the county."

Fish.—The clear mountain streams of Susquehanna County once abounded in trout, the native fish of this region of country. The Indians took the speckled beauties from the bubbling waters of the Wyalusing, Meshoppen, Tunkhannock and other streamlets of Susquehanna County long before the white man visited this region. The tanneries, mills and factories have rendered the waters too impure for this dainty fish in many cases, and the sportsmen, by persistent fishing in others, have nearly depleted the streams and lakes of this fish. Catfish, perch, shiners, sunfish and eels were also native fish. Pickerel were put into the lakes about 1836, and bass about 1870; George R. Lathrop, Dr. Smith and other sportsmen put the bass into the lakes. J. P. Taylor was instrumental in putting five thousand California trout into the Meshoppen Creek and Carmalt's Lake, in Choconut township, in 1886; also five thousand salmon trout and ten thousand white fish, for food, into Silver Lake, in 1887. He also proposes to stock the Wyalusing with California trout. As the mills and tanneries disappear, the rapid-running mountain streams of Susquehanna County can be successfully stocked with trout again.

CHAPTER VII.

LINES OF TRAVEL.

Indian Trails—Pioneer Roads—Turnpikes—Stage Routes—Railroads.

Indian Trails.—One of the many subjects that afford interest in connection with the habitation of this region of country by the departed race, is the study of their lines of travel-routes chosen by them to facilitate intercourse with each other and with distant tribes, and also to places affording means for the supply of their simple wants; indeed, for just such purposes as civilization requires in modern lines of travel, but, of course, to a very limited extent.

It is erroneous to suppose that the Indians roamed about and through the wild woods with undefined purpose or destination; the directions of these trails were well chosen for ease of travel, and they probably rarely departed from them except in pursuit of game. More of our highways than we imagine are laid upon lines surveyed to us, and well defined long before the country was invaded by us, and before the original possessors were despoiled and driven away.

It must become apparent to those who give attention to the subject, that the Indians lived almost exclusively in the valleys and on the borders of lakes and streams, because here were obtained that upon which they subsisted,—game, fish, berries, fruits and Indian corn. They could do very little, indeed, with their stone implements in felling trees and clearing forests, and the land cultivated for maize was such as the generous hand of nature furnished them, in the drift and alluvial deposits, made by successive, but irregular, periods of inundation. Along the course of the river, where there is a margin of level land of any extent, we find almost invariably evidence of the existence of camp-fires in the charred wood and heat-discolored stones and clay disclosed by the crumbling earth along the river-bank, and in the plowed fields adjacent; in such localities are found almost exclusively the Indians' implements of warfare, and those for domestic utility,—the stone age, in fact, in all its variety, including numberless fragmentary specimens of the fictile art; while to find even an arrow-point or spear-head on the mountain is noticeably a rare occurrence.

Numerous arrow-heads have been found along the Wyalusing and Susquehanna Rivers in this county.

The most extensive and well-known of Indian trails in this part of the country is that commencing at the Hudson River, passing in a westerly direction to and through the Minisink country, thence along the base of the Blue Mountain to Mahanoy Valley, and to the Susquehanna River at Sunbury. At the Hudson the trail extended eastward to the New England States. Along this national highway, as in modern times we would speak of it, radiated trails north and south of the great artery for its whole length, notably those through the Delaware Water Gap, Tatemy's Gap, Wind Gap and Lehigh Gap; those to the northward, up the numerous valleys and streams that intersect the main thoroughfare at varying angles. The well-known Indian trail to Wyoming Valley was one of these diverging lines of travel, and furnished the bearings for the road cut for the passage of General Sullivan's army on its march to the rescue of the Wyoming sufferers in 1779.

There were two Indian trails at Great Bend: one leading to the Lackawanna and Wyoming Valleys, and the other extending more easterly, through Cobb's Gap, to Easton and Philadelphia. It was one of the war-paths of the Six Nations, and was not used by any other tribe without their consent after the subjection of the Delawares. Another extended northward from Great Bend to the Indian settlements in New York. Another well-worn trail extended from the Susquehanna eastward through Mt. Pleasant, Wayne County, to the Delaware River.

Surely the poor Indians have been better to us than we to them, for they have shown us "the way we should go," and it is literally true that we follow in their footsteps.

"The lines along which, with roar and rumble, the engine now rushes with its mighty load, making an old-time day's journey in sixty minutes, are almost exactly coincident with the first rude wagon-roads of the pioneers of a century and more ago, and also with the paths or trails along the water-courses and through the easiest mountain passes trodden from time immemorial by the moccasined foot of the red man. The skilled surveyor and engineer has followed with scientific instruments where the Indians first went, guided only by the instincts of woodcraft. The difference between the new and the old is far less in the lines of communication than in the method of travel, and the moderns, with all of their wisdom and knowledge, have done little besides making grand improvements on old routes—building with stone and iron and steel, it is true, but, nevertheless, along the course of the old, narrow, leaf-strewn path that the Indian first found out was the most direct and practicable line of communication between two given points."

Pioneer Roads.—The desire to facilitate intercourse with each other, evinced by the early settlers of a neighborhood, in the immediate construction of foot-paths, bridle-paths and roadways from dwelling to dwelling, as each new settler appeared, probably gave rise to the old Roman maxim that "the first step in civilization is to make roads." In most cases the first roads were constructed upon foot-paths by the new dwellers, and so continued as other families appeared, for the convenience of friendly intercourse and mutual protection, without thought that these foot-paths were destined in time to become the established highways of the country. Hence the adverse criticism on country roads in general is more frequent than just. It is very easy now to discover where hills might have been avoided and distances shortened and to reproach these pioneers for the lack of engineering skill displayed in road-making.

Roads laid out by order of court in these early times were frequently located upon Indian trails, and not unfrequently upon the trails of wild animals. Senator Benton advised Colonel Fremont, in his first expedition, to notice the trail of animals across the country westward, observing that "the buffalo is the best of engineers."

The correctness of this observation is confirmed in the experience of old hunters, who ascertain that deer and other wild animals, when unpursued, follow the best chosen route of travel from their hiding-places in the swamps to the plains and across the mountains; and that class of hunters who avail themselves of this knowledge dispense with the use of the dog and the excitement of the chase for the more successful, though solitary, "still hunt," lying in wait upon the trail until such time as the well-known habits of the animal lead him to quit his hiding-place in quest of food and water, when he falls an easy prey to the deliberate aim of the hunter.

Roads through the several "Gaps" or depressions in the Blue Ridge, between the Delaware and Lehigh Rivers, were laid out on Indian trails. These trails were severally used as found most convenient, from time immemorial, by the different tribes of Indians living between the Delaware and Susquehanna, in their intercourse with other tribes and nations south of the mountain, and subsequently in their attendance upon the numerous conferences held at Easton and Philadelphia; as also in conveying their furs and pelts to a place of barter. But it was in the way of these people to Bethlehem, to seek a city of safety during the troublesome times that followed the advent of the white man, that these mountain paths became most frequented after the settlement of the Moravians, in 1742.

For many years after settlements were made in the Minisink there was little or no intercourse with the inhabitants south of the Blue Ridge, and no wagon-roads in that direction or any other, except "the Old Mine road," extending from the copper-mines at Pahaquarri to Esopus, on the Hudson, a distance of one hundred miles. This was the first road north of the mountain, and is claimed to be the first of that extent in the province of Pennsylvania.

The Old Mine road greatly facilitated immigration to the Minisink, and brought to that section a well-to-do class of men. In the succeeding fifty years there was little immigration from any other direction.

The country south of the Blue Ridge was inaccessible except by Indian paths through the several "gaps" in the mountains.

The Mine road was also one of the main avenues of communication between New England and Wyoming. Over it passed the enterprising people of Connecticut on their way to settle in this valley, which was claimed by their State, to the great disturbance of the Pennsylvania portion of the Minisink, and which was the occasion of frequent communications with the authorities at Philadelphia. Over this road also passed the suffering fugitives after the massacre at Wyoming in 1778, after fifty miles of weary wandering through a desolate wilderness between the Susquehanna and Delaware Rivers.

The old Mine road is the principal highway for modern travel for the country through which it passes.

As to the time the road was built, we know, to a certainty, very little. That it was in existence when Nicholas Depui settled in the Lower Minisink, in 1725, is unquestioned. It is fair to conclude, therefore, that the road was built and the mining commenced before the English obtained possession of New York, in 1664, and if so, it was the oldest road of the same extent in the county. Whether constructed by government or by individual enterprise, it was a work of great magnitude at that early day. The country through which it passed being, of course, an entire wilderness, the difficulties to be overcome we can well imagine to be such as would be considered formidable at this day, with the benefit of modern skill and modern appliances. To remove the gigantic trees of the primitive forest was impossible in the narrow compass of a wagon-road, and the only method was the slow process of burning, after they had been felled to the ground by the axemen.

They could have had little knowledge either of the geography or topography of the section through which they were passing, and must have encountered difficulties in determining even the general direction, without scarcely attempting to make choice of favorable grade or suitable location, and yet we are told that the road is very judiciously laid out; and this all seems to be explained when we learn that it was laid on the old Indian trail leading from the Hudson to the Delaware Water Gap.

The first road opened by the Connecticut settlers who came to the Wyoming Valley followed an old Indian trail a large part of the way. It was cut through in 1762 by the first colony of settlers at Wyoming. It formed connection with the Minisink road that came down from Carpenter's Point, near Port Jervis, to Milford; thence through the wilderness barrens of Pike County, by way of Blooming Grove, to Major Ainsley; thence across the Wallenpaupack, near the old Marshall Purdy place, westward through Salem township, Wayne County; thence westward through Cobb's Gap to the Lackawanna Valley; thence to Wyoming. The North and South State road was opened from near Pocono Point, (now Tannersville), in Monroe County, extending northwest through the western part of Wayne County to the State line by John, Joseph and William Hilborn in 1788. The Legislature appropriated one thousand pounds to open this road, and also a branch road from it to extend westward to Tioga Point. The road was not cut through to Tioga Point, but about that time Andrew Ellicott, who was commissioner on the part of Pennsylvania to run and fix the boundary line between this State and New York, did cut a road which terminated in 1789 at the mouth of Cascade Creek, and was generally known as Ellicott's road.

In 1789, Samuel Preston, of Stockport, began opening a road from Stockport to Harmony, on the Susquehanna, as a portage road. In 1791 the State appropriated four hundred pounds towards the expense of opening such portage road. A road was opened at private expense, in 1791, from the Delaware to Great Bend. The Newburg turnpike afterwards followed the general course of this road. [1] In 1798 a road was opened from Great Bend to Tunkhannock, and another (1799–1801) from the forks of the Wyalusing to join the latter.

About 1800 Oliver Trowbridge and others petitioned for "a road from the plantation of Ichabod Buck (at Red Rock), extending up the river to the north line of the State," and also one "from the north line, on the east side of the Susquehanna, down the same to Abner Comstock's to a fording, thence across the river, to intersect the first-mentioned road, near the plantation of William Smith." Simeon Wylie and David Brownson were the viewers.

In 1801 still another road, or marked path at least, was gained, "from the north line of the State, near the seventeenth mile-stone, down to the road that leads from Great Bend to Harmony."

In 1802 a road was viewed from the settlement near the mouth of the Snake Creek to Great Bend, four miles. Timothy Pickering, Jr., was one of the viewers of another road in Willingborough about the same time.

In November, 1808, Dr. Rose petitioned for a road from Silver Lake to Great Bend, which was granted in 1809. In 1799 a road was granted from Robert Corbett's house (New Milford) to Solomon Millard's, in Nicholson (now Lenox). Many of the early settlers followed the streams or found their way by marked trees. The first court after the county was erected was almost entirely spent in considering petitions for roads and in appointing road-viewers, and that has continued until the county now has thousands of miles of public roads over the hills and through the valleys in all directions.

[2] THE STATE ROAD—"In 1808 an act was passed authorizing commissioners to explore and mark out a road from where the Cochecton turnpike passes through Moosic Mountain to the west line of the State. This road is probably the one that left the turnpike at Robert Chandler's, in Gibson, and running westward reached the Wyalusing at Grangerville."

[1] Blackman, page 510.

[2] Blackman, page 511.

NEWBURG TURNPIKE ROAD—THE NEWBURG AND COCHECTON TURNPIKE. — March 20, 1801, the Legislature of New York granted a charter to Robert Browne, John De Witt, William Seymour, George Clinton, Jr., and others, under name of "The President, Directors and Company of the Newburg and Cochecton Turnpike Road, with a capital limited to $80,000, and authority to construct a turnpike road in the nearest and most convenient and direct route from the village of Newburg, on Hudson's River, to Cochecton, on the Delaware River." The stock was soon taken, and the road constructed, running a line of sixty miles, with substantial bridges and all the appointments of a good road. Though De Witt lost his life and Miller became financially crippled, the road opened up the country and, together with its connections with other roads, became a great thoroughfare of travel. This road is here mentioned because in connection with the Cochecton and Great Bend Turnpike Road.

THE COCHECTON AND GREAT BEND TURNPIKE COMPANY was incorporated by an act of Assembly dated March 29, 1804, the commissioners being Henry Drinker, Edward Tilghman, Thomas Harrison and William Poyntell, of the city of Philadelphia; John Conklin, Jason Torrey and Samuel Stanton, of Wayne County; and Asahel Gregory, John Tyler and Minna Dubois, of Luzerne County. The shares were ten dollars each, and the act provided that four hundred shares should be subscribed in Philadelphia, three hundred in Cochecton and three hundred at Great Bend. The act stipulated that the company "shall cause a road to be laid out from Damascus Mills to the top of Moosic Mountain aforesaid, to or near the twenty mile-stone in the north line of the State, unless such places where nature ground render greater width expedient," the width was to be twenty feet. The turnpike was finished in 1811. The travel upon it was very great, as, with its connections, it was the principal route from Newburg to Western New York. Daily mail-coaches, drawn by four horses, were run upon the road for years. Numerous taverns were built along the line. The construction of the Erie Canal lessened the travel upon this turnpike, but it was a much-used thoroughfare until the Erie Railroad was built. Then through travel was almost wholly suspended.

The length of the road from Cochecton to Great Bend is fifty miles. Beginning at Cochecton on the Delaware, it crosses the river and passes through the townships of Damascus, Lebanon and Mt. Pleasant, in Wayne County; and Gibson, New Milford and Great Bend, in Susquehanna County.

"It was built by individual enterprise; most of the stock was taken on the line of the road. It was constructed twenty feet wide, at a cost of $1,620 per mile. The materials are earth, stone, lime and timber. Its form was convex, being about four inches higher in the centre than at the sides. During the first three years it paid a debt of $11,000, besides keeping itself in repair. Some portions of this part of the State owe their early existence and growth to this road. It gave a decided impulse to the increase of population and improvements in the surrounding country."

These two turnpikes constituted what was known as the Newburg road. In the fall of 1872 a meeting of the directors of the Newburg and Cochecton road was held at Newburg, and the road was given up as a turnpike. Like other abandoned turnpikes, it has now become a public highway, and is kept in repair by the townships and boroughs through which it passes.

Milford and Owego Turnpike.—January 26, 1807, an act was passed authorizing commissioners to open books and receive subscriptions to the Milford and Owego turnpike road. The commissioners were authorized to adjourn from time to time until two thousand shares were subscribed, and subscribers were to pay five dollars for each share subscribed. When a certain number of shares were subscribed they were incorporated under the name of the President, Manager and Company of the Milford and Owego Turnpike Road. The Improvement Bill, passed 26th March, 1821, authorized and required the Governor to subscribe, on behalf of the Commonwealth, $16,000 to the capital stock of the Milford and Owego Turnpike Road Company, and as soon as any five miles were completed and approved of, it became the duty of the Governor to draw his warrant on the State Treasurer for a sum in proportion to the whole distance, and a like sum for every five miles until the whole sum be drawn, provided, that the money hereby appropriated shall first be applied to making the unfinished part of said road." Shortly after the act of 1809, subscriptions to the stock were received by the company. Isaac Post appears to have been the first treasurer. The shares were twenty-five dollars each, and were generally paid for in work on the road. The work was commenced as early as 1812. Isaac Post, treasurer, made a contract with Henry Newton, January 7, 1812, to construct one mile of the road for $1200, to be completed November 19, 1813. He was to receive $250 in cash and the rest in stock, or lands lying along the road belonging to the company. The road was to be twenty feet wide, clear of the ditches, bedded with wood, earth, stone, gravel or other proper material, so as to secure a solid foundation. The bridges were to be strong, having four-inch plank and side railings. The contract price varied from $800 to $1200 per mile.

Among those who took stock were,—

	No. of shares.	Work on road.
Isaac Post.....	10—$250.00	$600.00
G. Clymer.....	48—1200.00	.....
Joshua Miles.....	10— 250.00	493.50
David Aldrich.....	land— 348.76	245.00
Bucklin & Newton..	4— 100.00	400.00
Henry Newton	7— 175.00	440.00
Norton & Millard...	4— 100.00	210.00
Jonathan West.....	22— 550.00	297.00
Zenas Bryant.....	4— 100.00	430.00
Benjamin Walker...	...— 278.00	720.00
Ebenezer Coburn....	62—1550.00	1606.68
Chas. Nichols.....	2— 50.00	142.04
Obadiah Merrill.....	...—1825.00	4600.00
Michael Dow.....	60—1500.00	2250.00
Chas. S. Campbell...	...—1031.00	2256.00
R. W. Green.....	...— 400.00	1200.00

D. Robble, W. Gragg, Leman Turrell, A. Thatcher, I. & S. West, S. Bentley, E. Griffis, J. Street, S. Taggart, S. Wilson, R. Whitney, D. & J. McMillan, J. Garnsey, E. Summers, J. Tewksbury, A. Sweet, Bailey & Co., Orlen Capron and others did work on the road and took one-third cash and the balance in land and stock.

This work was done between 1812 and 1818. The $16,000 State aid gave a new impetus to the work and it was completed in 1821. Robert H. Rose appears to have been president, Isaac Post, treasurer, and B. T. Case, secretary and surveyor. Putnam Catlin was treasurer for about seven years prior to 1824, when Frederick Bailey was elected and continued in that office until the gates were thrown down.

February 15, 1816, New Jersey granted $20,000 to the Milford and Owego Turnpike Company, on condition that they would pledge themselves to complete the road. October 12, 1818, the president and managers pledged "the road and all the funds to such person as shall give security as aforesaid."

July 21, 1821, Robert H. Rose, president, and Putnam Catlin, treasurer, certified that they had settled with all persons who had contracted to do work prior to the preceding March.

January 4, 1819, Putnam Catlin, treasurer, reported receipts for the last two years, $12,596.-86; orders paid, $5798.69; balance in treasury, $6798.17; amount of stock issued, 2013 shares —$50,326.

The early gate-keepers were Samuel Dotterer, Edward Otto, Michael West, Elias West, Moses Coborn, Chas. B. Seaman and Noah Rogers.

November 8, 1822, R. H. Rose wrote to the Postmaster-General, urging him to carry the mail from New York to Owego by way of the Milford and Owego turnpike, and not by the Newburg turnpike. He gives the following distances:—By the Newburg and Owego road, from New York to Newburg, 69 miles; thence to Great Bend, 108 miles; thence to Owego, 37 miles; total, 214. By the Milford and Owego road, from New York to Milford, 60 miles; thence to Montrose, 70 miles; thence to Owego, 30 miles; total, 160 miles, or 54 miles nearer by the Milford and Owego than by the Newburg road.

The Milford and Owego road runs diagonally across Susquehanna County in a northwesterly direction from the point where it enters the county in Clifford, through Dundaff, Rynearson's Corners in Lenox, Brooklyn, Montrose, Friendsville to Owego, passing out of the county through Apolacon township, near the forty-third mile-stone.

The road was not run to avoid hills. It seemed to have been the design of B. T. Case to pass it over every high hill anywhere along the route, for it is located on a continuous succession of hills and valleys; but it has the merit of keeping its general course more nearly direct than most of the roads in Northern Pennsylvania.

In 1831 the following statement of affairs was made:

Cost of making the road	$108,723.00
Stock paid by the State	31,000.00
Stock paid by individual subscribers	64,700.00
Debts due by the company	7,150.00

No dividend declared the preceding year.

Tolls received for year 1830	$3,823.56
Expenditures	3,654.06
Balance in hands of treasurer	$169.50

The following statement was made in 1839:

Total receipts from gates	$4,976.78
Balance from 1838	1,849.44
Total	$6,826.22
Expenditures:
Paid on Brunson claim	$209.31
Road and bridge repairs	2,165.25
Dividends	683.50
Toll-gatherers, managers, secretary, treasurer and agents	1,012.46
Viewing committee	77.69
Incidental	29.11
Total	$4,177.32
In Susquehanna Bank and treasurer's hands	648.90
Unpaid dividends	1,218.00
Balance	1,430.90
Receipts for 1839	4,976.78
Receipts for 1838	4,690.97
Increase	$285.81

The following persons were managers from 1808:

1808, John Brodhead, John Brink, James Barton, Matthew Ridgeway, Dan Dimmick, Bartlett Hinds, Benjamin Carpenter, Asa Stanton, George Bowhannan, Francis A. Smith, John H. Schenk, Caleb Forbes, James Pumpelly; 1809, George Biddis, James Rose, Robert H. Rose, Hosea Tiffany, Amos Harding; 1810, Lewis Collins, George Rix, Joshua Miles, Jonathan West, Isaac Rynearson, Simeon Ainsley; 1811, Abram J. Stryker, Ebenezer Coburn, Charles Gere, Putnam Catlin; 1812, John Fobes; 1815, Isaac P. Foster; 1816, Benjamin Case, Charles Fraser; 1817, Frederick Bailey, Isaac Post, Stephen Wilson. From 1826 to 1833, R. H. Rose, I. Rynearson, Leman Turrell, F. Bailey, I. P. Foster, C. Fraser, I. Post, D. Post, C. Gere, B. T. Case, George Rix, P. Catlin and Jeremiah

Gere were managers, and Isaac Post was secretary, at the pay of six dollars per year. The managers received two dollars per day.

March 20, 1830, an act supplementary to the act incorporating a company for making an artificial road by the nearest and best route through the counties of Wayne and Luzerne (now Susquehanna), beginning at Milford, thence through said town and counties to the forty-third mile-stone on the north line of the State, was passed, authorizing the Milford and Owego Turnpike Co. to build a road, commencing at or near Dundaff, thence to Carbondale, thence to intersect the Milford and Owego turnpike at the most convenient point. This act was necessary to connect the road with the new and growing town of Carbondale. Anthracite coal, the development of which was destined to revolutionize modes of travel in Northeastern Pennsylvania, was constantly growing in favor with the people as a fuel, and Carbondale was one of the first cities developed by the new industry. Consequently it became necessary to connect this town with this great eastern and western thoroughfare. The Milford and Owego and Newburg and Owego were the two highways that connected New York City with the Genesee and Lake country, as it was then called, and still farther west, but the building of the Erie, and Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroads destroyed these roads. In 1851 they began to throw open their gates to the public, and in 1861 the charter of the Milford and Owego road was repealed.

Bridgewater and Wilkes-Barre Turnpike.—An act was passed March 30, 1811, to incorporate a company for making a road from the northern boundary line of this State, at the most suitable place, near the twenty-eighth mile-stone, to the place where the seat of justice is established for the county of Susquehanna, thence by best and nearest route to borough of Wilkes-Barre. The road was begun in 1813. May 9, 1819. Ebenezer Bowman was president and Benjamin Perry was secretary. The board of managers present were Messrs. Dorrance, I. Post, B. Jenkins, E. Tuttle, Scott, Shoemaker, G. Miller, I. Slocum, E. Harding, Raynsford. They resolved to divide the whole road into two sections,—the northern section to commence at the State line, and to extend to the east bank of the Susquehanna River, at or near the house of Isaac Slocum, in Tunkhannock Township, Luzerne County; the southern section to commence on the west bank of the Susquehanna River, nearly opposite the house of Isaac Slocum, extending through the townships of Tunkhannock, Exeter and Kingston to the borough of Wilkes-Barre. The commonwealth subscribed $15,000, of which $10,000 was appropriated to the northern section and $5000 to the southern section. The Bridgewater and Wilkes-Barre turnpike entered the southern part of Susquehanna County, in Springville township, passing through Springville village, Dimock and Bridgewater, crossing the Milford and Owego turnpike at Montrose, thence through Silver Lake township to Chenango Point or Binghamton. Lord Butler was president in 1821. In 1819 Jabez Hyde, Jr., Samuel Warner and Bela Jones reported that fifteen miles of the road were completed. In 1824 William Jessup, Silvanus S. Mulford and Walker G. Woodhouse, commissioners on the part of the State, reported that the last section was completed. Benjamin Lathrop was appointed manager on the part of the State for a number of years. About 1841 the gates were thrown open.

"In 1813 the Clifford and Wilkes-Barre turnpike was also begun, and cost $1200 per mile.

"In 1818 books were opened for subscription to stock in the New Milford and Montrose turnpike; but it appears there never has been a turnpike between these two points, though more than twenty years later the subject was again engaging the attention of some of our most enterprising men."

Philadelphia and Great Bend Turnpike.—"[1] In 1818 the Legislature passed 'an act to authorize the Governor to incorporate the President, Managers and Company of the Philadelphia and Great Bend Turnpike Road,' which should 'commence at or near the thirtieth mile-stone on the Easton and Wilkes-Barre turnpike road, pass over the nearest and best ground through Leggett's Gap, in Lackawannock Mountain, and terminate on the Cochecton and Great Bend turnpike road, at or near the tavern of Ithamer Mott, in the county of Susquehanna.' Work upon the road was begun in 1821. It followed the Nine Partners' Creek through Harford to Lenox post-office and Lenoxville, thence to the southern boundary of our county and below, as ordered by the act of Legislature. Messrs. Thomas Meredith, William Ward and Henry W. Drinker appear to have had charge of the contracts on this road—much of the business, at least, was in their hands. This great thoroughfare has ceased to be a toll-road, and the travel over it is limited almost entirely to local business; but, in its day, it served to open a most desirable communication with Philadelphia, and contributed greatly to the advantage of the county."

[1] Blackman's, page 512.

The Belmont and Oghquagah Turnpike Company was chartered February 26, 1817. The commissioners were Thomas Meredith, Ira Mumford, Jr., Sanford Clark, Joseph Tanner, Benj. King, Asa Stanton, Thomas Spangenberg and Walter Lyon. The road was built chiefly through the exertions of T. Meredith, Esq.

It was begun in 1821 and finished in 1825. The following turnpikes were incorporated as follows:

Abington and Waterford, January, 1823; Dundaff and Tunkhannock, April, 1828; Dundaff and Honesdale, March, 1831; Lenox and Harmony, April, 1835; Lenox and Carbondale (past Clifford Corners), March, 1842, extended to South Gibson by act of March, 1847; Brooklyn and Lenox, March, 1848; Tunkhannock Creek Company, March, 1849.

MAIL AND STAGE ROUTES.—"[1] In 1798 a mail was run once in two weeks between Wilkes-Barre and Great Bend, and the following year a weekly route was opened between Wilkes-Barre and Owego. These routes were sustained chiefly, if not altogether, by private subscription, the subscribers paying as high as fifty cents per quarter to the mail carrier.

"In 1810 Conard Peter contracted with the government to carry the mail once a week in stages, from Sunbury to Painted Post, by way of Wilkes-Barre and Athens. He sold his interest in the route from Sunbury to Wilkes-Barre to Miller Horton." It is probable that the letters to the first settlers in Susquehanna were addressed to Wilkes-Barre, and remained there until called for. The first mail carried through the wilds of Susquehanna County was carried on horseback. The Searle brothers worked with the Horton brothers—Miller, Jesse and Lewis Horton—at an early period. Deodat Smith was one of the pioneer mail-carriers. Isaac Post and, later, John Buckingham and other hotel-keepers, assisted in forwarding the mails, but John Searle had one of the longest rounds of those pioneer post-riders. When he was a mere boy, as early as 1816, and perhaps as early as 1812, he carried the mail once a fortnight from Wilkes-Barre to Pittston, Tioga Point or Athens; thence across to Silver Lake, Great Bend (then Willingborough), Harmony, Deposit, Stockport, on the Delaware, in the northeastern part of the State, southward to Mount Pleasant, Bethany, on the road down the Lackawaxen through the swamp where Honesdale now is to Lackawaxen; thence to Milford. Here he turned his course westward, and followed the road taken by the Wyoming settlers from the Delaware River westward through the barrens of Pike County to Shohola, Salem, Cobb's Gap and Providence, thence back again to Wilkes-Barre. This lone youth rode through these wilderness paths or roads a distance of about three hundred and twenty miles in two weeks. He blew a horn as he passed a settler's house. "[2] When papers came, the men would

AN OLD-TIME STAGE COACH.

[1] "Annals of Luzerne," page 452.

[2] P. G. Goodrich, in "History of Wayne County."

Engd by A.H. Ritchie

Danl. Sewall

gather and discuss the news. It took four months for the news about the battle of Waterloo to reach the Beech Woods." The early post-offices of this county were Montrose or Bridgewater, established in 1808, Isaac Post, postmaster; Willingborough, 1808, Dr. Eleazer Parker, postmaster; Silver Lake, 1810, R. H. Rose, postmaster; New Milford, 1811; Lawsville, 1814; Springville, 1815. John Buckingham, of Montrose, W. R. McLaury, of Cherry Ridge, and Lewis Cornelius, of Milford, and other hotel-keepers run a two-horse stage for a few years prior to 1824. That year the stage business of Northeastern Pennsylvania was revolutionized. Stogden & Stokes were large contractors, and the Horton brothers appear to have been sub-contractors. They contracted to carry the mails in four-horse coaches from Baltimore to Owego, by way of Harrisburg, Sunbury, Wilkes-Barre and Montrose; and from Philadelphia to Wilkes-Barre, via Easton; also from New York City to Montrose, by way of Newark and Morristown, in New Jersey, and Milford, in Pennsylvania. In 1826 Daniel Searle came as agent of these contractors, and the following year moved his family here. In 1830, through the assistance of his friend, Judge Mallery, he obtained the contract to carry the mails from Jersey City to Owego. Samuel Dimmick, of Milford, had some connection with it part of the time. It was one hundred and forty-nine miles from Jersey City to Montrose, and thirty miles from Montrose to Owego. The route was divided into sections of about fifteen miles each, and one four-horse coach would drive back and forth in one section each day. It required at least one hundred horses and twenty coaches, besides extra wagons, to run the stages. These coaches held ten passengers each comfortably, but were often crowded with fifteen persons. This route was one of three great thoroughfares to the West, the Newburg route and a route by a road farther north in New York being the other two routes of travel. Mr. Searle received twenty-two thousand dollars per year for carrying the mails, but it was not very profitable, as the Western mail would be so large that at times there would be nearly a two-horse load of mail matter alone. Mr. Searle had more or less to do with carrying the mails for a great many years. Rasselas Searle was agent at Milford a number of years.

About 1840 Mr. Randall got the route, and Leonard run it till 1846. He afterwards run a stage from Montrose to Great Bend until it was discontinued, when the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad came through New Milford, and a line of stages was established from Montrose to that point. When the Erie road got as far as Middletown the route ceased to pass through New Jersey, but passed up to Port Jervis, thence to Middletown. After the turnpike to Carbondale was completed, the stage-route lay through that city, thence to Honesdale and Narrowsburg, all of which has been discontinued. Leonard Searle run the stage-line from Montrose to New Milford until he died; then Azur Lathrop had charge of it for a number of years. He was succeeded by W. W. Williams, Williams & Son, W. E. Williams (now Williams & Pope). Montrose is not a railroad centre, but is a stage route centre for the surrounding country. There are two stages to Alford and return, two to New Milford and return, two to the Narrow Gauge Railroad depot and return; one daily to Friendsville, via Forest Lake and St. Joseph, returning through Birchardsville; one to Rushville, via Fairdale and Rush; one to Corbettsville, New York, via Franklin Forks, Lawsville and Brookdale; one to Auburn Centre, via Elk Lake and Auburn Four Corners; and another overland to Binghamton, via Richmond Hill, Sheldon, Silver Lake and Brackney.

We conclude our account of the early roads and mail-routes with a biographical sketch of Daniel Searle, the most prominent mail contractor that ever lived in Susquehanna County. He also kept the Milford and Owego turnpike in repair a number of years. From 1832 to 1836 he received two thousand dollars for the first year, and twenty dollars per mile thereafter, to keep the road in as good repair as the Cochecton road was kept.

Daniel Searle.—The Searle family came to the Wyoming Valley from New England.

Constant Searle (1728–78) was a native of Little Compton, Rhode Island, who fell at the battle of Wyoming, July 3, 1778. His wife, Hannah, (1731–1813), a daughter of Simon and Hannah Miner, was a native of Stonington, Conn., and died at Pittston, Pa. Their children were Constant (1759–1806), born in Little Compton; William (1751–1817), born in Stonington, and died at Pittston, Pa.; Roger (1762–1813), a native of Preston, Conn., died at Pittston; Elizabeth (1757–1820), born in Stonington, died in Pittston (her husband was Capt. D. Hewitt, who fell at Wyoming, refusing to surrender); Sarah, born in Stonington in 1768, married Jedediah Collins, and died in Ohio, where she removed from Pittston, in 1817; and Hannah, born in 1754. At the time of the memorable Wyoming massacre Constant Searle was quite an old man. Followed by his grandson, Miner Searle, he sent the boy back with his silver sleeve buckles, brooch, etc. He was deeply impressed that he would never return, which proved true. He was bald and wore a wig, which was among the trophies the Indians sported with after their victory. His son Roger, then a lad of sixteen, was also in the battle. He fled to the river, and there, with the afterward celebrated Anning Owen and his brother-in-law, Benj. Carpenter, they concealed themselves under some grape-vines until after dark. It was here, while thus concealed, that both Owen and young Searle became deeply convicted, and both afterwards became active, useful members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The sleeve buckles and brooch are still preserved by the decendants of Constant Searle. The children returned to Wyoming about 1780. Their farm, which they had before the war at Kingston, being occupied, all except Constant settled at Pittston, and he located at Providence, where he died. The Widow Hewitt subsequently married Ishmael Bennett, who owned a large tract of land below and adjoining the Lackawanna River, at its junction with the Susquehanna, where the Bloomsburg and Lehigh Valley Railroads intersect and have their depots. She reared a family of nine children, was one of the early Methodists of Pittston, a member of the first class formed in the place, of which her brother Roger was leader, and at their house, the early Methodist preachers found a resting-place. Here Rev. Benj. Bidlack used to hold forth, and on one of these occasions, when he was through, Mr. Bennett stepped up to him and said, "Here, Bidlack, is a dollar I give you, not so much that you are a preacher, but because you are a good old soger." Dollars in those days were very acceptable to the weary itinerants, as well as a good meal of Aunt Lizzie's well-cooked chickens.

Roger Searle married Catherine (1767–1849), a daughter of John Scott, of Pittston. He owned and occupied the farm in Pittston where the Ravine Coal-Works now are, and there reared his family. Dying in middle life, the charge of the family devolved on his widow, whose sagacity, industry and prudence were equal to the task. She survived her husband thirty-six years, and continued to reside on the old homestead, where she hospitably entertained her numerous friends. She was a member of the Baptist Church from girlhood, to which she adhered until her death. Their children were John, married Mary, daughter of Henry Stark, of the Plains, where he resided. He was carrying the mail from Wilkes-Barre to Milford as early as 1815. Daniel (1797–1879), married, in 1825, Johannah (1804–77), also a daughter of Henry Stark; they lived together fifty-two years, and celebrated their golden wedding with their children and friends. Leonard married Lydia, a daughter of Elder Davis Dimock, of Montrose. Rasselas married Anna Cross, of Milford, who died, when he married Nettie Tompkins, of Binghamton, and is living at Montrose in 1887. Milton never married and remained on the homestead with his mother. Clarissa became the wife of Joseph Dayton, of Binghamton; Betsey, wife of Solomon Brown, of Pittston; and Mehetable, wife of Thomas Fell, of Pittston. Of them, three sons—Daniel, Leonard and Rasselas—made Montrose their home, and were early and successfully employed as mail contractors and in the early staging business for a quarter of a century.

Daniel Searle, son of Roger and Catherine (Scott) Searle, was born on the old homestead at Pittston, and as early as the age of twenty-two he went to Tennessee, where, with Miller Horton, he engaged in driving stage on the National Pike. He remained there for some six years, and used to relate in after-years many incidents connected with his experiences, among which those relating to some of his distinguished passengers, like Henry Clay, Daniel Webster and the political magnates of their time, who were accustomed to journey by this route through the South on their errands of politics or business. Returning to Pittston, he purchased a farm (Wilson), on which he settled, at the head of the canal near the old forge, and about 1826, with his brother John, who lived on the Plains, began running a line of stages between Wilkes-Barre and Dundaff. In 1827, leaving the stage business with his brother John, he removed to Montrose and assumed the duties of general agent for Stogden & Stokes, of Baltimore, and Reasides & Co., who ran a line of stages from Jersey City to Owego. Upon the expiration of their contract, about 1830, Mr. Searle took the contract (being backed by Judge Mallory, of Philadelphia), and continued the management of this stage route until 1850, when he disposed of his interest to McCormick & Co., of Ithaca, N.Y. For many years, in connection with Jacob Peters, Philadelphia, Miller Horton, Wilkes-Barre, and Augustus Morgan, of Binghamton, he also ran a line of stages from Philadelphia to Utica, crossing the Jersey City and Owego line at Montrose. He had the contract for keeping in repair forty miles of the former, from Tunkhannock to Binghamton, and one hundred miles of the latter, from Milford to Owego. Associated with Hiram Mix, of Towanda, Ellsworth, of New York, and Thompson Peckins, of Bridgwater, he completed large contracts on the Croton Water-Works during their construction, and in building the aqueduct across Harlem River. He took contracts for many sections of the North Branch Canal, and built the outlet lock at Nanticoke, below Wilkes-Barre. In partnership with Asa Packer and Thompson Peckins, he built a large part of the Lehigh navigation from Easton, on the Delaware, to White Haven, Luzerne County. During the same time he also carried on general mercantile business at Montrose for many years, and latterly at Carbondale in partnership with Martin Curtis and his brothers Leonard and Rasselas, under the firm-name of Curtis & Searle; and a large lumber business in Lathrop township, this county, where he owned one thousand acres of timber-land, until he was succeeded in this latter interest by his son, Roger S. Searle, in 1847. He retained his interest in his father's estate at Pittston and added thereto other real estate, which has proved to be valuable coal lands. A part of the property is leased in perpetuity to Grove Bros., of Danville, Pa., and a part to the Lehigh Valley Coal Company. He was one of the directors of the old Susquehanna County Bank upon its organization, in 1838, was early interested in agriculture and, with David Post, Isaac Post, Wm. Jessup, Henry Drinker, Judge Baker, George Walker and others, organized the Susquehanna Agricultural Society. Politically, he was an Old Line Whig, an admirer of Henry Clay, and a warm friend of Philander Stephens—Congressman at one time from this county—and upon the birth of the Republican party, in 1855–56, he was among the strong men to support its principles and lead its cohorts to victory. He was twice the nominee of the Whig party for legislative honors, but failed of election, once only by sixty and again by two hundred, although the opposition had a majority of fifteen hundred. Mr. Searle was a generous man, and a liberal contributor to all interests of a worthy nature demanding support. Formerly an Episcopalian, in his later years he became a Universalist. For fifteen years before his death he resided at West Pittston, where he owned a residence on River Street, and there he spent the last years of his life, dying at the age of eighty-two years. His life-work left its impress upon all with whom he labored and associated, and the fond recollections of his many virtues will embalm his memory in the hearts of those who knew him best. In social life his genial nature animated any circle in which he moved, and the infirmities of age never took the merry twinkle from his eye or changed his cheerful disposition. His children are Roger S , born in 1826, resides at the foot of Jones' Lake, in Bridgewater township; Henry S., born in 1829, a merchant at Battle Creek, Mich.; Ellen (1831–67) was a teacher and prominent in sanitary and charitable work at Montrose for many years, and died at Pittston; Johannah, born in 1834, widow of Charles D. Lathrop; Daniel W., born in 1836, a lawyer at Montrose; Dotha (1838–44); Mary Jane, born in 1841, wife of Judge J. B. McCollum, of Montrose; Hetty D. (1845–47); and Clara Maria, born in 1852, a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Leonard Searle was born in Pittston, Luzerne County, Pa., November 7, 1807. His father, Roger Searle, died while he was young, and his mother, while visiting her sister at Chenango Point (now Binghamton) often carried him in her arms as she went on horseback by a forest road that run through Montrose. On one of these occasions she stopped at the old Post Hotel, which he owned years afterwards. The Searles were early engaged in carrying the mails on horseback, as post-boys and afterwards as proprietors. Leonard was post-boy on the route that ran from Montrose to Silver Lake, thence by forest paths through old Lawsville to Great Bend. At fifteen years of age he became the regular post-boy, making weekly trips, and sometimes in the forests between Dr. Rose's and Great Bend he found himself in close proximity to howling wolves. This work had a tendency to develop his character and fit him for staging on a larger plan in after-years.

As a matter of convenience, in connection with the mail and stage business in which the Searle family were engaged, Daniel and Leonard came to Montrose in 1827. The former became proprietor of the old Post Hotel and the latter clerked for him. This arrangement continued some two years, when the hotel passed into other hands. Leonard engaged in the mercantile business first as partner with Martin Curtis and afterwards as sole owner. He continued the mercantile business about ten years, when he purchased the Post corner and erected a first-class hotel thereon, which he occupied for twenty-four years, keeping the best public-house in the place. In 1866 he leased the hotel and purchased the B. S. Bentley place, which became his home during the rest of his life.

About 1840 Leonard became interested in the staging business again and continued to run the stages for a great many years, meeting the Erie Railway at different points as it progressed westward. The route finally extended to Great Bend and at last from Montrose to New Milford. He died in December, 1880, aged seventy-three. He was a man of generous impulses and public-spirited. He made a home for his father-in-law, Elder Davis Dimock, in his last days, and lives in the kind remembrance of his children. He was married, October 23, 1832, to Lydia C. Dimock. Their children were David D., a broker in New York; Katharine E, wife of Gen. Wm. H. McCartney, a distinguished criminal lawyer at Wilkes-Barre; Josephine, wife of Benj. Stewart Bentley, Esq., of Williamsport; Hetty, wife of Wm. M. Miller, grocer in Wilkes-Barre.

Erie Railway.—In the summer of 1832 a reconnoisance or preliminary examination of the country through which it was proposed to build the road was conducted under the authority of the government of the United States, by Colonel De Witt Clinton, Jr., and it resulted in presenting strong inducements for obtaining a complete and accurate instrumental survey. In 1833 one million dollars was subscribed to the capital stock, and the company organized in August of that year by the election of officers and directors. A year passed, during which the company did not receive enough from its stockholders and others to make a survey, and in 1834 the aid of the State was invoked, and the Legislature passed a bill appropriating fifteen thousand dollars for that purpose. Governor Marcy appointed Benjamin Wright, Esq., to conduct the survey. During the year he and his assistants made a survey of the whole line, four hundred and eighty-three miles, and as the work was done under the authority of the State government, the reports, estimates and maps of Judge Wright were deposited by him with the secretary of the commonwealth. Much had been said in the Legislature and many of the public prints to discourage the undertaking; but the results of the State survey were so favorable as to dispel all reasonable doubts as to the feasibility of the improvement, and measures were taken to advance the project.

Subscriptions were stimulated to so great an extent that the capital stock of the company was increased to the handsome amount of over two million three hundred and sixty-two thousand dollars.

After several ineffective efforts had been made, the New York and Lake Erie Railroad Company was incorporated by the Legislature on the 24th of April, 1832, with power "to construct a railroad from the city of New York, or some point near, to Lake Erie, to transport persons and property thereon, and to regulate their own charges for transportation." Up to the time of the incorporation, the question as to whether animal or locomotive power should be used on the contemplated railroad was an open one, vigorously argued pro and con. A road for locomotives, it was commonly conceded, must cost from twelve to fourteen thousand dollars per mile, while one for horses could be built for five or six thousand dollars per mile, and as it was a portion of the latter plan to allow individuals to use their private conveyances upon the road, it was argued that the company would be at no expense for engines, carriages, etc., should that project be adopted. Let the reader imagine for himself what the Erie Railroad would be as a toll tramway! By the time that the company was incorporated, however, something approximating to the modern locomotive railroad had been decided upon.

In 1836 the entire route was re-surveyed, a portion of the road located and work upon it commenced, but the financial stringency which began to be felt in that year, and intensified in the panic of 1837, compelled a suspension of operations until 1838. In that year the Legislature granted to the company, in aid of its construction of the road, a loan of the credit of the State for three million dollars. At the session of the Legislature in 1840 the loan bill was further amplified, and this, together with the collections on the stock subscriptions, enabled the company to vigorously prosecute the work. The first portion, a section of forty-six miles, from Piermont to Goshen, was put in operation on the 23d of September, 1841.

But the following year complicated embarrassments, arising from the nature and amount of its indebtedness, made it necessary that the business of the company should be placed in the hands of assignees, and it was not until May 14, 1845, when the Legislature passed an act releasing the State claim, that the outlook again became propitious. Then the directors entered with a new feeling of confidence upon the work of resuscitating the project, and presented a plan to the public which placed the work in a position to be successfully completed. In response to their appeal for assistance, the merchants and business men of New York soon subscribed the sum of three million dollars to the capital stock. Work was recommenced and successive portions of the road were put in operation from time to time. The opening of the main line as far as Binghamton, N. Y., occurred December 27, 1848, and in the spring of 1851 (May 14th), "amid the firing of cannon that reverberated through all of the southern tier of counties, and the shouts of hundreds of thousands of the inhabitants, who lined the road at all stations," the entire route was formally opened to travel and traffic. Two trains of cars passed over the line on that memorable occasion, "bearing the President of the United States, Daniel Webster and a large and noble company of the most distinguished citizens of America as guests of the gratified and justly proud directors of the road, from the Hudson to Lake Erie."[1]

The company was required to run its original line within the limits of the State, and hence its first outlet on the Hudson at Piermont, the connection between Piermont and New York being by steamers and freight barges. This part of the line is now operated as a branch, while by lease of the Union Railroad, connecting the main line with the Paterson and Ramapo and the Paterson and Hudson Railroads (September 10, 1852), Jersey City was made the main terminus. In addition to the assignment of 1853, the property passed into the hands of a receiver in 1859, and again in 1875. By the last it was sold under foreclosure, and its name changed from New York and Erie to New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad.

[1] Lossing.

The Erie Railway follows the Susquehanna River through the northern part of Susquehanna County a distance of about fifteen miles and has two stations—Susquehanna and Great Bend—within the county. It was not the original intention of the Erie Company to enter the State of Pennsylvania, but it was found that a better route could be obtained by entering the State at Port Jervis and passing up the west side of the Delaware by Lackawaxen, and again by entering the State by way of Lanesboro' and Great Bend. There was a route by way of Nineveh which would have been nine miles farther. To determine the matter, three commissioners were appointed by the Governor of New York, who decided that the road should enter the State of Pennsylvania as it now runs, for which privilege the Erie Railway Company annually pay into the treasury of the State of Pennsylvania the sum of ten thousand dollars. The Starrucca viaduct, eighty feet high and twelve hundred feet long, is within Susquehanna County, built of stone, and is one of the most costly works on the road. James B. Kirkwood was the engineer who had charge of its construction. T. D. Estabrook was superintendent for Braton & Gonder, who built five miles of the road, including one and one-half miles of rock cut. The Cascade bridge, one hundred and twenty-five feet high and two hundred feet long, which has since been filled in, is also within the county. It was originally a broad-gauge road, six feet wide, but it has since adopted the regulation gauge—four feet eight and one-half inches in width.

The embankment made by filling in the gorge at the Cascade, on the Erie, after doing service for eighteen years, was washed away by a severe storm.

"It took three years to fill in this gorge when the trestle was first built. The work was not then made permanent. It lasted, however, until washed away in August. Engineer R. W. Ware, road-master of the Delaware Division, made a calculation, after the disaster, that the gorge could be so filled in as to make the embankment perfectly secure and permanent. Operations were begun under his directions.

"A steam-shovel, two trains and about a dozen men were the force employed. Conductor F. Long had charge of the trains, but the entire work was under the supervision of Superintendent Thomas, of the Delaware Division, with Engineer Ware in immediate charge. The work progressed rapidly, the great steam-shovel rendering invaluable aid. During the month of September 2094 cars of earth were hauled from the bank to the Cascade, and in October, 4188 cars. In each car were nearly seven yards of earth, making a total of nearly 43,978 yards of earth dumped into the gorge. This amount filled the great cavity, and was a little less than that which Mr. Ware had figured it would take.

"This great work has permanently changed the course of the stream that flowed through this ravine, and has made the embankment a fixture. No storm can again wash away the track at that spot. Great walls have been built on the one side so that the stream is forced against solid rocks on the opposite side."

The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad was the earliest, and is yet the principal, thoroughfare of steam travel in Susquehanna County. It had a very early inception, and Henry Drinker, a strong and prominent character in the herculean pioneer projects of Northeastern Pennsylvania, was the originator of this great line of traffic which built up the city of Scranton, and in the territory which is the especial province of this volume gave rise to many minor improvements, brought into existence thriving New Milford and other towns, and gave an outlet to New York.

The original Drinker family were old Quakers prominent in Philadelphia. Soon after the Revolutionary War Henry Drinker, the great-grandfather of Joe, was interested, with Benjamin Rush, George Clymer, Samuel Meredith, Robert Morris and others, in the purchase of Pennsylvania wild lands. This portion of the State was then an entire wilderness, and in 1789–91 Henry Drinker purchased from the State twenty-five thousand acres of land in what are now the counties of Lackawanna, Wayne, Pike and Susquehanna. A great portion of this land was on the head-waters of the Lehigh River, in the first-named county, then a part of Luzerne.

To open this isolated settlement to the outside world and make the region accessible, Henry built, in 1819, the first turnpike road into the Lackawanna Valley. This he had chartered as the Philadelphia and Great Bend turnpike. It was sixty miles long and extended from Stanhope, N. J., to Drinker's Beach. It is known as the "Old Drinker road" to this day, and is a landmark in fixing boundary lines.

In 1819, also, Drinker became aware of the presence of anthracite coal in the valley, and, although it was then comparatively valueless, efforts to introduce it having, up to that time, met with little success, he believed in its actual importance, and foresaw the advantages of a better communication between the Delaware and Susquehanna Valleys. His idea was a railroad, although there was not one in existence in the world at that time, except the crude English mine tramways. Drinker blazed with an axe a route from the mouth of the Lackawanna, now Pittston, through the unbroken forest, across the lofty Pocono Mountains to the Water Gap, a distance of sixty miles, and satisfied himself that such a scheme as he proposed was feasible. In 1826 he obtained a charter from the Pennsylvania Legislature for the Susquehanna Canal and Railroad Company. The commissioners appointed by the act were Henry W. Drinker, William Henry, Jacob D. Stroud, Daniel Stroud, A. E. Brown, S. Stokes, James N. Porter and John Coolbaugh.

Drinker's idea was a railroad with incline planes or a canal, horse-power to be used if a railroad, between the planes, and water-power to raise the cars upon the planes. He interested a number of prominent men in his project, and in 1831 a survey of the route was made. The engineer employed, Major Ephraim Beach, reported that the road could be built for six hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

After considerable work, Henry Drinker induced George and Seldon Scranton, of Oxford, N. J., to become partners in the scheme, associating them with the project. After inducing the Morris Canal Company to take one hundred and fifty thousand dollars' worth of stock, a road known as the Lackawanna and Western Railroad was built from Scranton to Great Bend, by the Scrantons, Drinker dropping out on account of severe losses which he had sustained in opening up the country with roads, and endeavoring to develop the coal and iron resources so abundant in that region. This was completed in 1851.

This was an outlet for coal, formed by groping blindly among the hills in the wrong direction, and apparently diverging towards Great Bend, sixty miles away, before starting for New York.

A practical movement was made in the right direction in 1849, when, chiefly through the influence of the Scrantons, a company was chartered to run a road from the Delaware Water Gap to some point on the Lackawanna, near Cobb's Gap, called "The Delaware and Cobb's Gap Railroad Company." The commissioners named in the act and invested with authority to effect an organization were Moses W. Coolbaugh, S. W. Shoemaker, Thomas Grattan, H. M. La Bar, A. Overfield, I. Place, Benjamin V. Rush, Alpheus Hollister, Samuel Taylor, F. Starbird, James H. Stroud, R. Bingham and W. Nyce, who met at Stroudsburg, December 26, 1850, and chose Colonel George W. Scranton, a man in whom the people had entire confidence, president of the company. He had been the owner of the original charter of the old Drinker Railroad, and this the company purchased of him for one thousand dollars, in 1853. A joint application was then immediately made by the Delaware and Cobb's Gap Railroad Company, and the Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, for an act of the Legislature consolidating them, and such an act was passed March 11, 1853. Thus was consummated a union under the present name of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, and a solution of the problem of connecting Scranton and its coal-mines with the New York market was assured. Colonel Scranton was elected as president of the consolidated company, and long continued by repeated re-elections to hold that responsible office.

Measures were immediately adopted to construct the road from Scranton to the Delaware River, at a point five miles below the Water Gap. The necessary surveys had been previously made by E. McNeill, chief engineer of the company, who, by indefatigable labor, had procured Crestline and other preliminary surveys, which enabled him to establish a favorable line with easy grades, practicable for a heavy traffic, over the barren heights and perplexing undulations of the Pocono.

Books were opened for subscriptions to increase the capital stock, which had at the time of the consolidation amounted to $1,441,000, and such was the confidence felt in the success of the enterprise, not only by the original stockholders, but by other capitalists, that the whole sum required, $1,500,000, was obtained in a few days.

The contract for the construction of the Southern Division—the original Delaware and Cobb's Gap Railroad—was put under way in June, 1853. As heretofore explained, this section, sixty-one miles in length, extended from Scranton, through Cobb's Gap, and so on in a general southeasterly direction, through the western part of Luzerne (now Lackawanna) County and across the county of Monroe, through the Delaware Water Gap, to a point on the river five miles below, where it connected with the Warren Railroad of New Jersey. Going by this railroad nineteen miles to New Hampton Summit, and there making connection by the Central Railroad of New Jersey with Jersey City, the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company found a market for the product of the extensive coal-fields of which it had become possessed, and a few years later the relations between the Lackawanna Valley and the sea-board were rendered still more intimate by the leasing of the Morris and Essex Railroad.

"[1] Shortly after leaving Nicholson, the road reaches Martin's Creek, finds the summit at New Milford, and goes down Salt Lick to Great Bend, where it joins the New York and Erie.

"The Valley Railroad is of great importance to the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Company. It completes their line of three hundred and twenty-five miles from New York to Oswego, leading to the greatest coal markets in the State. The divisions are as follows: Morris and Essex, from New York to Scranton, 149 miles; Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, from Scranton to Great Bend, 47 miles; Valley, from Great Bend to Binghamton, 14 miles; Syracuse and Binghamton, 80 miles; Oswego and Syracuse, 35 miles.

[1] Miss Blackman's "History."

"The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Company formerly paid about four hundred thousand dollars a year for the privilege of running their coal and freight trains over fourteen miles of Erie track.

"The Lackawanna and Susquehanna Railroad is a branch of the Albany and Susquehanna, connecting with the latter at Nineveh, N. Y., and with the Jefferson Railroad near Starrucca Viaduct, at Lanesboro', Susquehanna County. It is twenty-two miles in length.

"A charter was obtained at an early day, we believe as early as the year 1828, for a railroad from the Lackawanna Valley to Lanesboro'. Other charters were also obtained at later dates, but nothing was effected toward building a railroad until Col. C. Freeman, member of Assembly from Wayne County, at the session of 1851, secured a charter for the Jefferson Railroad Company, with Earl Wheeler, Charles S. Minor, Francis B. Penniman and Benjamin B. Smith as corporators."

This chartered organization was to have the right to build a railroad from any point on the Delaware River in Pike County, by the best route through that county and the county of Wayne, and terminating in the county of Susquehanna at the New York State line. An effort to get the Erie Railroad Company to build the whole or a portion of the line failed; the Jefferson Railroad Company remained practically inert, and nothing was accomplished for more than ten years. The commissioners and the Erie Company, however, both had the proposed line surveyed.

In 1862–63 the Pennsylvania Coal Company built along the Lackawaxen from Hawley to the Delaware, connecting with the Erie at Lackawaxen Station, and leased the line to the Erie Company.

On March 18, 1863, a supplement to its charter was passed, giving the Jefferson Company the right to build a "branch"—so-called—from the Moosic summit (in Susquehanna County) to Carbondale. Work upon the line was not begun, however, until 1869, though Charles S. Miner, Esq., had in the mean time secured the right of way. The pseudo-branch was finished in 1870 by the Jefferson Company —the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company furnishing the money—and shortly after its completion the line was leased to the Erie, under a lease which is still in effect.

About 1864 the Jefferson Company raised capital and issued bonds for building along the line which they had originally contemplated, from Honesdale to Hawley, thus making, with the road built by the Pennsylvania Coal Company, a continuous line from Honesdale to Lackawaxen, and placing the former town in direct connection with the Erie. Members of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, in individual capacity, took much of the stock. Among the people of Honesdale most prominently identified with the project at this period and later, were Judge C. P. Waller, Samuel E. Dimmick and Zenas H. Russell.

No attempt has ever been made to connect, by an independent line over the Moosic range, the two railroads built under the charter of the Jefferson Company, and it is probable that none ever will be made, for the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company's Gravity Railroad, from Honesdale to Carbondale, is a suffieient connecting link.

PROPOSED RAILROAD ROUTES OUT OF MONTROSE.—As early as 1868 the subject of an outlet from Montrose began to be agitated by leading citizens of the borough and county and men influential in railroad circles outside of the county. Judge Asa Packer, then president of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, proposed to the projectors of a railroad running from Montrose to some point on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, to furnish the equipments for the same, and everything except to pay for the right of way and grading. The matter was informally discussed by Joseph D. Drinker, B. F. Blakslee, Abner Griffis, Azur Lathrop, Samuel H. Sayre, F. B. Chandler, C. M. Gere, George Walker and others, and the routes from Montrose to Meshoppen and also from Montrose to New Milford or Great Bend were discussed. The people of Meshoppen objected to the former and opposed the plan; the latter was partially surveyed, but what seemed to be impassable barriers for a railroad route were met and the survey was abandoned. After feeling the pulse of the people and ascertaining the amount that could be depended upon by subscription from people at Montrose, along the line of the proposed railroad in the county and others outside of the county, it was decided to survey a route from Montrose to Tunkhannock, build a narrow-gauge road of three feet in width and accept the proposition of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company. In accordance with this, the State Legislature was petitioned for a charter of privilege, which was granted at the session of 1869, and Abner Griffis, of Forest Lake, paid the necessary amount, one hundred dollars, at Harrisburg, and, with other delegates, formally received the charter. The capital stock is one million dollars—shares of fifty dollars each.

MONTROSE RAILWAY COMPANY.—In pursuance of the charter granted by the Legislature of Pennsylvania, incorporating the Montrose Railway Company, a meeting was held at the public school-house in Springville on the 27th day of April, 1871, when the following gentlemen were duly elected:

President: James I. Blakslee, 1871–86.

Directors: W. H. Cooper, 1871; Samuel H. Sayre, 1871–86; H. K. Sherman, 1871–86; Samuel Stark, 1871–77; C. L. Brown, 1871; C. M. Gere, 1871–86; S. D. Thomas, 1871–86; G. E. Palen, 1871–79; W. H. Jessup, 1871; S. Tyler, 1871–86; B. F. Blakslee, 1871–86; Felix Ansart, 1871.

The following other gentlemen have also served as directors:

Robert Klotz, 1872–86; W. J. Mulford, 1872–86; C. D. Gearhart, 1880–86; Azur Lathrop, 1872–79; Charles O. Skeer, 1872–86; Paul Billings, 1878–86; J. S. Tarbell, 1880–86.

Secretaries: C. L. Brown, 1871–86; J. R. Raynsford, 1878–86.

Treasurers: W. H. Cooper, 1871–84; Asa P. Blakslee, 1884–86.

At the first meeting of the board, held at Springville on May 27, 1871, it was directed that a corps of engineers be at once employed under the supervision of Mr. F. Ansart, Jr., to survey and locate a cheap route for a narrow-gauge railroad extending from Tunkhannock to Montrose. President Blakslee reported at this meeting that the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company had agreed to furnish the rails, ties, spikes and splices necessary for the superstructure as soon as the grading had been completed and paid for by receipts from stock subscriptions, they agreeing also to receive the payment due them in stock at par. On December 14, 1871, the engineer, Felix Ansart, Jr., reported to the president that he had located, marked and determined a route for a railroad from Tunkhannock, in the county of Wyoming, to Montrose, in the county of Susquehanna, the line running from the depot of the Pennsylvania and New York Canal and Railroad Company, at Tunkhannock, to Marcy's Pond, thence along the west bank of the pond to a summit between the waters of Marcy's Pond and the Meshoppen Creek. Crossing the same, it runs in a nearly direct line to the village of Springville, thence by the village of Dimock into the borough of Montrose. The length of the road is $27\frac{12}{100}$ miles. The terminus at Montrose is 1045 feet higher than the Tunkhannock terminus. There are six principal summits: The Marcy's Pond Summit, Lemon, Springville, Woodbourne, Decker and Montrose.

The average ascending grade per mile to the first summit is ninety-three feet, the heaviest ninety-five feet and the lightest eighty-six feet. The average descending grade from Lemon Summit to Meshoppen Creek is forty feet per mile, the heaviest seventy-three feet, and the lightest sixteen feet. The average ascending grade from Meshoppen Creek to the Springville Summit is eighty-five feet, the heaviest ninety-five feet and the lightest seventy-six feet. From Springville Summit the grade for one mile is level; from this level grade to Woodbourne Summit, nineteen and one-half miles from Tunkhannock, the average ascending grade is seventy-one feet per mile, the heaviest eighty-eight feet and the lightest sixty-nine feet. From Woodbourne Summit to Decker Summit there is no ascending grade exceeding eighty-five feet per mile, and no descending grade exceeding sixty-three feet per mile. From Decker Summit to Montrose there is no ascending grade exceeding eighty feet per mile and no descending grade exceeding sixty-three feet per mile. There are two eighteen-degree curves having a radius of three hundred and twenty feet; with this exception, the maximum curve is sixteen degrees.

The contract for grading the Montrose Railway road-bed was taken by Colonel Perry Marcy, of Tunkhannock, to be built ready for the track for $101,000, and to be completed August 1, 1872; but during that year the road was only completed from Tunkhannock to Springville and cars run on it, a distance of fourteen miles.

By the middle of May, 1873, passenger and baggage cars commenced running regularly between Tunkhannock and Hunter's, and the road was graded as far as Jessup's or the Brooklyn road. This near approach of the railroad to Montrose reduced the price of coal two dollars per ton, notwithstanding the price of coal at the mines was one dollar per ton higher than when the building of the road was begun. At the meeting of the board of directors, January 11, 1875, President Blakslee reported the road-bed completed, the track laid through to the borough limits of Montrose, and that regular trains had been running over the entire road since June 1, 1874. He also reported that the subscriptions for stock were 6277 shares, amounting to $313,850, of which 5689 shares had been paid in full, and $6584 had been paid on the balance, leaving still unpaid $22,816; and that if this balance due on stock was paid in, it would place the road out of debt. Many of the stockholders having failed to pay their subscriptions, a committee was appointed at the meeting of the board in January, 1874, to solicit $20,000 additional subscriptions to the stock of the company. At the close of the year 1873 the equipment of the road consisted of two fifteen-ton locomotives, built by the Baldwin Locomotive Works; two passenger, one baggage, three box, two flat, and eight gondola cars. T. G. Walters, who had the contract for laying the track of the road, up to this time had acted as conductor, freight agent, road-master and superintendent, while the engineer, Wm. Luckenbill, had also acted as master mechanic, both of which gentlemen have continued as employes of the road up to this time, 1886.

The receipts for carrying passengers on this road in 1874 were $9560.16; for freight, $13,- 301.60; total receipts, $24,838.56. Total expenses for the same year, $14,657.34.

For the twelve months ending November 30, 1885, the receipts for passenger transportation were $6999.23; for freight, $18,398.88; total receipts, $27,778.53. Total expenses for the same year, $20,832.50. The general balance-sheet at the last-mentioned date shows as follows:

Construction account	$332,741.18
Equipment	41,308.13
Lehigh Valley R. R. Co., due on special account	1,249.43
W. H. Cooper estate	1,276.10
C. D. Gearhart	29.03
Cash	7,193.25
	$383,797.12
Capital stock	$304,900.00
Funded debts	15,000.00
Capital stock (part paid)	2,527.21
Profit and loss	61,369.91
	$383,797.12

CHAPTER VIII.

ERECTION OF COUNTY.

Erection of Susquehanna County—Erection of Townships and Chartering of Boroughs—Census—Civil List.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.—The provincial government erected the county of Northumberland March 21, 1772, from Lancaster, Cumberland, Berks, Northampton and Bedford, taking in an immense stretch of territory. [1] The southern line ran from the Mohontongo, on the western side of the Susquehanna, through Snyder, Mifflin, Centre, Huntingdon, Blair, Clearfield, Elk, Cameron and McKean Counties, to the New York line; thence eastward to near the eastern line of Susquehanna County; thence southward to Lehigh, and thence along or near the present lines of Luzerne, Columbia, Monroe, Carbon, Schuylkill and Dauphin to the beginning. The act of September 30, 1779, curtailed the limits of Northumberland on the Juniata, and added a much larger area on the northwest. September 25, 1786, Luzerne County was erected from Northumberland, and so named in honor of Chevalier De la Luzerne, Minister of France to the United States during the Revolutionary struggle. By act of the Legislature, February 21, 1810, Susquehanna County was set off from Luzerne; Ontario (now Bradford) was erected under the same act from Luzerne and Lycoming. The act provided that the line should run "from the fortieth mile-stone standing on the north line of the State to a point due east of the head of Wyalusing Falls, in the Susquehanna; thence due east to the western line of Wayne County; thence northerly along the said western line of Wayne County to the aforesaid north line of the State (at the sixth mile-stone, counting from the Delaware River westward), and thence along the said State line to the fortieth mile-stone, the place of beginning." The dividing line between Wayne and Susquehanna was surveyed by H. L. Stephens, on the part of Wayne, and J. W. Chapman and C. M. Gere, on the part of Susquehanna, in 1870. They found that the line between the counties struck the State line one hundred and twenty perches west of the sixth mile-stone; hence Susquehanna County extends from one hundred and twenty perches west of the sixth on the New York State line to the fortieth mile-stone, and is thirty-three and five-eighths miles in length by about twenty-four and one-half miles average width; the east line being twenty-four and three-quarters miles precisely, and the west about twenty-four and one-quarter; the true polar course of the east line north two and one-quarter degrees west, and the north line due west, embracing an area of about eight hundred and twenty-four square miles.

"The county derives its name from the fact that the Susquehanna River first enters the State of Pennsylvania within its limits. The county is fortunate in having the sweet-sounding Indian name retained for constant local use. 'Hanna' signifies a stream of water, and 'Susque' is generally believed to mean crooked, though one writer gives its signification as muddy, for which there is no justification in point of fact; and the Indians gave no arbitrary names. A more winding, crooked stream than the Susquehanna, as to general course, is not to be found in the Northern States; in this county it varies directly three times. In the grand sweep of the river, from Lanesboro' to Pittston, it completely drains the county, every stream within its borders eventually falling into it. When the north line of the State was determined, in 1786, it was found to cross twelve streams running south, and nine running north between the sixth and fortieth mile-stones from the Delaware River—the limits of the north line of Susquehanna County. Prominent among these were the 'Appelacunck,' 'Chucknut,' and 'Snake Creeks.' (See 'Pennsylvania Archives,' No. 29.)

[1] Hon. J. Simpson Africa's Address, page 7.

"Running north into the Susquehanna, but not crossing the State line, there are, besides minor streams, Wylie Creek, the Salt Lick, Mitchell's, Drinker's, the Canawacta, and Starrucca; though the latter and Cascade Creek may rather be said to enter the river from the east."

Tioga township, in old Northumberland, extended from the western line of Bucks (now Wayne) County to Big Meadows, in Tioga County, and was eighteen miles in depth from the State line. In 1790 that portion of Luzerne County now constituting the county of Susquehanna, was in two townships, Tioga and Wyalusing. By order of the justices of Luzerne, Tioga was bounded on the north by the State line, and east and west by the lines of that county, and on the south by an east and west line which should strike the standing stone. Wyalusing was bounded on the north by Tioga township, on the east and west by lines of the county, and on the south by the east and west line passing through the mouth of the Meshoppen Creek.

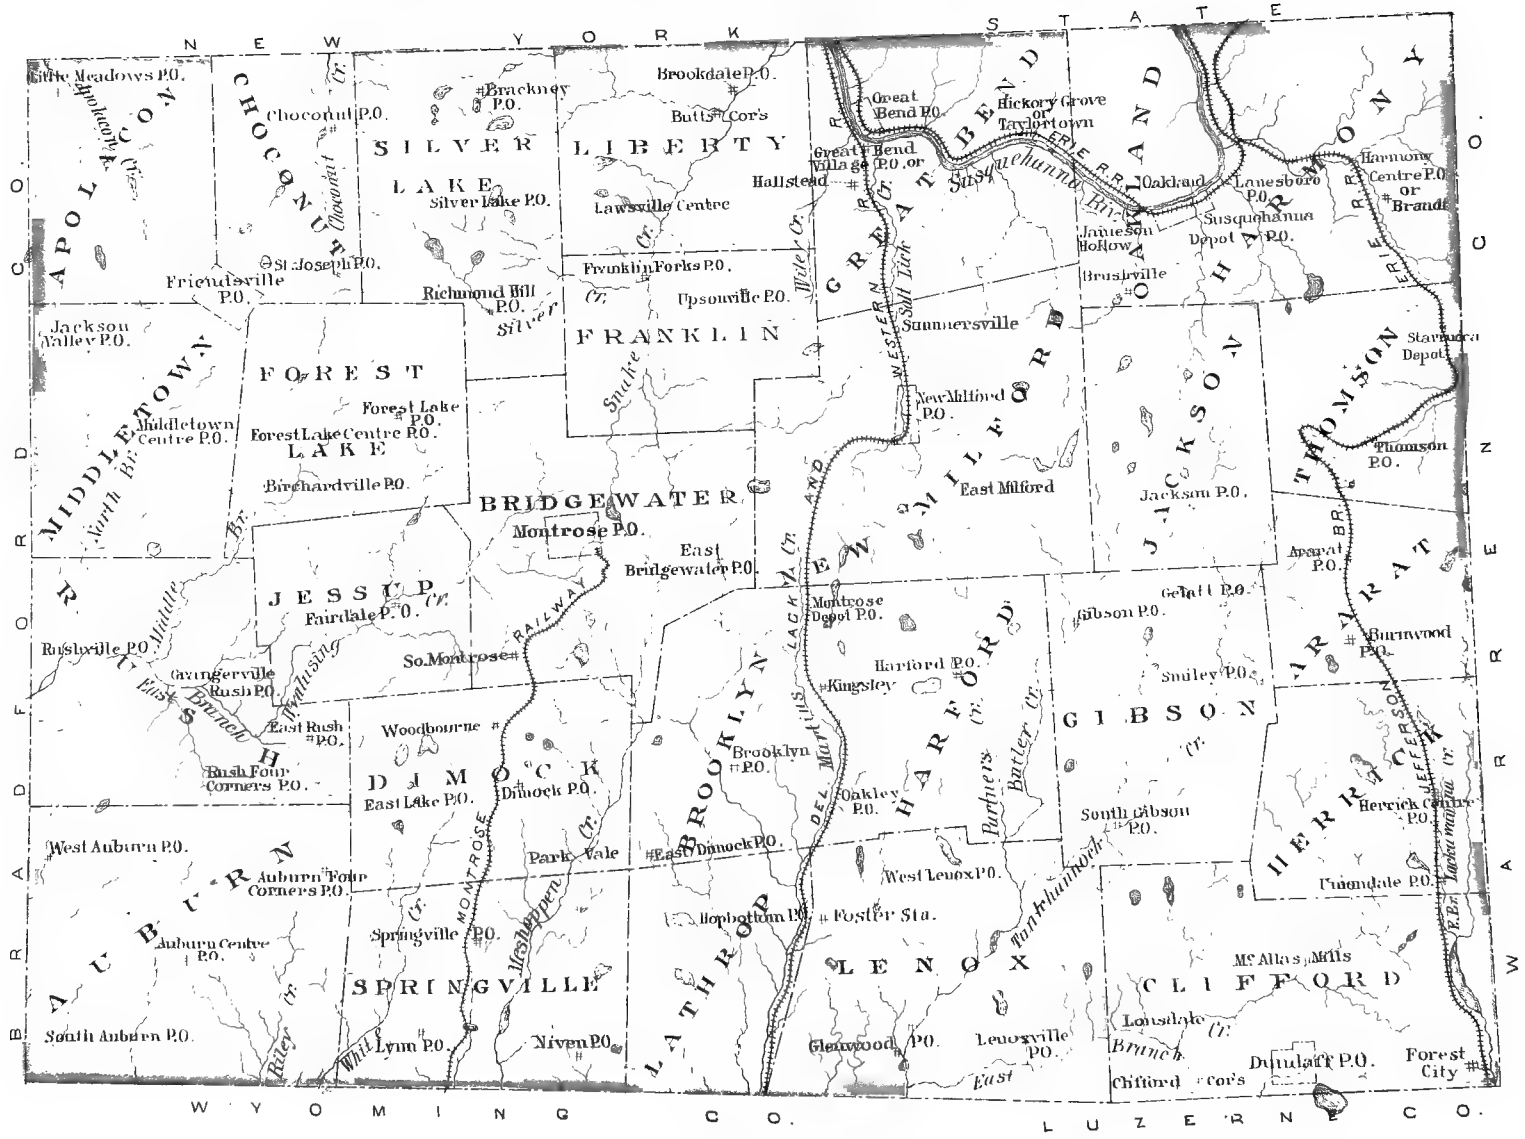
In March, 1791, the court of Luzerne ordered the erection of the township of Willingborough from the northeast corner of Tioga, but its boundaries were not defined until April, 1793, when the bounds were defined as follows: "From the twenty-first mile stone on the north line of the State, south six miles; thence east until it shall intersect the line to be run between Luzerne and Northampton Counties; thence north to the State line; thence west to the place of beginning." This made a township six miles north and south by fifteen miles east and west, but the early pioneers had very little knowledge of township boundaries, and Willingborough included the settlers in the northeastern quarter of the county.

August, 1795, Nicholson, so named from John Nicholson, comptroller of the State, was erected from parts of Tioga and Wyalusing, with the following boundaries:

"Beginning at the place where the north line of the township of Tunkhannock crosses a small creek west of Martin's Creek; running thence due north thirteen miles; thence east to the east line of the county; thence south on the county line to the place where it shall intersect the north line of Tunkhannock township; thence west on said line to place of beginning."

"In January, 1797, the court approved, but not 'finally' until January, 1798, the petition of Ephraim Kirby, and others, for the erection of the township of Lawsville. (See Franklin.)

"In 1799 Braintrim was set off from Wyalusing and Tunkhannock; the portion taken from the former by Susquehanna County retains nearly its original dimensions in the present town of Auburn.



"January, 1801, Ezekiel Hyde, Justus Gaylord and M. Miner York were appointed commissioners to set off the township of Rush, and in November of the same year their report was accepted. The township was eighteen miles north and south by thirteen miles east and west, except that on the south line it extended five miles farther, this extension being five miles square. The whole comprised 172,660 acres.

"Though the township mentioned did not absorb the two townships of 1790, the latter are not again mentioned in this section on the Luzerne records. Practically, the line of Willingborough extended to Nicholson on the south, and both, to Rindaw (district) on the west.

"In 1805 the court was petitioned to erect the townships of Clifford, Bridgewater and New Milford. The first-named was approved 'finally' in April, 1806, the second in November following, and the last in August, 1807. The northeast corner of Clifford was then twelve miles below the State line, being also what was the northeast corner of old Nicholson, and its area was one hundred and eight square miles. The eastern limit of New Milford, like that of Clifford, was the line of Wayne County. Bridgewater extended north and south about twenty-five miles.

"At August sessions, 1807, a petition from the 'Nine Partners' was promptly considered, and OUTLINE MAP OF SUSQUEHANNA CO. PA.

Harford was granted January, 1808. For eleven years the inhabitants had desired township organization, but two or three previous petitions had failed to secure the result."

In 1809 Harmony was organized, the last township ordered by the court of Luzerne in the section constituting Susquehanna County. It formed the northeast corner of the latter, as it had of the former, extending from the State line twelve miles south, and from Wayne County nine miles west. The original ten townships when the county was organized were Willingborough, now Great Bend; Nicholson, since August, 1813, Lenox; Lawsville, embracing Liberty and a greater part of Franklin; Braintrim, now Auburn; Rush, embracing, besides its present limits, Middletown, Choconut, Apolacon and the western parts of Jessup and Forest Lake; Clifford, embracing, besides its present limits, Gibson, Herrick and the southern part of Ararat; Bridgewater, embracing, besides its present territory, all of Brooklyn, Lathrop, Springville, Dimock, Silver Lake, the eastern parts of Jessup, Forest Lake and the south part of Franklin; New Milford; Harford, long known as Nine Partners; and Harmony, embracing Oakland, Jackson, Thomson and the northern part of Ararat. After the county was organized, Silver Lake and Gibson were erected in 1813, and Nicholson was named Lenox that year. In 1814 Rush was reduced to its present limits, and Choconut and Middletown were erected therefrom. Springville was also erected that year, likewise Waterford, called Hopbottom, in 1823, and Brooklyn in 1825. Jackson was erected in 1815; Herrick, 1825; Dimock, 1832; Thomson, 1833; Franklin, 1835; Forest Lake, 1836; Lathrop, Jessup and Apolacon, 1846; Ararat, 1852; Oakland, 1853; Lawsville became Liberty in 1836.

Boroughs.—Montrose, incorporated 1824; Dundaff, 1828; Friendsville, 1848; Susquehanna Depot, 1853; New Milford, 1859; Great Bend, 1861; Little Meadows, 1862; Thomson, 1876; Hallstead (formerly Great Bend Village Borough), 1874; Hopbottom, 1881; Oakland, 1883; Uniondale, 1885.

Early in 1808 a division of Luzerne County was contemplated, and a public meeting to favor the object was held July 13th, at the house of Edward Fuller, in Bridgewater, about four miles below Montrose—Asa Lathrop presiding, and J. W. Raynsford acting as secretary. Owing to a disagreement as to county lines, it was proposed that all the townships should send delegates to a meeting to be held at the house of Salmon Bosworth, in Rush, September 1st following, and then endeavor to decide the matter; but it was not until a year and a half later that the act of Legislature was passed which erected Susquehanna County, and it was two years more before the county was fully organized with officers and courts of her own.

In 1811 all moneys in the county district of Susquehanna were, by act of Legislature, to be kept separate from those of Luzerne, and within the bounds of that district. February 25, 1812, a meeting was held at the house of Isaac Post, in Bridgewater, to recommend proper persons to the Governor to fill the several offices necessary to the organization of Susquehanna County—Davis Dimock, chairman, and J. W. Raynsford, secretary. The citizens of each township were recommended to nominate officers at their annual town-meeting in March, 1812, and make returns the Monday following at the house of I. Post.

Previous to the erection of Susquehanna County, Luzerne was divided into twelve election districts, of which Willingboro', Lawsville and Nicholson constituted the tenth, and Rush, or Rindaw, the ninth. In 1810 Bridgewater contained 1418 inhabitants, Clifford, 675; Harford, 477; Willingboro' and Harmony, 413: New Milford, 174; and Lawsville, 169. In 1812 proclamation for elections were issued from Luzerne to Susquehanna County District; but the Legislature had decreed that "after the second Tuesday of October, 1812, Susquehanna shall enjoy and exercise in judicial matters, all powers and privileges, etc." The new county was included with Wayne, Tioga and Bradford, in the Eleventh Judicial District. Isaac Post was appointed treasurer, Edward Fuller, sheriff: Dr. Charles Fraser, prothonotary and clerk of the several courts, register and recorder; Hon. J. B. Gibson, president judge; Davis Dimock and William Thomson, associate judges. At the time of organization Thos. Parke, of Bridgewater, was commissioner of Luzerne, but he resigned; Bartlett Hinds, Laban Capron and Isaac Brownson were appointed commissioners for the new county. Governor Simon Snyder also commissioned Asahel Avery justice of the peace for Willingboro' in 1812, Isaac Brownson for Rush, Joshua W. Raynsford, for Bridgewater, Laban Capron for Harford—all appointed March 28, 1812, for life, or during good behavior. In 1813 Asa Dimock was appointed for Clifford; Charles Dimon, Willingboro'; Zenas Bliss, Bridgewater; Jabez Tyler, Willingboro'; Rufus Lines, Lawsville; Hosea Tiffany, Harford. In 1815, David Post, Bridgewater and Springville; 1817, Edward Paine, Harford; Samuel A. Brown, Bridgewater and Springville.

"The county-seat was located at Montrose as early as July, 1811, by three commissioners appointed by the Governor. They were permitted to locate it at a distance not exceeding seven miles from the centre of the county. Stakes were set at several places proposed—one in Brooklyn, one in Harford, and one in New Milford. But, in addition to a greater political influence existing, a stronger pecuniary interest was brought to bear for its location in Montrose. Dr. R. H. Rose, whose extensive tracts of land reached this vicinity, made more liberal offers to secure this location than any that could be made elsewhere. Besides, a gift of a public square at this point for the erection of the county buildings, as also of other lots, was made by Bartlett Hinds and Isaac Post."

The land given by Bartlett Hinds had been granted by the commonwealth to Thos. Cadwallader, who by deed conveyed it to Samuel Meredith, who by deed conveyed it to George Clymer, who by deed, October 19, 1804, conveyed it to Bartlett Hinds. Another portion was granted by the commonwealth to Jos. Bullock and Isaac Franks, who by deed conveyed it to Tench Francis, whose widow, by her attorney, conveyed the same to Bartlett Hinds, July 9, 1804. The land given by Isaac Post (consideration $1.00) was first granted to the same parties as the portion last-mentioned, who by their deeds conveyed it to Tench Francis, who by his last will and testament, April 4, 1800, devised his estate to his widow, Anne Francis, who by deed, February 18, 1809, granted the land to Robert H. Rose, which sale was confirmed to the said Robert H. Rose, by deed, February 25, 1809, from Richard Penn (her attorney), and on the 5th of October of the same year was conveyed by him to Isaac Post. July 24, 1812, the aforesaid lands were deeded to Susquehanna County by Isaac and Susannah Post and Bartlett and Agnes Hinds; and, on the 31st of the same month, the conveyance was acknowledged as a free act and deed, before J. W. Raynsford, justice of the peace.

Soon after the organization of the Board of Commissioners, Isaac Post, the treasurer, was charged with the subscription papers of donations made towards building the court-house, etc. It will be seen by the following list of subscribers, with the sums given by each, that the amounts were graduated somewhat by the nearness of their property to the new county-seat, as well as by the length of their purses:

Robert H. Rose, whose lands reached near the village, gave $200; Stephen Wilson, whose farm was a little south of it, gave $100; Abinoam Hinds, Conrad Hinds and Isaac Peckins gave each $50; David Harris, Jonathan Wheaton and James Trane gave each $25; Simeon Tyler, Cyrus Messenger, Samuel Quick, Joseph Hubbard and Samuel Coggswell gave each $20; Joseph Chapman, Edward Fuller, Jos. Butterfield, Henry Post, Levi Leonard, John Bard, Zebulon Deans, Edmond Stone gave each $10; Freeman Fishback, Thos. Scott and Samuel Scott gave each $5; Bartlett Hinds, Isaac and David Post, on whose lands the county-seat was located, gave a number of village lots.

The first court was held in Isaac Post's tavern, and the basement of Keeler's hotel was the first jail. Commissioners Butler, Sutton and Dorrance, of Wyoming Valley, fixed the location for the court-house. The corner-stone of the first court-house was laid in 1812, but the building was not erected until June, 1813. It was built by Oliver C. Smith, at a cost of $4500. Besides the court-room, in the second story, the jail and jailor's residence were in the first story, and the corner rooms in front, above and below, were made to accommodate all the county offices. A small stone fire-proof building was erected in 1818 by Daniel Lyon, at a cost of $2562.60 in the rear of the court-house, to keep the county records in. The first telegraph office at Montrose was in the attic of this building. In SUSQUEHANNA COUNTY COURT-HOUSE, ERECTED 1854-5.

1853 a jail was erected by Boyd & Smith, at a cost of $5768.34. It is now used for an engine-house.

The present court-house was built in 1854–55. The contract cost of the building was $18,500; architect, $320; furniture, including bell, $1425,-70; total, $20,245.70. The ground dimensions, including stylobate, are fifty-four by eighty-two feet. The county offices are on the first floor, the court-room on the second floor and jury-rooms on the third floor. The contract was made between John Hancock, Amos Williams and Amherst Carpenter, commissioners, and Levi B. Guernsey, Wm. L. Post, I. L. Post, W. H. Boyd and Avery Frink, contractors. In 1870 repairs were made on the new court-house amounting to $3025.09. In 1883 an addition was built on the rear end of the court-house, twenty-six by fifty-five feet, containing rooms for the janitor, chambers for the judge, waiting-rooms and a law library room. There is a cellar under the entire building, which is heated by steam. Boyd, Corwin & Cooley built the annex for $6500. The town clock was purchased by the citizens of Montrose and placed in the cupola of the court-house,

Where to the North and the South, to the East and West,
It points with its hands to the minutes as they fly;
While, with slow-measured stroke, it wakes a sad unrest,
To hear its midnight toll on the winds as they sigh.

The new jail was erected in 1867–68 by Avery Frink at a cost of $34,707.07. The stones of which it is built were mostly quarried from the immediate vicinity.

The following is the list of collectors, with the amount of their duplicates, in the year 1813:

Bridgewater,	Jonah Brewster,	$1265 04
Clifford,	Walter Lyon,	442 22
Rush,	Philo Bostwick,	418 37
Harford,	David Aldrich,	273 71
Willingboro' (Gt. Bend),	Silas Buck,	220 61
New Milford,	Benjamin Hayden,	194 99
Lawsville,	Titus Smith,	151 80
Harmony,	Isaac Hale,	71 22
Braintrim (Auburn),	William Cooley,	58 77
Nicholson (Lenox),	Solomon Millard,	57 27
	Total,	$3154 00

The following statement from the county commissioners' clerk for the year 1886 will show the increase in the aggregate wealth of the county,—the aggregate amount of real and personal property taxable for county purposes as returned by the assessors in the year 1886 (real estate valued at about one-fourth its real value), taxable for both county and State purposes, real and personal and money at interest. The light additional assessment in June, when voters are registered, is not included.

	Real and Personal. Taxable for County purposes for 1886.	Money at Interest for 1886. Taxable for State purposes.
Apolacon,	$60,885 00	$6,331 00
Ararat,	49,600 00	14 878 00
Auburn,	223,521 00	27,586 00
Bridgewater,	233,976 00	43,583 00
Brooklyn,	136,551 00	124,306 00
Choconut,	66,307 00	9,292 00
Clifford,	163,272 00	54,986 00
Dimock,	129,412 00	116,178 00
Dundaff Borough,	17,320 00	2,790 00
Forest Lake,	112,018 00	30,704 00
Franklin,	107,481 00	20,784 00
Friendsville Borough,	17,361 00	13,415 00
Gibson	173,134 00	100,504 00
Great Bend Township,	118,159 00	30,845 00
Great Bend Borough,	59,805 00	84,311 00
Hallstead Borough,	43,265 00	14,994 00
Harford,	142,721 00	77,217 00
Harmony,	124,094 00	92,718 00
Herrick,	83,311 00	15,036 00
Hopbottom Borough,	20,856 00	26,768 00
Jackson,	128,650 00	28,588 00
Jessup,	81,908 00	27,023 00
Lathrop,	70,528 00	28,128 00
Lenox,	143,106 00	39,108 00
Liberty,	96,100 00	28,547 00
Little Meadows Borough,	18,970 00	6,118 00
Middletown,	81,052 00	22,792 00
Montrose Borough,	212,963 00	335,186 00
New Milford Township,	192,000 00	31,033 00
New Milford Borough,	89,945 00	80,903 00
Oakland Township,	50,224 00	8,533 00
Oakland Borough,	27,117 00	6,947 00
Rush,	118,386 00	31,494 00
Silver Lake,	103,529 00	21,211 00
Springville,	138,328 00	36,721 00
Susquehanna Depot Borough,	180,530 00	61,649 00
Thomson Township,	51,183 00	15,187 00
Thomson Borough,	13,935 00	32,690 00
Uniondale Borough,	26,915 00	15,641 50
	$3,908,418 00	$1,764,725 00

E. G. Ball, County Commissioners' Clerk.

The Census.—In 1810 Susquehanna County, although erected by act of Legislature, was still officially connected with Luzerne; and the population of several of the townships included those of both counties, as Nicholson, Clifford, Braintrim, Rush and Bridgewater. The last-named, however, was almost entirely above the line of division, and its population 1418; that of Willingborough, 351; Harmony, 80; Lawsville, 169; New Milford, 178. The census was taken by Isaac A. Chapman.

POPULATION IN 1820. (Taken by BELA JONES.)

	Males.	Females.	Total.
Auburn,	113	93	206
Bridgewater,	1027	956	1983
Choconut,	257	249	506
Clifford,	349	332	681
Gibson,	455	455	910
Great Bend,	289	236	525
Harford,	321	319	640
Harmony,	80	93	173
Jackson,	128	137	265
Lawsville,	229	237	466
Lenox,	110	104	214
Middletown,	276	253	531
New Milford,	324	286	610
Rush,	134	108	242
Silver Lake,	258	198	456
Springville,	385	326	711
Waterford,	401	378	779
Total whites,	5145	4760	9908
Total blacks,			51
Total number inhabitants,			9958

Of the above there were the following classifications: Farmers, 1864; mechanics, 261; merchants, 23; foreigners not naturalized, 309.

There were in the county: Sheep, 12,259; horses, 857; oxen, 1358; cows, 2586; grist-mills, 29; saw-mills, 62; fulling-mills, 7; carding machines, 8; tanneries, 5; grain distilleries, 12.

There was manufactured in the county during the year ending August 1, 1820: Of woolen cloth, 37,797 yards; of linen cloth, 52,762 yards.

There was in the county (1820): Of improved lands, 33,780 acres; of unimproved lands, 171,831 acres; of unseated lands, 224,935 acres. Total acres in county, 430,546 acres.

The valuation of taxable property, as collected from assessment rolls of 1821, amounted to $1,007,698. Number of taxables, 1821, 2061.

	1830.	1840.	1850.
Auburn,	516	1113	1837
Apolacon,	.....	.....	748
Bridgewater,	2440	2082	1548
Brooklyn,	1350	1474	1082
Choconut,	782	952	894
Clifford,	866	1068	1647
Dimock,	....	998	1056
Dundaff,	298	304	296
Forest Lake,	.....	666	780
Friendsville,	.....	.....	185
Franklin,	.....	515	703
Gibson,	1081	1219	1459
Great Bend,	797	859	1150
Harford,	999	1179	1258
Harmony,	341	523	1578
Herrick,	468	629	824
Jackson,	641	754	978
Jessup,	.....	.....	840
Lathrop,	.....	.....	510
Lawsville,	878	.....	.....
Lenox,	546	800	1443
Liberty,	.....	554	833
Middletown,	683	589	1140
Montrose,	415	632	917
New Milford,	1000	1148	1433
Rush,	643	1039	1159
Silver Lake,	516	907	1213
Springville,	1514	926	1148
Thomson,	.....	.....	509
Totals,	16,782	21,195	29,168

	1860.	1870.	1880.
Apolacon,	910	528	539
Ararat,	500	771	639
Auburn,	2164	2006	2089
Bridgewater,	1785	1459	1517
Brooklyn,	1213	1128	1100
Choconut,	1068	939	537
Clifford,	1624	1532	1454
Dimock,	1181	1124	1071
Dundaff,	245	187	171
Forest Lake,	1125	995	990
Franklin,	805	849	815
Friendsville,	202	223	176
Gibson,	1439	1368	1350
Great Bend Borough,	.....	855	1136
Great Bend Township,	1976	1431	1301
Hallstead,	.....	.....	546
Harford,	1441	1595	1505
Harmony,	1072	1212	1924
Herrick,	904	950	1104
Jackson,	1121	1175	1095
Jessup,	867	804	762
Lathrop,	876	983	1054
Lenox,	1791	1751	1730
Liberty,	995	1030	1108
Little Meadows,	.....	.....	159
Middletown,	923	871	833
Montrose,	1268	1463	1722
New Milford Borough,	414	600	803
New Milford Township,	1515	1647	1465
Oakland Township,	522	1106	1415
Rush,	1471	1418	1357
Silver Lake,	1313	1079	1105
Springville,	1346	1424	1410
Susquehanna,	2080	2729	3467
Thomson Borough,	.....	.....	249
Thomson Township,	558	701	656
Totals,	36,714	37,933	40,354

THE CIVIL LIST.—The following are the chief officers of Susquehanna County, including members of Congress and members of the Legislature, who represented Susquehanna County, although not always residents therein. The judges and district attorneys will appear in the Bench and Bar chapter.

MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.[1]—1812, Isaac Smith, Jared Irwin, for Northumberland, Union, Columbia, Luzerne and Susquehanna; 1814, David Scott, Wm. Wilson, for Northumberland, Union, Columbia, Luzerne and Susquehanna; 1816, David Scott, Wm. Wilson, for Northumberland, Union, Columbia, Luzerne and Susquehanna; 1817, J. Murray (in place of Scott, resigned), for Northumberland, Union, Columbia, Luzerne and Susquehanna; 1818, J. Murray, Geo. Denison, for Northumberland, Union, Columbia, Luzerne and Susquehanna; 1820, W. C. Ellis, Geo. Denison, for Northumberland, Union, Columbia, Luzerne and Susquehanna; 1822–24–26, Samuel McKean, George Kremer, Espy Van Horn, for Luzerne, Susquehanna, Bradford, Tioga, Northumberland, Columbia, Union, Lycoming, Potter, McKean; 1828, Philander Stephens, Alem Marr, James Ford; 1830, Philander Stephens, Lewis Dewatt, James Ford; 1832–34, John Laporte, for Susquehanna, Bradford, Tioga, Potter, McKean; 1836–38, Sam'l W. Morris, for Susquehanna, Bradford, Tioga, Potter, McKean; 1840, Davis Dimock, Jr., died January, 1842; 1842, Almon H. Read, elected in March, for Susquehanna, Bradford, Tioga, Potter, McKean; 1842, Almon H. Read (died), for Susquehanna, Bradford, Tioga; 1844, G. Fuller, elected to fill vacancy, for Susquehanna, Bradford, Tioga; 1844, D. Wilmot, for Twenty-ninth Congress, for Susquehanna, Bradford, Tioga; 1846–48, D. Wilmot, re-elected, for Susquehanna, Bradford and Tioga; 1850–52–54–56–58–60, Galusha A. Grow, for Susquehanna, Bradford, Tioga; 1862–64–66, Charles Denison, for Susquehanna and Luzerne; 1868, Geo. W. Woodward, for Susquehanna and Luzerne; 1870, L. D. Shoemaker, for Susquehanna and Luzerne; 1872, L. D. Shoemaker, for Susquehanna and Luzerne. In 1874 Joseph Powell represented the Fifteenth Congressional District, composed of Bradford, Susquehanna, Wayne and Wyoming; 1876–78, Edward Overton, Jr.; 1880, C. C. Jadwin; 1882, George A. Post; 1884–86, F. C. Bunnell.

[1] Those in italics are from Susquehanna County.

STATE SENATORS.—The following is a list of State Senators representing the district of which Susquehanna County has been a part. New apportionments are supposed to be made every ten years, after taking the census. These apportionments should be made from territory as nearly contiguous as possible, but the political necessities of the party which happens to be in the majority at the time the apportionment is made is usually the controlling principle which governs in arranging the districts. From 1812 until 1822 Northumberland, Union, Columbia, Luzerne and Susquehanna formed a senatorial district. The following are the persons who represented the district during that time:

1812, William Ross; 1814, Thomas Murray, Jr.; 1816, Charles Fraser; 1818, Simon Snyder; 1819, Robert Willet; 1820, Redmond Conyngham; 1822, Jonah Brewster represented the district, which was composed of the counties of Susquehanna, Bradford and Wyoming; 1825, John Ryon; 1829, Samuel McKean; 1830, Reuben Wilber; 1833, Almon H. Read; 1837, Elihu Case represented Susquehanna and Bradford, and in 1841 Asa Dimock represented the same; in 1844, William H. Dimmick represented Susquehanna, Wayne and Wyoming; in 1847, F. B. Streeter represented the same; in 1850, George Sanderson represented Susquehanna, Bradford and Wyoming; in 1853, Wm. M. Piatt; in 1856, E. Reed Myer; 1859, George Landon; 1862, William J. Turrell; 1865, George Landon; 1868, P. M. Osterhout; 1871, L. F. Fitch; 1874, W. W. Watson.

After the new Constitution went into effect Susquehanna and Wayne were placed together, and constitute the Twenty-sixth Senatorial District. The term was lengthened from three years to four years. Under the arrangement the even-numbered districts were to elect their first Senator for two years, and for four years thereafter.

In 1876 Eugene B. Hawley was elected for two years; 1878, William M. Nelson was elected for four years; 1882, William M. Nelson; 1886, Orrin A. Lines.

Of these Senators, Charles Frazer, Jonah Brewster, Almon H. Read, Asa Dimock, F. B. Streeter, William J. Turrell, L. F. Fitch, W. W. Watson, Eugene B. Hawley and Orrin A. Lines were from Susquehanna County.

STATE REPRESENTATIVES.—Representatives to the State Legislature were elected for one year, and the Legislature met annually, until the new constitution went into effect, in 1874, since which time Representatives have been elected for two years, and the sessions are biennial.

Luzerne and Susquehanna were together from 1812 until 1829, then Susquehanna was alone until 1843, after which Wyoming was added until 1850, after which Sullivan was added until 1857, when Susquehanna was alone again until 1864, then Susquehanna and Wyoming were together until 1874, when Susquehanna alone was entitled to two representatives.

1812, Chas. Miner, Benj. Dorrance, for Luzerne and Susquehanna; 1813, Jabez Hyde, Jr.,[1] Joseph Pruner; 1814, Putnam Catlin, Benj. Dorrance; 1815, Redmond Conyngham, Benj. Dorrance; 1816, Jonah Brewster, Geo. Denison; 1817, Jonah Brewster, James Reeder; 1818, Jonah Brewster, James Reeder; 1819, Jonah Brewster, Benj. Dorrance; 1820, Cornelius Cartright, Benj. Dorrance; 1821, Jabez Hyde, Jr., Andrew Beaumont; 1822, Jabez Hyde, Jr., Andrew Beaumont, Jacob Drumheller; 1823, Jabez Hyde, Jr., Elijah Shoemaker, Jacob Drumheller; 1824, Philander Stephens, G. M. Hollenback, Jacob Drumheller; 1825, Philander Stephens, G. M. Hollenbeck, Samuel H. Thomas; 1826, Philander Stephens, Garrick Mallery, Samuel H. Thomas; 1827, Almon H. Read, Garrick Mallery, George Denison; 1828, Isaac Post, Garrick Mallery, George Denison; 1829, Almon H. Read, Susquehanna alone; 1833, Bela Jones; 1834, Joseph Williams; 1835, Bela Jones; 1836–37, Asa Dimock; 1838–39, Charles Chandler, Jr.; 1840, Franklin Lusk; 1841, Dr. Calvin Leet; 1842, Franklin N. Avery; 1843–44, Lewis Brush, Thomas Morley, for Susquehanna and Wyoming; 1845–46, David Thomas, Schuyler Fasset; 1847–48, Samuel Taggart, R. R. Little; 1849, Sidney B. Wells, E. Mowry, Jr.; 1850, Isaac Reckhow, E. Mowry, Jr., for Susquehanna, Wyoming and Sullivan; 1851, Isaac Reckhow, Michael Meylert, for Susquehanna, Wyoming and Sullivan; 1852, Ezra B. Chase,

[1] Those in italics were residents of Susquehanna.

John W. Denison, for Susquehanna, Wyoming and Sullivan; 1853, Ezra B. Chase, James Deegan, for Susquehanna, Wyoming and Sullivan; 1854, Charles J. Lathrop, John Sturdevant, for Susquehanna, Wyoming and Sullivan; 1855, Thomas Ingham, John V. Smith, for Susquehanna, Wyoming and Sullivan; 1856, Simeon B. Chase, Alfred Hine, for Susquehanna, Wyoming and Sullivan; 1857–58, Simeon B. Chase, for Susquehanna alone; 1859–60, George T. Frazier, for Susquehanna alone; 1861–62, D. D. Warner, for Susquehanna alone; 1863, George H. Wells, for Susquehanna alone; 1864, George H. Wells and P. M. Osterhout, for Susquehanna and Wyoming; 1865, J. T. Cameron, P. M. Osterhout, for Susquehanna and Wyoming; 1866, J. T. Cameron, Jacob Kennedy, for Susquehanna and Wyoming; 1867, Loren Burritt, Ziba Lott, for Susquehanna and Wyoming; 1868, Loren Burritt, A. P. Stephens, for Susquehanna and Wyoming; 1869, A. P. Stephens, Harvey Tyler, for Susquehanna and Wyoming; 1870, E. B. Beardslee, A. B. Walker, for Susquehanna and Wyoming; 1871, E. B. Beardslee, M. Brunges, for Susquehanna and Wyoming; 1872, H. M. Jones, M. Brunges, for Susquehanna and Wyoming; 1873, H. M. Jones, Robert R. Little, for Susquehanna and Wyoming.

In 1874 Susquehanna County alone became entitled to two representatives. The following is the list to the present, 1886:

1874, Samuel Falkenburg, W. W. Williams; 1876, Monroe J. Larrabee, Eben P. Hines; 1878, John W. Cargill, John C. Morris; 1880, Chas. H. Ellis, Chas. A. Hungerford; 1882, Stanley N. Mitchell, Watson T. Barns; 1884, Eugene H. True, George R. Resseguie; 1886, Eugene H. True, William Maxey.

SHERIFFS AND CORONERS.—Prior to 1839 two persons were elected sheriff, of whom the Governor appointed one. Sheriffs and coroners are elected for three years. A sheriff cannot be his own immediate successor. The following-named persons have been elected in Susquehanna since its organization:

	Sheriffs.	Coroners.
1812.	Edward Fuller.	Stephen Wilson.
1815.	Austin Howell.	Philander Stephens.
1818.	Samuel Gregory.	Chapman Carr.
1821.	Philander Stephens.	Daniel Trowbridge.
1824.	Samuel Gregory.	Charles Chandler, Jr.
1827.	Charles Chandler, Jr.	Benjamin J. Dimock.
1830.	Joseph Williams.	Davis D. Warner.
1833.	Charles Avery.	Hiram Finch.
1836.	William Hartley.	Walter Follett.
1839.	Walter Follett.	Thomas Johnson.
1842.	Thomas Johnson.	Jonas Carter.
1845.	Nelson C. Warner.	Wm. B. Handrick.
1848.	Christopher M. Gere.	John Baker.
1851.	Gabriel B. Eldred.	William H. Boyd.
1854.	Fred. P. Hollister.	Benjamin Dix.
1857.	John Young.	Dr. J. Blackman.
1860.	Elias V. Green.	Dr. C. C. Halsey.
1863.	David Summers.	Dr. Braton Richardson.
1866.	S. F. Lane.	Dr. L. A. Smith.
1869.	Wm. T. Moxley.	Dr. C. C. Halsey.
1872.	M. B. Helme.	Dr. C. C. Halsey.
1875.	William White.	Dr. Calvin C. Halsey.
1878.	Benjamin F. McKune.	Dr. Calvin C. Halsey.
1881.	E. P. Pope.	H. D. Baldwin (1 year).
1884.	Zachariah D. Jenkins.	Samuel Birdsall.
1886.		W. W. Strange.

PROTHONOTARIES.—Under the Constitution of 1790 the Governor appointed all the county officers, and in new counties one person frequently held the offices of prothonotary, clerk of the courts, and register and recorder; such was the case in Susquehanna County until 1821.

1812–16, Dr. Charles Fraser, by appointment of Governor Snyder; 1816–20, Jabez Hyde, by appointment of Governors Snyder and Findley; 1816–20, Judge De Haert, as deputy, did all the writing during Mr. Hyde's term; from January, 1821–36, Asa Dimock, Jr., by appointment of Governors Heister, Shulze and Wolf; 1836–39, George Walker, by appointment of Governor Ritner; 1839, George Fuller, by appointment of Governor Porter.

In 1839 the office became elective, and George Fuller was elected.

1842–45–48, John Blanding; 1848, Frederick M. Williams; 1851, Frederick A. Ward; 1854, Sidney B. Wells; 1857, George B. R. Wade; 1860, Edwin M. Turner; 1863–66, Gabriel B. Eldred; 1869. W. F. Simrell, who died in 1870; 1870, J. F. Shoemaker, appointed; 1870, G. B. Eldred; 1873, David Summers; 1876, William W. Simrell; 1879–82, Myron Kasson; 1885, Dewitt A. Titsworth.

REGISTERS AND RECORDERS.—In Susquehanna County the register and recorder is also clerk of the Orphans' Court. This office became separated from the prothonotary's office in 1821.

In 1821, David Post was appointed by Governor Heister; in 1824, William Jessup, and held it nine years under Governors Shulze and Wolf; 1833, Christopher L. Ward held three years under Governor Wolf; 1836, Simon Stevens held one year under Governor Ritner; 1837, Charles Avery held two years under Governor Ritner; 1839, Hiram Finch was appointed by Governor Porter, and he was elected the fall following for three years.

The following persons have been elected since. Hiram Finch held by re-elections until 1848:

1848, Charles L. Brown; 1851, J. T. Langdon; 1854, Jas. W. Chapman; 1857, Charles Neale; 1860, Harmon K. Newell; 1863, Joseph McCain; 1866, J. F. Shoemaker; 1869, Jerome R. Lyons; 1872, H. N. Tiffany; 1875–78, Henry F. Beardsley; 1881, L. H. Lincoln; 1884, Charles S. Page.

TREASURERS.—1812, Isaac Post; 1815, David Post; 1818, Justin Clark; 1821, Charles Avery; 1824, Mason S. Wilson; 1825, J. W. Raynsford; 1826, Hiram Finch; 1828, Davis Dimock, Jr.; 1831, C. L. Ward; 1832, William Foster; 1834, Davis Dimock, Jr.; 1835, George Fuller; 1837, Henry J. Webb; 1839, Moses C. Tyler; 1841, Moses C. Tyler (elected); 1843, Davis D. Warner; 1845, Walter Follett; 1847, Harvey Tyler; 1849, O. G. Hempstead; 1851, William K. Hatch; 1853, D. R. Lathrop; 1855, S. A. Woodruff; 1857, C. W. Mott; 1859, D. W. Titus; 1861, Amos Nichols; 1863, Nicholas Shoemaker; 1865, Charles B. Dodge; 1867, Richard V. Kennedy; 1869, Benjamin Glidden; 1871, Tracy Hayden; 1873, Edwin G. Taylor; 1875, Henry C. Tyler; 1878, A. B. Burns; 1881, H. L. French; 1884, William A. Southwell.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.—County commissioners are elected for three years, and it was arranged so that one commissioner should be elected each year. To inaugurate this plan, it became necessary to elect the first Board of Commissioners for terms of one, two and three years. This arrangement continued from 1812 until 1875, when the new Constitution went into effect. This Constitution provides for the election of all three of the commissioners at one time for the term of three years, and each qualified elector is only permitted to vote for two persons for that office, thereby securing one commissioner to the party which is in the minority. The county auditors are also elected in the same manner since 1875.

COMMISSIONERS.—1812, Bartlett Hinds, 1 year; 1812, Laban Capron, 2 years; 1812, Isaac Brownson, 3 years; 1813, Jonah Brewster, 3 years; 1814, Hosea Tiffany; 1815, Stephen Wilson; 1816, Sylvanus Hatch; 1817, Daniel Ross; 1818, Philander Stephens; 1819, Samuel Warner; 1820, Joseph Washburn; 1821, Philo Bostwick; 1822, Hosea Tiffany, Jr.; 1823, Simon Stevens; 1824, Edward Packer; 1825, Charles Avery; 1826, Walter Lyon; 1827, Ansel Hill; 1828, Joseph Williams; 1829, William Hartley; 1830, Joseph Washburn; 1831, Calvin Summers; 1832, Arad Wakelee; 1833, Jonathan C. Sherman; 1834, Cyrus H. Avery; 1835, Charles Tingley; 1836, Robert Griffis; 1837, John Comfort; 1838, Edward Heald; 1839, Thomas Burdick; 1840, Nathaniel Norris; 1841, William G. Handrick; 1842, Abel Hewitt; 1843, Alonzo Williams; 1844, Isaac Reckhow; 1845, Jonas Carter; 1846, Nathaniel West; 1847, Elisha P. Farnam; 1848, David O. Turrell; 1849, John Murphy; 1850, Shubael Dimock; 1851, John Hancock; 1852, Amos Williams; 1853, Amherst Carpenter; 1854, Joseph Smith; 1855, William T. Case; 1856, Perrin Wells; 1857, Orange Mott, Jr.; 1858, Levi S. Page; 1859, C. M. Stewart; 1860, J. B. Cogswell; 1861, James Leighton; 1862, Nelson French; 1863, John B. Wilson; 1864, David Wakelee; 1865, J. T. Ellis; 1866, B. M. Gage; 1867, Samuel Sherer; 1868, J. T. Ellis; 1869, Preserved Hinds; 1870, Edward L. Beebe; 1871, Oscar Washburn; 1872, Lyman Blakeslee; 1873, Edwin G. Ball; 1874, Eli Barns.

In 1875 David O. Minklin, Edward G. Ball and Matthew E. Ryan, were elected for three years each, being the first Board of Commissioners under the new Constitution; 1878, William H. Sherwood, Merrick T. Whitney and Chas. Delhanty; 1881, M. T. Whitney, Esick P. Bailey, L. Griffis; 1884, Frederick M. Woodhouse, James E. Curtis, Dennis Casey.

COMMISSIONERS' CLERKS.—Jonah Brewster was the first commissioners' clerk, and served for one year, 1813. Dr. Asa Park was the second clerk, and Almon H. Read served for five years, from January 1815, to January 1820. He was succeeded by William Jessup, who served from January 1820, to January 1826, a period of six years. George Fuller was then appointed, and served three years and two months, and was succeeded in March, 1829, by E. Kingsbury, Jr., who served one year and ten months. B. Streeter served eight months, and Jas. W. Chapman four months of the year 1831. Davis Dimock, Jr., served for the year 1832, and Charles Avery for the year 1833; then Secker Meylert was appointed and served for seven years, from January 1834, to January, 1841. Asa Dimock served for the year 1841, when Robert J. Niven was appointed, and served eleven years and four months, from January 1842, until May, 1853, when William A. Crossmon was appointed, and served twenty-three years and eight months, and was succeeded, January 1, 1876, by G. B. Eldred, who served one year and three months, when he resigned to take a position in the Montrose Bank, and was succeeded by D. W. Gidden, who served one year and nine months, when he was succeeded by E. G. Ball, the present incumbent.

JURY COMMISSIONERS. — 1870, Charles Sprout, James O. Bullard; 1873, William A. Crossmon, Daniel Brewster; 1876, Henry P. Robbins, Stephen E. Carpenter; 1879, David Marsh, James Lonagan; 1882, Leander Lott, George Harvey; 1885, Alonzo W. Miles, Charles E. Lowe.

AUDITORS.—The following persons have been elected auditors since 1840:

1840, John Young; 1841, Daniel B. Sneden; 1842, Joel Turrell; 1843, Benj. Thomas; 1844, Loren T. Farrar; 1845, Ira N. Hawley; 1846, Francis Quin; 1847, John Smiley; 1848, George Baldwin; 1849, Almon Spoor, C. D. Cobb, 2 years; 1850, M. J. Mumford; 1851, James E. Howe; 1852, Norman Foot; 1853, J. M. Cargill; 1854, O. S. Beebe; 1855, D. D. Brown; 1856, D. P. Tiffany; 1857, G. T. Frazier; 1858, John F. Dean; 1859, Chauncey Wright; 1860, Stephen W. Budd; 1861, R. S. Ashby; 1862, W. M. Singly; 1863, Mahlon C. Stewart; 1864, John F. Deans; 1865, L. M. Turrell; 1866, Eli Barnes; 1867, F. B. Chandler; 1868, Tracy Hayden; 1869, Henry M. Jones; 1870, Amos Nichols; 1871, M. S. Catlin; 1872, J. T. Ellis; 1873, John B. Johnson; 1874, M. Prichard; 1875, William Wheelock, Martin L. Catlin, Lewis B. O'Doud; 1878, Joseph Jameson, J. H. Munger, Abner Griffis; 1881, A. W. Kent, E. C. Inderlied, Abner Griffis; 1884, Jeremiah H. Munger, Harry H. Craver, Ernest D. Sutton.

COUNTY SURVEYORS.—Prior to 1827 Susquehanna and Bradford Counties constituted a deputy-surveyors' district. From this time until 1850, when the office became elective, the following persons were appointed deputy-surveyors for Susquehanna County:

1827, Adolphus D. Olmstead; 1830, Jas. W. Chapman; 1833, John Boyle; 1836, Issachar Mann; 1839–47, John Boyle; 1847–50, O. S. Beebe; 1850, O. S. Beebe; 1853, Timothy Boyle; 1856, Joel Turrell; 1859, Wilson J. Turrell; 1862–65–68, Jas. W. Chapman; 1871, O. S. Beebe; 1874–77, Jas. W. Chapman; 1886, Lorenzo D. Benson.

CHAPTER IX.

THE BENCH AND BAR.

IN 1682 William Penn divided the province of Pennsylvania into the three counties, Philadelphia, Chester and Bucks. Bucks embraced the northeastern portion of the province. In 1752 Northampton County was organized. In order to govern the Yankees more effectually, Northumberland County was formed March 21, 1772. It was found that the Connecticut claimants did not recognize the authority of the proprietaries any better from Sunbury, the county-seat of Northumberland, than they did from Easton, the county-seat of Northampton; consequently the northern part of Northumberland was elected into the county of Luzerne, by act 25th of September, 1786; and by act February 21, 1810, Susquehanna County was set off from Luzerne. The pioneer settlers attended court at Wilkes-Barre until 1812. This court was organized under the first Constitution of this State, May 27, 1787, at the house of Colonel Zebulon Butler, in Wilkes-Barre, by Timothy Pickering, James Nesbitt, Obadiah Gore, Nathan Kingsley, Benjamin Carpenter, Mathias Hollenback and Wm. H. Smith, who had been commissioned justices of the Court of Common Pleas.

After proclamation made by Lord Butler, high sheriff, for all persons to keep silence, the commissions of the county officers were read and the oaths administered by Timothy Pickering and Colonel Dennison. Timothy Pickering, who was a lawyer of fine abilities and who had great tact in managing the Connecticut claimants, was chosen prothonotary, register and recorder and clerk of the court. The second court was held September, 1787, Obadiah Gore, president.

In 1790 the county was divided into townships under Pennsylvania authority. These townships were organized into ten districts, for the election of justices of the peace. Among these districts were the Sixth District, which was formed from Braintrim and Wyalusing, having two hundred and twenty-five taxables, who elected H. D. Champion, Jonathan Stevens and Guy Wells justices. The Ninth District was Rush, with one hundred and three taxables, who elected Isaac Hancock justice. The Tenth District, which was composed of Willingborough, Lauesville and Nicholson townships, with two hundred and eighty-six taxables, elected John Marcy, Thomas Tiffany and Asa Eddy justices. The county of Susquehanna was comprised in these ten election districts. Those first townships were somewhat indefinite as to boundaries, and have since been divided and changed by the erection of new townships and new counties. Some of these township names also have disappeared. The first court-house in Wilkes-Barre was located on the site of the old fort, in the public square. It was built of hewn logs, twenty-five by fifty feet, and two stories high, with outside steps leading to the court-room on the second floor.

The first story was used as a jail and jailor's residence, and the second story contained the court-room. "[1]This primitive temple of justice was completed in 1791, and Stephen Tuttle, whose good wife placed her cake and beer sign over the door of the first story, was appointed first jailor." In 1804 a new court-house was erected on the site of the old one. The judges of the Supreme Court, who sat in these court-houses, were McKean, Tilghman, Breckenridge, Smith and Yeates. Judge Conyngham, in his address in 1856, on the occasion of the laying of the corner-stone of the third court-house at Wilkes-Barre said: "There were some ceremonies connected with the courts now entirely abrogated. At the opening of every term the sheriff, with his staff of office, attended by the crier of the court, and frequently by several constables, waited upon the judges at their lodgings, and then conducted them in formal procession to the court-house. Judges McKean, Smith and others, of the Supreme Court, always wore swords when they attended court, some bearing rapiers and other heavier weapons." These Supreme Court judges started from Philadelphia on horseback, with their library in a pair of saddle-bags, holding about half a bushel, and their law in their heads. They were usually accompanied by lawyers, and after they arrived at Easton, usually more lawyers would join this itinerant court. They had to take such fare as they could get, and that was not always the best. There was a log tavern in the backwoods of Pike County, on one of the old State roads, where the "court" sometimes stopped over-night. One time they came there late at night, after the occupants had all retired. After making considerable noise they succeeded in rallying the host, who stuck his head out of the window and asked, "What do you want?" The judges, who were sitting on their horses, replied, "We want to stay here all night." "Stay there then," said the host, and down went the window; but he finally relented and gave them shelter for the night. Judge Jessup, in his address at the inauguration of the Wilkes-Barre court-house, in 1859, says that he well remembered "when the court set out from Wilkes-Barre, followed by the bar on horseback, through Cobb's Gap, Wayne, Pike and Susquehanna Counties, bringing up at Bradford County." These old-time judges put on a great deal of dignity in court, but when they and the lawyers were traveling together they were as jovial a set of fellows as could be found in the State. "Court week" had a significance then which is not attached to it now. The traveling court, with the attending attorneys, created quite a stir at the county-seats in the pioneer days. The common people looked upon judges and lawyers with more awe and reverence then than now, and there was more litigation in proportion to the number of inhabitants. There were land titles to adjust, and suits growing out of the bark and lumber interests came a few years later. This class of civil suits has disappeared with the forests, and land titles are becoming settled. Jacob Rush, Thomas Cooper and Seth Chapman presided over the courts of Luzerne from 1790 to 1812.

In 1813 John Bannister Gibson, one of the ablest judges that Pennsylvania ever produced, held the first court in Susquehanna County, in the house of Isaac Post.

The first organization of the courts of Susquehanna County was made under the Constitution of 1790.

The act of February 21, 1810, erecting Susquehanna County, provided in the third section thereof, "That for the present convenience of the inhabitants of the said counties of Ontario (now Bradford) and Susquehanna, and until an enumeration of the taxable inhabitants of the said counties shall be made; and it shall be otherwise directed by law, the said counties of Ontario and Susquehanna shall be and the same are hereby annexed to the counties of Luzerne and Lycoming, in like manner as before the passage of this act, and the jurisdiction of the several courts of the counties of Luzerne and Lycoming, and the authority of the judges thereof shall extend over and shall operate and be effectual within the said counties of Ontario and Susquehanna, and that the electors within the said counties shall continue to elect at the same places, and with the counties of Luzerne and Lycoming, as heretofore." As the counties of Northumberland, Lycoming and Luzerne constituted the Eighth Judicial District, the above act continued Susquehanna County in that district until the act of March 24, 1812. Section I. changed the name of Ontario to Bradford; Section II. enacted "that from and after the second Tuesday of October next, the inhabitants of the counties of Bradford, Tioga, Wayne and Susquehanna shall each enjoy and exercise in judicial concerns, all and singular, the jurisdictions, powers and privileges whatsoever, within the same, which the inhabitants of other counties do, may or ought to enjoy, by the constitution and laws of this commonwealth."

[1] "Annals of Luzerne," page 243.

Section III. provides "that the counties of Bradford, Tioga, Wayne and Susquehanna be, and the same are hereby erected into a separate judicial district or circuit, to be called the Eleventh District, and a person of legal knowledge and integrity to be appointed and commissioned by the Governor to be president and judge of the Courts of Common Pleas within the said district," and two other proper persons were to be appointed in each county as associate judges, to have jurisdiction after the second Tuesday of October, as judges of the Courts of Common Pleas, Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery, Orphans' Court and Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace. These judges were to be sworn by the prothonotary of Luzerne County and their oaths filed in the respective counties. Section VII. provided for the election of commissioners in each county to erect a courthouse, prison and county offices; and the first court of Susquehanna is ordered to be held at Montrose, in the house of Isaac Post.

The first record of any court in Susquehanna County reads as follows:

"SUSQUEHANNA COUNTY SS.

"At a Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, held at Montrose, in and for the County of Susquehanna, on the fourth Monday of January, 1813, Before the Honorable John B. Gibson, President of the Court of Common Pleas, and William Thomson and Davis Dimock, Judges of the same Court, came the Sheriff of the said county and returned the several writs and processes to him directed and returnable here the same day, among which he produced a certain 'venire facias juratores,' with a panel thereto annexed, which, being called over, the following persons appeared: Walter Lyon, Phineas Aims, Jacob Roberts, Isaac Brownson, Jonathan West, James Thayer, Jedediah Salmon, Luther Dean, Wright Chamberlain, Joseph Chapman, William C. Turrel, James Cook, Edward Dimock, John Belcher, Amos Harding, Noah Alden, Jirah Stephens, Noah Tiffany, Asahel Swelt, Joseph Raynsford, Thomas Scott."

This first grand jury was dismissed by the court. The commissions of the judges, sheriff and prothonotary were read. "25th January, 1813, on motion by Mr. Wilson, Ebenezer Bowman was admitted and sworn as an attorney of this court." Then, on motion of Mr. Bowman, David Scott, Garrick Mallery, Nathan Palmer, Putnam Catlin and Henry Wilson were admitted and sworn as attorneys of this court. Benjamin Lathrop was appointed constable of Bridgewater township, and it was ordered that all applications to be recommended to the Governor for tavern licenses be made at the April sessions. There were petitions presented to this court for the appointment of viewers for eighteen different roads and the review of two others. These viewers were all appointed, and most of the roads asked for were subsequently granted. Another petition asked for viewers for a bridge across the Wyalusing, near Joab Picket's. Joshua W. Raynsford, Isaac Post, Luther Dean, Isaac Peckins, Stephen Wilson and Jonah Brewster were appointed. There were also petitions praying for new townships to be called Choconut, Gibson and Lenox. Joab Picket was appointed constable of Rush. The first suit in Quarter Sessions was brought by the overseers of the poor of Clifford against David Taylor, for the maintenance of a pauper —Scott for the plaintiff, and Mallery for the defendant. Both of these men who were engaged in this petty suit afterwards became distinguished judges. The first commonwealth case was against Obadiah Green, David Green and Charles Mattison, who were ordered "to give security to keep the peace and be of good behaviour towards all the good citizens of this commonwealth, and more particularly towards Isaac Post and John Bennet." Hon. John B. Gibson presided over the Eleventh District for about three years, until 1816, when he was elevated to the Supreme Bench of the State, where he maintained his position until his death, May 3, 1853. He was a Pennsylvanian, born 1780. His clear and forcible opinions given in the Supreme Court reports are regarded as among the very best by the legal profession. Hon. Thomas Burnside, who also became a Supreme Court judge (a quarter of a century later, January 2, 1845, commissioned by Governor Shunk), succeeded him in September, 1816. He presided until 1818, when, by act of February 25, 1818, the Thirteenth Judicial District was erected, embracing the counties of Susquehanna, Bradford and Tioga. Hon. Edward Herrick was appointed presiding judge of this new district, and held his position from August, 1818, until his term expired by constitutional limitation under the Constitution of 1839. He had presided for nearly twenty-one years. Hon. John N. Conyngham succeeded him in May, 1839.

By the act of April 12, 1840, taking effect from and after the 1st of the following January, Luzerne was transferred from the Eleventh District to the Thirteenth, and Susquehanna from the Thirteenth to the Eleventh. Hon. William Jessup then presided in the Eleventh District, and by this transposition the residences of Judges Conyngham and Jessup were placed within their respective districts. Jessup first presided in Susquehanna County at April term, 1841.

By act of April 1, 1836, Monroe County was erected out of portions of Northampton and Pike and placed in the Eleventh Judicial District. This continued until the act of April 10, 1844, detached Monroe from the Eleventh District and united it with Carbon and Schuylkill, to form the Twenty-first District, leaving the Eleventh composed of Susquehanna, Wayne and Pike. No further change was made until act of April 5, 1849, when Wayne, Pike, Monroe and Carbon were erected into the Twenty-second District, and the Eleventh District was composed of Luzerne, Susquehanna and Wyoming.

In 1850 a constitutional amendment was adopted making the judiciary elective, fixing the term of the president judge at ten years from the first Monday of December following the election, and that of associate judges at five years; and vacating the commissions of all judges holding by appointment on the first Monday of December.

By act of 15th April, 1851, Bradford and Susquehanna Counties constitute the Thirteenth District.

Hon. David Wilmot was the first judge elected under the new Constitution, in October, 1851. He held the office until the summer of 1857, when he resigned to accept the Republican nomination for Governor. Hon. Darius Bullock was appointed to fill the vacancy, with the understanding that he should resign in case Wilmot was defeated. It so happened that Wilmot was defeated in his gubernatorial aspirations by William F. Packer, and Judge Bullock resigned after having presided a few months, and Mr. Wilmot was reappointed to preside in January, 1858, and re-elected the following fall for ten years. He resigned the judgeship to accept the United States Senatorship in March, 1861, and Hon. Ulysses Mercur was appointed to succeed him, and the following October he was elected for a full term of ten years. He resigned the judgeship March 4, 1865, to accept a seat in the Thirty-ninth Congress, which he held by re-election through the Fortieth, Forty-first and Forty-second Congresses, when he was elevated to the Supreme Court, and eventually became chief justice, a position which he held at the time of his death, in 1887.

Hon. Farris B. Streeter was appointed to fill the vacancy in 1865, and the following October elected to the same office for a full term.

By act of March 1, 1870, it was enacted that an additional law judge should be elected in the Thirteenth District.

Hon. Paul D. Morrow was appointed to this office March 1, 1870, and elected the following October for ten years from December, 1870.

By act of April 9, 1874, under the new Constitution, Susquehanna County constitutes the Thirty-fourth Judicial District. As Judge

Streeter resided in Susquehanna, and Judge Morrow resided in Bradford, it accommodated them both to have each preside in his home district. Judge Streeter accordingly presided in Susquehanna. He was re-elected over Ralph B. Little, in 1875, for a full term, and died in August, 1877.

Hon. William H. Jessup was appointed to fill the vacancy by Gov. Hartranft, and presided for about sixteen months, until the first Monday of January, 1879. Hon. J. B. McCollum, the present judge, having been elected the fall previous, was commissioned for a full term from the first Monday of January, 1879.

ASSOCIATE JUDGES.[1]

Davis Dimock and William Thompson were appointed associate judges for this county at its organization, in 1812. The terms of all the judges were then "during good behavior;" but the resignation of Judge Thompson, after serving twenty-five years, created a vacancy which was filled by the appointment of Isaac Post in October, 1837, who served a little over five years. The limitation imposed by the Constitution terminated Judge Dimock's services after nearly twenty-eight years, and Jabez Hyde was appointed in his place, March, 1840. His death, about eighteen months afterward, created a vacancy, and Benjamin Lathrop was appointed in his place, November, 1841. He served five years.

Dr. Calvin Leet succeeded Judge Post, February, 1843, for five years.

Moses C. Tyler succeeded Judge Lathrop, March, 1847, for five years, nearly.

Charles Tingley succeeded Judge Leet in March, 1848. His term lasted only three and one-half years, as the amendment to the Constitution for the election of judges cut him off, and John Boyle and Davis D. Warner were elected associate judges for five years, in the Fall of 1851.

Urbane Burrows and Charles F. Read were elected in the fall of 1856.

Charles F. Read (second term) and I. P. Baker were elected in 1861.

Alfred Baldwin and R. T. Ashley were elected in 1866.

James W. Chapman and Judson H. Cook were elected in 1871.

ATTORNEYS FROM OTHER COUNTIES ADMITTED TO THE BAR OF SUSQUEHANNA COUNTY, FROM THE YEAR 1813 TO 1840.

WHEN ADMITTED.	NAMES.	COUNTIES.
1813, Jan. Term ...	Eben'r Bowman	Luzerne.
"	David Scott	"
"	Garrick Mallery	"
"	Nathan Palmer	"
"	Putnam Catlin[1]	"
"	Henry Wilson	"
1813, Apr. Term ...	Ethan Baldwin	Bradford.
1813, Aug. Term ...	Roswell Welles	Luzerne.
	Alpheus C. Stewart	"
	George Denison	"
	Thomas Graham	"
	John Evans	"
	Thomas Dyer	"
	Edward Herrick[2]	Bradford.
1813, Nov. Term ...	Luther Barstow	"
1814, Aug. Term ...	Thomas B. Overton	Luzerne, Bradford.
1817, Sept. Term ...	Josiah H. Minor	Wayne.
"	Nathaniel B. Eldred	"
1818, May Term ...	Thomas Welles
1818, Dec. Term ...	Amzi Fuller	Wayne.
1819, Aug. 31 ...	Horace Williston[3]	Bradford.
1819, Sept. 2 ...	Latham A. Burrows
1820, Jan. 31 ...	Oristus Collins	Luzerne.
1821, Jan. 29 ...	Chester Butler	"
"	John N. Conyngham	"
1821, Feb. 2 ...	Simon Gages Throop	"
1821, Sept. Term ...	Dan Dimmick	Pike.
"	James W. Bowman	Luzerne.
"	Thomas W. Morris	"
1824, Feb. Term ...	Stephen Strong	Oswego.
1824, Aug. Term ...	Wm. Seymour
1825, Aug. Term ...	Henry Pettebone	Luzerne.
"	Benjamin A. Bidlack	"
1826, Sept. Term ...	Thomas Fuller	Wayne.
1826, Dec. Term ...	Ezra S Sweet	Owego.
"	David Woodcock
1830, May Term ...	George B. Westcott	Wayne.
1830, Aug. Term ...	Robert Charles Johnson	Broome.
1831, Aug. Term ...	George W. Woodward	Luzerne.
1833, Dec. Term ...	Volney L. Maxwell	"
1834, Dec. Term ..	Luther Kidder	"
1835, May Term ...	David Wilmot	Bradford.
1836, May Term ...	Lewis Jones	Luzerne.
1840, Nov. Term ...	Hendrick B. Wright	"
	And many later admissions

RESIDENT ATTORNEYS.

WHEN ADM'D	NAMES.	WITH WHOM STUDIED.
1814, Apr.	Charles Catlin	Attorney from Luzerne.
1816, Sept.	Almon H. Read	Attorney in Vt. Ex'd.
1817, May 5	Benjamin T. Case	Attorney in Bradford Co.
1818, Dec.	George Catlin	At Wilkes Barre (?)
1820, Feb. 2	William Jessup	A. H. Reed.
1821, Apr.	Balthazer De Haert
1823, Feb. 3	James A. Gordon
1826, May 1	Earl Wheeler
1828, Sept. 1	Benjamin Parke	Attorney from Harrisburg.
1828, Sept. 2	Ebenezer Kingsbury, Jr.	Wm. Jessup.
1830, Aug. 30	Barzillai Streeter
1830, Nov. 29	John J. Wurts

[1] Under the Constitution of 1874, a single county having forty thousand inhabitants is entitled to have a presiding judge, and constitutes a separate judicial district, in which case the office of associate judge is abolished. This provision of the Constitution abolished the office of associate judge in Susquehanna County.

[1] 1787, first court, May 29. In 1794, when he and E. Bowman, the only lawyers in Luzerne, declined to serve, two lawyers from Connecticut were imported.

[2] Now president judge.

[3] Horace Williston was a native of Sheffield, Conn., and the youngest brother of the late Seth Williston, D.D. He studied law in Elmira; practiced in Binghamton, and also in Susquehanna County courts, many years, even after his removal to Athens, Bradford County. He was eminent in his profession, and distinguished for strict integrity and love of justice. He was president judge of the Thirteenth Judicial District. He died August 14, 1855.

When Adm'd.	Names.	With whom Studied.
1830, Dec. 3	Cephas J. Dunham	Attorney from Northampton.
1831, Jan. 31	Franklin Lusk
"	Norman I. Post
1831, Aug. 30	Rinaldo D. Parker
1832, May 1	William Wurts	J. J. Wurts.
1832, Apr. 30	Thomas P. Phinney	Attorney from Luzerne.
1833,	Davis Dimock, Jr	B. T. Case
183 ,	Albert L. Post	Wm Jessup.
1834, Nov. 17	Wm. C. Tiffany	B. T. Case.
1836, May 5	James C. Biddle	Wm. Jessup.
1836, Nov. 22	Ralph B. Little	Wheeler, Case, & D. Wilmot Dimock.
1837,	Chris'r L Ward	Wm. Jessup.
1837,	Philip Fraser	"
1838, May 8	Joseph T. Richards	"
"	Harris W. Patrick	A. L. Post.
1838,	Lyman De Wolf	Attorney from Bradford.
1838, Sept. 4	Ariel Carr	A. L. Post.
"	Wm. J. Turrell	"
"	Robert J. Niven	Wm. Jessup.
1839, Feb. 5	Benjamin S. Bentley	"
"	J. R. Barstow	"
1839, May 8	Sylvester Abel	"
1840, Apr. 27	George H. Welles
"	Almon Virgil	Attorney from Warren.
1840, Nov.	Sabin Hatch	F. Lusk.
1841, Apr. 20	Peter Byrne
"	Farris B. Streeter	Davis Dimock, Jr.
1841, Aug. 18	S. S. N. Fuller	F. Lusk.
1842, Apr.	Franklin Fraser	Wm. Jessup.
"	Ezra Maxon
"	Wm. C. Salmon	F. Lusk.
1843, Aug. 21	Albert Chamberlin	Bentley & Richards.
"	Benjamin F. Smith
"	William Fordham	Wm. J. Turrell & A. Carr.
1844, Aug. 19	John H. Dimock	D. Dimock, Jr.
"	Samuel B. Mulford	Wm. Jessup.
"	George Perkins	A. L. Post.
"	George Baldwin	F. Lusk.
1844,	Charles Kellum	Attorney from N. Y.
1845, Aug. 19	Nahum Newton	Bentley & Richards.
1847, Apr. 19	Galusha A Grow	Little & Streeter.
1847, Aug. 16	John H. McKune	B. S. Bentley.
1847, Nov. 15	E. Henry Little	Attorney from Wayne.
1848, Apr. 17	Owen B. Tyler	R. B. Little.
1848, Aug. 21	La Fayette Fitch	B. S. Bentley.
"	Homer H. Frazier	"
"	John C. Truesdell	R. B. Little.
1849, Aug. 20	Philo C. Gritman
1849, Aug. 21	John C. Fish
1850, Aug. 19	Ezra B. Chase	F. B. Streeter.
"	John C. Miller	Wm Jessup.
"	Martin L. Truesdell	B. S. Bentley.
1851, Jan. 22	Simeon B Chase	F. B. Streeter.
1851, Nov. 17	William H. Jessup	Wm. Jessup.
"	William H. Cooper	"
"	Leonard B. Hinds
"	Lucius Robinson, Jr	F. B. Streeter.
"	G. Clark Lyman	B. S. Bentley.
1852, Aug. 16	Andrew J. Davis	E. B. Chase.
1854, Jan. 16	Frederick A. Case	B. T. Case.
1855, Aug. 20	Urial C. Johnson	W. J. Turrell.
"	J. Brewster McCollum	R. B. Little.
1855, Nov. 19	C. Judson Richardson	Jessups.
1855, Nov. 20	Albert Bushnell	B. S. Bentley.
1856, Apr. 7	Wm. M. Post	R. B. Little.
1857, Aug. 17	H. L. Emmons	Jessups
1857, Nov. 16	C. A. Lyman	S. B. Chase.
1858, Aug. 16	Ira Vadakin	Attorney from Wayne.
1859, Aug 15	Truman L. Case	Jessups.
1859, Nov. 21	Alfred Hand	"
"	Daniel W. Searle	"
"	Orlando C. Tiffany	"
"	Wm. D. Lusk	Little & Post, Sam'l Sherrod.
1859,	F. E. Loomis	Jessups.
1860, Aug. 20	B. S. Bentley, Jr	Bentley & Fitch.
"	Milo J. Wilson	R. B. Little.
"	Rienzi Streeter	F. B. Streeter.
"	Casper W. Tyler	"
1860,	David A Baldwin	Attorney from N. Y.
1862, Jan. 20	Isaac J. Post	Jessups.
1862, Aug. 11	E. W. Smith	J. B. McCollum.
1862, Aug. 22	A. O. Warren	F. B. Streeter.
"	U. F. Hollenback	Bentley & Fitch.
1862, Aug 25	L. M Bunnell	R. B. Little.
1863, Apr. 6	Wm. A. House	"
"	George P. Little	"
1863, Nov. 25	Edwin M. Turner	Attorney from Wyoming.
1865, Apr. 3	James Edward Carmalt	Law School, Cambridge, F. B. Streeter and Jessups.
1866, Aug. 13	Jonathan J. Wright	Bentley & Fitch.
1866, Nov. 12	William H. Frink	A. Chamberlin.
"	Aaron Watson Bertholf	Bentley, Fitch & Bentley.
1868, Apr. 17	Thomas H. B. Lyons	J. B. McCollum.
1868, Aug. 10	Charles L. Catlin	Attorney from D. C.
1868, Aug. 24	Monroe J Larrabee	W. J. Turrell.
1868, Nov. 9	William A. Crossman	F. B. Streeter.
"	Byron O. Camp	J. B. McCollum.
"	Willoughby W. Watson	L. F. Fitch.
"	Huntting C. Jessup	Wm. H. Jessup.
1869, Apr. 12	Charles A. Warren	A. O. Warren.
"	E. L. Blakeslee	Michigan Union Law School and Little.
1869, Aug. 9	Alex. H. McCollum	J. B. McCollum
1869, Nov. 16	George H. Allen	Attorney from Luzerne.
1870, Apr. 27	Eugene B. Hawley	Wm. D. Lusk.
1870, Aug. 17	Benjamin L. Baldwin	Jessups, Crossmon.
1871, Aug. 15	Edgar A. Turrell	Attorney N. Y. Sup. Court
1871, Oct. 17	C E. Baldwin
1872, Jan 8	Stanley N. Mitchell	Carmalt, Crossmon.
"	J. Ferris Shoemaker	Jessups, Crossmon.
1872, Nov. 11	J. T. Richards	Wm A. Crossmon.
"	Wilbur F. Lathrop	Little & Blakeslee.
1875, Apr.	Eugene O'Neill	Hon. J. B. McCollum.
1875, Aug.	Freeman I. Lott	Little & Blakeslee.
1875, Nov.	Chas. N. Warner	" "
1876, Jan.	Mathew M. Riley	" "
"	John S. Courtright	D. W. Searle.
1876, Sept.	D. T. Brewster	L. F. Fitch.
1879, Apr.	Geo. G. Watrous	Wm. J. Turrell.
"	Watson T. Barnes	Little & Blakeslee.
"	Miller S. Allen	" "
1879, Jan.	Samuel F. Lane	Wm. D. Lusk.
1880, Aug.	E. R. W. Searle	Daniel W. Searle.
"	C. E. Lyman
"	Edson W. Safford	J. B. & A. H. McCollum.
1880, Nov.	Andrew B. Smith	McCollum & Watson.
1882, Aug.	Thomas J. Davis	Little & Blakeslee.
"	George A. Post	M. J. Larrabee.
"	W. Nelson Barnes	Little, Blakeslee & Allen.
1883, Apr.	H. W. B. Hewen	W. T. Barnes.
1884, Apr.	John M. Kelly	McCollum & Watson.
1884, Jan.	William E. Williams	" "
1885, Aug.	Brown, David W	Little & Allen.
1886, Apr.	Wm H. Jessup, Jr	W. H. & H. C. Jessup.
1887, Jan.	Richard J. Manning	Miller S. Allen.
	Wm. D. B. Ainey	E. L. Blakeslee.

District Attorneys.—Prior to the year 1850 the attorney-general appointed deputies, who prosecuted commonwealth cases. Since that time the following persons have been elected district attorneys:

1850. John H. Dimock.	1871. James E. Carmalt.
1852. John C. Fish.	1874–77. B. L. Baldwin.
1853–56. Frank Fraser.	1880. Freeman I. Lott.
1856–62. A. Chamberlain.	1883. E. W. Safford.
1865–68. Dan'l W. Searle.	1886. F. I. Lott.

The first lawyers who practiced at Montrose were from outside of the county, mostly from Wilkes-Barre. These itinerant lawyers followed the judges around on horseback, and naturally the Wilkes-Barre lawyers, who had probably many clients among the people of the new county, that they had gained while Susquehanna was under the jurisdiction of Luzerne, were the first to come here. Ebenezer Bowman, David Scott, Garrick Mallery, Nathan Palmer, Putnam Catlin and Henry Wilson were admitted the first term, in January, 1813. The adjoining counties of Bradford and Wayne also furnished some of these itinerants—many of them became men of renown, high in the councils of the nation as legislators or as Supreme Court and presiding judges. Horace Williston, of Athens, Bradford County, practiced here for many years. The members of Susquehanna County bar who became residents of the county, or who were born here, will compare favorably in point of ability and honesty with the members of any bar in the State.

Charles Catlin, who did not remain more than five or ten years; Almond H. Read, Benjamin T. Case, George Catlin, the artist, who never practiced law to any great extent; William Jessup, Balthazer De Haert, who was a deputy prothonotary; James A. Gordon, who soon removed; Earl Wheeler, of Dundaff, who removed to Wayne County, where he lived to a good old age, and was noted for his accuracy in drawing legal papers; Benjamin Parke, who, after living in Harrisburg, became a farmer in this county; Ebenezer Kingsbury, Jr., who removed to Wayne County and became editor of the Herald, the Democratic organ of that county; Barzillai Streeter, John J. Wurtz and Cephas J. Dunham were all the resident lawyers that were admitted between 1814 and 1830. Almon H. Read, Benjamin T. Case and William Jessup were the first trio of able lawyers in the county. Franklin Lusk was admitted in 1831, and may be added to the list of able lawyers. From 1831 to 1836 there were admitted Norman I. Post, who soon after became a merchant; Rinaldo D. Parker, William Wurtz, Thomas P. Phinney, of Dundaff; Davis Dimock, Jr., who died in the prime of life when in Congress; Albert Post, who was deputy State attorney in 1836, and who became a Baptist minister and philanthropist, after practicing about eight years; William C. Tiffany, of Harford; James C. Biddle and Ralph B. Little—the latter became one of the most brilliant lawyers that practiced at the bar; Christopher L. Ward, a newspaper man, who afterwards removed to Bradford; Philip Fraser, Joseph T. Richards, Norris W. Patrick, Lyman D. Wolf, Ariel Carr, William J. Turrell, another able counselor and politician; Robert J. Niven, Benjamin S. Bentley, a good lawyer; J. R. Barstow and Sylvester Abel were admitted prior to 1840. In the decade between 1840 and 1850 the following persons were admitted: George H. Welles, Almon Virgil, Sabin Hatch, Peter Byrne, the first Irish lawyer, who afterwards removed to Scranton; Farris B. Streeter, S. S. N. Fuller, Franklin Fraser, Ezra Maxon, William C. Salmon, who removed to Milford; Albert Chamberlain, Benjamin F. Smith, William Fordham, John H. Dimock Samuel B. Mulford, George Perkins, Charles Kellum, George Baldwin, Nahum Newton, Galusha A. Grow, John H. McKune, who became a president judge in California; E. Henry Little, Owen B. Tyler, La Fayette Fitch, Homer H. Frazier, John C. Truesdell, Philo C. Gritman, John C. Fish.

There are now some forty members of the Susquehanna County bar in active practice. The living members of the bar practicing in the county, in the order of their admission, are William H. Jessup, J. Brewster McCollum, William M. Post, Daniel W. Searle, A. O. Warren, George P. Little, James E. Carmalt, Monroe J. Larrabee, Byron O. Camp, Huntting C. Jessup, Charles A. Warren, E. L. Blakeslee, A. H. McCollum, B. L. Baldwin, Eugene O'Neill, Freeman I. Lott, Charles N. Warner, John S. Courtright, D. T. Brewster, George G. Watrous, Watson T. Barnes, Miller S. Allen, Samuel F. Lane, E. R. W. Searle, C. E. Lyman, Edson W. Safford, A. B. Smith, Thomas J. Davis, George A. Post, W. Nelson Barnes, John M. Kelly, William E. Williams, D. W. Brown, Richard J. Manning, William D. B. Ainey. We follow this brief review of the bar with biographical sketches, beginning with the judiciary.

Hon. William Jessup was born at Southampton, L. I., June 21, 1797, and was graduated at Yale College in 1815. He came to Montrose in 1818, and entered the law-office of Almon H. Read, Esq. The following winter he taught the first term of the Montrose Academy. He was admitted to the bar in February, 1820. His progress at the bar was slow at first. It required several occasions of excitement and deep interest to bring out his ample but at that period latent powers as an advocate; and the doubts and struggles which attended his novitiate only strengthened him for his future brilliant and successful career. January 2, 1824, he was commissioned register and recorder by Governor Shulze, and held the office by re-appointment of Governor Wolf nine years, when he declined another appointment in 1833. In 1838 he was appointed by Governor Ritner president judge of the Eleventh Judicial District of Pennsylvania, which then comprised the counties of Luzerne, Wayne, Pike and Monroe. Upon the accession of Hon. John N. Conyngham to the presidency of the adjoining district, the Legislature made a transfer of the counties of Luzerne and Susquehanna, that accommodated both judges in respect to residence. The Eleventh District then comprised the counties of Susquehanna, Wayne, Pike and Monroe. April 10, 1844, Monroe was detached, leaving the Eleventh District composed of Susquehanna, Wayne and Pike. Upon the expiration of his first constitutional term of ten years on the bench, in 1848, he was re-appointed by Governor Johnston president judge of the Eleventh District, which was changed April 5, 1849, so as to comprise the counties of Luzerne, Susquehanna and Wyoming. He discharged the duties of judge with conscientious fidelity until the first Monday of December, 1851, when his official term expired by virtue of a constitutional amendment, making the judiciary elective. During the thirteen years that he presided in the courts Judge Jessup's district, by various changes, comprised the counties of Bradford, Tioga, Susquehanna, Luzerne, Wayne, Pike and Monroe. He thus gained a wide celebrity in Northeastern Pennsylvania, which extended throughout the State, resulting in his being nominated by the Whigs as one of their five candidates for judge of the Supreme Court, which was then first made elective. Judge Jessup shared the fate of his distinguished compeers: the Whigs, being in the minority, were defeated. He was still in the prime of life, and returned to his favorite profession with all the prestige and experience which he had gained while on the bench. At this time his reputation as a lawyer and advocate was second to none in this section of the State. He was the chosen counsel of the Erie and Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroads, and from 1853 to 1857 was president of the Lackawanna Railroad Company, and had an office on the corner of Wall Street and Broadway, New York. One of his most brilliant forensic triumphs was his defence of the Rev. Albert Barnes, the leader of the New School movement in the Presbyterian Church, who was charged with heresy and tried before the General Assembly of the Church. His style at the bar was perspicuous, pleasing and strongly impressive. As a judge "he was remarkable for clearness and readiness upon any subject within the range of his profession, and for a prompt and proper dispatch of business." "No official entrusted with the power of a judge of the Court of Common Pleas of this State ever held the balances with a deeper-settled conviction to administer the law with purity and impartiality." "Upon the bench his unrelaxed features gave no clue to the working of the mind within. He had a way of tearing slips of paper from his notes, and chewing them rapidly when his mind was in labor, but this only showed agitation; it gave no clue; and counsel on both sides did not know the drift of the matter till it came, in well-measured and strong utterances, to the jury. Then there was no mistaking the legal current, nor was there the least flinching from putting down what would prevent a higher court from having ample means to know what had been done below." Judge Jessup was not so far buried in his profession as to be lost to the social, educational, agricultural, religious and even military interests of the country. Socially he was affable and courteous in his bearing to the humblest of his acquaintances. As early as 1838 he addressed a circular letter to the school directors of the county, asking them, upon his own responsibility, to attend a convention of school directors at the court-house for the purpose of consulting together upon the best method of advancing the school interests. He often made addresses at agricultural fairs at home and elsewhere. In 1856 he delivered an address before the New York State Agricultural Society, at its sixteenth annual fair. He took his stand in favor of the true dignity of labor, and said: "I can never consent that the non-producing class shall claim in any respect a superiority over those who rise in the morning of every day to daily toil, 'who work laboring with their own hands.'" In his earlier days he was colonel of a regiment of militia, and he had the best-drilled regiment in the division. In politics he pursued the course which suited his convictions. In early life he was a Democrat, and was defeated as a candidate of that party for Congress in 1836. In the conflict between Jackson and Adams he took sides with Mr. Clay and remained a Whig until the formation of the Republican party. He was a friend of General Scott, and went to Washington to see him when the War of the Rebellion began. January 5, 1861, he wrote to Hon. Jeremiah Black, Secretary of State, assuring him that the people "demanded bold, strong and decided measures in sustaining the Constitution, the laws and the Union against all aggression." He was appointed, in connection with Colonel Swaim and Judge Swan, of Ohio, to visit Washington in May, 1861, and present the views of the "Nine War Governors," who held a meeting at Cleveland, Ohio, and sent assurances to Lincoln of their support and co-operation. Judge Jessup was zealous in his support of the government during the war. He was also an advocate of temperance. In fact, every good cause seemed to find in him an earnest and able advocate. His scholarship was recognized by Hamilton College, in 1848, by conferring upon him the degree of LL.D. He was a ruling elder and Sunday-school superintendent in Montrose Presbyterian Church for a great many years, where his "glowing arguments and pathetic appeals fitly supplemented the pastor's sermons." His life and character influenced the community where he lived in a marked degree. He was widely known and highly honored in his church; was vice-president of the A. B. C. F. M., and cheerfully gave up two of his sons as foreign missionaries. In July, 1820, he married Amanda Harris, of Long Island, and they had a family of eleven children,—among them Jane R., wife of Col. J. B. Salisbury, of New York; Mary G., wife of F. B. Chandler, of Montrose; Harriet A., wife of Isaac L. Post, of Scranton; Hon. William H. Jessup; Rev. Henry H. Jessup, D. D., professor in the theological seminary at Beirut; and Rev. Samuel Jessup, who has charge of the printing department at Beirut; Fannie M.; George A., vice-president of the Scranton City Bank; Phœbe Ann, deceased, first wife of Judge Alfred Hand, and Huntting C. Jessup, Esq. Judge William Jessup died at Montrose, September 11, 1868, aged seventy-one. His wife died June 13, 1883, in the eighty-fifth year of her age.

HON. WILLIAM JESSUP.

Hon. David Wilmot, author of the "Wilmot Proviso," was a native of Bethany, Wayne County, where he was born in 1814. His father, Randall Wilmot, settled in Dimock township from Bethany about 1832, where he kept a store for some time, but subsequently removed to the shore of Elk Lake, and afterwards left the county. David Wilmot in early life evinced a great love for books, and, with the aids obtained from the library at Woodburne, became well-read in many of its most valuable volumes, and especially versed in those advocating anti-slavery principles. He read law at Wilkes-Barre, was admitted to practice, and subsequently settled at Towanda, Pa. In 1844 he received the unanimous nomination of the Democracy of the Twelfth Congressional District, comprised of Bradford, Tioga and Susquehanna Counties, afterwards known as the "Wilmot District," and was chosen by a large majority. In the Twenty-ninth Congress, which met in December, 1845, was consummated the annexation of Texas, and the "Wilmot Proviso" provided that in any territory acquired from Mexico "neither slavery nor involuntary servitude shall ever exist in any part of the territory, except for crime, etc." Mr. Wilmot was returned to Congress by a unanimous nomination and re-election in 1846, the slavery question not entering into the canvass. In 1850, having received the nomination from his party, the pro-slavery branch of the Democracy set about defeating his return to Congress, whereupon Mr. Wilmot at once offered to give way to any man who should be chosen that would represent the principles for which he had so long and earnestly labored, and, accordingly, Hon. Galusha A. Grow, of Susquehanna County, was named, accepted and elected. Under the provisions of the amendment to the Constitution making the judiciary elective, Mr. Wilmot was chosen president judge of the judicial district comprised of Bradford and Susquehanna Counties in 1851, and presided on the bench until 1857, when he resigned, and became the candidate of the Republican party for Governor. He was defeated by William F. Packer, through the treachery of the Conservative and Know-Nothing leaders, and was restored to his place on the bench, by appointment, in place of Judge Bullock, who had been appointed to fill the vacancy caused by his resignation. Judge Wilmot was re-elected to fill the place, and served until he was elected to the United States Senate, where he took his seat on March 18, 1861, thereby filling the vacancy caused by the selection of Gen. Simon Cameron, by President Lincoln, to be Secretary of War. At the conclusion of his Senatorial term he was appointed by President Lincoln a judge of the Court of Claims, which office he held up to the time of his death, March 16, 1868. David Wilmot obtained a world-wide reputation by his historic "Wilmot Proviso," and honored the district that he represented. He believed in tariff for revenue, and made powerful speeches in advocacy of that doctrine in Congress. He was fearless and outspoken in his opposition to the extension of slavery in the Territories, and by his powerful and persuasive eloquence on the stump carried the district with him, changing it from a strong Democratic to a Republican district, which Hon. G. A. Grow represented with credit to himself and the district for a number of terms, carrying out the views of Mr. Wilmot.

Hon. Farris B. Streeter was born in Harford township September 24, 1819. His father, Dr. Joseph B. Streeter, a native of Connecticut, settled in the township in 1812, where he practiced medicine nearly half a century and died at an advanced age. Farris B. was next to the eldest of six children and was educated at the district school, Harford Academy (an institution then just opened by Preston Richardson) and at Clinton Liberal Institute, Clinton, N. Y. After teaching at Harford Academy for about one year he commenced reading law with Hon. George W. Woodward, of Wilkes-Barre, and finished his course with Davis Dimock, at Montrose, and was admitted to the Susquehanna County bar at April term, 1841, where he continued the practice of law until his appointment as judge. He won his way to honorable distinction as a lawyer in competition with some of the most eminent men who have graced the profession in the county.

He was appointed district attorney by the Governor in 1843 and held the office until 1847. In the fall of 1848 he was elected State Senator from the district composed of Bradford, Susquehanna and Wayne, and served one term of three years. In the summer of 1853 he was appointed solicitor of the treasury, at Washington, by President Pierce, which position he resigned at the beginning of Buchanan's administration. Disapproving of the repeal of the Missouri Compromise and the whole policy of the administration in its dealings with Kansas, he severed his connection with the Democratic party and became a Republican. In March, 1865, on the resignation of Judge Mercur, Governor Curtin appointed him president judge of the Thirteenth District, composed of Bradford and Susquehanna, and he was elected the following fall for a full term. After Susquehanna County became a separate judicial district (the Thirty-fourth) he was elected president judge thereof in the fall of 1875 for the term of ten years. He resigned August 14, 1877, to take effect the 20th inst., but before the expiration of that time, Sunday, August 19th, death closed his earthly career.

In all the relations of life he was an amiable and accomplished man, of tender sensibilities and a kind heart. Modest and unassuming in deportment, he was firm and unyielding in the discharge of duty and in the maintenance of his natural convictions. Cautious and safe as an adviser, fluent and entertaining as a speaker, calm, candid and forcible as an advocate, he commanded the confidence of the jury and enlisted the attention of the court. In a resolution drafted by a committee composed of W. H. Jessup, Franklin Frazer, J. B. McCollum, W. W. Watson and E. L. Blakeslee his character as a judge is summarized in the following resolution:

"That in the discharge of his official duties his well-considered decisions were the result of an impartial and thorough investigation; always cautious, he was slow to act when he feared injustice might be done, and in acts of discretion ever ready to follow the leadings of the moral sense of the community; affable and courteous, he still always maintained a true dignity, and while justice was ever administered with firmness, it was so kindly done as to impress all that it was for the highest good."

His only child, Harry Streeter, is a practicing lawyer at Towanda, Bradford County, Pa.

Paul Dudley Morrow, son of John Morrow, a farmer who settled at Wilmot, Bradford County, in 1823, was born February 17, 1828. He attended the common schools, and was a teacher for two winters. In 1846 he entered Harford Academy, where he prepared for college. He entered Hamilton College in 1848, from which he graduated in 1852. Having read law in the senior year under Professor Dwight, he entered the law-office of Ulysses Mercur, at Towanda, and was admitted to the bar September term, 1853. He was elected district attorney of Bradford County in 1856, and appointed additional law judge of the Thirteenth District, which was composed of Bradford and Susquehanna Counties, March 1, 1870. He was elected to the same office the following fall for ten years. After the new Constitution went into effect, in 1874, Bradford and Susquehanna becoming separate judicial districts, Judge Morrow remained in Bradford and Judge F. B. Streeter resided here. In 1879 Hamilton College conferred the degree of LL.D. on Judge Morrow. In 1880 he was re-elected president judge of Bradford. He occasionally comes to Montrose to try causes in which Judge McCollum is interested.

Hon. William H. Jessup, son of Hon. William Jessup, was born at Montrose February, 1830, and was graduated at Yale College in the class of 1849. He came home and entered as a law student in his father's office. The year following his graduation he taught the Montrose Academy, and was admitted to the bar November 17, 1851. His father took him into partnership, under the firm-name of William & William H. Jessup. Judge Jessup had a wide reputation and an extensive practice in Susquehanna, Bradford, Wayne, Pike and Wyoming Counties. William H. first had charge of the Pike County practice. From this time he gradually took charge of his father's practice, and has been retained in important cases in a number of the adjoining counties. His father was counsel for several railroad companies, and he is counsel for the Erie Railway, Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, Delaware and Hudson Canal Company and Montrose Railway, besides holding several important trusts, the most extensive of which is the trusteeship of the Joseph Fellows estate. August 7, 1863, he was appointed assessor of the Twelfth Internal Revenue District, comprising Luzerne and Susquehanna Counties, to succeed his father, who had resigned, having been appointed by Lincoln the year previous. He held this office until 1865, when Andrew Johnson appointed A. J. Gerritson to succeed him. May 11, 1871, Governor Geary commissioned him major-general of the Tenth Division of the National Guard of Pennsylvania, comprising the counties of Susquehanna and Wayne. Upon the death of Judge Streeter, which occurred in August, 1877, General Jessup was appointed presiding judge of the Thirty-fourth District, a position which he held for about sixteen months, until January, 1879. After his successor was chosen he immediately resumed law practice in connection with his brother, Huntting C. Jessup, Esq. January 1, 1885, he established a law-office in Scranton in partnership with Isaac J. Post, which continued until Mr. Post died, July 10, 1885. He then associated his son, William H. Jessup, Jr., and Horace C. Hand in partnership with him. He has an extensive corporation and general practice in Lackawanna County; also at Montrose, where his family still reside. Judge Jessup is an able lawyer, studious, and a good speaker. He is a man of restless energy and force; one of those nervous organizations whose mind can never remain idle. In manner brusque and business-like, he impresses you as one who has no time to waste on the common foibles of life. He is a good corporation lawyer and special pleader. He prepares his cases with care, using great diligence in legal research. During the trial of a cause he is alert and ready with objections to his opponents' questionings; still, he is straightforward in presenting a case, trying it upon its merits, without recourse to politic allusions to matters outside of the main issue for the purpose of prejudicing the jury. He does not become all things to all men in order to win the jury, but relies wholly upon the soundness of his legal positions, which he fortifies by an extensive array of precedents and the justness of his cause, which he presents with frankness and candor. These qualities of Judge Jessup impel his contemporaries to admit that he is one of the fairest men at the bar to try a case against, as there is no danger of any side-issue that does not pertain to the case, or jury-fixing at his hands. Mr. Jessup is an active member of the Presbyterian Church and Sunday-school at Montrose, and is esteemed as a conscientious Christian man. He married Sarah W. Jay, of Belvidere, New Jersey. Their children are Lillie, wife of Albert Leisenring, William H. Jessup, Jr., Mary, George, Louisa and Ann.

Engd by A.H. Ritchie

Hon. J. Brewster McCollum was born in Bridgewater township September 28, 1832. He worked on the farm and attended district school until he was seventeen. He attended Harford Academy more or less from 1849 to 1853, and subsequently the State National Law School at Poughkeepsie, where he graduated with the degree of LL.B. He returned to Montrose and read law with R. B. Little, Esq., and was admitted to the bar at August term, 1853. He immediately went to Geneva, the county seat of Kane County, Ill., and entered the law-office of Wm. B. Plato, an old practitioner, under a salary, where he remained about one year. He returned to Montrose in 1856, and in August of that year, in company with A. J. Gerritson, purchased the Montrose Democrat. They conducted the paper until January 1, 1858, when McCollum sold his interest to Gerritson. He then formed a partnership with Nahum Newton in law practice, which lasted about two years. He next formed a partnership with Daniel W. Searle, which continued until Mr. Searle entered the army, in August, 1862. Mr. McCollum had an office over Dessauer's store at that time, and continued alone until November, 1867, when he formed a partnership with Albert Chamberlain, which continued until January 1, 1871, when Chamberlain removed to Scranton to act as internal revenue collector. J. B. McCollum then associated his brother, A. H. McCollum, with himself, which partnership was dissolved when the former was elected presiding judge of the Thirty-fourth District, composed of Susquehanna County. Mr. McCollum took an active interest in politics when a young man, and acted as chairman of the County Committee and occasionally made speeches in the interest of the Democratic party. In 1859 he was the Democratic candidate for district attorney. In 1861 he was nominated for State Representative, and in 1870 he was also nominated for Congress from Luzerne and Susquehanna, but, there being a large Republican majority to overcome, he was defeated in each case. In 1877 he was nominated for presiding judge, and, notwithstanding the county is largely Republican, he was elected by one thousand two hundred and forty majority. Judge McCollum's practice as a lawyer had a steady growth until he was elevated to the bench. While in active practice he gave careful and conscientious attention to all matters that were placed in his hands. He prepared his cases carefully and tried them well. His arguments were concise and pointed; sometimes, when pressed in a forensic contest, he was somewhat sarcastic, but never without provocation. He impressed the jury with his candor by admitting many facts in his opponent's favor, but he reasoned logically and contended earnestly for the main issue. Judge McCollum has a profound knowledge of the law, a discriminating judgment and an equitable disposition—qualities which make him an exceeedingly fair and impartial judge. In his charges to the jury he states the law clearly, comments upon the evidence fairly, and leaves the question of fact to the jury without indicating his opinion. These equitable qualities of mind command the respect and confidence of the Montrose bar and the general public, not only at home, but in other counties where he has been called upon to preside. When Judge McCollum first took his seat on the bench the trial-list docket was loaded down with cases and the court business was about two years behind. The cases have been disposed of and causes can now be heard in a reasonable time. Judge McCollum is affable and courteous to all without affectation; young and old alike find him a pleasant and companionable man. The confidence of the bar in his decisions is well shown by the fact that only twelve writs of error to the Supreme Court have been taken from Susquehanna County during the eight years that he has presided, and the Supreme Court have reversed his decisions only twice in this district during that time. He married Mary Jane, daughter of Daniel Searle, and has two sons—Searle and Charles.

Charles Catlin, son of Putnam Catlin, Esq., was admitted to practice in Susquehanna County in April, 1814, from Luzerne County, and became a resident a few years later. He built the house on the corner, across from the court-house, where Mr. Webb lives. He advertised lands for sale and did some business for several years, and finally went up to Buffalo or Rochester, and here we lose track of him. Charles Catlin, Almon H. Read, Benjamin T. Case and the artist, George Catlin, were the first resident lawyers. Probably George resided with his father a short time here, but his inclinations soon led him into the wilds of America in search of savages as subjects for his pencil and brush. James Catlin, the other brother, was a printer at Montrose a short time. Putnam Catlin, the father, was a lawyer, and in 1787–88, when Luzerne County Courts were organized, he was the attorney-general's deputy for Luzerne. He was also admitted here in 1813, but it does not appear that he ever practised law in Susquehanna County. He was cashier of the Silver Lake Bank when it was first organized, treasurer of the Milford and Owego Turnpike for seven or eight years, agent for the Wallace lands, and, generally speaking, a prominent man in the early affairs of the county. His wife was Polly Sutton, a daughter of one of the early Wyoming Valley settlers.

Benjamin T. Case, son of Captain Benjamin Case, was born in Newburg, N. Y., about 1786. He was educated at Newburg Academy, and read law in the same office with William H. Seward and Martin Van Buren, and was admitted to the bar when he was only about twenty years of age. He came to Great Bend with his father in 1808. After a few years his father removed to Warren, Pa., where Benjamin T. married Anna Coburn, and returned to Susquehanna County and located at Montrose in 1816. May 5, 1817, he was admitted to the Montrose bar, and was one of the first resident attorneys in the place. Mr. Case was a surveyor also, and was employed by Henry Drinker, Dr. Rose, Mr. Cope and other large land-holders to look after their real estate interests in Susquehanna County. He soon became one of the best land lawyers in this part of the State, and had a better knowledge of land titles than any other man in the county. He was secretary of the Owego Turnpike Company for some time, and tried to correct the route and not run the road over all the high hills, but the road was too well established to admit of much change. Mr. Case had an extraordinary memory, and could quote a page of law after reading it once. He was a man of rough exterior, and did not attempt to make an impression by any rhetorical flourish or high-sounding eloquence; yet he was a man of more feeling than appeared on the surface. He was very accurate as a conveyancer, taking great care to leave no defect in the title. He was a man of ability, and somewhat eccentric. He died in 1862, aged seventy-six. He had four sons and two daughters. The sons were William, Charles, Frederick and Benjamin, all of whom are now dead.

Hon. Franklin Lusk was born in the State of New York in 1803, and was graduated at Union College. Daniel S. Dickinson and he read law together in the same office. About 1828 he came to Montrose, and finding it necessary to do something to supply his pressing needs, he taught in the Montrose Academy two winters. January 31, 1831, he was admitted to the Susquehanna County bar, and that same year he married Jane A. Niven. Their only son is William D. Lusk, Esq. In 1840 Col. Lusk represented his district in the Legislature. He was colonel of militia for a number of years. He took Ralph B. Little into partnership at Montrose, under firm-name of Lusk & Little. He also had an extensive practice at Honesdale, in Wayne County, which he conducted in connection with F. M. Crane, Esq., then a young man, under firm-name of Lusk & Little. He was one of the best scholars at the bar, and a fine orator on the stump or before a jury. He was a man of fine presence and exceedingly brilliant and effective before a jury. He was forceful and aggressive, storming the argumentative barriers of his opponents, carrying the war into their own camp regardless of consequences. These qualities rendered him successful as an advocate. During the last few years of his life he lived on a farm at Great Bend. He died in February, 1853, and was buried in the family burying-ground on his farm.

Hon. Davis Dimock, Jr., son of Elder Dimock, was born September 17, 1801, and educated at the Susquehanna County Academy. He read law with Benjamin T. Case, Esq., while he was editor of the Susquehanna Register, and was admitted to the bar in 1833. He was appointed county treasurer in 1834, and was elected to Congress in 1840, and died before his term expired, in January, 1842, when he was just in the prime of manhood, being but thirty-eight years of age. Mr. Bidlack, in the House, and Mr. Buchanan, in the Senate, paid tributes to his worth. Mr. Buchanan said "that he acted well his part in all the relations of life. His judgment was excellent, and under its dictates his course through life was steady, honest and consistent." He married Lydia M. Ward, and left four daughters,—Sarah, wife of D. R. Lathrop; Anna, wife of William L. Cox; Frances, wife of Charles Gee, of Chicago; and Victoria A. Dimock, of Washington.

John H. Dimock, son of Elder Dimock, was born October 30, 1815, and was educated at Susquehanna Academy. While at Harrisburg, as principal of the academy, he commenced reading law. He also read with his brother, Davis, at Montrose, where he was admitted to the bar August 19, 1844. He was the first elected district attorney in 1850. He became a land speculator in the West, and died at Chicago.

Almon Heath Read[1] was born at Shelburne, Vermont, June 12, 1790. He remained at home with his father, working on the farm, until seventeen years of age. He then entered Williams College, Massachusetts, and graduated in 1811. During his collegiate course, on one of his visits home, he gave his views on political affairs, favoring a Democratic policy; and his father, a stern old Whig, threatened that unless he gave up his Democratic notions, he would take him from college and set him to work on the farm. It appears, however, that after his graduation he studied law for two years in Albany, where his political notions were not disturbed.

In 1814 he was drafted into the military service, just before the battle of Plattsburg, and arrived there the day after the battle; his company was disbanded, and thus suddenly ended his military career.

Soon after, he left his home in Vermont, on horseback, with a pair of saddle-bags and a few dollars in his pocket, for the State of Ohio—then the far West—where he expected to settle. But, on reaching Mott's tavern, on the old Newburg turnpike, in New Milford township, the roads were nearly impassable, the mud being knee deep to the horse. He learned that one of his young associates, Col. Wm. C. Turrell, had settled a few miles south of Montrose, and he concluded to turn aside from his route and spend a few days with him, hoping the roads would improve, and that he might then proceed on his journey.

[1] He was often called the "honest lawyer," from the fact that he was never known to engage in a case for a client unless he honestly thought him in the right; and always discouraged the petty litigation so prevalent at the present day.

On reaching Montrose, which was then a new county-seat—the first court having been held the year previous—he was prevailed upon to remain, and was offered the position of clerk to the county commissioners. He applied for admission to the bar of Susquehanna County; but the only settled (?) lawyer then in practice here objected, as he had not pursued the requisite course of study in accordance with the rules of Pennsylvania courts. He was therefore compelled to enter his name as a student in the office of Judge Scott, of Wilkes-Barre. Very soon after, the objection was withdrawn, and he became a regular practitioner.

In 1816 Mr. Read married Miss Eliza Cooper, of Southampton, Long Island, and then settled permanently in Montrose, where he prosecuted his profession[1] (at the same time holding the office of county clerk from January 1, 1815, to January 1, 1820), and became much interested in the progress and growth of the town. He took a lively interest in the establishment of the academy, and later, when the temperance movement was first agitated, he became one of its warmest supporters.

It does not appear that he took any prominent part in politics until about 1827, when he was elected as Representative.

In 1828 he was not a candidate, but was elected in 1829, '30, '31 and '32.

In 1833 he was elected State Senator and served for four years. He was soon after elected State treasurer, which office he held one year, and was then elected a member of the convention to revise the Constitution of Pennsylvania. He took a prominent part in this convention. After its close the chairs occupied by the members were sold at public auction. The one used by Mr. Read was sold for fourteen dollars (being the first choice), and the remaining one hundred and thirty-one seats for prices varying from three to ten dollars.

Soon after he accepted an invitation of the citizens of Erie County to a banquet at Erie, and they there presented him with a beautiful oak cane, having upon it six silver plates bearing the following inscription:

"Presented by the Democratic citizens of Erie County, to Almon H. Read, for his distinguished services in the Convention to reform the Constitution of Pennsylvania.

"Commodore O H. Perry's Victory, Lake Erie, September 11, A.D. 1813.

"'We have met the enemy and they are ours.'

"Taken from the Flag-ship Lawrence, August 4, A.D. 1883."

His name was sent by Gov. Porter to the Senate as president judge of one of the western judicial districts of the State; but the Senate being equally divided between the Democrats and Whigs, the vote was a tie, and his nomination was not confirmed.

In March, 1842, he was elected to Congress to fill the unexpired term of Hon. Davis Dimock, Jr.; and in the fall of 1842 he was re-elected for the years 1843 and 1844. In October, 1843, his wife died, after a short illness; and soon afterwards, whilst on his way to Washington, he took a severe cold, which terminated in consumption, and which, during that session, prevented him to a great extent from participating in its deliberations. Even his political enemies esteemed him a pure legislator.

During his sickness at Washington, in order to show his regret at having been a politician, he said to his son: "Never accept an office from the people. I have always been successful whenever my name came before the electors, for fifteen years, never having been defeated, and all I have ever received as compensation is this (holding up his Erie cane), and a few newspaper puffs; leaving my family in a far different position from that which they probably would have held had I pursued my profession." He died June 3, 1844 in the fifty-fourth year of his age. Mr. Read was a Democrat of the old school, as opposed to the Whig party.

Ralph B. Little, Esq., was born January 21, 1816, in Delaware County, N. Y. When he was about eight years old his parents moved to Bethany, then the county-seat of Wayne. He made the most of the limited opportunities which that small town then afforded for obtaining an education. He studied Latin and Greek under the instructions of Rev. Alexander Campbell, the Presbyterian clergyman of the place, and the natural sciences under Dr. Strong. When about eighteen he commenced to read law with Earl Wheeler, at Bethany, and subsequently removed to Montrose with his parents and entered the law-office of B. T. Case, Esq., where he continued his law studies and was admitted to the bar of Susquehanna County November 23, 1836. Mr. Little was studious in early life, a habit which continued throughout his career. His great ambition was to achieve success as a lawyer, and he bent all his energies to the accomplishment of that object. During his entire brilliant legal career he made and kept at hand a short memorandum of all the decisions of the Supreme Court of this State, commencing with 1st Binney and ending with 28th Smith. Mr. Little was endowed by nature with a superior intellect, and by the practice of strictly moral and temperate habits and untiring and persevering industry as a student he became an able advocate at the bar and a formidable opponent. What he deemed right in law, politics, or anything else, he had the undaunted courage to stand up and advocate or defend, regardless of denunciation or opposition from any source; and men of prudence took issue with him with caution, and those who lacked care in their contests with him were doomed to disaster and defeat. As a speaker his style, in the use of language, was rich, without ornament, natural, bold and concise, with a wonderful facility in the selection of the fittest words to express every shade of thought. His memory was a perfect storehouse of legal authorities, which, with his easy and vigorous style of elocution, made him an advocate of uncommon power, whether before courts or juries. He was the leader of the bar in his time, at Montrose, and commanded the attention of the Supreme Court whenever he advocated a case before them. With all his peculiar gifts, there was one of which he himself seemed scarcely conscious, which was not always a source of gratification even to his friends. This was an aptitude for indulgence, upon occasions of sharp and heated controversy, in a vein of sarcasm so keen as to inspire resentment, yet so adroit as to render resentment powerless for reprisals. Naturally enough, some sores so created were slow to heal; but this sarcastic method was only used under the spur of excitement in his professional zeal. Socially, his manner was eminently kindly and agreeable—sometimes thoughtful and pre-occupied, but never offensive.

[1] Blackman's "History."

R. B. Little

During the first few years of his manhood he acted with the so-called Liberty party—when that party failed to put a ticket in the field he generally voted with the Democratic party; and during the last fifteen years of his life he was an active and leading member of the Democratic party, not as an office-seeker, but from principle. He was the choice of the Democracy of Susquehanna County for Congress in 1868, and was the candidate of that party for presiding judge against F. B. Streeter. Mr. Little was at first a member of the Baptist Church, and during the last years of his life he was a Methodist. His pastor said of him: "Both in the Baptist and Methodist Church, he was granted license to preach as occasion might afford or demand, which permit he improved quite frequently to the edification and profit of the people. His religion was not in name or mere profession. In this, as in everything else, he manifested a distaste for mere assumption or announcement. He sought the reliable, the assurance in his own experience, and he prized it in others. The ostentatious and external to him were secondary. The real spirit was all in all. Modest, retiring, humble himself, he was attracted by the same in others." In his family Mr. Little was the same pure and sincere man as in all the other relations of life. In 1840 he married Phila Ann, one of the daughters of David Post, of Montrose, who survived him about one year. Their children are George P., David and one daughter—Mary—wife of Dr. E. L. Blakeslee, all residents of Montrose.

George Little, father of Ralph B. Little, married Mary Estabrook and was the ancestor of the several families of that name now residing in the counties of Susquehanna, Bradford, Wyoming and Columbia, and also of one located in Illinois; George H., the eldest son, having located at Leraysville, Ralph B. at Montrose, William E. at Joliet, Ill., Robert R. at Tunkhannock, Ephraim H. at Bloomsburg, and Mary E., widow of S. S. Grover, deceased, now resides in Florida. Ralph B. Little died January 26, 1877, aged sixty-one years.

Hon. Philip Fraser, son of Dr. Charles Fraser, was born, January 27, 1814, at Montrose. He was graduated from Union College in 1836. He read law with William Jessup, and was admitted to the bar of Susquehanna County in 1837. He removed to Florida in 1841, and married a Spanish lady there. During the War of the Rebellion the Federal fleet came there, and the Unionists in the vicinity held a meeting, expressing their sentiments in favor of the Union. The fleet sailed away, and Mr. Fraser and some others found it prudent to leave the South for a time. He purchased a place at Elizabeth, N. J., which his family still own. President Lincoln appointed him judge of the United States Court for the Eastern District of Florida in 1862, a position which he held until he died, July 26, 1876. He came to Montrose on a visit, and died at his old home. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church of Elizabeth, N. J., where he was buried. He wrote some poetry. One poem, entitled "Evermore," though written two years before his death, was, by a singular coincidence, published at the time of his death, and was considered as being almost prophetic of his death.

Hon. Franklin Fraser was born at Montrose April 23, 1819. He was graduated at Union College, and read law with William Jessup, and was admitted to Susquehanna County bar in April, 1842. He was a man of varied information. There was hardly any subject, no matter how obscure, that he did not know something about it. He was a better office lawyer than before the court and juries. He was slow in forming an opinion, but when once formed he held to it with tenacity to the end. He went to Florida to assist his brother, and became register in bankruptcy, and finally became one of the three Supreme Court judges of the State. He resigned and returned to Montrose, and died suddenly November 10, 1879, just as he was preparing a case for court. He married Jane B. Clark, of Elmira, and had one daughter, Fannie, a school-teacher.

JOSEPH T. RICHARDS, son of Daniel and Lydia Richards, read law with William Jessup, and was admitted to the bar May 8, 1838. He practiced law at Montrose for about twelve years, in partnership with B. S. Bentley a portion of the time. He was a well-read lawyer, and accurate in office-work. He went to California for his health, by way of the Isthmus of Panama. Here he contracted a fever. He partly regained his health, and formed a partnership with Judge John H. McKune, a former student of Bentley's. The partnership had been in existence only two weeks when they were burned out in the great fire that occurred at Sacramento, escaping only with his life, in his night-clothes. The exposure and excitement incident to this calamity soon terminated his life. He died in 1852. His wife was Anna M., daughter of Benjamin Sayre. His son, J. T. Richards, read law with W. A. Crossmon, and was admitted to the bar Nov. 11, 1872. He practiced law at Philadelphia, and was connected with the fast mail service for a number of years. He died recently. Lieut. Benjamin S. Richards is a naval officer, and was present at the great earthquake at St. Thomas Island, when the ship was set on beam's end.

HON. WILLAM J. TURRELL was born March 13, 1814, in Litchfield County, Conn. He came to Montrose with his parents in the spring of 1816, and learned the trade of saddle and harness-maker with his father, William Turrell, working at that business until he reached his majority. He is remembered as a young man of correct habits, and possessing excellent mental endowments. After attaining the age of twenty-one he entered the office of Rev. A. L. Post as a law student, and while thus engaged he became a Christian and united with the Baptist Church, of which he remained an earnest and faithful member until his decease, August 31, 1881. After being admitted to the bar he became the law partner of Mr. Post, and continued a member of this law-firm until Mr. Post gave up the law for the Gospel ministry, when he assumed control of the whole business. His business was done in a quiet, unostentatious way, but it led generally to success and finally to a competence. In 1862 he was elected Republican State Senator without opposition, to represent the Fourteenth District, then comprising Bradford, Wyoming and Susquehanna Counties. He took an active part in the councils of the commonwealth, and through those trying years of her history acquitted himself nobly and well. His kindness to soldiers and their families is still gratefully remembered by many. In 1865, the last year of his term as Senator, he was chosen Speaker of that body, —an honorable position and at that time a very important one, as the Speaker of the Senate would then have been called to be Governor had that office become vacant. He was a member of the convention to amend the State Constitution, which met December 27, 1873, and served through the long session of one hundred and eight days, taking a very active part and addressing the convention on important questions about one hundred and fifty times. When called upon to preside as master in Chancery his work ranked with the best and gave general acceptance. He was president of the Legal Association of Susquehanna County and also of the First National Bank from their organization.

He married, March 20, 1854, Miss Huldah Van Valkenburgh, of New York City. Recollections of their happy home life will long remain with those who have shared it. On Monday, September 5th, following his death, while court was in session, appropriate resolutions were introduced by Hon. William H. Jessup and passed relative to this honored member of the Susquehanna bar, and the following are extracts from remarks made on that occasion:

By Hon. William H. Jessup:

"Mr. Turrell was the oldest member of the bar—a man of unsullied character, a man of fine legal attainments, a man wise as a counselor and faithful as a friend. There are many of the young members of the bar who will look back to him almost as a father. His wise counsels, his constant encouragement and his earnest wishes for their advancement and prosperity will be gratefully remembered by them. He was a lawyer, while not in full practice before the courts, who possessed a practice well known to many of us in the capacity of advisory counsel in many important cases and upon many important questions, and for many years he enjoyed that confidence of the court which made him almost invariably an auditor where legal questions complicated and difficult were likely to arise. And I may say that his decisions as an auditor have been, perhaps, as seldom reversed as those of any other member of the bar who has occupied such a responsible position before the court. . . ."

By Hon. J. Brewster McCollum:

"In boyhood, manhood and in ripe age he so conducted himself that he secured and retained the esteem and confidence of the people. In the positions of public trust to which he was called he acquitted himself creditably, and was recognized as a faithful and efficient representative and defender of the interests committed to his care. The record of his official life is without stain. For nearly forty-three years he was a resident and practicing member of the Susquehanna County bar, and in his intercourse with his professional brethren he was ever courteous, obliging and honorable. He was in many respects a model lawyer,—true to his client, to the court and to his own sense of duty and honor. He was a conscientious and safe counselor. I think he did not enjoy the strife and excitement of jury trials, that he rather shunned than sought a litigating practice; but he seemed to take pleasure in the discussion of legal questions, and his law arguments were clear, exhaustive and convincing. In all that concerned the welfare of the legal profession, its dignity and honor, he manifested a lively interest, and his efforts and his influence were always favorable to its elevation and its advancement. . . ."

By William M. Post, Esq.:

"It is with no unmeaning words and formal phrase, and I but express the sentiment of all my brethren of the bar, when I say that William J. Turrell was no ordinary man. The architect of his own fortunes and success in life, he carried out and achieved for himself a career of which any of us might be proud. Few men of our county have been so widely known —none more honored and respected—none would be more missed and mourned by all the people of our county. His magnificent physique—his stately, almost majestic form—and noble manhood attracted attention and commanded admiration wherever he appeared. His manners were characterized by dignity without arrogance—were elegant and courtly without being insincere. His friends and acquaintances ever found him an affable, genial, good-hearted companion. He appreciated wit and humor, but while he had a hearty laugh for the mirthful, his soul was full of tenderness, and he had ever a tear of pity for misfortune and misery. His culture, knowledge of the world, his acquaintance with men and things from study, travel and observation, were extensive and varied—while his tastes were more than ordinarily exact and refined. . . . From early youth he turned away from the temptations and vices over which so many promising young men have stumbled and fallen, and his moral character and conduct have ever been free from reproach and stain. . . . In the early part of his career he was somewhat ardent in politics, and more than once was a successful candidate for political honors; but although true to his own convictions, he was liberal towards those with whom he differed, and was never a place-hunter, a 'trimmer' or a demagogue. His religious opinions and principles, like every other element in his nature, were decided and firm, but he was charitable and tolerant towards all. . . ."

Hon. Benjamin Speese Bentley was borne in Cairo, Greene County, N. Y. His early boyhood was spent under the shadow of the beautiful Catskill Mountains, where his ancestors had lived for many years. A rise in the Catskill Creek produced the greatest flood ever known before or since, and carried away the iron-works of his father. Being discouraged by his great loss, he decided to move to Pennsylvania with his little family. Benjamin received his education at the seminary in Hamilton, N. Y. He returned to Montrose and taught the academy from 1833 to 1836, and subsequently read law with Hon. William Jessup, and was admitted to the bar February 5, 1839. He worked his way to the front and practiced law at Montrose until October, 1866, when he located in Williamsport, Pa. He was appointed president judge of Lycoming County after it had been constituted the Twenty-ninth Judicial District, which position he held nearly a year, and came within a few hundred votes of defeating Judge Gamble in the face of a strong Democratic majority and the admitted personal strength of his competitor. In August, 1878, he was appointed president judge of the new district of Lackawanna County, serving until January, 1880. He was twice married and left a widow. His first wife was a sister of Hon. L. F. Fitch. Of his four children, three survived him—Mrs. Geo. G. Waller, of Honesdale, Pa.; B. Stuart Bentley, Esq., of Williamsport; and P. W. Bentley, a druggist of the same place. His second son, Geo. F. Bentley, Esq., died in Honesdale, Pa., October 4, 1881, of whom it was said "that death does not destroy, but catches, crystallizes and makes permanent the character of a good man, leaving it a priceless bequest to society."

Engd by A.H. Ritchie.

L. F. Tuttle

Judge Bentley was a gentleman of culture, one of the brightest and best men that ever practiced law in Susquehanna County; a lawyer of fine attainments, he always took great interest in public affairs, and was a frequent contributor to the press upon political, religious, educational and other subjects. As a husband and father, citizen and lawyer, there are living witnesses to his worth in all these relations. For many years he was a member of the Presbyterian Church and gave much attention to church and Sunday-school work. Kindness was one of his great characteristics. He was affable and courteous in manner, sincere and truth-loving. One, in speaking of him, said "that he was pre-eminent in his grasp of the equities of the cases he tried, and presented them with a master hand to the court and jury." Another said, "Judge Bentley, in his long professional life, exemplified that great fact that a man may be a true Christian and a great lawyer." He rose in the respect of the people as a true Christian, letting his light shine wherever he went. Another says, "From the bench he administered the law with authority, and we all remember with what firmness and impartiality he performed his judicial duties, and with what gentleness he ruled against us when he knew we were wrong. He was a sound lawyer, a righteous judge, a kind and indulgent husband and father, a warm friend, a useful citizen and a good man." Another said to the members of the bar, "The daily beauty of his life was almost like a continual benediction." He died March 6, 1882, at Williamsport, aged seventy-three. The daily papers announced the death of "the eminent jurist." "Let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like his."

SAMUEL BUEL MULFORD, son of S. S. Mulford, was born at Montrose, Dec. 9, 1821. He read law with Hon. William Jessup and was admitted to the Susquehanna County bar Aug. 19, 1844. After this he entered Yale College in the class with his cousin, Wm. H. Jessup, and was graduated in 1849. The California excitement was then at its height, and he went to the Isthmus of Panama, which he crossed, having to wait three months for transportation to California. He located at Marysville and practiced his profession with success until he died, September 6, 1863. He was a popular stump-speaker and a brilliant lawyer. He was announced for a political speech just before he was taken with the fever which resulted in his death.

HON. LAFAYETTE FITCH (1825–77) was a native of Eaton, Madison County, N. Y., and the son of Stephen and Alta Sheldon Fitch, farmers at that place. Upon the death of his mother, when he was only thirteen years of age, he came to live with his sister at Montrose, who had married Benjamin S. Bentley, Esq., a lawyer. Here he attended the academy, studiously applied himself, and early became a teacher in the free school of the place, and in the district schools in the vicinity, where he taught for several terms, and he was always afterwards interested in school-work as director most of the time. He read law with his brother-in-law, Mr. Bentley, was admitted to practice August 21, 1848, and became the law partner of his tutor, which business relation continued until Mr. Bentley went to Williamsport, in 1866. With the exception of a short time during the existence of the business relations with Mr. Watson, under the firm-name of Fitch & Watson, Mr. Fitch continued his law business alone the remainder of his active life. He was elected State Senator in 1871, from the district comprised of Susquehanna, Bradford and Wyoming Counties and served one term. He was proffered a re-nomination, but declined, and his law partner, Mr. Watson, was elected to take his place. Mr. Fitch in early life was religiously inclined, was active in Sunday-school work as a teacher, and at the time of his death a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church at Montrose. He was one of the first to interest himself in assisting widows and orphans, to secure their pensions from the government after the close of the late war; and when Pennsylvania was invaded by the rebels in 1863, he responded to the call for troops, and served as first lieutenant of an emergency company, which, however, saw no active service, but was returned home. Upon the occasion of his death, the trustees of the Presbyterian Church, recognizing the great loss sustained by his death to the church, met and passed appropriate resolutions and ordered them entered upon the records of the society. The Rough and Ready Fire Company, of which Mr. Fitch had once been foreman, draped their hall in mourning, and by resolutions adopted at their meeting May 18, 1877, publicly recognized their high sense of his worth and honor. At a meeting of the Legal Association, held in the court-room at Montrose, on the same day, of which Hon. Wm. H. Jessup was elected president and Hon. W. W. Watson secretary, resolutions fitting the occasion of the death of their honored associate were adopted, and appropriate remarks on his life and character were made by Hon. Wm. J. Turrell, Hon. Wm. H. Jessup, Hon. J. B. McCollum, Hon. W. W. Watson, Hon. Franklin Frazier, E. L. Blakeslee and A. O. Warren, Esqs., and it was resolved that the officers of the court and the members of the bar proceed in a body to the funeral of the deceased, who had passed away the day before.

At the time of Mr. Fitch's decease the Independent Republican, of Montrose, said of him,—

"Mr. Fitch was a man of sterling integrity, whether as a citizen, a lawyer, a statesman or a Christian. In the dignified retirement of his late years he ever manifested an eminent example of modest talent, substantial learning and unpretending wisdom, with exceedingly affable manners, strong social affection, absolute fidelity in every relation of life, and probity beyond the slightest suspicion of reproach, as rarely adorns even the highest walks of professional excellence.

"His public services in political life were both useful and incorruptible. His Senatorial career at Harrisburg was earnest, beneficial, and patriotic. The members of the bar of this county have lost a companion who was an honor to his profession, a model to themselves and an example of virtue and excellence to all.

"Mr. Fitch was a man of ardent feelings and of ingenuous temperament. He was strong in his attachments to true men and to opinions, and was not easily turned from any course of speculation or action which he had once satisfied himself was right. He put on no airs and assumed no superiority on the ground of his intellectual attainments, but placed himself on a level with every one with whom he had any concern. He was ever a conscientious man. He was always true to his moral as well as intellectual convictions, and followed them whithersoever they led. His straightforwardness and frankness were among the secret causes of the remarkable influence which he confessedly exercised over the minds and judgments of others. By his honesty, as well as by his resoluteness and decision, he was the mainspring of everything with which he was connected. By this moral influence he controlled and swayed all men with whom he was associated. As Ben Jonson says of Lord Bacon, 'he commanded where he spoke.' He has left an example full of instruction and encouragement to the young men of our county, and especially those of the legal profession. He has shown them to what heights of greatness and usefulness they may ascend by truth, temperance and toil. He has left to all a most glorious and precious legacy in his example of integrity, moral courage and independence. He has taught the young men that there is nothing so grand and beautiful as moral principle, nothing so sublime as adherence to truth, and nothing so adventitious as integrity, pursued through all circumstances, adverse or propitious."

His wife, whom he married in 1855, was Mary Sayre, a daughter of Mason S. and Mary Sayre Wilson, of Montrose, whose ancestors were the first settlers of Bridgewater township. She survives him and cares for her aged father in his declining years.

ALBERT CHAMBERLAIN was born in Choconut township, and obtained his education at the common schools, teaching winters and studying summers. He was ambitious, and read law with Bentley & Richards, and was admitted to the Susquehanna County bar in August, 1843. He was elected district attorney twice, from 1856–62, and was justice of the peace a number of years, also revenue collector. He removed to Scranton, where he died.

Wm. M. Rose

LEONARD P. HINDS, son of Stephen Hinds, was born at Montrose in March, 1828, and died at Susquehanna December 23, 1882. He attended the academy at Harford, and was a student at Alexandria, Va., where he devoted considerable time as a writer for the local press. He read law with Ralph B. Little, of Montrose, and was admitted to the bar November 17, 1851. He was a member of the Baptist Church. He settled in Susquehanna in 1849, and practiced law there until his death, a period of thirty-three years. His ability was marked as a lawyer, especially in the prime of life, and was equally divided in the two departments of law, as a pleading and counseling advocate.

FREDERICK A. CASE read law with his father, Benjamin T. Case, and was admitted to the bar of Susquehanna County January 16, 1854. He was remarkable for his great memory of cases and legal forms. It is said that he could write deeds without printed forms, entirely from memory. He was a modest, retiring man of many eccentricities. He died, while yet in his prime, February 3, 1880.

ALBERT BUSHNELL, son of Hezekiah Bushnell, was born in Ararat December 30, 1815. With no school privileges but the common schools of his time, he early developed great fondness for books and study. At the age of seventeen he taught a district school near where Susquehanna now stands. He taught each year thereafter until the second year after his marriage, in 1842. He then located on a farm in Ararat. Few men, with no resources but their own labor, would have undertaken to prepare for admission to the bar of Susquehanna County; but with a large family to support, he commenced reading law under the direction of Bentley & Fitch, and was admitted to the bar November 20, 1853, and the following spring removed to Susquehanna, where he devoted the remainder of his life to the practice of his profession.

ISAAC J. POST, only child of Rev. Albert L. and Eleanor C. Post, was born at Montrose June 21, 1837, and was graduated at Yale College in the class of 1860. He read law in his native village with William & William H. Jessup, and was admitted to the bar January 20, 1862; but in September following he entered the army of the Union and served one year. He next held a position under the solicitor of the Treasury Department, at Washington, two years; he then resigned and removed to Scranton, and formed a law partnership with Alfred Hand, which was dissolved in 1879, when Mr. Hand was appointed judge. He continued to practice alone until January, 1885. He formed a partnership with his preceptor, William H. Jessup. Isaac J. Post was no ordinary man. A close student, with a clear, logical mind, he had mastered the intricacies of the law, and was, by almost universal consent, acknowledged to be the best real estate lawyer at the Lackawanna bar. He was particularly strong as a consulting lawyer. His integrity and candor gained for him a large clientage of business men in Lackawanna County. His clients became warmly attached to him both for his merits professionally and his genial characteristics socially. A thorough knowledge of legal principles and a practical knowledge of business demands made him of great value to clients when intricate problems in business needed to be harmonized with the principles of law. He had a keen perception of right and a disposition to follow it. He loved his profession for the principles it presented, and despised cunning and trickery, and was always equal to its designs and would almost invariably circumvent it. He was a man of few words, simple and courteous to men in every condition of life. He was a multifarious reader, a close observer of scientific progress, a successful student of geology. He kept pace with all the attacks of scientists upon the Christian faith, but never wavered from the choice of his youth in his belief in the power of a sincere, humble Christian faith on the soul. His faith was grounded in the truths of revelation—in life a solace and comfort to him, in death it did not fail him. He was married, June 23, 1868, to Eliza Blake Todd. He died July 10, 1885, at Montrose, and was buried with his fathers in the peaceful cemetery of his ancestral home.

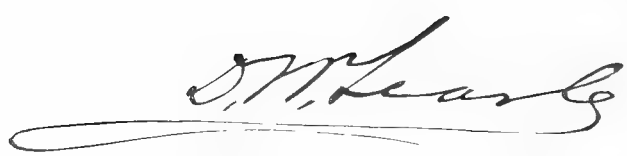
Hon. Alfred Hand was born in Honesdale, Pa., March 26, 1835, and was graduated from Yale in 1857. He commenced to read law with William & William H. Jessup in 1857, and was admitted to the bar November 21, 1859. He married one of Hon. William Jessup's daughters for his first wife, and located in Scranton, where he practiced law successfully until he was elevated to the bench, first by appointment as judge of the Eleventh Judicial District (Luzerne), March 4, 1879, and the following fall he was elected law judge of the Forty-fifth Judicial District (Lackawanna County), and is now president judge, commissioned in January, 1880, for ten years. Judge Hand enjoys the confidence of the bar, and is esteemed for his many excellent qualities, not only as a judge, but as a leading citizen and Christian gentleman.

Wm. M. Post was born February 10, 1825, at Montrose. In his boyhood he assisted in the work upon his father's farm; but, at the age of twenty, having received a fair academical education at the Montrose Academy, he read law with his brother-in-law, the late Ralph B. Little, at that time one of the ablest lawyers in this part of the State. Hon. J. B. McCollum was his fellow-student in the same office. After his admission to the bar, in 1856, Mr. Post became a partner in the well-known law-firm of Little & Post.

In 1864 he moved to Susquehanna Depot, whither he was attracted by interests in real estate of considerable value, consisting principally of a tract of land lying across the river from Susquehanna, upon which the largest portion of the present village of Oakland has since been built up. He opened an office in Susquehanna, and, besides giving attention to his own business affairs, continued the practice of law there until about 1880, when he returned to his former home in Montrose, and now lives on the old homestead where he was born—still one of the most comfortable and attractive homes in the village. Connected with his residence he still owns a small farm—about sixty acres of the old farm his father cleared up—to the cultivation of which, since his return, he has given much of his time.

Mr. Post has a comprehensive knowledge of the law, and in the trial of a cause he is collected and self-possessed. No member of the Susquehanna bar, of the past or present, has excelled him as an orator, and but few have equaled him in his influence with juries. His mind is logical, and his reasoning powers remarkably clear and strong. He has been the trusted, confidential legal adviser of many of the most prominent and successful business men in the county, because of his rare business sagacity. In dealing with his clients he is always candid and invariably favors settlements where they are possible, and, so far as his influence can be consistently exerted, discourages litigation.



Being a large owner of real estate, he has made sales of building lots to a greater number of persons than any one else in the county during the same period of time. He has assisted a large number of men to build homes on lots sold to them by him, and many poor men owe it to his liberality and leniency that they now have homes of their own.

Mr. Post's family were Whigs, and his first vote was for that party. But when, on the defeat of Henry Clay, of whom he was an ardent admirer, the Whig party disbanded, he became a Democrat, and has steadfastly remained such, although he has never taken an active part in mere partisan politics. His personal and social relations have ever been as cordial and friendly with those with whom he differed as with those with whom he was affiliated by party relations.

The poor and distressed have always found in him a sympathizing friend; and to the young, struggling for advancement, he has always extended words of encouragement and, in many cases, actual assistance. He has never been an office-seeker, but has preferred the retirement and comforts of private life.

He was recently president of the Borough Council, although two-thirds of the Council was composed of Republicans. He is a vestryman in the Episcopal Church. He has long been an honored and respected member of the Masonic order—having presided over a lodge and chapter in Montrose, also a lodge in Susquehanna, and is now one of the oldest members of Malta Commandery, of Binghamton.

The only political office ever held by Mr. Post was that of United States assessor for the Twelfth District, composed of Susquehanna and Luzerne Counties. This, at the time, was an office of great labor and responsibility, requiring the aid of ten or twelve assistants, mostly in Luzerne County, and a competent clerk. Nearly four hundred thousand dollars was at that time annually assessed in the district. The office had been previously filled by the late Judge Jessup, and, after him, by the present Judge Jessup. A vacancy had been made in the office of assessor and the business was being conducted by one of the assistants. President Johnson, at the suggestion of Judge Woodward, then Congressman of the district, had nominated some half-dozen good men for the position, all of whom had been rejected by a Republican Senate upon political grounds. Mr. Post was then nominated, and, upon the recommendation of leading Republicans of Susquehanna County, General Cameron, then in the Senate, favored this nomination, and it was confirmed without dissent. Mr. Post assumed the arduous duties of the office and discharged them to the entire satisfaction of both the Revenue Department and the people. He went out with the administration which appointed him, and the office itself gradually declined in importance until it was finally consolidated with that of collector.

In 1886 Mr. Post received the Democratic nomination of the district composed of Susquehanna and Wayne Counties for State Senator. The district is largely Republican, and Mr. Post was defeated, although he ran six hundred votes ahead of his ticket.

Mr. Post has been twice married. His first wife was Lucy J., a daughter of Sabin Hatch, Esq., of the Montrose bar. They had three daughters,—Fannie M., wife of Stanley M. Mitchell, Esq., also a member of the bar, residing at Binghamton; Nancy J., wife of D. W. Mabee, died at Binghamton, aged twenty; and Agnes also died there while on a visit to her sister, aged eighteen. Mrs. Lucy J. Post died in 1877, and Mrs. Harriet Blossom, his second wife, died in 1883.

Daniel W. Searle is the son of Daniel Searle and Johanna Stark, who came from Wyoming Valley and located at Montrose in 1827, where Daniel W. was born, January 7, 1836. He received his education at Montrose Academy, where he prepared for college under the tuition of Professor Crampton. He entered Yale in the class of 1858, but sickness compelled him to relinquish his design, and he returned to Montrose. He entered the law-office of Honorable William Jessup and William H. Jessup, and, after a thorough preparation under the direction of his able preceptor, was admitted to the bar in November 1859. He commenced the practice of law with his brother-in-law, Honorable J. B. McCollum, under the firm-name of McCollum & Searle, and continued this business relation until the second year of the late war. In 1862 he enlisted in Company H, One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. This company was recruited in Susquehanna County by Captain Tyler and Mr. Searle, who was first lieutenant when the company started out; but when the regiment was formed at Harrisburg, he was appointed adjutant, a position which he held until he was discharged, June, 1864. He served with the heroic One Hundred and Forty-first until only thirty-five men reported for duty, after the battle of Gettysburg, where he was wounded. (For a fuller account of the gallantry of the men who served in Company H, the reader is referred to the military chapter of this history.) After the war Mr. Searle was commissioned lieutenant-colonel of militia, on the staff of General Jessup. After his return from the army he resumed the practice of law, and was elected district attorney in 1865, and again in 1868. He has been an active partisan in the Republican party, acting as chairman of the County Committee a number of times, and was the choice of the Republicans of Susquehanna County for Congress in 1874,' 80,'82; but, through combinations among the conferees of the other counties, the claims of Susquehanna were not recognized, and he failed to receive the district nomination. Mr. Searle's life-work, however, has been that of a lawyer, in which profession he holds an honorable place at the Montrose bar. He is an able and safe counselor, prudent and careful in the preparation and management of a case, and during a trial he is fair with his opponent. His arguments are candid and logical. He has a keen perception of the principles of law which govern in a case, and uses good judgment in their application. He is kindly disposed towards the younger members of the bar, who always find in him a cheerful and ready adviser. In 1883 he entered into partnership with A. H. McCollum and A. B. Smith, under the firm-name of McCollum, Searle & Smith. In February, 1883, he married Irene, daughter of Colonel G. F. Mason, of Towanda.

WILLIAM D. LUSK, son of Franklin Lusk, was born at Great Bend in 1833. He received an academic education at Homer, New York, preparatory for college, which course he was prevented from taking because of his father's death, which occurred about that time. He read law with Little & Post, and was admitted to the bar in November, 1859. He was in the army after that, and also in the West for two years. From 1866 to 1871 he had an office at Montrose, and from 1871 to 1874 he had an office with Mr. Loomis, in Scranton. In 1879 he was in partnership with Eugene O'Neill. He was elected vice-president of the First National Bank of Montrose in January, 1886, and has spent most of his time there since that time. At the last election, in January, 1887, he was made president of the bank.

ANDREW O. WARREN was born June 5, 1817, in Jeffrey, N. H. He was educated at Melville Academy, and studied theology at Westmoreland, N. H., and entered the ministry of the Universalist Church, and preached for them about thirty years. He read law with E. B. Chase and F. B. Streeter, and was admitted to the bar August term, 1862, and has practiced law at Montrose, preaching occasionally since that time.

CHARLES A. WARREN, son of A. O. Warren, was born September 2, 1846, and educated at Montrose. He read law with his father, and was admitted to the bar in 1868. He became associated with his father in law practice at Montrose until recently, 1886, he has taken the place of M. M. Riley, at Susquehanna.

GEORGE P. LITTLE, son of Ralph B. Little, Esq., was born April 25, 1842. He received his education at Montrose Academy, and read law with Little & Post and was admitted to the bar at April term, 1863. He went out with the emergency men when General Lee invaded Pennsylvania. His father took him into partnership under firm-name of R. B. & G. P. Little. Subsequently, E. L. Blakeslee became a member of the firm, and, since the death of R. B. Little, there have been several changes. George P. Little occupies the same office that his father did, and has associated with him David W. Brown, under the firm-name of Little & Brown. Mr. Little has been retained in a number of important cases. He is a conscientious painstaking lawyer, and attends carefully to whatever matters are placed in his hands. He is a Democrat in politics, but has recently taken a decided interest in the Prohibition movement.

JONATHAN J. WRIGHT, a colored man, was born in Springville township, where his brother, an intelligent blacksmith, now resides. He obtained his education in the common schools and Montrose Academy. While in Montrose he was porter at the Tarbell House a part of the time, and blacked boots and did all kinds of porter work at thirteen dollars per month. Meanwhile he read law with Bentley & Richards, and was admitted to the bar of Susquehanna County August 13, 1866, after sustaining a good examination, and is said to have been the first colored man admitted to practice law in Pennsylvania. He made some political speeches about home that were received with favor by his party. Shortly after the war carpet-bag rule began in the South, and his opportunity was in that section. He formed a law partnership with a Yankee in Beaufort, S. C. Here he acquired a good practice and immediately rose to positions of distinction. He was delegate to the Constitutional Convention, a member of the South Carolina Legislature, and finally he was appointed one of the judges of the Supreme Court of South Carolina. Mr. Wright now donned

M. J. Larabee

›bes of office and lived in Columbia, S. C., ɜat style. W. J. Turrell, who happened there about that time, was driven about ›wn in his carriage, and in all respects was entertained by him. He trained up three colored men to the law, one of whom was er, industrious man. But his prosperity oo great for him; he soon became dissi-, and was compelled to resign his office. ad now lost caste among his fellows, and at ›lic meeting, shortly after, he was hissed. ad of being stimulated to reform by this of disapproval, he only sank lower, and ıfter died, aged about forty. A good anec-is told of him and Judge Mercur: It seems Judge Mercur hesitated about admitting o the bar, and he was admitted when some judge was presiding. After Wright was ted to the Supreme bench he met Mercur ay, who congratulated him upon his good for-when Wright replied that he hoped that he .d be able to congratulate him (Mercur) on ıing as high a position in Pennsylvania as .d attained in South Carolina. This assump-›f superior dignity is said to have not been highly appreciated by Judge Mercur; but ɜnough, Judge Mercur was elevated to the eme bench in Pennsylvania, and died in , while chief justice of the State; but her Wright ever congratulated him, the ›r cannot say.

MES E. CARMALT, son of Caleb Carmalt, riendsville, was born May 11, 1840. He ned his education at Haverford and Alex-a. He read law with Judge Streeter and arvard Law School, and was admitted to ar April 3, 1865. He was elected district ɜey in 1871. He practiced law at Mon-about ten years, until his mother's death, he returned to Friendsville to superintend ɟe farm. He has been active in promoting Susquehanna County Agricultural Society, ıas given considerable attention to stock-ıg. In 1880 he removed to Scranton and ɟed in law practice four years. During time he helped organize the Lackawanna ty Agricultural Society, and acted as direc-ıd treasurer one year. In 1884 he returned ›iendsville, where he now resides.

HON. MONROE J. LARRABEE.—His great-grandparents were Stephen and Polly (Nims) Larrabee. The former was born in Montague, Franklin Co., Mass. He was a farmer, and subsequent to his marriage he moved to Dummerstown, Vt., where he died. His son Veranous (1788–1869), known as "Colonel" Larrabee, was born in Massachusetts. He married Lucy Bennett, and in 1831 immigrated from Vermont, and settled in Jackson, where he purchased a farm.

They had children—Veranous (1809–63) went to the State of Texas when a young man, married and resided there until his death; Lorenzo D., 1810; Emory B., 1811; Aden B., 1817; Benjamin F., 1823; Charlotte, 1813, married for her first husband Calvin Dix—is now the wife of Major Asa Hammond, of New Milford; Roxanna, 1819 (now deceased), was the wife of Sabin Barrett, of Jackson; Permela, 1825 (now deceased), was the wife of Jasper Savory, of "Savory Corners" (now Lake View). All the children were born in Dummerstown, Vt., and all came to Jackson with their parents. The farm that Colonel Larrabee purchased upon coming to Jackson was near what is known as the "Bartlett Farm." This he afterwards sold, and bought a place near Jackson Corners, now owned by Dr. Wheaton. The latter part of his life he and his wife lived with their daughter, Mrs. Calvin Dix, where he died. After his death his widow resided, until her decease, with another daughter, Mrs. Sabin Barrett. Emory B. and Aden B. settled on farms in Jackson, where they still reside. Benjamin F. also settled in Jackson, but about twelve years ago removed to Broome Co., N. Y., where he is engaged in farming. Lorenzo D. Larrabee was born in Dummerstown, Vt., February 13, 1810. In 1831 he married Nancy P. Tenny (1810–64), a native of Vermont. About this time he came from Vermont to Jackson, and purchased an unimproved tract of land, and commenced to clear and improve it. He made occasional visits to Vermont, but did not move his family to Jackson until about 1835, when, having erected a log house, he brought them to his then wilderness home. He is a farmer, still residing in Jackson, which town has been his home most of the time since he came there, in 1831. Their children are Willard E. (1832–64) was a farmer in Jackson; Melvin V., 1834, a farmer of Jackson; Marshall (1837–66) resided in Ohio, and was a soldier of the late war in an Ohio regiment; Monroe J., 1838; Truman G. (1841–64) was a member of Company D, Fiftieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, was discharged, afterwards re-enlisted, was captured and confined in Andersonville, afterwards sent to the prison at Florence, where he died; Aden B. (1842–43); Lucy L., 1843, now residing in Massachusetts; Maria L. (1847–65).

Monroe J. Larrabee was born August 4, 1838, in Jackson. His boyhood was the uneventful life of a farmer's boy. The district school claimed his attention, but when old enough to assist on the farm he only had its advantages during the winter. He afterwards attended the graded school at Montrose, and also the Wyoming Seminary at Kingston, Pa. He taught a term of school at Thomson, Pa., and afterwards was engaged for one year selling fruit-trees, traveling most of the time in New York State and Canada. He was in a wholesale grocery store in Boston for one year. But these pursuits were not congenial, and his inclinations tending to a professional life, he commenced, in 1861, the study of law with Hon. Wm. J. Turrell, of Montrose. But the Rebellion burst upon the country, and Blackstone was laid aside in response to the call for volunteers. He enlisted as a private in Company A, One Hundred and Fifty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, in October, 1862, and served until the company was mustered out, in July, 1863. Shortly after muster he was detailed as hospital steward of the regiment, and served most of the time in that capacity. (See history of Company A, One Hundred and Fifty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, for company's service.) He afterwards re-enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Ninety-fourth New York Volunteers, and served to the close of the war. After the close of the war he resumed his studies with Mr. Turrell, and was admitted to the bar in August, 1868. He immediately commenced the practice of his profession at Susquehanna, where he has successfully continued it to the present time, and has gained the reputation of an able lawyer and reliable counselor. He held the office of notary public for two terms, and has been attorney of the borough of Susquehanna. In politics he has always been a Republican, and active and zealous in aid of the success of his party by voice and vote. He was elected to the Legislature of Pennsylvania in 1876, and served in the sessions of that body in 1877–78. In 1882 he was the nominee of the Republicans of the Twenty-sixth Senatorial District for Senator, and in 1884 received the Republican nomination in the county for Congress. In 1883 he married Kate L. Dennison, of Montrose, who had been a teacher for several years, and was teaching in the graded school at Montrose at the time of her marriage. Their children are Louise, born March 2, 1884, and Bessie, born July 3, 1886.

B. O. Camp was born at Camptown, Bradford County. He obtained a very satisfactory education at Le Raysville Academy, in that county, and subsequently taught school winters and worked at the carpenter's trade summers five years, and then became a student at Wyoming Seminary two years. He taught school after that at Montrose and New Milford. He served in the army during the War of the Rebellion, and became captain. He read law with Hon. J. B. McCollum and was admitted to the bar November 9, 1868. He devoted his time to law practice and attention to his real estate interests.

Hon. Willoughby W. Watson, son of Walter Watson, was born in New Milford, Susquehanna County, Pa., October 6, 1842, and was educated at the public schools, Montrose Academy and State Normal School at Millersville, besides private study at home. He was principal of the New Milford school and was elected county superintendent of public schools in June, 1866. After serving two years and three months he resigned to devote himself to the profession of law. He read law with Hon. L. F. Fitch, and was admitted to the bar in November, 1868, and commenced practice at Montrose. In November, 1874, he was elected to the State Senate for Susquehanna and Wayne Counties, and served during the sessions of 1875 and 1876. In 1878 he received the county Republican nomination for Congress. He removed to Scranton in 1883, where he established a law practice. He is secretary and treasurer of the Moosic Mountain Coal Company, also of the Moosic Mountain and Carbondale Railroad Company. Mr. Watson is an active and aggressive lawyer and business man. He married Miss Annie M. Kemerer November 26, 1868.

E. L. Blakeslee

HUNTTING C. JESSUP, son of Judge William Jessup, was born at Montrose February 18, 1843. He prepared for college at Montrose Academy and Cortland Academy, Homer, N.Y., and was graduated from Yale College in July, 1864. After he came home he entered the law-office of his father, but soon after enlisted in the army, where he served for about nine months, when he was discharged with the rank of first lieutenant. While in the army he married the daughter of Dr. Cobb, of Clarksville, Tenn. He was admitted to the bar November term, 1868, and is associated with his brother in the practice of the law. He was judge advocate of the State militia at one time, and has been associated with other counsel in some important suits,—such as the Erie foreclosure cases, in connection with George G. Waller, Esq.; also Thorn, Watson & Co. against the First National Bank of Montrose. Mr. Jessup is not only a well-read lawyer, but also a man of fine social characteristics, which has secured him a great many friends.

ELBERT L. BLAKESLEE is the son of Hiram Blakeslee, and grandson of Benjamin Blakeslee, one of the pioneers of Dimock. His mother was a daughter of Cyrus Whipple, of Bridgewater. He was born at Dimock May 25, 1843, and received his early education at the district school and at the Harford and Montrose Academies. At this time the War for the Union was arousing the patriotism of the masses in the North, and young Blakeslee enlisted as a private and became corporal in Company H, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves.

He served faithfully with his corps and was honorably discharged. He entered the Medical Department of Michigan University, at Ann Arbor, and was graduated with the degree of M.D. in 1865. He successfully practiced medicine for three years at Brooklyn, and finding it unsuited to his taste, or inclination, he returned to Ann Arbor and entered the Law Department of Michigan University, where he remained one term, when he came to Montrose and completed his law studies with Hon. L. F. Fitch and R. B. Little. He was admitted to the bar in 1869, and became the junior member of the firm of Little & Blakeslee, and after the death of R. B. Little, his preceptor, the firm became Little & Blakeslee, subsequently Little, Blakeslee & Allen, now Blakeslee & Williams. Dr. Blakeslee is a man of culture and poetic inspiration, which manifests itself in the trial of a cause, when he warms up to the occasion in electrical flashes of eloquent and soul-stirring utterances. His generous nature is soon in sympathy with his client, although he be a criminal, and he advocates his cause with the same enthusiasm and energy as though he were convinced of his innocence. He is particularly strong as a trial lawyer. Alert and active in examining witnesses, eloquent and impressive in argument, Dr. Blakeslee stands second to none as a criminal lawyer at the Montrose bar. He was on the side of the prosecution in the O'Mara case and convicted him. He defended McCormick, who was convicted in the second degree. He also defended Frederick Warren for shooting M. B. Wilson in Montrose, who was convicted in the second degree. He took a conspicuous part in the defense of N. L. Lenheim, the defaulting cashier of the First National Bank of Montrose. In fact, he has been retained on one side or the other in most of the important cases that have been tried recently at the Susquehanna bar. He is now engaged in the defense of Tiffany, who is indicted for murder. He has found that his knowledge of medicine has been of material assistance to him in the practice of law.

In 1876 he was selected by the citizens of Susquehanna County and delivered the centenial poem on the fair-grounds at Montrose. He is also an admirer of the beautiful scenery by which he is surrounded, and is having some of the romantic spots in Susquehanna County painted for his parlors. His house is on the west side of the public avenue and his law-office is attached. He has a summer cottage, called Three Oaks, at Heart Lake, not far from Montrose, where he spends his summers with his family, which consists of a wife, the daughter of R. B. Little, and one son, Elbert L. Blakeslee.

ALEXANDER H. MCCOLLUM was born in Bridgewater township in 1836, and was educated under Lyman Richardson at Harford Academy. He read law with his brother, Hon. J. B. McCollum, and was admitted to the Susquehanna County bar August 9, 1869. He became a partner with his brother until he was elected judge. From January 1, 1879, to May 1, 1883, McCollum and Watson were in partnership. The same day that Watson & McCollum dissolved, the firm of McCollum, Searle & Smith was formed. Mr. McCollum is a good accountant and a good business lawyer. He is energetic and aggressive in the trial of a cause, working earnestly for his client's interest. The firm of which he is an active working member are doing a good business. In 1856 he married Philena Underwood. He has one son, Hugh McCollum.

CAPTAIN CHARLES E. LYMAN was born at Berkshire, Tioga County, N. Y., in 1824, and removed with his parents to Great Bend in 1836. His father, Dr. Eleazer Lyman, was killed by his horse in 1845, and in 1846 young Lyman went into the western part of the State, having previously attended Franklin Academy, at Harford. He commenced reading medicine with Dr. Stranahan, and subsequently read six months in Geneva. Returning to Potter County, he practiced medicine about one year with Dr. Rice; thence he went to Pike Mills, where he was married, and registered in the law-office of Chapman & Boyle, of Ridgway. In 1861 he enlisted in the army and was promoted to the second lieutenancy. A splinter from a rail which had been struck by a cannon-ball broke his leg, and he was discharged. In September, 1864, he went out again as captain of Company H, Two Hundred and Third Regiment of Sharpshooters, and was present at the taking of Fort Fisher, where his son, Frank E., and his brother, Lieutenant-Colonel J. W. Lyman, were both killed. After his discharge he went to Lock Haven, Clinton County, Pa., and read law with his brother, C. A. Lyman, and T. T. Abrams, and was admitted to the bar there in 1871, where he remained until 1880, when he returned to Great Bend after an absence of thirty-six years, and was admitted to the bar of Susquehanna County.

EUGENE O'NEILL was born in New York City May 29, 1851. His father was a practical printer and worked for D. Appleton & Co. In 1857 he purchased a farm in Auburn township, and his wife and family were there summers until 1861, when he moved there with his family. Eugene was educated in New York and at Montrose. He read law with Hon. J. B. McCollum, and was admitted to the bar April term, 1875, being the first Catholic[1] who read law and was admitted in the county. He was secretary of the Democratic County Committee from 1872 to 1876, Democratic candidate for district attorney in 1877, chairman of the County Committee in 1880–81, four times delegate to the State Convention, Susquehanna's choice for State Senator in 1882, and was appointed deputy collector of internal revenue for Bradford, Susquehanna, Sullivan and Wyoming in 1885. In 1879 he married Miss Lizzie Conway, of Chicago. He removed in 1877 to Susquehanna.

FREEMAN I. LOTT was born in Lenox township September 25, 1847, and educated in the common schools and at Mansfield Normal School. He taught school about four years and read law with Little & Blakeslee. He was admitted to the bar August term, 1875, and elected district attorney in 1880, and again in 1886 he was elected to the same office. For six years, in connection with Wm. M. Post, he has been counsel for the county commissioners, and drew the contract for the addition to the court-house.

CHARLES N. WARNER was born April 19, 1839, and educated at Montrose and West Point, where he was graduated in 1862. He was a captain in the regular army from 1862 to [1] Peter Byrne was the first Catholic admitted to the Susquehanna County bar in 1841; he afterwards moved to Scranton.

1872. During the Rebellion he was in the second Bull Run battle, also at South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Mine Run, Gettysburg, Bristow Station and with General Wilson's cavalry force that raided the South. He read law with Little & Blakeslee, and was admitted to the bar in November, 1875. He married Eliza Houston and has a family of five children.

MATTHEW M. RILEY, son of Martin Riley, of Susquehanna Depot, was born February 22, 1852. He attended the convent and public schools of his native town until he was ten years of age, when he was taken from school and put into the Erie Railway's shops by his parents, where he worked at the moulder's trade; meanwhile he persevered in his studies nights, thus acquiring a fair education, including some knowledge of the classics. He read law with M. J. Larrabee, of Susquehanna Depot, and also with the firm of Little & Blakeslee, of Montrose, and was admitted to the bar January term, 1876. Being without means, he resumed work in the shop at his trade, but finally he turned his attention wholly to the practice of the law, during which time he had several partners: first, John S. Maginnis, who is now dead; second, John S. Courtright, who is now practicing at Montrose, and C. A. Van Wormer, who is now in Dakota. Mr. Riley built up a good practice, and was one of the rising young men of the Susquehanna County bar, when he sold out in 1886 to C. A. Warren, and removed to Ashland County, Wis.

JOHN S. COURTRIGHT was born near Wilkes-Barre July 21, 1855, and was educated at the schools of Wilkes-Barre and Kingston. He read law with Hon. Henry M. Hoyt, of Wilkes-Barre, and D. W. Searle, of Montrose, and was admitted to the bar January term, 1876, and has an office in Searle's building. In 1877 he married Ella V., daughter of Azur Lathrop. He is one of the justices of the peace for Montrose borough.

D. T. BREWSTER, son of Horace Brewster and grandson of Eldad Brewster, one of the pioneers of Bridgewater township, was born at the homestead farm February 8, 1853. He attended school at Montrose, and was graduated at Mansfield Normal School in 1873. He continued his studies one year more in the post-graduate course of that school. He returned to Montrose and read law with Hon. L. F. Fitch, and was admitted to the bar in September, 1876. He has an office in "Phœnix Block."

SAMUEL F. LANE, son of George W. Lane, one of the pioneers of Dimock township, was born August 31, 1834. He worked on the farm until he was twenty-four years of age, attending district school and the Montrose Academy winters. He thus fitted himself for teaching, an avocation which he followed from 1858 until the breaking out of the Rebellion, in 1861. He enlisted as a private in Company A, First Pennsylvania Cavalry, and by subsequent promotions became a sergeant. He served three years and was honorably discharged. In the fall of 1866 he was elected sheriff of Susquehanna County, and served for three years. He read law with Wm. D. Lusk, and was admitted to the bar in January, 1879. His office is in the Susquehanna County Legal Association's rooms, in the court-house.

HON. WATSON T. BARNES was born in Warren County, N. J., July 19, 1850. He obtained his education at Factoryville, Lackawanna County, Pa., and read law with Geo. P. Little, and was admitted to the bar in April, 1879. He has withdrawn from the active practice of law, and is now residing on a farm in Rush township. He was a member of the Legislature in 1883.

B. L. BALDWIN, son of Edmund Baldwin, was born at Montrose July 2, 1850. He was educated at Montrose, and read law with W. H. Jessup. He was admitted to the bar August term, 1870, and was elected district attorney in 1874, and re-elected in 1877. His office is over the First National Bank.

MILLER S. ALLEN was born in Morris County, N. J., December 15, 1854. He attended the common schools in New Jersey, and had a few weeks' special instruction at Springville. He also attended the public school at Montrose a short time. He read law with Little & Blakeslee, and was admitted to the bar in April, 1879. He was in partnership with Little & Blakeslee for two years, and with Mr. Little for two years. He now has an office in Nichols' Block. Mr. Allen is one of the rising young lawyers of the Montrose bar.

JOHN M. KELLY, son of N. T. Kelly, was born at Owego, Tioga County, N. Y., in 1861. His father moved into Rush township August 6, 1866. John, being the eldest of six children, helped his father and did not attend school until B. E. James taught select school, which he attended twelve months and went to teaching school, after having attended school but twenty-three months altogether. His father had been a newspaper man, and assisted him somewhat in obtaining an education. He read law with McCollum & Watson, and was admitted to the bar.

GEORGE G. WATROUS was born in Bridgewater June 24, 1847. He obtained his preparatory education at the Montrose Academy, and at the age of twenty-five entered the law-office of Fitch & Watson. He completed his law studies with Wm. J. Turrell, and was admitted to the bar at the April term in 1879, and has practiced his profession here since. He was elected justice of the peace of the borough of Montrose in 1881, and by re-election is serving his second term.

W. NELSON BARNES was born in Warren County, N. J., April 30, 1855. His parents shortly afterwards removed to Rush township, where he obtained his education at the district schools and at home. He also attended school at Montrose and taught school winters,—in all seventeen terms. He read law with Little, Blakeslee & Allen, and was admitted to the bar at August term, 1882. Mr. Barnes is only about three feet seven inches tall, and weighs one hundred pounds. He is undoubtedly the shortest lawyer in the State. He deserves great credit for his perseverance under difficulties in obtaining his education. He has an office in the brick block with D. T. Brewster, and devotes himself principally to Orphans' Court practice.

EDWARD R. W. SEARLE, son of Henry S. Searle, was born in Bridgewater township June 18, 1858. He attended school at Factoryville and St. Mary's College, Montreal. He read law with Daniel W. Searle, and was admitted to the bar of Susquehanna County August term, 1879.

EDSON W. SAFFORD, son of Felix T. Safford, was born in Brooklyn township April 11, 1857. He attended the common schools and Montrose Academy, and read law with J. B. and A. H. McCollum. He was admitted to the bar in August, 1880. He was district attorney from 1884 to 1887.

ANDREW B. SMITH, JR., was born in New Milford township Nov. 30, 1857. He obtained his education at the schools of New Milford and at Hackettstown, N. J. He then attended law school at the University of Pennsylvania for two years, after which he entered the law-office of McCollum & Watson, and was admitted to the bar November term, 1880.

DAVID W. BROWN was born in Lathrop township April 17, 1856. He obtained his education at Keystone Academy, at Factoryville, and Madison University, at Hamilton, N. Y., where he was graduated in the class of 1882. He read law with Little & Allen, and was admitted to the bar at August term, 1885. Mr. Little having dissolved partnership relations with Mr. Allen, prior to Mr. Brown's admission to the bar, he entered into partnership with him, under firm-name of Little & Brown.

THOMAS J. DAVIS, son of T. R. Davis, was born in Clifford June 4, 1853. He was educated in the common schools and at Kingston. He followed the avocation of teaching for six or eight years. He read law with Little & Blakeslee, and was admitted to the bar at August term, 1882. He was in partnership with Mr. Blakeslee for three years, and now has an office in Nichols' Block.

WILLIAM H. JESSUP, JR., was graduated at Yale College in the class of 1884. He read law with his father and uncle Huntting, and was admitted to Susquehanna County bar in April, 1886. He is associated with his father-in-law in practice at Scranton.

WILLIAM E. WILLIAMS was born January 1, 1861. He was graduated at Keystone Academy, and was a student in the University of Virginia one year, after which he read law with McCollum & Watson, and was admitted to the bar in January, 1884, and in February, 1886, he formed a law partnership with Dr. E. L. Blakeslee. On November 7, 1886, he married Carrie Parkhurst, of Elkland, Tioga County, Pa.

RICHARD J. MANNING was born in Lenox township in 1860. He graduated at Keystone Academy, and attended Madison University, at Hamilton, N. Y., for two years, and St. Laurent College, near Montreal. He read law with Miller S. Allen, and was admitted to the bar January term, 1887, and removed to Susquehanna.

WILLIAM D. B. AINEY, son of Dr. Ainey, of New Milford, was born April 8, 1864, was educated at Mansfield Normal School, and was two years at Lehigh University. He read law with E. L. Blakeslee, and was admitted to the bar, August term, 1887.

CHAPTER X.

THE PRESS.

THE Centinel, a four-column folio, eighteen by twenty-two inches, was the first newspaper published at Montrose. It was published by Justin Clark, and the first number was issued February 20, 1816. Its motto was:

"Here shall the press the people's rights maintain, Unawed by influence, undisturbed by gain."

The editor certainly had ample room up here in the wilderness to cry out against wrongs of every description unawed by influence, and the gains were not so large that any one would be likely to offer to bribe him. There was no great cry against the wrongs of humanity in the paper, however; it was edited according to the old-fashioned plan of giving the larger part of the paper to the latest news from Europe, which was as fresh as the time it took a sailing-vessel to cross the Atlantic, a New York, Philadelphia or New England newspaper to publish it, and slow coaches to carry these newspapers to Montrose, where it was reproduced as the latest news from Europe. Besides European news, it was not beneath the dignity of these pioneer newspapers to publish the messages of the Presidents and Governors, stilted essays on grave subjects; and a superabundance of poetry, together with the advertisements, comprised the larger part of the matter found in the early newspapers here and elsewhere; consequently, the historian finds more of local history in the advertisements than elsewhere in them. All those local happenings which are written up with such minutiæ of detail nowadays were almost entirely wanting in the early newspaper; and personal mention was reserved for celebrated persons This newspaper, small as it was, each page being eleven by eighteen inches, was filled with news under great difficulties. In 1817 he begged his readers "to excuse the barrenness of the Centinel, for he had received no papers by the mail." Alas! no mail, no telegraph, no telephone and no idea of how to make local events interesting. No hunting stories, no early pioneer struggles for existence, no new arrival of settlers, all of which would have been a thousand-fold more interesting to us now,—all are deferred to far-fetched news; but if he found it a difficult matter to fill his paper with news, it was still more difficult to get pay for it. In the spring of 1818 the Centinel contained the following appeal from the editor: "Help me or I die! For three months I have not received as much money from the whole of my patrons as the paper itself costs for one bare week." May 9, 1818, he changed the name of his paper, making the following announcement to his patrons: "This number terminates the Centinel forever. The Montrose Gazette will be published at this office hereafter, the same day of the week as the Centinel has been." The terms were $2.00 for one year and $2.50 if not paid within the year. December 15, 1821, Justin Clark announced that "his health had become so slender that longer to continue in the business would be injurious to himself and the public; that he had sold to two worthy young men, James Catlin and George Fuller, in whom he had the firmest confidence." The politics continued the same as before—that is, Democratic-Republican.

Justin Clark was a lame man and went on crutches. He came from Cooperstown, N. Y., and probably returned to that place after he sold to Catlin & Fuller. He died shortly after leaving here, in 1822. Garner Isbell took the first paper that was printed at Montrose from the press, and he preserved the files for a number of years. His son, L. F. Isbell, a jeweler at New Milford, has them now. Mr. Isbell was a cabinet-maker, and was an ingenious man at almost every kind of mechanical work. He kept the presses in repair for years, and sometimes rendered other assistance in connection with the papers. He built a house just beyond where the rink now is, and subsequently moved into Bridgewater township, on the South road, where he died, aged about sixty.

The first number of the Messenger was issued by Adam Waldie, who came here from Philadelphia, June 24, 1820. This was a four-column folio, of the same size as the Centinel. In his prospectus the editor says: "In politics the editor of the Messenger will strive to steer clear of all party distinctions. He professes no partiality for such artificial and invidious classifications; but since they do exist, he shall be so far impartial as to publish, with equal readiness, communications from either, only let the language be temperate and respectful, without which, be the writer whom he may, no communication can be inserted." About the same time that Adam Waldie started his independent paper, some parties, supposed to have been Isaac Post and possibly Garner Isbell, published the Republican Reformer; about the same time The Pennsylvanian, another campaign paper, dated at Dundaff, but really published at Montrose, was issued. Neither the Reformer nor the Pennsylvanian were issued beyond a few numbers. The second volume of the Messenger was named the Susquehanna County Herald. Aug. 3, 1822, Adam Waldie sold the Herald to [1] Samuel C. Wilson & Co. The new editor announced that the Herald would partake more of a political character. It would support Democratic-Republican principles.

"[2] In 1823 the Montrose Gazette and Susquehanna County Herald were united, and the publication was continued three years by James Catlin.

"In 1824 he edited and printed, also, The Repository, a literary and religious semi-monthly magazine; and in the fall of the same year he began to issue Elder Dimock's Christian Magazine.

"Vol. I. The Christian Magazine, a monthly publication, devoted to the public for general information. Published by Davis Dimock, pastor of the Baptist church, at Bridgewater. Montrose: printed by James Catlin, at the Gazette office. Commenced November 1, 1824, comprising thirty-two pages, about the size of this book, at $1 cash, or $1.25 in grain, flax or wool.

"Vol. II. The same title, but issued semi-monthly, on eight pages, at 87½ cents cash, in advance; $1 in grain, etc.

"Vol. III. Baptist Mirror and Christian Magazine, etc. Printed by Dimock & Fuller, office of the Register, enlarged to three columns to a page, eight columns semi-monthly; closed September 17, 1827."

James Catlin, son of Putnam Catlin, and brother of George Catlin, the artist, married a sister of Benjamin Sayre and moved to the South. He died at Milton, Florida, in November, 1847.

"In 1824 George Fuller established and edited the Susquehanna County Republican; the second year he was joined by S. C. Wilson.

"December, 1825, both the Gazette and the Republican were merged into the Register.

"The Register was established by Davis Dimock, Jr., and George Fuller. After one year the name was changed to The Susquehanna Register, and was published three years longer by the same parties, who favored the election of Jackson; George Fuller then withdrew, and D. Dimock, Jr., continued its publication alone until January, 1831, when C. L. Ward became his partner.

"The accession of Mr. Ward to the editorship was at a period of moment to popular education and the prosecution of the public works; and his best efforts were given to their promotion.

"From the above time until March, 1836, he conducted the paper, being for the first two or three months the associate of Davis Dimock, Jr., and for the last fifteen having James W. Chapman in partnership.

"In 1832–34 the paper had an additional title, the Northern Pennsylvanian. In 1835 only the original name was used, but the following year the Northern Farmer was attached to it.

"Mr. Ward sold out to D. Dimock, Jr., the firm-name becoming J. W. Chapman & Co. until September, 1838, when J. W. Chapman bought out D. Dimock, Jr., and it became a Whig journal."

The Susquehanna Register and Northern Farmer, in 1837, was a six column folio, each page being about fifteen by twenty–two inches. Its motto was: "The will of the people is the legitimate source, and the happiness of the people the true end of government." This paper was conducted by James W. Chapman alone through four volumes.

[1] Samuel C. Wilson is still living at Belfast, New York, aged eighty-two. He is a brother of Mason Wilson.

[2] Blackman's "History."

"In 1841 he was joined by B. H. Mills, but after April, 1843, was again alone until 1856, when, for one year, Theodore Smith was his publisher and co-editor.

"June, 1851, The Susquehanna Register establishment passed into the hands of John C. Miller, and April, 1852, it was published by Homer H. Frazier.

"In 1854 H. H. Frazier and Theodore Smith were editors and publishers of the last volume of the paper.

"January, 1855, its name was changed to the Independent Republican, C. F. Read, associate editor, with H. H. Frazier the publisher."

Homer H. Frazier built up the Independent Republican until it had a large circulation. He gave particular attention to the local department, and made it one of the best paying newspapers in Northern Pennsylvania. In August, 1876, James P. Taylor bought the Independent Republican office. He enlarged the paper from a nine to a ten-column folio, the entire sheet being thirty by forty-nine inches. Mr. Taylor has also made a specialty of the local department. Its circulation is five thousand. We follow the history of the Independent Republican with short sketches of Christopher L. Ward and James W. Chapman, editors of the Register, and Homer H. Frazier and James P. Taylor, editors of the Independent Republican.

CHRISTOPHER L. WARD was born in New Milford in 1807. He was studious in his youth and acquired, by study and reading, a fair education. The habits of industry early acquired never left him: "His diversions indicated the bent of his mind." From the school-boy to the printer-apprentice, and through the initiatory studies of his profession, he gathered many curious things, and delighted in arranging them appropriately; and in later years this propensity led to his acquisition of a valuable library. With freedom from other demands upon his time, he might have made a success in the world of letters. In 1831 he became the partner of Davis Dimock in conducting the Susquehanna Register. He became editor at the time when the public-school law was being agitated, and he gave his best efforts to the promotion of that cause. He was a good writer; but having a disinclination to enter political life, he severed his connection with the Register in 1836. He read law with William Jessup and was admitted to the bar in 1837. He removed to Towanda, Bradford County, shortly afterwards, and became president of the Atlantic and Great Western Railway, during its construction through Pennsylvania, and through his instrumentality the means for its early completion were obtained in Europe. He was a well-read and clear-minded lawyer, but his multiplied business affairs took him from his profession, though he had been successful in it. He died at Towanda, May 14, 1870, aged sixty-three years.

HON. JAMES W. CHAPMAN was born in what is now Brooklyn township (then Bridgewater, Luzerne County) May 7, 1804. His father was known as Joseph Chapman, Jr., and was a native of New London County, Conn. His grandfather, Captain Joseph Chapman, Sr., of the Revolution, came to Pennsylvania in 1798 and moved his family here in 1799. Joseph Chapman, Jr., married Betsey Leffingwell, of Norwich, Conn., in 1800. James W. Chapman's parents and grandparents were among the pioneers of Susquehanna County, and he had only the advantages of the very common schools of the backwoods, attending summers from five until nine years of age, and winter schools until in his sixteenth year, when he was employed to teach a small school; he continued to teach from that time for ten years. He studied grammar and surveying without an instructor, at spare intervals while teaching and working on his father's farm. In 1833–34 he conducted the Mauch Chunk Courier. He returned to Montrose and joined C. L. Ward in the publication of the Susquehanna County Register, and from 1835 to 1851, either with others or alone, he conducted that paper. Mr. Chapman is a smooth writer, with a vein of humor that holds the attention. He wrote with care not to offend. Since his withdrawal from journalism he has devoted most of his time to surveying, which he commenced in 1824. He was appointed deputy, by the surveyor-general, in 1830, and served until he went to Mauch Chunk. He has served as county surveyor, by election, since 1862, excepting a short time when he was associate judge. He served as transcribing clerk of the State Senate in 1847. In 1850 he took the census of the eastern half of the county, and in 1880 took the census of the borough. In 1871 he was elected associate judge along with Judson H. Cook; they were the last to act in that capacity in Susquehanna County, the office having been abolished by the Constitution of 1873. Mr. Chapman married, in 1844, Betsey Bisbee, who was born in 1825, being a daughter of Major Seth and Leah (Aldridge) Bisbee, of Lathrop. Their children, are Charles Miner, the late editor of the Tunkhannock Republican, and Ella W., wife of S. L. Brown, a large oil jobber, of Wilkes-Barre.

Homer H. Frazier was born at Canton, Conn., December 21, 1822. Thomas Frazier, the founder of the family in America, came from Scotland to New York City at a date unknown to the family. His son Daniel married Abigail Holliday, and removed to Connecticut and settled on a farm. Their son Thomas married Deborah Selden Nott, a sister of the celebrated Samuel Nott, D.D., and Eliphalet Nott, D.D., for many years president of Union College, New York. Stephen N. (1793–1880), son of Thomas, married Abigail M. Case (1795–1885). Their children were George F., Stephen N., Homer H., Eliphalet W., John J., Charles H., Eliza M. and Cestus C. Homer H. married Caroline B. Birchard, of Montrose. The parents of Mrs. Frazier were Jesse Tracy (1802–53) and Lamira (Smith) Birchard (1803–72), married January 22, 1828. Their children were Asher L. (1829–82), Harriet H. (1832–40), Caroline Brewster, born April 28, 1835, wife of H. H. Frazier, and Charles H., now in Philadelphia. The Birchards were an old family from New London County, Conn.

Jesse Birchard (1770–1840) and Harriet (Smith) first came to Susquehanna County in 1799, and located at Birchardsville, Forest Lake township. Their children were Asahel (1800–35), Jesse T. and John S. A sister of Jesse Birchard married a Tracy, the father of Thomas H. R. Tracy, for many years superintendent of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company. When about ten years of age H. H. Frazier's parents removed with their family to the State of New York, and after residing successively at Catskill, Cairo, Coventry and Colesville, at length located on a farm in Harmony township, Susquehanna County. Mr. Frazier was fond of agricultural pursuits, and at the same time a lover of books. His father spoke of him as a "wonderful boy, and very industrious." Owing to the moderate circumstances of his parents, his educational advantages were confined entirely to the district school and a select school of his older brother, George, at Windsor, N. Y. He sometimes assisted his brother in teaching, and afterwards taught a number of terms. He entered the law-office of Hon. B. S. Bentley at Montrose, April 1, 1847, and was admitted to the bar August 21, 1848. For a time he was employed in J. T. Richards' office, and subsequently formed a partnership with F. A. Case. In the Susquehanna Register of April 29, 1852, John Miller, in his valedictory, speaks of his successor, Homer H. Frazier, as a ripe scholar and a writer of no ordinary merit. In his salutatory, Mr. Frazier speaks of himself as a Whig by education and by "conviction," and announced that if any one made personal assaults upon him (with goose quill), that he should "let him alone severely." His first editorial was brief and modest, and his promises then made were well sustained. On the 4th of January, 1855, in connection with Hon. Charles F. Read, Mr. Frazier issued the first number of the Independent Republican, under the motto of "Freedom and right against slavery and wrong." For a short time (or until his removal to Scranton to establish the Scranton Republican) Theodore Smith assisted in the publication of the paper. During the campaign of 1856 Mr. Frazier was corresponding editor of the Scranton Republican. The circulation of the Register rose from seven or eight hundred under Mr. Frazier's twenty-four years' management to over five thousand. Starting with the organization of the Republican party, it was from the first, one of its able, earnest and efficient organs. Passing through the troublesome times of anti-slavery agitation, followed by the War of the Rebellion, perhaps few political editors were more candid and fair than Mr.

James P. Taylor

Frazier. He gave particular attention to the local department, and made his paper of practical value in its moral, literary and scientific character. Seldom absent from his post, the editor was faithful in the discharge of his duties, and the physical and mental strain upon his system eventually caused his death. In his intercourse with correspondents, patrons, employes and others he was genial and pleasant. As a citizen he was beloved and respected by all classes for the rectitude and purity of his character. The paper which he edited is a monument of the best years of his life. In his domestic relations he was remarkably happy as husband and father. His children were Winifred, George H., Herbert R., Marion L. and Jesse B. Mr. Frazier died May 16, 1876, aged fifty-three years. Mrs. Frazier married again and resides at Montrose, the wife of Orlando Watrous.

THEODORE SMITH commenced to learn the printer's trade in the Argus office, at Towanda. He came to Montrose and finished his trade with James W. Chapman, in the Register office. When H. H. Frazier took charge of the paper and changed the name to Independent Republican, he assisted its publication until he took a press from Montrose to Scranton and founded the Scranton Republican, with the understanding that the press should be returned to Montrose if the venture proved to be unsuccessful. The paper was started, as a campaign sheet, in 1856, during the Fremont canvass. It was a six-column folio, issued weekly. He sold it to F. A. McCartney, who had it about two years, when it came back into the hands of Mr. Smith and T. P. Alliger, who conducted it until 1864; then, after passing through a number of hands, Joseph Scranton purchased it, and established the daily Morning Republican in 1867. In 1864 Mr. Smith returned to Montrose, and again took the place of foreman (which had been filled by Wallace Lyons during his absence) on the Independent Republican, where he is still actively employed. Mr. Smith has been forty-seven years in the business, and is one of the oldest printers actively engaged in the employment in the State.

JAMES P. TAYLOR was born at West Chester, the county-seat of Chester County, Pa., July 8, 1843. Here he enjoyed the advantages of excellent public schools during his early boyhood, and later finished his education at the West Chester Academy and at the State Normal School, at Millersville, Pa.

On the anniversary of his seventeenth birthday he entered the printing-office of the West Chester Village Record, as an indentured apprentice, to learn the mystery of the "art preservative." Here he served a full term apprenticeship of four years, leaving the office about a year after its expiration with a thorough and practical knowledge of the craft.

The invasion of Pennsylvania by Lee, in 1863, occurred during his apprenticeship, and in response to calls for volunteers, he, with nearly the whole available force of the office, asked leave to go; but the publisher positively refused permission, declaring that the office had already been so depleted of help by the enlistment of all the men, that the boys under his control must stay and keep the paper going. But the next morning found nearly all of them on the road to the front, they having resolved to test the quality of a different kind of "shooting-stick" than that found in a printing-office.

Mr. Taylor joined an independent battery of light artillery, commanded by Captain George R. Guss. Many of the officers and men were from Col. Hyatt's Military School, then located at West Chester. Upon reaching Chambersburg the battery was fully supplied with guns, horses and equipments. It remained in the field until the pressing exigency that called it to the defense of the State had ceased, when it proceeded to Harrisburg, and was mustered out, Mr. Taylor getting back to his case in the Village Record office early in September.

In 1866, soon after leaving the Record office, he went West, as associate editor and one of the proprietors of the Daily Pantograph, at Bloomington, Ill., the oldest and at that time the only daily paper in the city. Here he remained until November, 1870, when he severed his connection with the Pantograph and returned to Pennsylvania.

A few weeks after his return East, at the solicitation of Hon. William P. Miner, editor of the Record of the Times, he went to Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and connected himself with that paper. Shortly afterwards he, with Robert Morton, leased the paper from Mr. Miner for the period of two years. The new firm conducted the paper most successfully until the expiration of their lease, when Mr. Miner again assumed control, Mr. Taylor remaining as general manager and assistant editor. In 1873 the Daily Record of the Times, the first daily paper in the city, was established, and the first number bore his name as managing editor.

In June, 1876, Homer H. Frazier, editor and proprietor of the Independent Republican, printed at Montrose, Pa., died. Mr. Frazier had been its editor and publisher for nearly twenty-five years, and the paper was recognized, wherever known, as one of the best weeklies in the State, having a circulation not exceeded by any paper in Pennsylvania outside the large cities.

On the 1st day of August, 1876, Mr. Taylor, having purchased the Independent Republican establishment, relinquished his editorial duties at Wilkes-Barre to assume control of that paper as its editor and proprietor. Since assuming its editorial management, in 1876, the paper has received his personal and undivided attention.

Not only has it maintained its previous high standing and influence, but marked improvements have been inaugurated, materially increasing its circulation and usefulness. The paper has been enlarged from a nine-column to a large ten-column folio; steam-power has been introduced, new machinery and presses have been added, with an entire renewal of material, and the office supplied with steam heating apparatus.

A large percentage of the patrons of the Independent Republican being engaged in agriculture, Mr. Taylor has always, without stint, endeavored to contribute to their welfare in every manner. His columns are largely devoted to farm topics and general information to the agriculturist. For several years, among his endeavors to encourage and stimulate this important industry has been the annual gratuitous distribution among his subscribers of new and superior varieties of seeds, and during the last five years he has been the means of introducing, in this way, over twenty-five new varieties of potatoes, some of them proving of much value to the farmers. In 1885, as an encouragement to farmers' boys to till the soil, he offered several money premiums to boys under a certain age who should raise the most corn from a given number of square feet of ground. Many boys entered the contest, and the result showed that the soil of Susquehanna County is not only fertile, but astonishingly productive; but the practical lesson in agriculture which the boys received was the main object of Mr. Taylor's premiums.

Since a boy of seventeen a printing-office has been his business-home, and his life since then has been spent in the printing, publishing and editing of newspapers.

Mr. Taylor was married, April 16, 1873, to Miss Maggie D. Ayres, a daughter of Addis M. and Debbie R. Ayres, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa. Mrs. Taylor was born in Chester County, Pa., of which county her parents were natives.

Mr. Taylor has two children, both daughters —Mamie S., born at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., April 5, 1875; Jeanette A., born at Montrose, Pa., November 27, 1877.

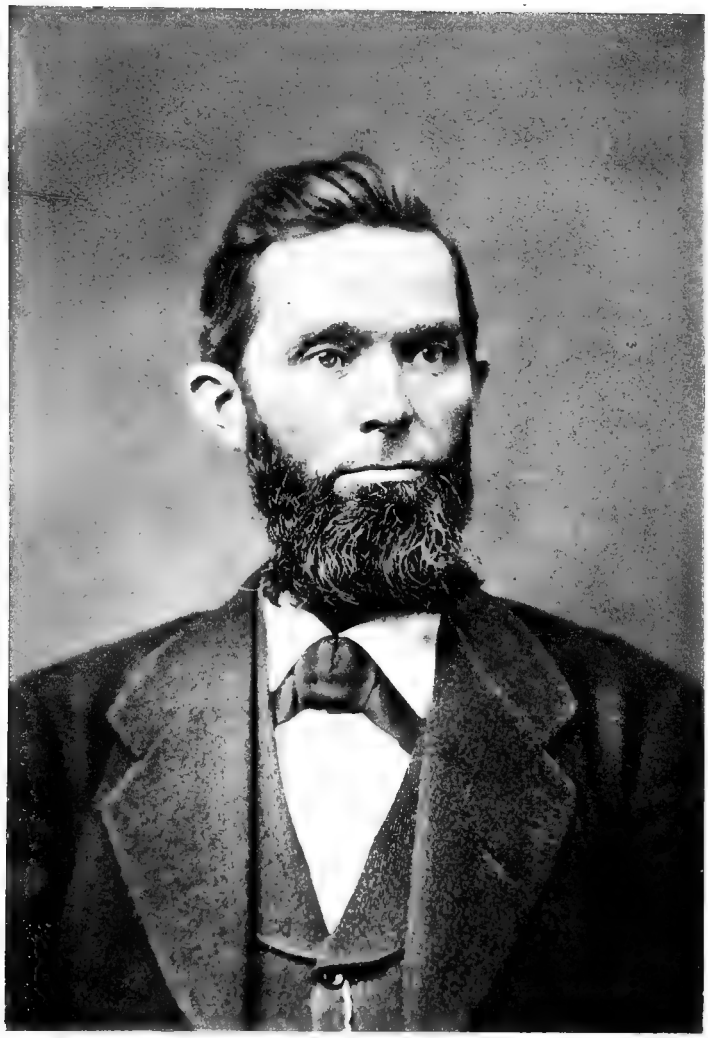
He is a member of the Presbyterian Church of Montrose, and a member of the following-named societies: Masons (Knights Templar), Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Improved Order of Red Men and Grand Army of the Republic.

In politics Mr. Taylor has always been a Republican, and the Independent Republican is the recognized Republican organ of the county.

Mr. Taylor comes from good old Quaker stock, his ancestors all being natives of Chester County, Pa., and of the Quaker faith. His father, William W. Taylor, was born September 22, 1818, the son of William H. Taylor (1779–1841) and Elizabeth Taylor (1781–1825). He was married, January 23, 1844, to Hannah P. Pyle, daughter of James Pyle (1782–1825) and Elizabeth Pyle (1793–1833). She was born at Kennett Square, Chester County, Pa.,

September 24, 1820, and is a second cousin of the late Bayard Taylor, the author, traveler and poet; her mother, Elizabeth Pyle (née Elizabeth Taylor), being a daughter of Jacob Taylor, brother of Bayard Taylor's father, John Taylor.

In 1867 Mr. Taylor's father removed with his family to the State of Illinois. During his residence in his native county of Chester he was a prominent and successful carpenter, contractor and builder, and many of the prominent public and private buildings at the county-seat and throughout the county were erected under his supervision, as was also the Chester Creek water-works, that supplies West Chester with water.



He has now retired from active business, and resides at Macomb, McDonough County, Illinois.

The parents of James P. Taylor had eight children—five sons and three daughters—and the names of those now living, in the order of their birth, are James P., Charles W., Phœbe E., Bentley W. and Fred. E., all of whom, with the exception of James P. Taylor, are residents of McDonough County, State of Illinois.

The Independent Volunteer was established at Montrose by Isaac Fuller, November 4, 1831, and continued ten months, when Asa G. Dimock bought the press and started the Democratic Volunteer, issuing only one or two numbers, when it was re-purchased by George & I. Fuller and "restored to Republican principles" and to the old name. The third volume was published first by George Fuller alone, and then by E. H. Easterbrooks; the fourth and fifth volumes by G. Fuller, and the sixth and seventh volumes by Fuller & Read. The eighth volume began November, 1838, under the name of the Montrose Volunteer, C. F. Read, sole editor. The ninth volume was edited by Read & Turrell. May 21, 1840, Abel Turrell bought Read's interest and edited the paper alone until, May 27, 1841, the Montrose Volunteer and North Star appeared, with A. Turrell and J. H. Dimock as editors. September 8, 1842, Dimock sold to S. T. Scott. May 25, 1843, the thirteenth volume resumed the name of Montrose Volunteer, under the sole editorship of Mr. Turrell. January 25, 1844, Abel Turrell and George Fuller established the Northern Democrat in place of the Montrose Volunteer. The Democrat was of the same size and general appearance as the Volunteer. It was a five-column folio, each page being about fifteen by twenty-one inches. January 2, 1845, George Fuller sold his interest to I. N. Bullard. January 1, 1846, Mr. Turrell, who had been principal editor for about seven years, finally retired from the management and sold his interest to O. G. Hempstead. The paper was enlarged January 8, 1846, by Bullard & Hempstead to a six-column folio. Mr. Hempstead said that he had been a clergyman, but he pledged himself to know no man's religion. January 15, 1846, I. N. Bullard published his valedictory, and George Fuller announced that he had again purchased an interest in the paper. "Reader! nothing in the annals of time has been more clearly demonstrated than the great truth that change is stamped on all things here below; but in nothing have changes become more frequent recently than in regard to the proprietorship of this paper." He further said: "It is my design to make my present position a permanent one." But Mr. Fuller did not make the position permanent, as he had intended. He and Hempstead edited the third and fourth volumes, when Mr. Fuller sold to Hempstead, who conducted the paper alone for several years. In January, 1849, he changed the name to Montrose Democrat, which it still retains. About 1851 Ezra B. and Simeon B. Chase purchased the paper and conducted it for about five years. January 3, 1856, Ezra B. Chase announced that he had assumed editorial control of the paper. George A. Chase was publisher at that time. July 31, 1856, E. B. Chase published his valedictory, and in the same issue J. B. McCollum and A. J. Gerritson announced themselves as his successors. They say that "they shall put the public in possession of facts, and inferences flowing from them shall be their aim." December 31, 1857, J. B. McCollum transferred his interest to A. J. Gerritson, who assumed entire control. The paper was a seven-column folio at this time, having as its motto: "We join ourselves to no party that does not carry the flag and keep step to the music of the whole Union." January 6, 1863, the first number of the twentieth volume was reduced in size to a six-column folio. The editor explained that the price of paper had advanced to twenty-five cents per pound, and that he had determined to reduce the size of the paper rather than increase the price. The paper continued in its reduced form until July 14, 1868, when it was again enlarged to a seven-column folio. July 28, 1869, Mr. Gerritson, after having been connected with the paper thirteen years, sold to Eugene B. Hawley. April 1, 1873, William C. Cruser bought one-half interest of Mr. Hawley. This partnership continued until May 1, 1879, when Cruser sold to Hawley. March 1, 1881, W. C. Cruser and Daniel Brewster bought the office of Hawley. In July, 1883, M. A. Lyons bought Brewster's interest, and the following November Hon. George A. Post purchased Lyons' interest, and the paper has been published since then under the firm-name of Cruser & Post. The paper has been changed in form and size a number of times during the last fifteen or twenty years. It is now a nine-column folio, twenty-nine by forty-three inches, with a circulation of two thousand five hundred and sixteen copies weekly. Of the writers who conducted the Volunteer and Democrat, George Fuller is now a resident of Scranton. George Fuller's father, Edward Fuller, came to Bridgewater township in 1806, and lived there until he died, aged eighty-five years. George left his father's house when he was only twelve years old, and clerked in a store for a while; then he went into the first printing-office at Montrose, where he learned his trade under Justin Clark. He says the first newspaper was a four-column folio, printed mostly with pica type, on the first printing-press that was used in Albany, N. Y. Mr. Fuller afterwards started a Democratic paper in the interest of General Jackson. The first paper had a circulation of three or four hundred copies. His paper had a circulation of five or six hundred copies. The county was Democratic then, and Mr. Fuller was leader of the party for a number of years. He was prothonotary in 1839 and Congressman in 1844 to fill the vacancy caused by the death of A. H. Read. He never wrote an editorial that he could not face afterwards, and when he left the editorial chair he had many friends in the opposition party. Being candid, his paper wielded a great influence. The sharpest fights were usually on the office of sheriff. The Wolf and Muhlenberg contest for the Governorship was also a severe one. Mr. Fuller is past four-score years, and still hale and hearty. He was successful as a merchant, and his sons are all active men. William H. is the well-known expert ticket agent at Scranton, Isaac F. and George A. are engaged in business, and Frederick is an alderman in Scranton. Davis Dimock, Jr., who was associated with Fuller at one time, was elected to Congress in 1842, but died before his term expired, and A. H. Read served for the remainder of the term. Charles F. Read, I. N. Bullard and Abel Turrell all became merchants at Montrose after they left the editorial chair. Mr. Turrell was a very conservative and judicious writer. O. G. Hempstead was a Universalist preacher and a writer of considerable ability. SIMEON B. CHASE is still living. He was a member of the State Legislature in 1856–57–58. He read law with F. B. Streeter, and was admitted to the bar January 22, 1851. His great work, however, has been in connection with the temperance movement. His digest of the decisions of the G. W. C. T. of the Order of Good Templars became the standard work of that order in Pennsylvania; and his connection with the R. W. G. L. made him a man of influence throughout the Union. EZRA B. CHASE was one of the strongest writers that ever occupied an editorial chair at Montrose. His articles were republished in other papers and exerted a great influence. He was a member of the Legislature in 1852–53. He read law with F. B. Streeter, and was admitted to the bar in 1850.

ANDREW JACKSON GERRITSON, for thirteen years the editor and proprietor of the Montrose Democrat, was a native of Dimock township, where his parents—Richard and Lydia (Hoar) Gerritson—were farmers, and had settled from Chester, Delaware County. They were members of the Society of Friends, and reared their family of three sons and four daughters in that faith. In early boyhood Andrew resolved to obtain an education, and to accomplish this, he had to depend largely upon his own self-reliance, which throughout his entire life was one of his leading characteristics. After attending the home district school in boyhood, he entered Harford University, from which he was graduated about the time of reaching his majority, and before and after that time was for several terms a teacher. At the age of twenty-two he came to Montrose, and began reading law with Ralph B. Little, which, however, he continued only one year, when, in 1856, with J. B. McCollum, he purchased the Montrose Democrat, and conducted the paper with that gentleman for two years, and subsequently alone, until his retirement from the paper in 1869, and from active business life on account of failing health. The dismemberment of the old Whig party after the Presidential election of 1852, and the birth of the Republican party the same year of his taking the editorial chair, left him, with other Democratic journalists, the alternative of holding up the principles of their party, which he did, with a ready pen and a strong arm. To this work Mr. Gerritson bent all his energies, formulated opinion through his paper by his own independent thought and action, in the interest of principle and party, and so wielded the influence and tone of the press here, that upon the breaking out of the Rebellion, in 1861, the readers of the Democrat were in full sympathy with the Union cause from the outstart, and gave their money, their influence and their sons to put down the war, punish treason and restore the Union. When the State called for emergency men upon the invasion of its borders by the Confederate army, he volunteered in the service, and although unused to such hardships, did his duty from a conscientious regard for principle, and served with his regiment for some two months, when his services in the field were no longer required. Upon his return he resumed his place at the head of his paper, and so promulgated his own idea in the support of the Union cause through its columns as to cause many who differed with him politically to become his warm friends.

A. J. Garrison

The underlying principles of his life were based upon honor and justice, while his character and abilities commanded respect. A man of eminent virtues in private life, great executive and business capacity, with firm and positive opinions, and while respecting the views of others, he gave his own clearly, and never sought security from censure by silence or time-serving notoriety. Mr. Gerritson was chosen postmaster of the House at Harrisburg during the winter session of 1863, and at the close he was honored with a vote of thanks by the members of that body for his courtesy and competent discharge of the duties of that office. In 1868 he was appointed and served as revenue assessor of the district here. He was identified with the First National Bank, at Montrose, from its organization, and was from the first a member of its finance committee. In early life the gentle influences of a Christian mother of the Society of Friends so impressed his mind, and moulded his character, that he was quiet, undemonstrative and unassuming, and withal, genial, social and affable in his intercourse with the world.

Although the facilities for gaining an education in his early life were meagre, he nevertheless made such proficiency as to be well qualified for the discharge of all the duties pertaining to an active business life, and while frail in body and ofttimes feeble in health, none surpassed him in quickness and clearness of perception or in strength and vigor of mind. The last years of his life, after disposing of his paper, were mostly spent in the office of his preceptor in the law, where he engaged in conveyancing, settling estates and in conducting his own private business. Twenty-five years of his life were passed at Montrose, where, for kindness as a neighbor, uprightness and integrity as a citizen, and faithfulness as a friend, he stood pre-eminent. He died at his home at Montrose December 25, 1881, aged forty-eight years.

His wife, with whom he became acquainted while both were students at Harford University, and whom he married December 31, 1856, was Mary E., a daughter of Captain David Morgan (1785–1866) and Esther (Brink) Morgan (1794–1872), the former a native of Litchfield County, Conn., who settled in Brooklyn township in 1810, and the latter a native of Bradford County, Pa.

Mrs. Gerritson survives in 1887, and resides at Montrose.

Hon. Eugene B. Hawley was a brilliant writer on topics with which he was familiar. He was of a sensitive organization and attacked what he believed to be wrong, fearlessly. Sometimes his zeal in advocating what he thought to be right may have led him beyond what the facts warranted. He attacked the manner in which the county offices were conducted with such vigor that it brought the Republican majority down, resulting finally in the election of several Democrats to county offices. His efforts were not without beneficial results. In 1876 he was elected to represent Susquehanna and Wayne in the State Senate for two years. He did not revolutionize things there as he had expected to, and his highly-wrought organization gave out under the strain he put upon it. He fell into a state of hopeless melancholia and continued thus for a number of years in the asylum. Finally his reason came to him again, and he returned home and died shortly after, in March, 1886. His wife was Frances M. Hayden, who now lives at New Milford.

William C. Cruser, son of Henry Cruser and grandson of Bela Jones, an old settler in Bridgewater, was born in Bridgewater township January 9, 1855. He obtained his education at Montrose Academy and learned the printing business at Montrose. In 1873 E. B. Hawley, editor of the Montrose Democrat, employed him as foreman, and April 1st of that year he purchased a one-half interest in the paper. This partnership continued until May 1, 1879, when Mr. Cruser sold his interest to Mr. Hawley and made a trip West, and purchased a tract of land near Fort Kearney, Neb. He returned and, about the 1st of February, 1881, in connection with Daniel Brewster, purchased the Democrat of Hawley, and has owned a one-half interest in the paper since that time. When Mr. Cruser first connected himself with the Democrat it had only one thousand one hundred circulation. He canvassed the county for subscribers and improved the paper, until it now has over two thousand five hundred subscribers. He usually acts as the managing and business editor, and has built up the local department and made up the paper in better form than when it was under the former management. Mr. Cruser has been West a number of times since he took his first trip, and made additional purchases of land in Nebraska and Dakota. In October, 1876, he married Augusta Pettis, of Montrose.

Hon. George A. Post was born at Cuba, Allegany County, N. Y. His parents moved to Dunkirk when he was six months old, and thence to Owego in 1861, where young Post received his education at the Owego Academy, together with about one year's attendance at the Owego Normal School. He was then fifteen, and began to read law with Charles E. Parker, the present judge of Tioga County, N. Y. After remaining there something over two years he was put under a private tutor to prepare for college. In April, 1873, his father was appointed station agent at Susquehanna Depot, and George accepted what was intended to be a temporary position; but the employment proving congenial, and being anxious to become self-supporting, he continued in the service of the Erie Company until he was made secretary of the motive power department, a position which he held until November 15, 1883, when he resigned to take his seat in Congress. In April, 1875, he was chosen Grand Vice-Dictator of the Grand Lodge of the Knights of Honor of Pennsylvania, and in April, 1876, he was chosen Grand Dictator of the same order, a position to which he was twice re-elected. For five years he represented the Grand Lodge in the Supreme Lodge of the United States. In early life Mr. Post took an active interest in politics, and commenced making political speeches before he reached his majority. In 1877 he was elected chief burgess of Susquehanna, and in 1880 he was Presidential elector on the Hancock ticket. In 1881 he resumed his law studies, evenings, with Hon. M. J. Larrabee, of Susquehanna Depot, and was admitted to the bar at August term, 1882. In the fall of 1882 he was nominated for Congress by the Democratic conference, and, through divisions in the Republican ranks, he was elected to represent the Fifteenth District, composed of Wayne, Susquehanna, Bradford and Wyoming Counties, in the Forty-eighth Congress. He was only twenty-eight years old, and was the youngest member of that body. He served on the committees on "Pacific Railroads" and "Improvements of the Levees of the Mississippi River." He was often called upon by Speaker Carlisle to preside temporarily. He was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention which nominated Cleveland, and also secretary of the Democratic Congressional Caucus and of the Democratic Congressional Committee, which, in conjunction with the Democratic National Committee, conducted the Presidential campaign. Some of his productions while in the latter position were used as campaign documents. In 1884 he was unanimously renominated for Congress, but the Republicans were united, and, as the district is largely Republican, he was defeated. In recognition of his services during the campaign, he was importuned to become a candidate for clerk of the House. Meanwhile, in 1883, he had purchased a one-half interest in the Montrose Democrat, and, upon his return from Washington, he removed to Montrose and has since been active in the management of that paper. He does most of the editorial writing, besides practicing his profession. Mr. Post is a fluent speaker and a ready writer, and his overflowing humor crops out constantly. June 22, 1881, he married Miss Minnie C., daughter of Thomas T. Munson. He has one son—George Post.

The following is a good specimen of Mr. Post's style as a writer. It also gives a fair exposition of his views as to the manner of conducting a public journal:

"The good-natured reply of the Sentinel to the Democrat regarding our suggestion that we would follow our own inclinations as to the subjects we would discuss and when we should treat of them, was neat, pleasant and well written. We are glad we have caused Brother Northrop to laugh, for it will do him a power of good.

"We believe in looking upon the bright side of life. It does no good to mope and be gloomy. We are not of those who think that everything is going awry. This is a very pleasant world to live in, and we are glad we are alive. We would rather make a sober-sided man like Northrop laugh than to harrow the souls of our readers by indulging in gloomy, heart-rending disquisitions upon the sinfulness of mankind.

"When the Democrat makes its weekly visits to its many hundreds of readers, we want it to be a welcome visitor. A newspaper is like any other visitor in the household. If it is cold, sad in tone, ever harping upon one idea, it is unwelcome and remains unread; but if it is lively and gossiping, stored with the treasures of the tattling world, and with a spice of mirth too, it will always be received with pleasure.

"We do not consider the readers of the Democrat as our pupils, whom we are to instruct, but as our neighbors and friends, to whom we weekly give as fat a budget of local and general news and miscellaneous reading matter as by industry we can gather and which we think will interest them. We do not flatter ourselves that our readers are groping in ignorance until we can enlighten them. If we did, we should feel badly about it, for we do not assume to ourselves superior knowledge above our fellows. It is evident that our neighbor of the Sentinel takes another view of his position, and considers himself as a teacher of the public, who must be wise and deep, 'a man severe and stern to view.' We don't propose to get round-shouldered carrying the whole weight of this earth's sorrows on our back. We shall try and do our duty and shirk no responsibility which rests upon us, and we shall be perfectly willing to compare results with our sedate neighbor."

"The Spectator and Freeman's Journal was established by Albert L. Post June, 1836. It was a Whig paper devoted to free speech, but became the organ of anti-slavery men. At that time there was but one other paper in the State distinctively anti-slavery. After eighteen months O. N. Worden was associated with Mr. Post until the enterprise was given up, June, 1840. The press was purchased by Messrs. Ariel Carr and Amos N. Meylert, who published for six months the North Star, which was continued a few months longer by Ariel Carr and S. T. Scott, when it was merged with the Montrose Volunteer. The North Star had been the outgrowth of divisions among the Democrats. This may be said also of the People's Advocate, established by Franklin Lusk in 1847, which passed away with the temporary disquiet then existing among politicians.

"Paul Pry, in 1835, and The Moon, a few years later, were papers issued anonymously in Montrose, to 'touch up' the characters and, particularly, the foibles of its citizens.

"The Candid Examiner, an organ of the Universalist denomination, edited by Messrs. Peck and Marsh, was issued at Montrose in 1827; followed, in 1832, by the Herald of Gospel Truth and Watchman of Liberty, Messrs. Alfred Peck and George Rogers, editors. This was published but a year or two.

"The Gospel Missionary, a weekly religious journal of the Universalists, was edited, in 1847, by Rev. J. S. Palmer."

The People's Advocate, a weekly paper, was established at Montrose, by Dow & Boyd, about June, 1846, as a Democratic journal. It continued under the control of this firm until early the following year, when Mr. Dow withdrew, and Josephus Boyd continued the publication of the paper for some three years thereafter, when it was discontinued. It was a four-page, six-column folio.

[1]OLIVER N. WORDEN was born in Cazenovia, Madison County, N. Y., in 1817, the second of two sons of Eld. Jesse B. Worden, second pastor of the Baptist Church at Montrose. Much, at least, of his early life was passed in a rural district in Onondaga County, N. Y., and he knew something of plain, health-giving farm life. At a suitable age he was indentured to the printing business in the Baptist Register office, in Utica, N. Y. Having had such advantages for education only as a district school of the day gave, he was not merely "bound" by a written instrument to serve a given period to acquire a trade, but was bound by a laudable ambition, not merely to become a good printer, but to make up by diligence, industry and application what scholastic advantages had denied him.

"June 14, 1838, when twenty years of age, he made his début as co-editor and publisher, with A. L. Post, of the Spectator, in Montrose, with the following avowal:

"TO MY READERS, ETC.

"Believing in the binding nature and beneficial effects of the golden and divine command to do to others as I should be done unto, I shall necessarily favor the cause of Republican government of anti-slavery effort; of temperance in the use of good things and entire abstinence from all that is evil; of giving the means of practical education to all; of political and religious toleration, and of that morality without which other blessings change to curses."

Though decidedly anti-slavery and uncompromisingly opposed to slavery domination, yet he was rather conservative and still had faith in what he regarded as "Old-time Republicanism." In 1840 the Spectator was discontinued. It, however, as an adjunct of anti-slavery effort, the end of which was neither foreseen nor comprehended, "cast bread upon the waters that returned after many days."

Mr. Worden had the satisfaction of seeing his avowal and advocacy in 1838 vindicated in 1857, and essentially embodied in the few words, "Freedom and right against slavery and wrong," the motto of The Independent Republican, which became, and continues to be, its unwavering exponent; of seeing the immortal declaration: "All men have the inalienable right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" become, at least, something more than a "Rhetorical Flourish;" of seeing the stone, "Anti-Slavery effort," which a Susquehanna County grand jury presented as a nuisance, become the head of the corner.

After leaving the Spectator Mr. Worden published the Athens Scribe, in Athens, Bradford County, afterwards the Wyoming Record, in Tunkhannock, Wyoming County, Pa. But that which gave him monumental reputation was in editing and publishing the Lewisburg Chronicle some twenty years, and the prominent, if not leading, part in the establishment of the school at that place, from which many young men are prepared for the ministry, graduating yearly to fill vacant places and to enter upon destitute fields, becoming workmen "that needeth not to be ashamed."

In 1867 his worthy wife, whom he married in 1844, in Athens, died, leaving him a lonely, childless widower. In due time he went to home with his only sister, Mrs. Martha Gillespie, in New Milford.

In December, 1838, he united, on profession of faith, with the Baptist Church at Montrose, and those who knew him can testify to his godly life, and that the sentiments, as above avowed, were with him a law in all after-life. It was his meat and drink to do good, to show by example and practice an accord with his profession, to be an example of using the good things of life as not abusing them, and of entire abstinence from evil and hurtful things.

[1] Independent Republican.

In every respect Mr. Worden was a remarkable man. Seeming to know but little, yet he knew much. Seeming to have but few acquaintances, yet, so to speak, knew everybody. So far from being a man of "one idea," he was rather a living, walking encyclopædia. It was said of him in an assembly, when he was referred to for authority, "what Mr. Worden don't know is hardly worth an inquiry."

He took a deep interest in the preparation of Miss E. C. Blackman's excellent "History of Susquehanna County," and in its final success, reproduced by research many interesting reminiscences, published histories of Baptist Churches existing and extinct, wrote much beside for the public eye, historical, biographical, religious and political.

The National Record was started as a Greenback paper, by Northrop, Williams & Bunnell, in November, 1881. It was a nine-column folio. When Bunnell and Winthrop retired from the management Dr. Potter took their place, and the name was changed to Weekly Messenger. The office was burned January 17, 1883, and the paper was never re-established.

Stephen J. Northrop started the Sentinel in May, 1883, as a Prohibition paper. It was issued monthly as a four-column folio. It was issued weekly in January, 1884, and had a circulation of about five hundred copies. In May, 1884, it was enlarged to a four-column quarto.

The Chronicle was established at Montrose in August, 1884, as a Republican paper, by H. W B. Hewen and others. In August, 1885, the management was turned over to E. T. Sweet. October 1, 1886, Mr. Northrop bought the Chronicle and merged it in the Sentinel, increasing its size to a six-column quarto.

S. J. Northrop was born in Bridgewater May 22, 1832. He prepared for college at Harford Academy, and was graduated from the Classical Department of Michigan University, at Ann Arbor, in 1861. After he came home he engaged in the nursery business in Jackson township for ten years. In 1881 he came to Montrose, and has been connected with the National Record and Sentinel while here.

The "New Milford Advertiser."—This newspaper was started as a weekly local by Messrs. C. S. Vail and L. S. Brown on January 1, 1880. The idea of such a publication in this place was first entertained by Mr. Vail as early as 1875, when he was a young man only nineteen years of age. He knew nothing of the trade at that time, having been inside of a printing-office only a few times in his life; but he foresaw an opening there for a good periodical, and resolved to sometime start such an enterprise. But such an undertaking would require a large amount of money, and he had no capital. He laid his plans, however, and, beginning at the bottom round of the ladder, resolutely commenced to work his way up.

Securing a job of shoveling in Smith's sand bank, he earned fifteen dollars, which he sent to Boston and purchased his first press and outfit. It was a small beginning, but he learned his first lessons in the art with it, and while he learned the rudimentary features he labored faithfully for his next step. Adding to his capital from time to time, he was at length able to purchase a one hundred and thirty-five dollar press, and on April 1, 1879, he issued the first number of the New Milford Advertiser. It was a neat pamphlet, containing original reminiscences and local history, and a number of local advertisements. He was assisted in the work by O. N. Worden, a ready newspaper writer and printer of much experience. One thousand copies were issued and distributed free.

It was intended at the time to issue the paper quarterly, but a better plan prevailed. He now had three hundred dollars, and L. S. Brown, who had learned the printer's trade in the Northern Pennsylvanian office a short time previous, had the same amount. Vail and Brown now entered into partnership. Vail afterwards added two hundred dollars more, and with a capital of about eight hundred dollars the business commenced. The first regular issue of the weekly Advertiser was issued in January, 1880. It was a six-column folio of fair size, wholly printed and published by themselves in a snug little office which had been hurriedly constructed just back of the graded school building.

In April following, G. C. Howell, a young man of much promise, came in with them to learn the trade. Success attended their efforts, and in July, 1880, the paper was enlarged to seven columns. On January 1, 1882, Vail & Brown dissolved partnership, and C. S. Vail became sole proprietor. The paper was now enlarged to eight pages of six columns each. Mr. Vail continued the business for one year, and then sold the office to James S. Hayden and G. C. Howell. Mr. Vail went to Colorado, and Hayden & Howell continued the business until August 11, 1885. At that time Mr. Vail, who had returned from the West, re-purchased Mr. Hayden's interest, and since then the business has been conducted by Vail & Howell.

On January 1, 1886, over two thousand dollars' worth of new material was added, including a new twelve hundred dollar Campbell press, and on February 15th following, the office was moved to more commodious quarters in the Advertiser block, corner of Main and Depot Streets. In May, 1886, a new steam-engine was purchased, and it became a steam printing establishment.

Messrs. Vail & Howell are men of sterling qualities and untiring energy, and they are giving the best efforts of their lives to produce a model home newspaper. On September 13, 1886, they issued an edition of seven thousand copies, containing twenty-four pages each. The production of this number required an immense amount of labor and expense for a local publication to undertake, including a large force of printers and laborers in the office, an agent for securing advertising matter, and a traveling reporter who traveled over one hundred and fifty miles to obtain local history, biography and original matter.

As a newspaper the New Milford Advertiser has been eminently successful. From a very minute commencement it has been built up by pluck and energy until it has become a first-class printing-office. Created and carried on with enterprise and ability, its merits have been recognized by the reading public, and it has never lacked appreciation and support.

Susquehanna's Newspapers. — Susquenanna's first newspaper, the Northern Pennsylvanian, was founded by M. H. C. Vail in 1858. It was a seven-column folio, neutral as regarded politics, and was edited and published by Mr. Vail for about two and a half years. In the eight and one-half years next ensuing it was owned and edited in succession by L. P. Hinds, Esq., W. J. Hunter, P. H. Rafter, E. A. Benedict and N. B. Chase. The last-named gentleman, the only one of the number now living, removed the office, in the spring of 1868, to Great Bend. There the paper was published under the same name, although with several different proprietors, for a few years, when it was removed to New Milford, and in 1871 the publication was then finally discontinued.

In May, 1869, W. H. Gardner, of Homer, N. Y., started the Susquehanna Journal, a seven-column folio, and conducted the same until September, 1871, when B. F. Pride, of Union, N. Y., the present editor and proprietor, purchased the establishment. The Journal had, up to that date, received a very limited support, and it had come to be generally understood that a newspaper could not live in Susquehanna, seven different gentlemen having tried the experiment, and each with very indifferent results, within the preceding twelve years. Mr. Pride, although a young man, took the paper under very discouraging circumstances, and by hard work and close application succeeded in building up a good paying business. The paper was, as it always has been during his management, independent in all things. It was from time to time enlarged and improved, until it has grown from a poorly-patronized seven-column paper to a ten-page, sixty-column paper, the largest in Susquehanna County, and one of the most extensively circulated. Mr. Pride, at the age of thirty-four years, enjoys the distinction of being the oldest newspaper publisher in the county, having continuously occupied the editorial chair of the Journal for nearly sixteen years. During this time (in June, 1874) the office was destroyed by fire, and was almost a total loss to the owner, but in two weeks thereafter it was again issued, and has appeared regularly every Saturday morning up to the present time.

James T. DuBois

The Gazette.—In February, 1874, Messrs. C. E. Whitney and B. C. Kidder, with the material of the defunct Northern Pennsylvanian, which was removed from New Milford to this place, started the Susquehanna Gazette, an eight-column folio, neutral in politics. This paper passed in turn into the hands of C. E. Whitney, E. W. Rogers & Son, Dunlea & Brosnan, and was finally destroyed by fire with the Cook block, in which it was located, in February, 1883, and the publication discontinued.

The Transcript.—In May, 1883, F. A. Miller started the Susquehanna Transcript, a six-column quarto, Democratic in politics, and published the same until February, 1886, when he sold the paper to Jas. Clark, Jr., of Denver, Col., the present publisher. The publication of the Daily Transcript, a twenty-four-column folio paper, was begun in August, 1886, and is issued at the present time from the same office.

Great Bend Plaindealer.—In 1867 L. Hibbert Whittlesy who had been publishing the Northern Pennsylvanian at Susquehanna, removed the press and type to Great Bend and started the Northern Pennsylvanian here. S. B. Chase was a part owner at first. After Whittlesy died John R. Gaylord succeeded him as publisher. A. E. Benedict next had the paper (now called The Plaindealer). In the fall of 1880 C. L. Noble and S. P. Moore bought the establishment and conducted a five-column folio paper, independent in politics, until 1884, when Mr. Moore bought Noble's interest, and May 1, 1886, he doubled the size of the paper by making it a five-column quarto, making the entire size twenty-six by forty inches. James T. Du Bois is part owner of the paper at present.

JAMES T. DU BOIS was born in Great Bend Village, Susquehanna County, on the 17th day of April, 1851. At the age of thirteen he entered the printing-office of the Northern Pennsylvanian, published in Great Bend Borough by L. H. Whittlesey, and learned the trade. At the completion of the apprenticeship he studied at the Ithaca Academy, from which institution he graduated with honors in 1870. In 1871 he went to Washington, D. C., for the purpose of studying law at the Columbia University. During the second year of his course he was offered the position of assistant editor of the National Republican, a journal then known as the organ of the Grant administration. He filled this position for two years, and was promoted to the editorship of that paper, which place he held until the summer of 1877, when he resigned, and was sent by President Hayes as United States commercial agent to Aix-la-Chapelle, Germany. In 1881 he was promoted to be consul at the same place. President Arthur, in the fall of 1883, appointed him to the responsible and lucrative consulate at Callao, Peru, but for personal reasons he did not care to accept this position, and was subsequently transferred to the important consulate at Leipsic, Saxony, which post he occupied until January, 1886, when he voluntarily resigned. The following is the letter of the Assistant Secretary of State, accepting his resignation:

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, January 14, 1886.

"JAMES T. DU BOIS, ESQ., Consul of the United States at Leipsic.

"Sir:—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 2d instant, tendering your resignation of the office of consul of the United States at Leipsic, and in reply to inform you that the same is accepted, to take effect on this date.

"I take this occasion to express the Department's appreciation of the zeal and fidelity you have displayed in the performance of the duties connected with the offices you have held under it, and to assure you that your retirement from the consular service is recognized as the loss of a faithful and efficient officer.

"I am, sir, your obedient servant,

"JAS. D. PORTER,
"Assistant Secretary."

While abroad Mr. Du Bois studied thoroughly the German and French languages, and spent what leisure time he had in literary pursuits. While stationed at Aix-la-Chapelle he wrote two volumes entitled "An Hour with Charlemagne" and "In and About Aix-la-Chapelle." The following is an extract from a letter written by Postmaster-General Vilas concerning the former:

"I sat down with the great Charles last evening and was so interested by your presentation that I ceased only with its close. Your sketch is delightful.

It lifts the splendid story out of the darkness and shows what a wonderful creation and creator a great man is. Had Bacon's philosophy then been known, modern civilization would have dated with Charlemagne.

"May I also be allowed to commend the rich and flowing style in which you bear your readers blissfully? I shall hope to enjoy other products of so deft a pen."

Mr. Du Bois is at present connected with the editorial staff of the National Republican, published at Washington, D. C., and he has charge of the Consular Edition of that journal. He spends his winters in Washington and his summers at Hallstead, in this county, where he is interested in the publication of the Plaindealer and also in farming. He is the proprietor of "Spring Farm," a tract of land beautifully situated on the banks of the picturesque Susquehanna River, which has been in the possession of the family for about one century. On this farm is situated the mountain "Manotonome," from the summit of which may be obtained some of the most interesting and commanding views to be found in the State. Mr. Du Bois has constructed several miles of foot and roadways about this mountain, and it has become a favorite resort for the people.

In December, 1883, while consul at Leipsic, Mr. Du Bois married Emma, the only child of Henry Pastor, Esq., of Aix-la-Chapelle. They have two sons.

CHAPTER XI.

AUTHORS.

"[1] On the authority of the late Hon. Charles Miner, a 'New Yankee Song,' dated Auburn Village, July 23, 1803, was the earliest product of the Susquehanna County muse, and his 'old and worthy friend, Charles Mowry, was the writer.' He lived not far from Elk Lake, and possibly from the name he gave to his location the township of Auburn received its name. The song had reference to the Intrusion Law, and began thus:

"A cruel law is made, boys,
Which much our peace and wealth destroys—
A cruel law is made, boys,
To frighten and distress us;
But if we firm together join,
Supported by a power Divine,
Our Yankee cause shall not decline,
Nor shall it long oppress us.

"In the seven remaining stanzas reference is made to Colonels John Franklin and John Jenkins as those foremost in 'the cause.' It will be remembered that, though these sturdy champions of Yankee rights resided in the vicinity of Athens, this section as well as that were alike in the disputed territory claimed at the same time by Connecticut and Pennsylvania.

"Dr. Israel Skinner, of Oakland (then Harmony), published at an early day a history of the American Revolution in verse, a part of which is quoted by Mr. Miner in his 'History of Wyoming.'

"Dr. R. H. Rose published a volume of fifty-six poems, or, as he termed them, 'Sketches in Verse,' about 1820. It was a handsomely-bound octavo, designed for private circulation only, and but one or two copies can now be found in the county. In this volume his many quotations from the Latin, French and Italian show his familiarity with various languages and authors. Many of the sketches were love-ditties, and professed imitations of a race of bards no longer greatly admired. There were also prose versions from the Arabic poets, turned into rhyme. An exception to the foregoing is found in his 'Instructions to Manufacturers,' in which is seen the gleam of the wit and raillery of which he is said to have been fond. He could, at least, follow his own 'Instructions':

"What! you would write a sonnet!—sit you down,
And take your pen, no matter for the theme,
So it be dull and sad—a waking dream;
And, careless of the peevish muse's frown,
Run stanza into stanza. Break your lines
And form them that the first and fourth may chime
And to the third the second be the rhyme.

"Oft introduce a colon: but when shines
A gleam of passion, never then neglect
A note of admiration, and an Oh!
For thus you will display a deal of wo,
And to your sonnet give a fine effect.
Then lug two limping lines in at the close,

[1] Miss Blackman.

And swear 'tis thus the great PETRARCHA'S metre flows.

"A work designed apparently for circulation in England, and which did circulate there and influence immigration to this county, was written here, and bore the following on its title-page:

"'Letters from the British Settlement in Pennsylvania: to which are added the Constitution of the United States and of Pennsylvania, and extracts from the laws respecting aliens and naturalized citizens. By C. B. Johnson, M. D.'

"This was entered according to Act of Congress, by H. Hall, Philadelphia, 1819. Another edition was published the same year by John Miller, Piccadilly, London (England).

"More than one English immigrant bemoaned the day he read 'Johnson's Letters,' and heaped upon the author accusations born of disappointment. 'Too rose-colored' his descriptions may have been; but so, also, were the notions of town-bred people respecting their own capacity to endure the inevitable ills attendant upon pioneer life.

"Samuel Barnard was among those who left the Old World in 1819, with hopes founded upon statements contained in the 'Letters.' While in this county he devoted himself to the preparation of a "'POLYGLOT GRAMMAR of the Hebrew, Chaldee Syriac, Greek, Latin, English, French, Italian, Spanish and German languages, reduced to one common rule of syntax, and an uniform mode of declension and conjugation as far as practicable.'

"This was published, in 1825, in Philadelphia, New York, Baltimore and Boston. President John Q. Adams was a subscriber for the work. Mr. Barnard presented an elegant copy, prepared expressly for the occasion, to General Lafayette. Several colleges subscribed for copies, as also the Department of State at Washington.

"He removed to New York, and afterwards to Kentucky, where he died in 1850. One of his daughters, Mrs. George Fuller, is still a resident of Montrose.

"We are indebted to the same alluring 'Letters' for the arrival from England, in 1819, of Mrs. Juliana Frances Turner. During the next three years she wrote the 'Harp of the Beechwoods,' a volume of sixty-five poems. This was published at Montrose, by Adam Waldie, in 1822.

"Some of her ballads, in old English style, are quite pleasing. Other pieces possess real merit; but fairies and goblins seem most frequently to have entertained her fancy and engaged her pen. A sample of the smoothness of her style may be seen in the following extract:

"THE COT OF CONTENT.

"On the banks of the Schuylkill still evening was glinting,
And the tide's silvery surge a soft murmuring kept,
While the bright hues of autumn the slope woods were tinting,
And the brown sunny mountains in mellowness slept.
There I marked a sweet villa, the day star declining,
Where the jessamine lingered, with late roses blent;
Where the scarlet-leaved creepers neat trellised were twining,
And they called the sweet bower—the Cot of Content.

"Mrs. Turner was born in London, married in 1802, and died in England early in 1837.

"Reference has been made to Adam Waldie as her publisher; on another page his connection with the newspaper press is given. His position as editor of a literary rather than a political journal, and his influence in calling out the talent that lay dormant here, entitle him to grateful mention.

"In 1823 a painting was made by —— Thompson, of Susquehanna County, from a scene in 'The Pioneers.'

"In 1829 a new hymn-book, by Sebastian and Barzillai Streeter.

"In 1832 materials for a history of this section, by C. L. Ward, destroyed by fire.

"A number of pamphlets have been issued from the county press, some of which are remembered: The 'Atonement, in Seven Links,' by Jireh Bryan; a 'Historical Discourse,' by Rev. Adam Miller, 1844, published by A. Turrell; a discourse on 'Baptism,' by Rev. A. L. Post.

"In 1837 The Spectator office printed a book of seventy-six pages, entitled 'Intellectual Chronology,' for schools and learners, by 'Technica Memoria' [R. Pike]. It endeavored to simplify the acquisition of dates, by the use of letters for figures, weaving them with words, and often into poetry."

Miss Anne L. Fraser was born at Montrose Oct. 3, 1810. She obtained her education at Montrose Academy and at Miss Emma H. Willard's Female Academy at Troy, N. Y. She taught school a number of years, and has done some painting of considerable merit and written some good poetry. Her sister Caroline was a music teacher. The two sisters lived together on the homestead with their mother until she died, in 1870; then the sisters lived together until Carrie died, in 1882; meanwhile her brothers Philip and Franklin had both died at the homestead, leaving her alone, the last of Dr. Chas. Fraser's family at Montrose. Miss Fraser is a lady of culture and character. Herewith we submit a few selections from her poetry:

O wild the wintry blast hath blown
  Among these rugged hills of ours,
And spring on softest wing hath flown
  And kissed the fragrance-breathing flowers;
And summer's sunshine oft hath chased
  The shadows o'er the waving plain,
And autumn's pencil sadly traced
  Her gorgeous hues of death again.

And this has passed since at my feet
  Thy blue waves, Susquehanna, rolled,
Where green-robed mountains rise to meet
  And crown themselves with clouds of gold;
But thou, the friend of other days,
  Who nature's charms have viewed with me,
When to her haunts my footstep strays
  Remembrance kindly dwells on thee.

And dost thou trace the lovely shore,
  Where we have watched the smooth waves glide,
Or wake the music of the oar,
  Forgetting one who by thy side
Hath wandered through each woodland dell
  And crossed the sparkling wave with thee?
Hath friendship's wand no silent spell
  To stir the fount of memory?

Mrs. Lydia C. Searle.—Miss Lydia C. Dimock, daughter of Elder D. Dimock, was born at Montrose July 6, 1811, and married to Leonard Searle Oct. 23, 1832. She was educated in Hamilton Baptist Academy, N. Y., and early gave indications of a taste for literary pursuits. She kept a diary from the age of seventeen until the time of her death. Her reading in every department was extensive, and while reading, she comprehended and formed her judgment. While every one might not have acquiesced in that judgment, to her it was sincere, honest conviction. She was an indefatigable collector of articles from newspapers and other sources, which were carefully preserved in scrap-books. She also kept files of newspapers for many years. Her mind was quick in perception and ready in application, and during her long life it became widely stored with historic, scientific, religious and political facts. She was bright and intellectual at home in poetry and literature. She wrote both in prose and poetry. Her work "Washington our Example" was published during the war. Being a great admirer of Gen. McClellan, the work was dedicated to him, a fact which he appreciatively acknowledged in a courteous letter to the authoress. At the time of her death, A. K. McClure, of the Philadelphia Times, wrote of her: "She has been for more than half a century one of the leading literary as well as social characters of Northern Pennsylvania. With all the tenderness of woman and a most devoted wife and mother, she had a strong love for literature and singular fitness for literary labor. Her scrap-books, both of politics and of the choice productions of the most gifted poets and authors, are among the most complete to be found in any library, and her original articles were marked by unusual force and excellence. No woman of the northern portion of the State will be more widely or more gratefully remembered than Mrs. Searle, of Montrose, and her life and character will long be pointed to as among the noblest of examples." She was a Christian lady, with a deep charity for all. She died in August, 1880, and was buried at Montrose.

The following is taken from a tribute paid to her brother, Hon. Davis Dimock, Jr., who died while a member of Congress:

Thou art gone, 'midst honors, to the tomb, and all the people mourn,
Who twined a wreath around thy brow, which now is from thee torn—

To crown anew the victor Death, who seeks from earth to win
The bright, the beautiful and great, as the trophies meet for him.

Thou art gone, but oh! thou art gone not where thy country calls for thee,
And a vacant seat is in the halls of our nation great and free,
Which was thine to fill for years to come, with brightness round thy name,
And with deepest love for the nation's weal, thou wouldst have filled the same.

* * * * * * *

Thou art gone, and now the grief and woe that fancy cannot paint,
Which sheds such blight on human hearts, that makes them fail and faint,
Which withers all their dearest joys, and changes life to gloom,
Are theirs who loved, but could not save thee from the voiceless tomb.

* * * * * * *

Thou art gone, and o'er thy noble form death triumphs in his power—
But there is coming, on swift wing, in time the destined hour
When he in whom was all thy hope will take from death the prize,
And, robed in beauty and in light, thou wilt from dust arise.

ANNA DRINKER wrote poetry under the nom de plume of Edith May. The pages of the Home Journal, edited by N. P. Willis and George Morris, bore ample evidence of her genius. Her poems were published in book-form, by a Philadelphia house, in 1851, prefaced by a tribute from N. P. Willis. She also published, in 1855, "Tales and Poems for Children." Miss Blackman writes: " It has been remarked 'she might have sat for her own Theodora.'

> "In her eyes are tranquil shadows
> Lofty thoughts alone can make,
> Like the darkness thrown by mountains
> O'er a lake."

In a sketch of the fair authoress, written by Miss Susan E. Dickinson in 1879, she said: "When Miss Drinker began to write, Susquehanna County still held countless lovely solitudes, where only the wild deer ranged, or hunters' and poets' footsteps delighted to roam. Many of her poems pictured this fair and gracious region with its peculiar charms. Not a few, and these the longest, were narrative poems, full of dramatic fire and fervor, showing how her imaginative powers were seizing upon and bringing out the strength, the beauty, the romance lying in the life around her."

The following are extracts from her poems:

STORM AT TWILIGHT.

The roar of a chafed lion in his lair
Begirt by leveled spears: A sudden flash,
Intense, yet wavering, like a beast's fierce eye
Searching the darkness. The wild lay of winds
Sweeps the burnt plains of heaven, and from afar,
Linked clouds are riding up like eager horsemen,
Javelin in hand. From the moth wings of twilight
There falls unwonted shadow, and strange gloom
Cloisters the unwilling stars. The sky is roofed With tempest, and the moon's scant rays fall through Like light let dimly through fissured rock
Vaulting a cavern. To the horizon,
The green sea of the forest has rolled back
Its leveled billows, and where mast-like trees
Sway to its bosom, here and there, a vine
Braided to some pine's bare shaft, clings, rocked aloft
Like a bold mariner! There is no bough
But lifteth an appealing arm to heaven.
The scudding grass is shivered as it flies
And herbs and flowers crouch to their mother earth
Like frightened children. 'Tis more terrible,
When the near thunder speaks, and the fleet wind
Stops like a steed that knows his rider's voice;
For, oh, the hush that follows is the calm
Of a despairing heart, and, as a maniac
Loses his grief in raving, the mad storm,
Weeping fast tears, awakens with a sob
From its blank desolation, and shrieks on!

UNREST.

Rest for awhile! I'm tempest-tossed to-day;
Bar out the sunshine. Let importunate life,
Beating forever with impatient hand
My soul's closed portals, only rouse within Dull, dreamy echoes. In a forest calm
Builds sleep, the white dove. As a bird she rides
The lulled waves of the soul. To-day my thoughts
Hunt me like hounds; my senses, wide awake,
Watch for the touch that thrills them; every sound
Falls through the listening air unscabbarded;
And if sleep comes, 'tis but a transient dream
That flits betwixt me and the light of life,
Alighting never. * * *

TWO CHANTS.

"Te Deum Laudamus!" through green river meadows,
Where noon, pacing slow, holds in leash the fleet shadows,
Blown like a cloud from St. Agatha's altar,
Drifts down the south wind and loud-chanted psalter;

Under the light of the tapers lies sleeping
One whose fair soul was not whitened by weeping.

Sorrow stood far from her—love, in mute reverence,
Knelt to the shrine of her starry intelligence,
Charmed by her music of being, dull cavil
Lay coiled in her presence; and lion-like evil,
Lying in wait for her soul frail and tender,
Crouching at the blaze of its virginal splendor.

Over her calm face a radiance immortal
Flows from the smile at the mouth's silent portal—
They who kneel round her from matins till even,
As they kneel at the tombs of the blessed in heaven,
Think not to question that presence resplendent
Where fled the soul that is shining ascendent.

* * * * * * * * *

Sorrow, that writes with the pen of an angel,
God's burning thoughts through her mystic evangel;
Passion, that, laden with memories tender,
Crowns himself king with their tropical splendor;
Weeping repentance, with hand lifted palely—
These were the spirits that walked with her daily.

* * * * * * *

FOREST SCENE.

I know a forest vast and old—
A shade so deep, so darkly green,
That morning sends her shaft of gold
In vain to pierce its leafy screen.
I know a brake where sleeps the fawn—
The soft-eyed fawn through noon's repose,
For noon, with all the calm of dawn,
Lies hushed beneath those dewy boughs.

* * * * * * * * *

From slippery ledge, from moss-grown rock,
Dash the swift waters at a bound,
And from the foam that veils the shock,
Floats every wavelet, sparkle-crowned.
By brake and dell and lawny glade,
O'er gnarled root, o'er mossy stone,
Beneath the forest's emerald shade
The brook winds murmuring, chiding on.

GEORGE CATLIN, son of Putnam and Polly (Sutton) Catlin, was born in Wyoming Valley in 1796. He came to Brooklyn, Susquehanna County, with his father, where he taught school. His father designed him for the law and to that end sent him to Reeves' school, at Litchfield, Conn., where he remained two years. He was admitted to the Susquehanna County bar February 20, 1820. At that time his brother Charles resided where Mrs. Webb now lives. But law was not suited to young Catlin's tastes or inclinations. He says:

"After having covered nearly every inch of the lawyer's table (and even encroached upon the judges' bench) with pen-knife, pen and ink, and pencil sketches of judges, juries and culprits, I very deliberately resolved to convert my law library into paint-pots and brushes, and to pursue painting as my future and apparently more agreeable profession."

[1] "Art was his idolized profession. So strong did his passion become that he abandoned the law and went to New York, where he was soon engaged in the painting of portraits and miniatures. In 1829, being then thirty-three years old, Mr. Catlin had his attention called to the fact that the pure American race was disappearing before the march of civilization. He therefore resolved to rescue from oblivion the types and customs of the unfortunate Indians. From that moment dated the commencement of his life-study; then he became a public benefactor, and his subsequent career was devoted to the cause of art and history, to which he has added a chapter that cannot be undervalued. In 1831 Mr. Catlin, though discouraged by his friends and the government, accompanied Governor Clark, of St. Louis, then superintendent of Indian affairs, in a western tour among the Winnebagos and Menomonies, the Shawanos, Sacs and Foxes, and with these interviews began the series of his Indian paintings. After the close of the 'Black Hawk War' he visited Black Hawk and five of his warriors, prisoners at Jefferson Barracks, where he painted their portraits. In the following year he descended the Missouri River, from the mouth of the Yellowstone to St. Louis, in a canoe, with two men (a distance of two thousand miles), steering it with his own paddle. In that trip he visited and painted the Mandans, Crows, Blackfeet, K'nisteneux, Assinneboins, Minatarres, Reccarrees, Sioux, Poncas and Iowas. During these voyages he was the correspondent of the New York Spectator. These letters were published in a volume entitled 'Catlin's Life Among the North American Indians.'"

[1] New York Tribune.

[1] "In the fall of 1837 Mr. Catlin lectured in New York, in connection with the exhibition of paintings, while Black Hawk, Keokuk and about fifty Indians from four tribes were present.

"In 1838 the value of his paintings was estimated at from $100,000 to $150,000.

"In eight years he visited about fifty tribes, and brought home more than six hundred oil-paintings (in every instance from nature) of portraits, landscapes and Indian customs, and every article of their manufacture, such as weapons, costumes, wigwams, etc. He exhibited this collection in New York and Washington, and also in London and Paris. He had offers from noblemen in England for his collection, but he declined them, preferring to dispose of it in his own country. He offered it to the government of the United States for $65,000. The bill for its purchase was discussed in the Senate and lost by one vote. This was probably owing to the influence of H. R. Schoolcraft, who had endeavored to secure the use of Mr. Catlin's paintings to illustrate a work he contemplated editing for the United States; but Mr. Catlin had already incurred great labor and expense towards a publication of his own, and declined his proposition."

In 1852 he sailed to Venezuela and for several years was employed in exploring the innermost parts of South America, interviewing scores of tribes of wild Indians. "Last Rambles in North and South America," from his pen, is a graphic description of his life in the wildernesses of those countries. He also wrote "Lifted and Subsided Rocks of North America," based on his observations; also "North American Folio," containing twenty-five plates of hunting scenes. As an author Mr. Catlin was peculiarly talented, and as an artist his paintings are spirited and accurate portraits and faithful and true landscapes. The remnant of his painting can be seen at Washington, D. C., having been collected by the government at last. He died in 1872, at Jersey City, aged seventy-eight.

Miss Emily C. Blackman was born at Gilbertsville, Otsego County, N. Y., July 15, 1826. When she was three years old her father, Dr. J. Blackman, whose sketch will appear in the medical chapter, removed to Binghamton, where he resided seven years, removing to Montrose in 1836. Miss Blackman has a very distinct recollection of Binghamton, where she first attended school; but her early education was principally obtained at the Susquehanna County or Montrose Academy. At the age of fifteen she commenced teaching as an assistant in the academy, still continuing her studies, however. About this time she and her sister Many Ann planned to found a school; but her sister married soon after, and that destroyed one of Miss Blackman's early hopes. After she left school and teaching here, she was preceptress at Towanda, also teaching three years at Chester, Delaware County, Pa. She has taught in the schools of Wisconsin and Illinois and Freedman's school in Mississippi from 1866 to 1868. In fact, her whole life since she was fifteen has been that of an instructor in one way or another. During all these years she has been a student of languages and music. She studied music in New York and Philadelphia, and became an accomplished music-teacher.

In later years she has given more attention to the study of the languages, and is able to read the Testament in ten different languages. Miss Blackman is of a literary turn of mind, and during the time she was in the South she was a constant contributor to the press, and also while in Europe. Her greatest literary work is the "History of Susquehanna County," upon which she spent four years of conscientious, painstaking labor. No one but a historian can appreciate the labor required in searching through countless old dust-covered records, newspaper files and diaries, to ascertain a date, a name or a fact, which requires only a short sentence to express when found, and the interviewing of the oldest inhabitants, and the comparing of conflicting statements, all requiring method in arrangement, patience in research and perseverance until the desired information is obtained. All of these characteristics were made manifest in Miss Blackman's work, which has received many commendations from those most capable of criticising.

Miss Blackman united with the Presbyterian Church of Montrose when she was twelve years old, and has been active in every good work growing out of her relation thereto. The Home and Foreign Missions of the church, the Soldiers' Aid Society and Sanitary Commission during the war, and Freedman's Aid, Woman's Christian Temperance Union, have all enlisted her sympathies and taken more or less of her time as secretary. More recently she has acted as superintendent of the work among the prisoners in the Montrose jail. She has been across the continent twice and to Europe once, but the principal theatre of her labors has been at home, in Montrose, and throughout Susquehanna County. This brief outline but feebly indicates the manner of her education or the intense activity of her life. Being naturally susceptible she can have the consolation of knowing that her life has not been unfruitful of good results at home; that it has been as usefully spent at Montrose, as it could have been any where.

Emily C. Blackman and conscientious, she drank freely at the fountain of knowledge and truth as presented to her understanding by her teachers, pastors and books. Being ambitious and persevering, she has acquired and imparted much information, even to the second generation as a teacher, and has watched the development of her pupils with that keen interest which a true teacher always feels in her pupils. Miss Blackman's hearing began to fail when she was teaching at Towanda. If it had not been for this misfortune, she would have gone abroad as a missionary; but

Rev. Elisha Mulford, LL. D.—While most men of letters who exert a great influence in their day and generation, and attain a national or even a world-wide reputation, are soon forgotten, or live here only in name when they pass away, it is but rarely true that the really great men in the world's history attain any very marked distinction while yet living. The former cultivate present and transient interests, and are content with things as they are, if only they may secure the popular recognition, and attain thereby the temporal and often fictitious applauses and honors of the world; but the latter, in natural gifts and sympathies ahead of their age, and in love of truth for its own sake, are only satisfied in progressive and enduring work, and aspire to become the pioneers and prophets of a new dispensation. The subject of this brief sketch, although fairly successful in a worldly sense, is not an exception to this general rule. Well-known and appreciated by the widely-scattered few who sympathized with his ideas, he was, previous to his death, but little known. As the poet Whittier has since written of him:

"Unnoted as the setting of a star
He passed; and sect and party scarcely knew
When from their midst a sage and seer withdrew
To fitter audience, where the great dead are
In God's republic of the heart and mind,
Leaving no purer, nobler soul behind."

And these whisperings are becoming day by day more frequent and distinct, and we believe will ultimately grow into the voices of a vast multitude in the ages to come, who shall have come to regard him as the "sage and seer" of this generation.

Dr. Mulford was born in Montrose, Pa., November 19, 1833. His father was Sylvanus S. Mulford, a prominent and successful merchant, of pure English extraction. His family formed one of a social group of friends and relatives distinguished not only for their refined and intellectual character, but also for their practical and business abilities. He was endowed with a rare combination of natural gifts, both physical and mental. He possessed a remarkable facility and beauty of expression, an impassioned temperament, and a lofty style which, without affectation or haughtiness, carried with it the impression of greatness. Joined with these, he possessed a philosophic cast of mind—all of which gifts had been thoroughly cultured by the best discipline that could be secured in our schools, by travel, and by social intercourse with the best cultured minds at home and abroad.

Rev. Theodore T. Munger, D.D., in a brief review of his life and works in The Independent, also says:

"Dr. Mulford, previous to his death, was generally known only as the author of his books. His name, bare of all titles on the title-page of 'The Nation,' simply announced him as a writer. This work drew from Yale College an LL.D.; and he was thenceforth known as Dr. Mulford; but still he remained barely more than a name in the public mind. 'The Republic of God,' published four years later, had run the gauntlet of three commencement seasons without attracting to its author the degree of D.D.; and so the anomaly becomes an unalterable fact that the author of an original, able and learned work on theology secured no formal recognition in his day, where it might most be expected."

With this impression, that so far as regarded the general public, his great contributions to the religious and political advancement of the race were but little recognized, he died; and we can hardly conceive of any more bitter experience than that one who, in love of truth, had devoted his life to its development in the consciousness of men, should, in his last moments, believe the popular mind wholly indifferent thereto. But no sooner had he gone than there arose whisperings that a really great man had lived and died in our midst unrecognized, and had left behind him imperishable works. He graduated at Yale College in the class of 1855; took an independent course of study for one year; studied theology at Andover, graduating in 1859; traveled and studied in Europe two years, thoroughly acquainting himself with the progress of English and German thought and research; took orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1862, and subsequently became rector of a parish in Orange, N. J.

Though successful in his chosen profession, the management of his own and his wife's estates, requiring his presence and personal attention, constrained him to resign his rectorship and retire to the seclusion of one of his farms, where he spent nearly twenty years of the subsequent period of his life. He was not naturally, as some have supposed, a recluse—one who enjoyed seclusion for its own sake—but sought retirement only for the quiet essential to his great literary work. On the contrary, he emerged from his obscurity at every opportunity presented to visit his many personal friends, and to acquaint himself with the affairs of the world. He was deeply in sympathy with humanity, and alive to all its interests. As Prof. Allen said of him in The Christian Union,—

"He felt an interest in all that came under his gaze, not merely high things, but things of small repute. The incidents of common life had a charm for him. In the language of Wordsworth, he was wont

Along life's common way
With sympathetic heart to stray,
And with a soul of power.'"

He was not a prolific writer, but what he wrote he elaborated with the greatest patience and care. His first book, "The Nation," published in Boston, 1870, had been the subject of his studies and reflections for many years. He was at least five years in producing the first manuscript after having set himself to the task, and subsequently re-wrote it again and again. Indeed, so great was his effort to make the book an accurate and complete exposition of its subject, he devoted to the correction of the proof-sheets as much time as would ordinarily be required for a complete revision. When finally published, it arrested the attention of some of the greatest scholars and thinkers, not only in this country, but also in Europe. It is said that Senator Sumner, casually taking up the large volume in a book-store, became at once so deeply interested that he stood for hours as one transfixed while perusing its contents. He afterwards declared it to be "an ideally perfect work," and wrote, sending his personal congratulations to the author:

"I have read it from first to last with constant interest and sympathy. It is a most important contribution to our political literature, and cannot fail to strengthen and elevate our national life."

From England also came personal congratulations, and notably from F. D. Maurice, one of the most distinguished of British theological writers, and rightly deemed the great pioneer in the modern development of Christian thought.

From many distinguished men in this country also came letters and reviews highly appreciative of the work.

His design and effort in this great work are to show that "Man is by nature a political being;" that the nation has existence in the purpose of God, and is designed to be a chief medium in the moral development of the race. To use his own language: "The nation is the goal of history in the fulfilment of the highest political ideal." It is towards this goal the "nations move in the fulfilment of the life of humanity." It is "to work as one whose achievement passes beyond time, whose glory and honor are borne into the eternal City."

His second great work appeared in 1881, eleven years later, and is entitled "The Republic of God: An Institute in Theology." Both works might well have received the same title; for, though one is political and the other theological—the one treating of the nation, the other of the church—yet each, he believed and taught, has a similar design in the Divine mind. Both, when each shall have attained the goal of its earthly history, will merge in the kingdom of God, which is, in the true and ideal sense, a republic, self-governing, and whose only law is love.

"The Republic of God," although it has apparently attracted less attention than "The Nation," is, if possible, his greater work. It is, in reality, a prophecy of a glory to come—of the spiritual advent of the Christ in the minds and hearts of men.

In 1880 he was appointed to the position of lecturer in the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge, Massachusetts, where he soon drew around him a class of enthusiastic students and disciples. Prof. Allen thus writes of his work there:

"His lectures, though few in number, were carefully elaborated, embodying the reflections of his mature life, with many deep thoughts, careful distinctions and many exquisite expressions. He dwelt chiefly upon the living God as the central principle of theology. In him theology rested, not in attributes or covenants or mechanical conceptions of revelation, not in doctrines either of the incarnation or atonement."

He died at his residence in Cambridge December 9, 1885, and is buried in the old burial-ground at Concord, beside Emerson and many other distinguished men or letters. He left a wife—née Rachel Carmalt, a native also of this county and of excellent family—and four children.

Rev. Edward A. Warriner was born in Agawam, Mass., and graduated at Union College in 1855. He taught school twelve years, and studied theology under Dr. Mombert at Lancaster, Pa., while he was principal of the Yates Institute. In 1866, while yet in deacon's orders, he was called to minister at Saint Paul's Church at Montrose, where he still remains. In 1875 he published a thological novel entitled "Victor La Tourette," advocating broad church views, and which had a large influence and circulation; five years later a poem in seven cantos entitled "Kear," and has now in press a theological work entitled "I am that I am; or, The Philosophic Basis of the Christian Faith." Mr. Warriner's poem, "Kear," is based on Indian legends and religious notions. The heroine is Eniskin, Tamanend's daughter, who is in love with Nepanet, an Indian of her own tribe, the Lenni Lenape; but she finally consents to become the bride of an Oneida chieftain in order to save her people from the vengeance of the Six Nations; but, when the bride is sought, it is found that she has gone to the spirit land. The scene of the poem is laid at Montrose and along the Susquehanna. Tamanend, or St. Tammany, was a famous chief of the Lenni Lenape or Delawares, and when the whites first knew Susquehanna County the Six Nations had gained the victory over the Delawares, and Susquehanna County, lying between the tribes, may have been "dark and bloody ground."

Proud Susquehanna rolls his waters on,
Scarce mindful of the changes time has brought;
The Delaware and Iroquois have gone,
And every work by nature's children wrought;
Yet the same spirit which her children caught
From cloud and sunshine, wood and mountain stream,
And which the laws of life and virtue taught,
Still lingers on his shores, and still the theme
Inspires of ancient legend and of poet's dream.

Hidden remote in Pennsylvania's hills,
Thy vine-clad cottages, O fair Montrose!
Thy fields of green watered by mountain rills,
And the pure sparkle of thy winter's snows
No romance of forgotten years disclose;
Yet here strange legends of the past abound,
Here hostile ashes side by side repose,
For thine was once the "Dark and Bloody Ground,"
Where heroes strove for fame and graves of glory found.

DESCRIPTION OF ENISKIN.

A lonely lake, once called the Whispering Wave,
At twilight hour mirrored a maiden face
Of wondrous beauty, pure as sculptors grave
On spotless stone, yet dark as limners trace
On chancel windows; and a form whose grace
Was like the supple willow's bending o'er
Ewayea's dreamy tide—maiden of royal race,
Named, as a crystal pebble on the shore,
Eniskin—fairest spirit of the days of yore.

Her dress was green and russet, Nature's prints
Of spring and autumn, gathered at her waist
By woven belt of red and orange splints;
White moccasins her slender feet encased,
Beaded and worked in Nature's faultless taste
Of blending figures. Olive leggings bound
Her rounded limbs, vermillion beads embraced
Her neck, bright-tinted as her lips; around
Her form a scarlet mantle gracefully was wound.

Of noble birth—daughter of Tamanend—
Alike for courage, strength and counsel famed;
The most renowned of the illustrious dead
In Indian legend and tradition named;
Whose mighty deeds heroic souls inflamed,
And o'er his tribe a matchless lustre threw,
That long the brave inspired, the faltering shamed—
No glory but her sire's she deemed as true,
And in its inspiration, pride and spirit grew.

Beneath a spreading elm, whose branches swept
The ground, her infancy was nursed. Here hung,
In the cool summer shadows, while she slept,
Her tiny hammock, by the breezes swung
And branches tossed; nursed as the oriole's young,
That built its netted hammock o'er her own,
And 'mid the leaves from morn till evening sung,
Thus had her life begun, and thus had grown,
And naught but Nature's freedom, music, gladness known.

SAD REJECTION OF HER LOVER.

"Beware, O Nepanet!" Eniskin quick
Replied with flashing eyes and form erect
"How thou dost to thy chieftain's daughter speak
With mocking words. How couldst thou expect—
No glory having won—I should reject
Thy love? 'Twere needless thou shouldst bid adieu
To me."—Then suddenly her words were checked
With choking sobs, and in her light canoe,
As swift as swallow o'er the lake she flew,

Till hid within the shadows of the mountains,
Wooded and dark beyond. Here resting from Her flight, o'erwhelmed with shame and grief, the fountains
Of bitterness o'erflowed in tears. No room
For reconciliation now; yet whom
But Nepanet can she e'er love? and he Can ne'er forgive her bitter words, nor come Again as oft in days gone by, when she,
While yet afar, would run to meet him joyfully.

DR. E. L. BLAKESLEE is not only a physician and lawyer, but he is also something of a poet. He delivered the centennial poem July 4, 1876, from which the following extracts are taken:

THE BIRTH OF COLUMBIA.

Fair land, in beauty wild and green,
Ere man thy native smile had seen,
How long since Ocean gave thee birth
And made thee Hemisphere of earth?
Or since the sea surge beat thy shore,
And rivers rocky channels wore,
Or red man started bison's tread
O'er native meads, unbounded spread?
Or why sprang up from Ocean's deep,
From night of long and billowy sleep,
The land with forests green and wild,
To rock the cradle of the child?
Heaven's descending favorite born,
Liberty's babe of coming morn,
Where mountain breeze shall fan her face
And teach her freedom's queenly grace.
And hardship's toil make strong the arm
To strike, when foe shall threaten harm;
Christening her of Ocean birth,
Columbia, fairest of the earth!

BATTLE OF BUNKER HILL.

When noonday sun with streaming gold,
A-down the blue his chariot rolled,
Where sleeps the bay, in waters still
Beneath the brow of Bunker Hill;
The burnished armor of the foe,
Its glittering sheen and silver glow,
Shall shimmer in the warm blood's flow
Ere day declining shadows bring
Of night, on swift and sable wing.
The sweeping scythe the day before
Cut close the sward where human gore
Ran redder streams in redder sea
Than ever flowed Thermopylæ.
The ill-arrayed, determined band,
Upon the brow now boldly stand,
And sternly wait the coming foe
With serried lines in scarlet glow.
The belching cannon's seething flame,
O'er jarring earth deep grumbling came,
The sleety fire far-flashing, rung
Through rolling clouds, its rattling tongue;
With banners flaunting in their pride,
Their lines moved up the sloping side.
Our fathers stood in silence still,
Content to wait their leader's will,
Until they saw the flashing eye
And heard brave Prescott sound the cry.
Then, like volcano's molten tide,
Hot, sweeping down the bursting side,
The fiery blast, with bending gale,
Sent down her drifts of leaden hail!
While broken lines now backward reel,
Beneath the blows of dripping steel;
Again they come, again recoil,
O'er slippery steps of reddest soil.
At dangerous post, where country calls,
Brave WARREN stands, but stands and falls!
When foes' thinned ranks fain take the field,
With thrice in numbers fully steeled,
And leave upon contested plain,
The whitening bones of hundred slain,
They're welcome to their Cadmean gain.

THE RED, WHITE AND BLUE.

Pale Liberty in vestal robe
Of starry light, in azure wove,
Her flowing hair unbound and free
As waves that roll upon the sea;
And fire celestial in her eye,
Which saddened when the wafted sigh
Fell on her ear, and looking far
Away where rolled the burning star,
Her sister called and victory came
With flashing eyes on wings of flame,
Her thunderbolts were blazing white,
Her robes were flecked in boreal light,
Descending now but hovering o'er
The struggling field of human gore,
Now hears her sister's pleading voice,
But long withholds bestowing choice,
No wreath to man she ever gave,
Or gift, except the nobly brave!
She counts the scars and glory won,
And touched the sword of WASHINGTON!
Then rising in her reddest fold
Around her sisters blue it rolled,
While Seraphs their white streamers flew,
And made our own RED, WHITE AND BLUE;
When Britons saw that Banner wave
On YORKTOWN plains, above the brave,
With lights that bore a magic spell,
Their boasted cross and lion fell.

JOHN WESLEY CARGILL was born in Jackson May 25, 1831. He obtained his education at the common schools and attended the Wyoming Seminary and Harford Academy one term each. He taught school nine winters. His first term was taught in a log school-house in Jackson. He is a farmer and has been something of a politician. He is not as stable in politics or religion as some men. He has been an Anti-Slavery man, Republican, Greenbacker, Democrat and, lastly, a Prohibitionist. He evidently has no traditional love for party names and views things from his own standpoint. He was elected county auditor in 1853, and State Representative in 1879. It was during his term that Kemble and others tried to bribe the Legislature to indemnify the Pennsylvania Railroad for losses sustained in the Pittsburgh riot. Mr. Cargill was approached on the subject and money was offered him. He led the bribers on, and finally exposed the whole plot, and under lead of Charles S. Wolfe the bribers were convicted, and some four million dollars was saved to the State of Pennsylvania. But Mr. Cargill's best gift is in the poetic line. He commenced to write some pieces while young, and has written much more within the last two years,—in all some forty short poems, among them "The Pirate Ship," "Susquehanna County," "Spirit Home of the Indians," "Sinking of the Island of Atlantis," "Border of Hades," "Land of Despair," "Charge of the Louisiana Tigers at Gettysburg," etc. He has printed but two pieces, but commits his verses to memory, and often repeats them to his friends. He is one of the most natural poets that Susquehanna County has ever produced.

ISLAND OF DEADLAND.

In a worn-out planet.

There is an island in a wide distant ocean
  Where silence and gloom and despair ever reign;
No waves on that deep inky sea are in motion,
  A shadow death sends o'er the land and the main.

No soft fragrant breeze o'er this island is blowing,
  No clouds ever fly through the dead, silent air,
The shore dry and barren—no green grass is growing,
  No flowers ever bloom in this land of despair.

We see no bright streamlets, no clear, sparkling fountains,
  No trees in this desolate land are in sight;
The sun, veiled in mourning, looks on the black mountains,
  In sorrow 'tis shining; how dim is its light!

The ocean, the wide, stagnant ocean, is lying
  In sullen despair in its deep and wide bed;
No birds from the shore o'er this dark sea are flying;
  The black inky waters are silent and dead.

No forms that have life are before us appearing;
  From demons unseen we hear not a breath;
No sound from the mountain or plain are we hearing,
  To break for one moment the stillness of death.

Oh! Let the wild storm break the silence here reigning,
  Let demon-tossed billows dash on this dark shore.
No answer comes back to our prayer or complaining;
  The land and the sea are as dead as before.

Miss Sarah Jones, daughter of Austin Jones, was born at Harford February 18, 1828, and was educated in the common schools, Harford Academy and Ontario Female Seminary, where she graduated in 1852. She taught fourteen years in that school, and since her return to Harford has been teaching nearly every year. She has been a teacher for thirty-five years, and has written poetry as occasion has seemed to require for anniversaries or for some particular purpose. She wrote a poem for the Adam Miller semi-centennial, entitled "An Echo of Fifty Years," which was published with the addresses on that occasion. We quote the following, entitled

LILACS FOR PAPA.

"Oh! lilacs for Papa," the children cried,
And the taller boy on tiptoe tried
To pull the clustering branches down
Within the reach of the small hands brown
That broke the blossoms with eager glee
From the very heart of the laden tree;
All shouting in chorus, with cheeks aglow,
As they swung their treasures to and fro,
"Sweet lilacs for Papa, he loves them so."

They lay on his table, his desk, his chair,
And filled the house with their fragrance rare,
Till the question asked in each chosen spot
Was not where are they, but where are they not?
As he fondly smiled in each rosy face,
His own grew soft with a tender grace;
All care and grief through those sunny hours
Seemed banished far from his world of flowers,
While he heard glad voices with rippling flow
Sing "Lilacs for Papa, he loves them so."

Years came and went and the "children three"
Still gathered flowers from the lilac tree.
They grew in stature and mind and heart,
And of Papa's life were the richest part.
They did not see that his cheeks grew pale,
That his quick, firm footsteps began to fail;
They only knew that his loving voice
Made their pulses thrill and their hearts rejoice;
So they kept on singing, as long ago.
"Sweet lilacs for Papa, he loves them so."

O thought of anguish! there came a day
When the children stood in the smiling May,
And listened under the lilac tree
To the song of bird and the hum of bee,

And saw the shadowy branches wave
While they gathered blossoms for Papa's grave;
And whispered sadly in accents low
"Sweet lilacs as ever, he loved them so."

One beautiful May as the years sped on,
The sweet flowers bloomed, but the boys were gone,
And a lovely maiden stood alone
By a mossy mound with lilacs strown.
"I have not forgotten," she softly sighed,
"When 'Lilacs for Papa' we gaily cried,
And so to-day from the dear old tree
I have gathered blossoms enough for three,
For he would miss them, I almost know,
Should I fail to bring them, he loved them so."

Soon one by one will the "children three"
Go forth from the shade of the household tree;
Two noble men and a woman sweet
The joys and sorrows of life to meet.
Then lilac buds as they bloom and fade
Will never on Papa's grave be laid;
But memory's choicest flowers will rest
In tender silence above his breast;
And the children still, as they older grow,
While watching the lilacs come and go,
Will love them because he loved them so.

WALLACE L. THACHER, son of Russell B. Thacher, was born in Harford, March 28, 1841. He received his education in the common schools, and was one term in Harford Academy, but his principal education has been by study at home. He has taught nineteen terms of school, covering a period of thirty years. He has been school director, and has often reported the proceedings of the County Institutes for the local press. He read an article on the tariff at an institute, which was published. In 1879 he published a work on "Civil Government," adapted to use in the common schools. It is an excellent little work, the result of four years of labor and thought on the part of the author. It is used in the schools of Susquehanna County to a considerable extent, and is deserving of a wider recognition than it has yet received. The degree of A.M. was recently conferred upon him by Lafayette College.

WM. A. CROSSMAN, in 1867, prepared a work to facilitate county business, entitled "Assessors' Form Guide," and its worth is securing its use in several counties besides our own.

HONORABLE S. B. CHASE of Great Bend, has issued several works, among which are the following: "Digest and Treatise on Parliamentary Law" (now in its ninth edition); "Good of the Order;" "Manual of Good Templars;" History of Good Templars," for Mill's Temperance Manual.

MRS. S. B. CHASE, in 1870, issued "Derry's Lake," a good temperance story.

MRS. LAURA TROWBRIDGE, of Great Bend, is the author of a cook-book of "more than thirteen hundred sensible receipts," from a practical cook.

HENRY MCKINNEY, son of John McKinney, was born at Binghamton February 12, 1818. His father moved to Great Bend when he was young, and became the leading merchant in what is now Hallstead for about fifteen years. Henry was educated at Great Bend, Montrose and Oxford Academy, New York, and assisted his father in his saw-mill and store. After several store ventures in Bradford County, in which he lost money, he came back to Great Bend and clerked for his father, and finally succeeded him in the business, which he closed out in 1866, when his wife died. In 1870 he began trade at Plymouth, Luzerne County, and in the unequal contest with company stores, his attention was directed to the unfairness of the monopoly system, which led to the production of a pamphlet on "Capital and Labor." The evils of intemperance led to the production of an exhaustive Bible essay, entitled "No License for Alcoholic Drinks in the Bible." His last production is a work of two hundred and forty pages, entitled "Romanism," which was published in 1886.

MARY HARRIET OVERFIELD, the eldest of eighteen children, was born March 26, 1837, in Auburn township, Susquehanna County, Pa. Her parents were William Overfield and Anna Bunnell, who settled on Shannon Hill, Auburn township, in 1836. She was educated at the district schools, besides attending to the duties devolving upon an eldest daughter in a large family, with a beloved mother blind four years who died when the daughter was seventeen, bringing added responsibility. The following winter a broken term of school was attended at North Flat, taught by Henry W. Smith, A.M. A school paper, "The Good Templar," was issued under the nom de plume of "Topsy." At eighteen she commenced school at Wyoming Seminary, and took a scientific course, accompanied by French, German and drawing. Here she edited a school newspaper, taught school, and graduated in the class of '59. She taught at Moscow, Meshoppen and Wyoming Seminary. In 1860 she was married to John M. France; in 1873 was elected lecturer in Auburn Grange, No. 101, P. of H. From that time correspondence, essays, obituaries and poems have accumulated, and have been published in the Montrose Democrat, Independent Republican, New Milford Advertiser, Farmer's Friend of the Patrons of Husbandry and other papers. In 1853 Lieutenant D. C. Titman Post, G. A. R., made M. H. Vanscotan historian of Company H, P. V R. C., Thirty-third Regiment in line, and he solicited Mrs. France's services, who, from his retentive memory, compiled a book of one hundred pages, which serves as a milestone of one of the actual experiences of war. Mrs. France has been devoting her energies of late largely to the advancement of the farmers' interest as lecturer of Pomona Grange and chairman of the committee on programmes.

JASPER T. JENNINGS was born in New Milford, on the farm on which he now resides, February 8, 1846. His father commenced there in the forest, with no capital save his axe, a strong arm and a determined purpose; consequently his son was called upon to perform manual labor on the farm as soon as his services were of any value. At the age of nine he was kept from school summers. He attended the district schools winters, with one term at New Milford Academy while it was under the management of W. W. Watson; this comprised his school advantages, but his education has been obtained principally at home. When he was fourteen years of age he resolved to never use tobacco, liquor nor tea in any form, and that he would save a small sum of money for the semi-annual purchase of books; as a result, he has a library of some four or five hundred volumes. Stormy days and the midnight hours found him poring over books relating to history, geology, physiology, astronomy, etc. In 1871 he entered the school-room as a teacher, and taught six successive winters, and returned to his farm labors in the summer. He commenced writing serials and descriptive articles for his own amusement. The local press received some of his articles favorably, and he wrote an article on astronomy for the Growing World, then published in Jersey City, N. J., which was accepted, and a desire expressed for more. He was finally engaged as a permanent contributor, and in 1874 wrote a series of articles on "Wonders of Nature, Science and Art." Since then he has written for the Young Folks' Rural, Home Companion, Oriental Casket, Munyon's Illustrated World, Chicago Popular Monthly, Saturday Night, New Milford Advertiser and other publications. His last literary work has been the history of New Milford borough and township for this work. He has held the position of principal statistical correspondent from Susquehanna County for the Department of Agriculture since 1881. Mr. Jennings is a hard student, wields a ready pen and has good descriptive powers.

[1] CAPTAIN H. F. BEARDSLEY is a frequent contributor to the columns of the local press, and in the field of poetry he wields a "metrical" pen. Besides many fugitive pieces that have appeared in print from time to time, his more notable poetical contributions are "The Vision of James Buchanan," published in 1861, the poem delivered at the laying of the corner-stone of the County Soldiers' Monument, and the Grant Memorial Poem, read on the occasion of the memorial exercises at Montrose, Pa.; a brief extract from the latter is here given:

* * * * * * *

To-day, in his coffin, the Hero is lying,
There to wait the last summons—the last bugle-call;
He was victor in life—no less victor in dying,
For the foes he once vanquished are bearing his pall:
Friends who were ever true,
Army and Navy, too,
Wearers of Gray and Blue,
Bear him to rest.

'Tis well he should sleep near the gates of that city,
Where wife, home and children his pathway did cheer;

[1] See military chapter for sketch.

Where the hand of affection, when Death had no pity, Stretched forth and upheld him, when Death's hand was near.

But the place matters not: in the hearts of the nation,
The grave of our Hero will ever be found;
And the cycles of Time, in their endless duration,
Shall mark on the ages his deathless renown.

Where the Hudson's dark waters in grandeur and glory
Roll ceaselessly on to their home in the sea,
There raise the proud arch that shall herald the story
Of Liberty's homage—OUR GRANT—unto thee.

* * * * * *

My comrades, 'mid this universal grief
That stirs a Nation's heart, there comes to us
A dearer and more tender memory—
Of comradeship. Our old commander's dead!
The unbidden tear, on veteran's cheek,
Is no unmanly sign. Bond fraternal
That did bind him to us now is broken.
But if, as we believe, there is a bright
Beyond—a glorious hereafter—then
When hand grasps hand,
That broken band
Re-welded in fraternal love,
Shall comrades greet
When comrades meet—
On Heaven's camping-ground, above.

Besides those already mentioned, there are many others that occasionally write for the newspapers. Among them, W. B. Deans, Jas. C. Bushnell, E. A. Weston and many others occasionally contribute to the local press.

CHAPTER XII.

MEDICAL HISTORY.

Early Practice—Sketches of Physicians—Dentistry.

DR. CAPERTON, at Hopbottom, in 1787, may have been the first physician in the county, but he remained only a short time, and Rev. Daniel Buck, who came to Great Bend in 1788 and practiced medicine, is thought by some to be entitled to the honor of being the pioneer physician of the county.

Almost all the early physicians, and a great majority of all the physicians of the county, belonged to the "regular" practice, as distinguished from the systems which have sprung up in the county during the past half-century. Few of the medical pioneers had much opportunity for acquiring their medical education, and most of them were self-made men, who, by their diligent study of nature, by their patience and faithfulness in practice, wrought a grand and beneficent work in the generation in which they lived. Most of them were in moderate circumstances, commencing with a horse, a few books and a small supply of medicines as the outfit. For many years the saddle-horse and capacious saddle-bags were indispensable for practice among the primitive forests and rugged hills of Susquehanna County; but as the woodlands receded before the feller's axe, and the roads improved, the two-wheeled sulky and other vehicles with modern comforts and conveniences came into use.

A DOCTOR OF YE OLDEN TYME.

Pioneer medical practice was one of hardship, privation and toil, too often unappreciated and unrequited. Few of these worthy pioneers acquired wealth, but many of them acquired what is better,—a good name. With the increase of population, physicians are located much nearer each other, and consequently, as a rule, have shorter rides to visit their patients, which they can now do with ease and comfort, in the elegant vehicles, and over the fine roads of the present day.

The botanic and eclectic systems of practice appeared in the county about 1840, and the homœopathic system about 1860. At a meeting of physicians held at West Harford, Susquehanna County, August 15, 1872, an organization, called the Susquehanna Eclectic Medical Society, was formed, as an auxiliary to the State and National Societies—President, E. N. Loomis, of Oakley. This society was short-lived, and has never been revived. The homœopaths have done very little that is apparent in the way of medical organization. Except, therefore, as contained in the individual sketches of the practitioners of the different systems, the history of the medical profession is largely embodied in the history of the Susquehanna County Medical Society.

Perfection of character cannot be claimed for every member of the medical profession of the county. From the nature of the case, they have been subjected to severe trials and peculiar temptations. Their anxious, weary vigils, fatigue, exposure, irregularity of meals and the restful repose of sleep, the awful responsibility where the issues of life and death rest upon them, with faithful service sometimes poorly recompensed, and sometimes with base ingratitude, to say nothing of the uncharitable treatment of selfish rivals,—all tend to break down the physical system, depress and dishearten the spirit, until exhausted nature calls imperatively for some relief; so that, here and there, one and another have fallen victims to the inebriating cup, to enable them to tide over places to which their unaided powers have seemed unequal. It is a sad thing to record, that the lustre of some of the brilliant stars in the medical galaxy of the county has been dimmed by habits of intemperance; but it is also very gratifying to be able to say that these cases have been exceptional, that the great majority have been men of temperate habits and some of them earnest advocates of total abstinence. So, too, in regard to any obliquity of moral character, the rule has been on the side of rectitude.

The positions of duty and trust to which, in all the walks of life, the members of the profession have been called, they have dignified and honored. In the church, in the causes of education and temperance, in the affairs of the township or the county and in legislative halls the medical profession has been represented in a creditable manner. When the rude alarm of war was heard in the land, the doctors, with the inspiration of sincere patriotism, responded to the call of the country, and were ready for any service,—as surgeons or in the rank and file of the army.

A century of years is covered by this brief history, and many of the actors in it have passed to their reward in the life to come. May their illustrious examples be the emulation of their successors in the present time and in the years to come! better yet, may all be imitators and disciples of the Great Physician, who, when here on earth, "went about doing good!"

The earliest effort in the line of medical organization in Susquehanna County appears to have been in 1820, and for this the credit is doubtless due to Dr. L. W. Bingham, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work. It is not known to what extent this effort was successful, as no records are to be found of any meetings held.

The second effort to organize a society was upon the suggestion of Dr. John L. Kite, and the following extract from the newspaper of the day clearly illustrates the purpose aimed at and the unselfish spirit of its prime movers:

"MEDICAL MEETING.—At a meeting of a number of the physicians of Susquehanna County, held in the borough of Montrose on the 19th day of November, 1838, Dr. Asa Park was appointed chairman, and J. Blackman secretary.

"The following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

"WHEREAS, Of all the various classes of society there is none that is capable of exerting a greater or more direct influence upon the comfort and happiness of mankind than the medical profession; and,

"WHEREAS, The greatest amount of benefit to our patients cannot be achieved without a unity of feeling, a reciprocal interchange of views and a unanimous determination to lend our aid towards elucidating, establishing and promulgating those principles and practices of the profession which science has pointed out, or shall yet point out, for experience to confirm, it is, therefore, the opinion of the meeting that it is the duty, as well as the interest, of the medical practitioners of this county to unite themselves into a society for the purpose of promoting the cause of medical science. It is, therefore,

"Resolved, That we hereby form ourselves into an association under the name and denomination of the Susquehanna County Medical Society, the objects of which are, and ever shall be, the improvement of the various branches of medical science and the development of honorable and friendly feeling and conduct among ourselves.

"Resolved, That Drs. Bingham, Kite and E. S. Park be a committee to prepare a constitution and by-laws to be laid before the Society at their next meeting for their consideration.

"Resolved, That Drs. Blackman, Lyman and Bissell be a committee to prepare a code of medical ethics for the consideration of the next meeting.

"Resolved, That the officers of this Society be chosen at the next meeting.

"Resolved, That this Society will meet on Monday of court week, February term, 1839, at ten o'clock A.M. of said day, at the office of Dr. Park, in Montrose, at which time and place all the regular medical practitioners of the county are cordially invited to attend.

"ASA PARK, Chairman.

"J. BLACKMAN, Secretary."

In pursuance of the foregoing, February 4, 1839, a meeting was held, at which a constitution was adopted, and Dr. B. Richardson was elected president, and Dr. J. Blackman secretary.

The original members of the society were Drs. Asa and Ezra S. Park and Josiah Blackman, of Montrose; L. W. Bingham, New Milford; B. Richardson, Brooklyn; W. W. Pride, Springville; Calvin Leet, Friendsville; Eleazar Lyman, Great Bend; and John L. Kite, Silver Lake.

A certificate of membership, with recommendation to the favorable notice of the medical profession and of the public, was issued by the society, which was signed by the president and secretary, and attested by a seal, having for its circumscribed motto "Palmam qui meruit ferat," with a mortar and pestle, surrounded by a wreath in the centre.

Thus rank in the profession was to depend upon merit alone, and the common implements of the office of the doctors are suggestive of the times when they prepared almost all their remedies from the crude materials, instead of procuring them from the druggist and apothecary in the elegant style of preparation of the present day.

For about sixteen years the annual and semi-annual meetings were held with considerable regularity. All the records of the society having been destroyed in the great fire which took place in Montrose in November, 1854, it is impossible to give a list of the officers and members during this interval.

At the next annual meeting held at Montrose January 3, 1855, we have these additional names: Drs. Ezra Patrick and Gordon Z. Dimock, Montrose; Latham A. Smith, New Milford; C. C. Edwards and A. M. Tiffany, Harford. Braton Richardson was chosen president for that year; L. W. Bingham, vice-president; G. Z. Dimock, secretary; and L. A. Smith, treasurer. Delegates were appointed to the State Medical Society and to the American Medical Association. The Committees on Sanitary Condition of the County and Fee Bill reported, and the secretary was requested to rewrite the constitution. Adjourned meetings were held at New Milford in May, and at Lodersville (now Great Bend Boro') in June following, at which time the constitution rewritten by the secretary was adopted. A fee bill was also adopted at that time.

While the society has existed nearly fifty years, its annual and semi-annual meetings have been held without scarcely any interruption, and in several instances there have been extra meetings. Unless some other place is designated, the meetings are held at Montrose, and it has been customary, at least half the time, to meet at such localities in the county as would best accommodate the members of the society.

Delegates are elected every year to the State Society and to the American Medical Association, and attendance at the meetings of those bodies constitutes permanent membership in them. A large number of the society have availed themselves of this honor, and their reports at subsequent meetings have added interest to the exercises. The annual address of the president rarely fails, and often, by request, finds publication in the leading newspapers. At the semi-annual meetings essays are in order, and this exercise frequently tests the mettle of the younger members. For many years numerously-attended clinics have been held by the society, at which patients have received advice without charge, and a meeting rarely occurs at which some do not appear, whether the clinic is advertised or not.

At a meeting held at Montrose January 5, 1859, at which G. Z. Dimock, M.D., delivered the annual address, he said:

"In complying with the appointment with which I am honored, Mr. President, I shall endeavor to bring to your recollection something of the early history of the society over which you are called this day to preside. It is needless to remind you that its records were burned four years ago in the office of the secretary, and that the date of its formation, the names of its originators and the minutes of its proceedings were thus lost. To remedy this as far as possible, I resorted to a file of the county newspaper, and, turning it over leaf by leaf, found a notice of the first medical meeting held in the county. With data thus obtained I refreshed the memories of the older members, and from their recollections have gathered facts enough to save the early history of the Society from entire forgetfulness.

"On the 19th day of November, in the year 1838, six physicians, residents of Susquehanna County, met at the office of Dr. Asa Park, in Montrose, and formed themselves into an association under 'the name and denomination of the Susquehanna County Medical Society.'

"In reading this notice we are surprised at the age of this society—more than twenty years old! Twenty years ago there was no National Medical Association, sending its able discussions and erudite monographs into every part of the country, stimulating the physicians to reading and study, and infusing new energy into the entire profession. Twenty years ago Pennsylvania had no State Medical Society to which the local organizations could send an annual delegate to report the health statistics of the county, and to bring back the history and treatment of any epidemic or new disease occurring in other parts of the State. Had it been to-day this society was formed, it would have been simply to carry out the suggestions of the National Association, or merely to comply with the urgent requests of the State Society, or only to follow the example of physicians in every county around us. But it was formed years before the idea of a National Medical Association was conceived—years before the State Society was proposed; and when there were no outside influences of any kind to aid and encourage the undertaking. Whatever credit there is in the foundation of this society is due entirely to the six physicians who gave it existence. The place of its formation is noticeable. Montrose was then a small, obscure village. There were no telegraphs, as now, to put it in communication with the rest of the world. It was off in the 'Beech Woods,' by itself, far from the business marts of the country. Susquehanna County was yet half-wilderness. Its hill-sides were everywhere dotted with new choppings. Comfortable and commodious framed houses were just beginning to displace the log huts of the first pioneers. Such was the condition of the county when her physicians, isolated physically and professionally from the great seats of enterprise and learning, united themselves together for the noble purposes set forth in the first resolution which organized them into an association. The two objects set forth in that resolution are indeed noble, from whatever point we view them; but the philanthropic and unselfish motives which incited the movement are best seen in the preamble preceding. Nothing of self or sordid interest is manifested. It exhibits an ardent desire for an increase of professional knowledge and usefulness, in order that they might be able to achieve the greatest amount of benefit to the patient. The organization of this society for such objects and from such motives evinces on the part of its originators an honorable determination to make themselves of the greatest possible benefit to the community, not only by perfecting their knowledge and skill in the divine art of healing, but also by promulgating, establishing and elucidating earnest medical and hygienic principles and practices among the people. It manifests a devotion to that profession from high and philanthropic motives.

"The early formation of this society is a credit to the physicians of the county, and the names of those who took part in its organization should not be forgotten. They should be again placed upon the records of the society and saved to those who come after us.

"Who are the six physicians who proved themselves so much in advance of the profession in larger towns and more populous districts? As a class (and it is a pleasure to speak of them as a class), they were 'Regular Practitioners of Medicine.' They belonged to that ancient and honorable school which was founded more than two thousand years ago by Hippocrates, the venerated Father of Medical Science, and which has come down to us through the lapse of ages, with its fundamental principles unchanged and unchangeable. In every age of its long existence it has witnessed the rise as well as the fall of new and rival systems, while itself progressed and improved in every changing period.

* * * * * *

"The qualification which admits the candidate to membership in this ancient school is a thorough medical education. Not that he shall be versed in theories and doctrines, but that he shall be thoroughly learned in medical truths. His mind must be stored with the fruits of close, unremitted study. Year after year must he pore over the pages of medical books, and month after month must he sit in close attention to medical lectures, before he may present himself for admission in that learned body. Medical education is the qualification, and this is the disqualification.—'Any physician who procures a patent for a remedy, or instrument of surgery, is disqualified for membership in this body.'

"To a school so ancient and learned and honorable belonged the six physicians who formed the Susquehanna County Medical Society. It is a high honor to them that their long professional lives have never been sullied by any species of quackery.

"Years ago the physicians of Susquehanna County stood each with his elbows out ready to thrust the side of his professional neighbor. When they met, to disagree was the rule; to quarrel was not an exception. If called in counsel, the life and health of the patient was quite forgotten in the anxiety to injure the reputation of the physician in attendance. If they met, as two once did in this village, on a plank over a mud-hole, they fought for the right of way. When they met on their professional rounds they often stopped to quarrel, and, on one occasion at least, did not part until they knocked off hats and bestowed other 'amiable attentions' upon each other. To this there were honorable exceptions. There were physicians in the county who would not violate their honor to injure a rival. But among them was a feeling of jealousy and distrust which was a shame to them and an injury to the profession. Now, through the kindly influence of this society, the physicians of the county meet each other as brothers. They counsel and advise with each other without an effort or a desire to take undue advantage. The patient can get the honest opinions of consulting physicians and have the benefit of their united judgment and skill. By adopting a code of Medical Ethics, and a uniform Fee Bill, the society has removed the two most frequent causes of jealousy and ill-feeling. It has accomplished its primary object, and 'developed an honorable and friendly conduct and feeling among its members.'

"As I am about to close, do I hear any one ask what good it does to teach the principles and practices by which health is preserved and life prolonged? To all such let me say, we do not profess to cure every disease; but let me assure you, the list of incurable diseases is growing less every day. We do not profess to save from death. The fiat has gone forth 'thou shalt surely die.' From that decree we make no appeal. All that we can do is to put off the day of death, and that we have done, ten and twenty years. By statistics, carefully prepared, it is demonstrated beyond a doubt that the average duration of human life has more than doubled in the last two hundred years, in which the regular practice has triumphed over every species of empiricism.

"During the past few years deaths and removals have greatly depleted our ranks and several are now well advanced in years. At all the meetings an esprit du corps is manifest which is very gratifying, and it is as true in 1887 as in 1859 that the efforts of the original members have been successful and have benefited the community and the profession.

"In 1869 a new certificate of membership was adopted and a new seal, having the words 'The Susquehanna County Medical Society' on the outer margin, with a winged caduceus of Mercury on a shield in the centre, and outside the shield the motto 'quæ prosunt omnibus,' a fitting expression of the unselfish and philanthropic character of the society. The society possess a small collection of medical works intended to be the nucleus of a library."

Of those who practiced in the county before 1820, of whom no sketches are given, are the following:

1787. A Dr. Caperton, it is said, accompanied the Nicholson settlers to Hopbottom (now Brooklyn), but may not have remained more than a year. 1788. Rev. Daniel Buck, of Great Bend, practiced as a physician. 1791. Dr. Forbes at Great Bend. He left before 1807. 1794. Comfort Capron in Nine Partners' Settlement, Harford, until his death in 1800. 1801. Noah Kincaid, who died in 1804, and Asa Cromwell, "phesitions" on tax-list for "Willingborough." 1804. Robert Chandler,[1] at Gibson, a "root and cancer doctor" of considerable practice. 1807, or earlier. Reuben Baker, near the forks of the Wyalusing, but just below the present line of Susquehanna County, practiced extensively in its western townships. 1807, or earlier. Jonathan Gray at Great Bend. 1808. Dr. Luce at Harford a few years; then removed to Great Bend. 1810. Horace Griswold at Harford a year or two. 1811. James Cook in Bridgewater. 1812. Dr. Stanford in Liberty. 1816. Wm. Bacon at Hopbottom. 1818. Charles B. Johnson, Silver Lake. 1820. Dr. Emerson, Silver Lake.

Of the physicians whose names are not mentioned in the sketches of this chapter are the following:

Drs. Charles W. Bankson and —— Plant, of Silver Lake; R. H. Eastman and A. H. Bolles, of Montrose; —— Munger (1822), E. B. Slade, E. Mack, P. M. Way and Meacham, Brooklyn; —— Ruttan, Rush; Joseph Falkner, Dundaff; Rufus Fish, Liberty; —— Vailes, Friendsville; —— Field, an Englishman, in Bridgewater; —— Daniels, Great Bend; J. P. Lambert, Springville and Auburn (dead).

Dr. James Cook, the first regularly educated physician in Bridgewater, located about 1810, across the Wyalusing Creek, opposite Stephen Wilson. He practiced there several years and then removed to Spencer, N. Y. Jonathan H. Merrill, son of Amos Merrill, who came to Hopbottom in 1818, became a physician and died in New Hampshire. Dr. Rufus Fish was an early settler of Great Bend, but subsequently (about 1819) lived in Liberty, on the "Ranney Clearing." He moved back to Great Bend, then again to Liberty, on the farm where Philo C. Luce since, and from there to the Salt Spring, in Franklin, where he died. Dr. Wm. S. Gritman came to Clifford in 1830 and left in 1836. Dr. Thomas Halsey was also one of the temporary residents. Dr. Merrick died in the same place. Thomas Jackson, M.D., was president of a stock company which built a bridge across the Susquehanna River at Susquehanna Depot in 1855.

[1] He may have been in Gibson as early as 1800.

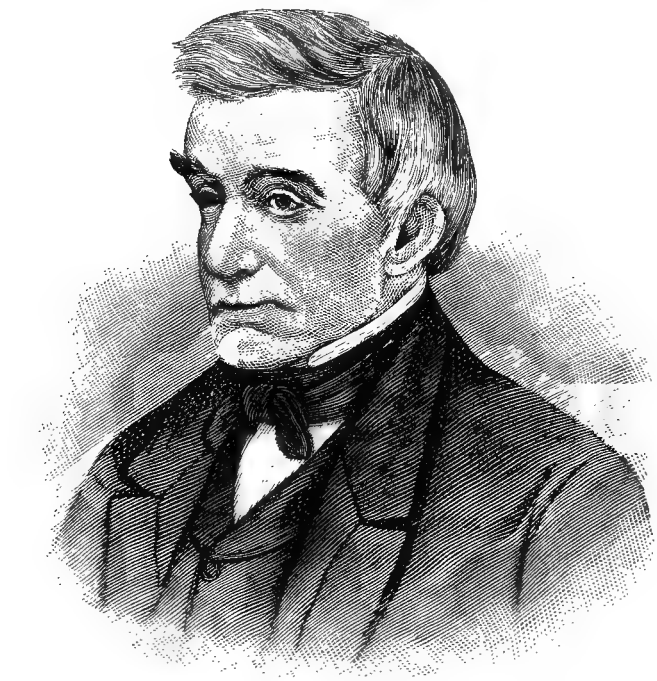
Wm. W. Tyler, M.D., came to Gibson in 1824 and made a short stay. Dr. Chester Tyler (not related to the former) established himself on Kennedy Hill, where he remained in practice until his death, in 1846. He was an elder in the Presbyterian Church. He had six children. His only son, James C., resides in Montrose.

Dr. John L. Kite, of Silver Lake, enjoys the credit of making the suggestion which led to the organization of the County Medical Society in November, 1838. He was a member of the Society of Friends and a gentleman of culture and refinement. After a few years' residence in the county he removed to Philadelphia.



Dr. William Terbell came to Dundaff in 1825 or 1826, and built just below Gould Phinney on the hill near the Presbyterian Church. March, 1836, he purchased the stand of B. A. Denison, M.D., at Montrose. It was said of the latter, "He can't show off so much as Dr. ——, but he understands the theater of medicine better." Dr. Terbell removed to Corning in 1837.

Dr. Miner Kelly was appointed justice of the peace for Springville in 1828. Either in that year or the one following Dr. Jethro Hatch, from Connecticut, settled in the place. Previous to their coming, Dr. Jackson, father of Thomas Jackson, M.D., of Tunkhannock, was the physician for all this region.

Dr. Joseph B. Streeter (1787–1883), whose name was widely known for his skill as a physician, was a native of Chesterfield, Conn. His parents, Barzillai and Nancy Brown Streeter, subsequently removed to Richmond, N. H., where they were farmers, and died in Swansea, the same State. Soon after reaching his majority he began the study of medicine in Cheshire, N. H., where he practiced his profession for about one year after completing his studies. In 1812 he set out for the then far West, intending to locate in the Lake country in the western part of New York State; but learning from a traveler that the British were about to invade that part of the State, he turned his course south from Central New York, and resolved to visit his friend, Noah Aldrich, of the "Nine Partners'" settlement. His ride was made on horse-back, with his saddle-bags and portmanteau strapped on behind. He possessed some three hundred Spanish dollars, some of which he retained afterward and gave as souvenirs to his children and friends.

Upon reaching Harford he met Dr. Luce and Dr. Griswold, who induced him to locate there. About this time he was called to attend a case of fever in the vicinity of Glenwood, which he so successfully treated that he soon became known, and acquired a wide range of practice, which extended in after-years throughout Brooklyn, Lenox, Clifford, Herrick, Gibson, Jackson, Ararat, Thomson, Harmony, New Milford and Great Bend; besides, he was frequently called as counsel with other physicians in different parts of the county. For nearly fifty-five years Dr. Streeter continued the practice of medicine and surgery, and was successful in the treatment of cancers. For most of the time he made his rides on horse-back, which he preferred to the use of either carriage or sleigh, especially in summer-time. He was well-known for his correct diagnosis of disease, his honest and skillful treatment of his patients, and particularly in cases of fevers, and for his good judgment in the management of the sick-room. To him the practice of medicine seemed natural. He had kind words always ready for the downcast, a pleasant story for the diversion of the impatient, and a fund of conversation at hand in every emergency. He served the poor with the same care as the rich, and in every way within the range of his professional work sought to heal the sick and administer comforting words to those past medical aid. During the last eight years of his life he was an invalid and sat in a wheel-chair much of the time. He bore his suffering cheerfully, and always had kind words for those near him, and a hearty welcome and cheer for his many friends. He was possessed of strong perceptive faculties, marked individuality and both as a physician and a citizen, was highly respected by the profession and the community. Aside from his profession, he was closely identified with the political movements of the vicinity, although seeking no place for himself, always interested in temperance reform, and an advocate of its principles, closely allied with all matters of education at home, and gave his children the best opportunities for an education then afforded. In religious belief he was a Universalist, and his home was ever the welcome stopping-place for the itinerant ministers of that church in the early days. Both himself and wife were members of the Gibson Church, of which they were among its founders. One brother, Sebastian Streeter, was a Universalist clergyman, and succeeded Hosea Ballou, the founder of Universalism in Boston; another brother, Russell Streeter, was also a Universalist clergyman in New England, and both lived to be over eighty; and a third, Barzillai, was for some time a lawyer at Montrose. One sister, Prutia, married John Aldrich, in Massachusetts, and after his death resided with her son, Nathaniel, in Jackson township.

Joseph B. Streeter

Dr. Streeter married, in 1814, at Harford, Chloe Aldrich (1795–1849), a woman devoted to her family and to the church, and who proved her Christian character by her life-work and left its impress on the lives of her children. Her father, David Aldrich (1770–1830), a native of Worcester, Mass., was one of the early settlers in Harford. Her mother, Polly Capron (1770–1845), a native of Bristol, Mass., was the daughter of Dr. Comfort Capron (1744–1800), the first physician in Harford.

Their children are Diantha (1818–85), wife of Dr. J. F. Smith, died in Wellsburg, N. Y. Hon. Farris B. Streeter (1819–1877), whose sketch is in the judicial chapter of this volume. Nancy (1824), succeeded to her father's homestead, in Harford, and cared for him in his declining years. (House built in 1825). Alpha M. (1827–48), married Hon. George H. Wells, of Gibson. Joseph Everett (1829–63), read law in Joliet, Ill., and was appointed, by President Lincoln, in 1861, a judge of the United States Court in Nebraska, which position he filled until his death, two years after. One of his colleagues on the bench was Hon. Wm. Pitt Kellogg, of Louisiana. Rienzi (1838), educated at Harford Academy, at Clinton and Homer, N. Y., read law with his brother, Judge Farris B. Streeter, at Montrose, and was admitted to the bar in 1860. He was clerk of the United States District Court of Nebraska from 1862 until 1867, when it was admitted as a State; he removed to Colorado, where he was a member of the Legislature, 1879–80, and Speaker of the House for those years. In 1881 he was elected to the State Senate for four years, and in 1883 chosen president of the Senate for two years.

PRESIDENTS OF THE SUSQUEHANNA COUNTY MEDICAL SOCIETY.

1838. B. Richardson.	1873–78. W. L. Richardson.
1839–46. No record.	1879. L. A. Smith.
1847–48. E. S. Park.	1880. H. Pennepacker.
1849–54. No record.	1881. S. Birdsall.
1855–56. B. Richardson.	1882. E. F. Wilmot.
1857–58. J. Blackman.	1883. A. T. Brundage.
1859–60. L. W. Bingham.	1884. E. N. Smith.
1861–65. B. Richardson.	1885. A. Chamberlin.
1866–67. L. A. Smith.	1886. G. A. Brundage.
1868–71. C. C. Halsey.	1887. F. D. Lamb.
1872. C. C. Edwards.

SECRETARIES.

1838. J. Blackman.	1860. G. Z. Dimock.
1839–47. No record.	1861–63. C. C. Halsey.
1848. E. Patrick, Jr.	1864–72. E. L. Gardner.
1849–54. No record.	1873–78. C. C. Halsey.
1855–56. G. Z. Dimock.	1879. E. L. Gardner.
1857–58. E. S. Park.	1880–87. C. C. Halsey.
1859. W. L. Richardson.

Dr. Benadam Denison, son of George and Theody Brown Denison, of Stonington, Conn., was born at Hartland, Vt., March 31, 1773. He was twice married,—first to Polly Morse, of Hartland, Vt., and second to Eunice Williams, at Montrose, Pa., in 1817. He moved to Montrose a few years previous to his last marriage, where he resided until March, 1836. He then moved to Dimock Four Corners, and died at Montrose February 8, 1837. His second wife died in 1872. He read medicine in Vermont, and (as one of his sons says) afterward graduated at Geneva Medical College, N. Y. He had twelve children, of whom seven are now living, and three are physicians in practice.

Dr. Eleazer Parker, a native of Connecticut, came to Great Bend in August, 1807, and practiced medicine and surgery two and a half years successfully. In the fall of that year he was appointed surgeon's mate to the One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Regiment, which had been formed the spring previous. He was commissioned the first postmaster in the county February 1, 1808, Isaac Post, of Bridgewater, being commissioned one month later. The same year, March 6th, Dr. Parker performed the operation of bronchotomy on a little girl two years old (Lucina Farrar), and extracted a watermelon-seed from her windpipe. She recovered, had the seed in her possession, and died at Harford in 1873. He introduced vaccination into the county, and vaccinated a number. His practice extended into almost every settlement in what is now Susquehanna County—a circuit of fifty miles of bad roads, on horseback when practicable, but in many places there were only foot-paths for miles through the woods—and, laborious as it was, it proved very unremunerative, for the people were really unable to pay much.

Dr. Parker married a daughter of Jonathan Dimon, and in 1810 moved to Kingston, Luzerne County. He was examining surgeon of the Thirty-fifth Pennsylvania Regiment during the War of 1812; was a teetotaler over forty years, and never prescribed alcohol to a patient in his practice of sixty years; and, in 1872, at the age of ninety years, was hale and active. On petition of Dr. Parker, the north end of the Newburg turnpike, finished by D. Summers, was made a post-road.[1]

[1] Blackman's "History."

The physicians who had lived at Great Bend, and removed previous to 1807, were Drs. Forbes, Noah Kincaid, Charles Fraser and Jonathan Gray. Dr. Forbes was there in 1791 or before, and was probably the first regular physician in Susquehanna County.

In 1813 or 1814 Dr. Daniel McFall, an Irishman, educated and highly respected, came to Great Bend and died there about 1835.[1]

Dr. Israel Skinner and his twin brother Jacob came in 1814 to the farms adjoining or lying on the line between Great Bend and the present township of Oakland (then Harmony). Dr. Skinner is remembered as the author of a "History of the American Revolution in verse."[1]

Dr. William Wells Pride, of Cambridge, N. Y., a returned missionary from the Choctaws, was established at Burrows' Hollow, Gibson, in January, 1830. He married Miss Hannah Thacher, daughter of Obadiah Thacher, of Harford, at the Choctaw Mission. In 1834 he removed to Springville, and remained there nearly twenty-five years, when he removed to Middletown, Conn., where, having passed the evening of his days with his daughter, Mrs. Rev. Dr. J. Taylor, he died March 24, 1865, aged sixty-nine. Mrs. Pride died August 8, 1861, aged sixty-one.

One cannot correctly estimate the value to the community of two such Christian lives as those of Doctor and Mrs. Pride. Both had gone in their early prime as missionaries of the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions (1819–26) to the Choctaws in Mississippi. Dr. Pride was a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church at Springville, and was an active anti-slavery advocate. He enjoyed in a high degree the respect and confidence of all who knew him. He was one of the original members of the Susquehanna County Medical Society.

Dr. Charles Fraser, son of Charles and Obedience Tyler Frazer, was born in Connecticut, 1779. His parents removed during his boyhood to Sangerfield, Oneida County, N. Y. He made good use of his advantages for acquiring an education. His daughter, Ann L., has heard him say that he read medicine with Dr. White, of Cherry Valley, N. Y. He attended lectures at the University of Pennsylvania, when Dr. P. S. Physick was professor there. He practiced a short time at Great Bend, and removed to Montrose. He married Miss Mary Lord, of Clinton, Dutchess County, N. Y., December 25, 1809. They had four children,—Philip, Franklin, Ann L. and Caroline, of whom only Ann L. is living.

Dr. Frazer held the offices of prothonotary, clerk of courts, register and recorder, by appointment of Governor Snyder, from the organization of Susquehanna County, in 1812, for four years, and he was elected to the State Senate in 1816. Dr. Frazer was precise and accurate in manner, dignified and prepossessing in appearance. He died February 4, 1834, and his widow, September 13, 1870.

Dr. Calvin Leet, from Vermont, located in 1819, first at "Slab City,"—as the vicinity of Wright's Mill was called,—but in 1820 removed to Friendsville, where he owned about three hundred acres. His father, Captain Luther Leet, came soon after. Dr. Leet was the first regular physician in the western half of the county, and for some years the only one. "He had a rough circuit to ride at a time when roads were rooty and full of stumps." He married Miss Susan Williams, of Vermont, in 1813. They had six children, of whom only Dr. Nathan Young Leet, of Scranton, Pa., and Martha D., wife of Dr. E. L. Hendrick, of Friendsville, are living. Dr. Leet was one of the original members of the Susquehanna County Medical Society. After a practice of nearly fifty years, he died January 1, 1874. He was once associate judge of Susquehanna County, and served in the Legislature. His son, Dr. N. Y. Leet, practiced several years at Friendsville, joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1860; was surgeon during the war of 1861, and has since enjoyed an immense practice at Scranton, Pa., his present residence.

Eleazer Lyman, M.D., was born in Hinsdale, Mass., 1802; married Miss Sally Payne, and removed to Berkshire, Tioga County, N. Y., about 1821; thence removed to Friendship,

[1] Blackman's "History."

Allegany County, N. Y., where he studied medicine with Dr. James Wellman. He graduated at Geneva Medical College about 1831. He practiced at Bolivar, N. Y., about two years, and at Speedsville, N. Y., until about 1835, when he removed to Great Bend, where he continued in practice until his death by an accidental fall from his horse, in 1845. (He succeeded Dr. Daniel McFall, who died at Great Bend in 1835.) His first wife died in 1838, and he afterward married Miss Sally Clark, of Great Bend.

Of Dr. Lyman's sons, Chauncey A., the eldest, was a lawyer at Lock Haven, Pa., and lieutenant-colonel of the Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves; Charles E., a lawyer at Great Bend, was captain of Company H, Two Hundred and Third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; Dr. J. W. was medical director of the Kearney Division, and, after 1863, lieutenant-colonel of the Two Hundred and Third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers (he was killed at Fort Fisher in 1865); Vincent P. was second lieutenant in a California regiment.

DR. E. N. SMITH was born in Brooklyn township, Pa., November 23, 1818, and was the second son of Latham A. and Sally (Newton) Smith. He early evinced a liking for study, and availed himself of all the advantages of the district schools, and also attended Newton's select school in Brooklyn. He afterwards taught school for several years in his native State, and also in New Jersey. He then decided to adopt the profession of medicine, and entered the office of Dr. Braton Richardson, of Brooklyn, Pa., as a student. He continued his studies afterwards at Geneva College, but did not graduate. In 1848 he located at Lanesboro', and entered into partnership with Dr. Henry Shutts in the practice of his profession. When the Erie Railroad Company established their shops at Susquehanna, Dr. Smith opened a branch office there, and shortly afterwards himself and Dr. Shutts erected a building on the site of the present post-office, put in a stock of drugs and opened a drug-store. Upon the dissolution of the partnership, which continued several years, the building and drug business became the property of Dr. Smith. This building and contents were afterwards destroyed by fire, and he then erected the store-building now occupied by Mitchell. Here he carried on the drug business in connection with his profession until about 1872, when he relinquished it and gave his exclusive attention to his professional duties and extensive practice. In 1852 he married Frances (1836–69), daughter of Calvin (1805) and Mary (1805–86) Sheldon, who was born in Broome County, N. Y. Their children were, Bert E. (1853) educated at graded and select schools at Susquehanna, and also at the Wyoming Seminary, at Kingston, Pa.; he studied medicine with his father, and afterwards attended the medical school at Syracuse, N. Y. In 1873 he went West and spent several years in Mexico, Colorado and other Western States. While engaged in railroading, as conductor of a train, he met with a serious and nearly fatal accident. In 1880 he married Anna Guilkey, a resident of Kansas City, Missouri. In 1885 he returned home on account of the illness of his father, and is now residing at Susquehanna. George S. (1859), educated at the public schools of Susquehanna, and also attended the medical school at Baltimore, Md. He also studied medicine with his father, but never engaged in the practice of that profession. He resides with his brother at Susquehanna.

Dr. Smith was widely known in Northern Pennsylvania and Southern New York as a skillful and successful physician. Coming to Susquehanna when it was simply a small hamlet, he saw it grow and expand into the first town in the county. Into the households of many of its first residents he came as their family physician, and he continued to hold this relation until his death, which occurred in March, 1886. In 1873 Dr. Smith married, for his second wife, Mary E. Marshall, born in 1837, who survives him. Wedded to his profession, which, in its exacting demands upon his time, left him but little opportunity to exercise the social proclivities of his nature, yet he was ever genial and pleasant in his intercourse with his fellow-citizens, and ever took a lively interest in all public enterprises for the improvement and benefit of his town. His large and lucrative practice gained him a competence, and in his death the medical fraternity lost an honored member, and the community a skilled and successful physician.

Doctor Latham Avery Smith, eldest son of Latham A. (1781–1848) and Sally (Newton) (1789–1840) Smith, was born in Brooklyn, Susquehanna County, Pa., August 14, 1816. His parents were natives of Groton, New London County, Conn., where they were married in 1807, and whence they came to Susquehanna County in 1813, having purchased a large tract of land in Brooklyn township.

His paternal grandparents were James and Annis Smith, who were born and raised in New London County, Conn., and had ten children. They came to Susquehanna County with their son and died here. His maternal grandparents were Elijah and Judith (Jones) Newton, of Groton, Conn., who were married in 1788 and died within a few months of each other, after attaining the great age of ninety-five years. The children of L. A. and Sally (Newton) Smith were Sally L. (1808–72), married William W. Weston, one of the pioneers of Brooklyn and the parent of E. A. Weston, ex-superintendent of schools and a prominent citizen, and was the mother of Dr. Wm. L. Weston, the dentist, practicing at New Milford; Cyntha S. (1810–84), married Edwin Tiffany, of Harford township; Emma A., born 1812, is the wife of Col. C. M. Gere, and resides at Montrose; Mary H. (1814–84) was the wife of James Adams, the tanner, of Brooklyn township; Latham A.; E. N. (1818–86) studied medicine and became a prominent practitioner in the county, as will be noted in a sketch on page 139 of this chapter; Hubbard N., born 1821, a farmer, of Lenox township; Deborah A. (1824–82) was the wife of L. R. Peck, a well-known farmer and business man of Harford township; James F., born 1826, a farmer of Lenox township; and Eunice J., born 1829, the wife of John Ives, of New Milford borough.

The youthful days of Latham A. Smith were spent upon his father's farm and in attendance upon the district school, finishing with a course at Harford University in 1836. The following spring he commenced reading medicine with Dr. Braton Richardson, of Brooklyn, Pa., and during 1839 and '40 he attended lectures at the Fairfield Medical College, N. Y. After a year and a half of practice with his preceptor he located at New Milford, where he has been in continuous practice to the present time. In 1841–42 and part of 1843 he was in partnership with the late Dr. L. W. Bingham.

L. A. Smith M.D.

Dr. Smith joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1840 and, with two exceptions, has attended every meeting of that body for the past forty-six years. He was president of the society in 1866 and '67 and again in 1879. He represented the County Society at the State Medical Society's meetings in 1858 and 1864, and was a delegate in attendance upon the meeting of the American Medical Association also, in 1864. Dr. Smith is the premier of the Susquehanna County medical fraternity in continuous practice within the county, and has ever maintained a high position in the esteem of his professional brethren and of the community at large.

In 1845 he married Mary J. (1824–59), daughter of Henry and Eliza (Fairchild) Burritt, who were among the first settlers of New Milford. They had three children, all of whom died in September, 1852.

May 30, 1865, he married Mary, the daughter of Elias and Mary (Weston) Hoyt, of Luzerne County, Pa., who is a cousin of the Hon. Henry M. Hoyt, ex-Governor of Pennsylvania, and is a lady of cultivated tastes and artistic ability. Their children are Isabella, married Charles Tipton, a business man of Brantford, Ontario; Sidney Hoyt (1868–72); Channing (1871–72); Gessella and Pauline Smith.

Dr. Lemuel Webb Bingham was born at Windham, Conn., in 1794, and read medicine at his native place with Dr. Avery, completing his course with lectures at the Medical Department of Yale College. In 1817 he commenced the practice of medicine at New Milford, where he spent the remaining fifty years of his life, his death occurring in 1867. He married Alma Dean, and of their nine children, only one, Mrs. Dr. G. D. Kimball, of New Milford, is now living in the county. Dr. Bingham was in partnership with Dr. L. A. Smith in 1841–42, and with Dr. D. C. Ainey in 1860–61.

He met the hardships and trials incident to the practice of a pioneer physician resolutely and cheerfully, finding many warm-hearted friends among his patrons, not only in New Milford, but in all the adjoining townships. Without much of the culture or polish of the schools, he profited by his experience, and aimed at a high standard in his chosen vocation. He was among the earliest and most active to organize a County Medical Society, and on the 19th of November, 1834, he was one of six who met for that purpose, and was chairman of the committee to draft the constitution.

He was president of the society in 1859 and 1860, and was ever held in high regard by his professional brethren. His services were so cheerfully rendered to all classes, that his generous disposition did not allow the accumulation of much wealth, but his memory is embalmed in the hearts of many to whom he ministered.

Dr. Samuel Bissell, the youngest of five children of Samuel and Betsey Pierce Bissell, was born at Newport, R. I., in 1789. His parents removed to Hartwick, Otsego County, N. Y., where he read medicine two years with a Dr. Arnold, and practiced two years under instruction with Dr. Gott, a graduate from Edinburgh, Scotland, residing in Hartwick. He did not attend lectures or receive the degree of M.D., but had for his credentials a certificate signed by Drs. Arnold and Gott, of Hartwick; Dr. White, of Cherry Valley, and two prominent physicians of Cooperstown, N. Y.

In 1811 he married Sally, daughter of Israel Foote, of Hartwick, and in 1815 removed to what is now Brooklyn, this county, where he practiced medicine until his death, in 1829. He had twelve children, eight of whom are now living. His practice extended from Bridgewater to Abington, and he often went on horseback through the woods to the latter place and back without partaking of food. Some of the roads could be followed only by marked trees, and he was sometimes out all night in the woods. He was a surgeon of the War of 1812, and had an honorable discharge from the service. He was also a Free-Mason.

His widow survived him until her death, in 1783, at the age of eighty-two years. For twenty-five years after the doctor's death she was so often sent for to see the sick, that her family sometimes felt that she did not stay at home at one time long enough to make a visit.

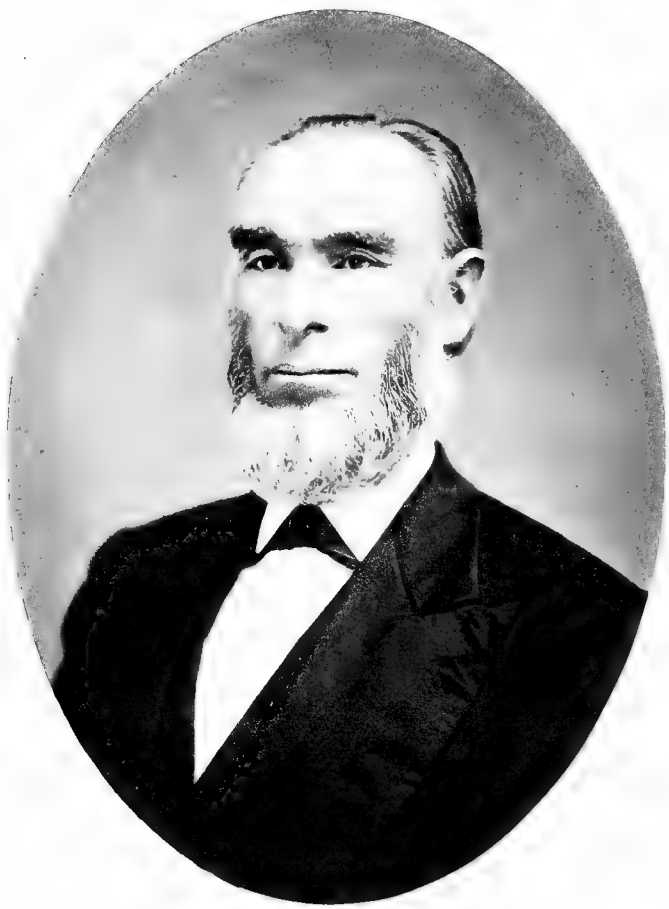
His daughter, Mrs. Mary A. Fairchild, resides close by the old homestead, about half a mile west of Brooklyn Centre.

CHESTER TYLER, M.D. (1787-1847), was a successful practicing physician for twenty-two years, and resided in Kennedy Hill, in Gibson. He was a native of Windham County, Conn., was examined in physics and surgery at Delhi, N. Y., in 1816, and licensed to practice by the Board of Examiners. He settled at Hartwick, Otsego County, N. Y., where he remained until 1825, when he removed to Gibson. He had a wide field of practice, was known as a student of his profession, and his counsel was often sought by the neighboring physicians. He was an elder in the Presbyterian Church.

DR. WILLIAM BISSELL, son of John and Mary Bissell, was born at Milton, Litchfield County, Connecticut, in 1803. In 1828 he came to Brooklyn, this county, and studied medicine with Dr. Samuel Bissell one year, and at Montrose, with Dr. Charles Frazier one year and eight months. He practiced a short time at Warren, Pa., and at Friendsville with Dr. Calvin Leet, until he was married, in 1834, to Parthenia H. Webster. He then settled in Forest Lake, and subsequently moved about two miles south, in Rush (now Jessup) township, where he lived until his death, in 1883. Of eight children, only Jessie W., widow of ex-Sheriff M. B. Helme, survives him. His son, Alanson W., died for his country at Belle Plain, Va., in June, 1863. With the increasing infirmities of life, the doctor gave more attention to his farm than to practice in his last years. His widow resides with her daughter at the homestead.

Dr. Bissell was a member of the Susquehanna County Medical Society and enjoyed the respect of the medical profession for his worth.

DR. NATHANIEL PENDLETON CORNWELL, son of Alba and Keturah Cornwell, was born in the Black River country, in the State of New York in 1804. When he was a year old his parents removed to Susquehanna County. When a mere lad he began to live with Dr. Mason Dennison, of Montrose, and afterward read medicine with him. He practiced about three years at Warren, Pa., and then Paupack, Pa., in connection with hotel-keeping three or four years. About 1840 he purchased a farm at Fairdale, where he lived until his death, in 1883. For many years he had an extensive practice, and was considered a shrewd financier. His first wife was Amanda Reynolds, and they had eight children, six of whom attained to adult years.



BRATON RICHARDSON, M.D., the youngest son of Caleb and Huldah Richardson, was born at Appleborough, Bristol County, Mass., in 1803, and came with his parents to Harford, Pa., in 1806. He was to a great extent deprived of literary advantages; yet his education was not neglected, for around his father's fireside he and his brothers diligently prosecuted their studies. He read medicine with Thomas Sweet, M.D., at Canaan, Pa., in 1825–27, and with Charles Marshall, M.D., at Newton, N. J., in 1828–29; attended lectures at the Western Medical College, at Fairfield, N. Y., receiving a diploma from Albany Medical College in the year 1834; commenced practice at Carbondale, Pa. in 1829 for one year, and at Brooklyn, this county, in 1830, where he led an active and useful life of thirty-four years.

In September, 1840, he married Lucy C. Miles, daughter of Joshua Miles, Jr., of Brooklyn. They had no children and she survived him.

He was the first president of the Susquehanna Medical Society when organized, in 1838. He was also president in 1855 and '56, and from 1860 to his death, after a brief illness, March 20, 1864.

For several years he represented the County Society at the State Society, of which he was one of the censors, and twice attended the American Medical Association as a delegate.

As a physician, Dr. Richardson was in the foremost rank of the profession in Susquehanna County. He despised quackery out of the profession or in it, and was a zealous supporter of medical organizations for its suppression. He was remarkable for his punctuality in all appointments, and whenever absent or tardy, it was well-known that there must be some good reason for it. Precise, dignified and courtly in manner, with a vigorous intellect and good common sense, he secured the respect and esteem alike of his professional brethren and the community to whose welfare he devoted the best years of his life.

P. H. Gardner

Dr. Josiah Blackman, son of Josiah and Clarissa Camp Blackman, was born at Newtown, Conn., May 24, 1794. He read medicine with Dr. Gideon Shepard, of the same place, and attended lectures at the Medical Department of Yale College in the winter of 1814 and '15, and received his diploma to practice medicine according to the practice of the time from the Connecticut Medical Society, January 16, 1816. A certificate of his qualifications to practice, which has the autograph of Prof. Benjamin Silliman, is now in the possession of his daughter. In April, 1816, he settled in Gilbertsville, Otsego County, N. Y. He married Miss Emily Donaldson, of Butternuts, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1820. They had three daughters, of whom only Emily C., the historian of Susquehanna County, survives. They adopted a son, who bears the name of Harlan Page Blackman, and resides at Wilkes-Barre. Mrs. Blackman was a most estimable lady, and died in 1864.

In September, 1829, Dr. Blackman removed to Binghamton, N. Y., and in July, 1836, he located at Montrose, Susquehanna County, Pa., where he remained in practice nearly forty years, until his death, July 25, 1875. Nov. 12, 1836, he united by letter with the Presbyterian Church at Montrose, of which, Feb. 25, 1840, he was elected a ruling elder, and held that position for more than thirty-five years.

He was elected coroner of Susquehanna County for three years in 1857. He was secretary of the meeting of physicians held Nov. 19, 1838, which dates the successful organization of the Susquehanna County Medical Society, and was actively interested in it for thirty-seven years. He held the offices of secretary and treasurer at different times and was president in 1857 and '58.

Dr. Blackman was plain and unassuming, modest and diffident, slow and cautious in coming to conclusions, but firm and decided in them when reached. An independent thinker, a sincere Christian, kind-hearted and generous, Dr. Blackman commanded the highest respect and confidence of the church of his choice, of the community in which he lived and of the medical profession, of which he was an honored member.

His extreme modesty in regard to the value of his services was such that, in a field where many would have secured ample means, his last years found him in moderate circumstances. He sought a good name rather than riches, and his reward is on high.

Peter Harris Gardner, M.D. — His fourth paternal grandfather, Stephen Gardner, of East Greenwich, R. I., is believed to be a great-grandson of Lion Gardiner, first proprietor of Gardiner Island. Perigreen, son of Stephen, born in East Greenwich about 1710, married Susanna Robinson, of South Kingston, had eight children, and removed about 1747 with his family to New London, Conn. John, third child of Perigreen, born 1737, married Elizabeth, daughter of Benjamin and Hannah Mumford, who were sureties for Gilbert Stewart, the famous portrait painter of Revolutionary days, in the baptism of his infant son Gilbert in 1756, and with his wife and two children, Richard and Thankful, removed to Exeter, in the Wyoming Valley, about 1771. He was elected a town officer there at the first election in 1774, and was a prominent and patriotic citizen. On June 30, 1778, while at work with seven others in their cornfields, three miles up the river from Fort Jenkins, the party was attacked by the Indians, four of their number killed and scalped, one escaped, and John Gardner and two others were taken alive. Miner, in his history of the early settlers of Exeter, makes special mention of this John Gardner. On the morning of July 4th following, his wife and children were permitted to see and take leave of him. A heavy load was then placed on his shoulders, a halter was put around his neck and he was led away by his captors. "I go to return no more," he said. Upon arriving at "Standing Stone," Bradford County, he fell, crushed to the ground by the weight of his load, and was handed over to the squaws, who drove slivers of pine into his flesh and tortured him to death by fire. Steuben Jenkins also wrote an account of Gardner's captivity as related by an eye-witness—Elisha Harding, then a boy. After the parting, the wife and mother, by the advice of her husband at the interview, with her five children, made her way on foot back to her friends in Connecticut, passing over the mountains and through the "Shades of Death" in Northern Pennsylvania. Ten years afterward, the eldest child, Richard, married Lydia Chapman, and, with his mother and the other children, returned and settled upon the lands formerly occupied by his father in the Wyoming Valley. He established Gardiner's Ferry (so spelled from the spelling of his own name) across the Susquehanna, which has been in uninterrupted operation for nearly a century. He distinctly remembered the terrible days of the massacre and the circumstances of his father's captivity. He died July 4, 1858, aged ninety-one, just eighty years from the last time he saw his father. John (1789–1867), eldest son of Richard, married, at twenty-two, Rosina, youngest daughter of Peter Harris, a Quaker and an early settler of the Wyoming. He was a stone-mason and farmer, served in the War of 1812, and in 1819 settled with his family at Tunkhannock, where he resided until his death. He was an honest man and a Christian. His wife died in 1863. She was a woman of Christian excellence and marked individuality.

This Peter Harris was also taken by the scouts prior to the massacre of Wyoming; but, being known by some of them to be a non-combatant, was released subsequent to the battle and immediately started with his wife, Mrs. Gardner and their children, to Goshen, N. Y. Leaving his family there with their friends, he accompanied Mrs. Gardner and children to her father's home in Connecticut. Returning after the Pennamite War, he found his land on the east side of the river, in Exeter, occupied by one Jones, to dispossess whom he instituted proceedings, and in 1803 obtained judgment before the board of commissioners appointed by the State of Pennsylvania to hear the claims of Yankee settlers, and afterward possession of the property, nothing having been established in court to invalidate his claim, though great and persistent efforts was made by Jones to annul his title by an attempt to prove disloyalty to his neighbors and the settlement. Peter Harris' wife was Polly Goldsmith, a Quaker lady whose family was prominent in the early history of New York colony, and her mother was a sister of Lieutenant-Governor Colden.

The children of John and Rosina Gardner were Mary A., born 1812, married Adna Wood, resided in Philadelphia, where she died, leaving six children; Lydia Malvina, 1814, unmarried, resides on the old homestead at Tunkhannock, was for many years a member of the faculty of Franklin Academy, where she taught botany, drawing and painting; Ruth, 1815, married Rev. Nathan Leighton, now of Tunkhannock, and has two surviving children, her son Theodore being an Alumnus of Yale College and principal of a private school at Yonkers, N. Y.; Phebe (1817–61) married George Leighton, and has seven surviving children, of whom one son, James G., is a leading merchant at Tunkhannock; Dr. Peter Harris, 1819; John Richard, 1821, a mill-wright, went West in 1853; Nancy, 1824, married Dr. F. B. Davison, of Fleetville, Pa., had four children, one of whom, Dr. Harry Gardner Davison, died in 1886; Caroline Calista, 1826, wife of Dr. J. C. Miles, of Dalton, Pa., has three children,—Dr. C. A. Miles, of Yonkers, N. Y., Edward Miles, a lawyer in Scranton, and Carrie Miles; Sarah Samantha, 1829, wife of Dr. G. B. Seamans, of Pleasant Valley, Pa., has two children; and Angeline, born in 1833, wife of Thomas Young, resides in Scranton.

Peter Harris Gardner, eldest son of John, was born at Tunkhannock, Wyoming County, Pa., May 16, 1819. In boyhood he learned to work on the farm and in the quarry, and besides instruction in the public school, he was taught by his elder sisters at home. He was a student at Franklin Academy for two years, and in the private school of his sisters at Tunkhannock during the winter of 1842–43. At the age of seventeen he met with an accident which proved the determining circumstance in causing him to choose the practice of medicine for his life-work, and afterward he gave himself to study. He read medicine with Dr. B. A. Bouton, of Tunkhannock, and attended lectures in 1844–45 at Pennsylvania Medical College. He began the practice of his profession at Merryall, Pa., in May, 1845, removed to Tunkhannock in the autumn of 1848, and in 1852 settled in Clifford, Susquehanna County, where he has since resided and successfully practiced medicine.

Dr. Gardner married, in 1844, Adaline S., daughter of Deacon Lee Richardson and Lois Carpenter, and sister of Dr. William L. Richardson, of Montrose. She was born March 21, 1822, and educated at Franklin Academy under the eminent educator, Rev. Lyman Richardson, her uncle. Deacon Richardson was a descendant of Stephen Richardson, who came from England about 1666 and settled at Woburn, Mass. The line follows through William, born 1678, and his son Stephen, born 1714, residents of Attleborough, in the same State. Caleb, born at Attleborough, 1739, son of Stephen, married Esther Tiffany, was a soldier in the French War of 1765 and was with General Bradstreet at the capture of Frontenac. He was a captain in the Continental Army under Washington and was left in command of the fort when the latter withdrew from New York. He was one of the "Nine Partners" noticed in the early history of Harford township, although he did not make Pennsylvania his home until 1808. His son Caleb, 1762, came to Harford in 1806, and his sons, Dea. Lee, Rev. Lyman, Preston and Dr. Braton Richardson, are prominent in the early history of the county.

Lois Carpenter was a granddaughter of another of the "Nine Partners." Dr. Gardner has five surviving children,—Morton Atlee, married Minnie M. Wells, resides in Clifford, was a merchant, was sixteen years assistant postmaster at Clifford, and about 1882 established the Clifford Agency for Fire and Life Insurance; Helen A., married George Simpson, of Clifford; A'Delphine, married Rev. James W. Putnam, pastor of the Temple Baptist Church, Philadelphia; Dr. Edward R., since his graduation in 1882, has been associated with his father in the practice of medicine; Clara M., is the wife of Professor Frank S. Miller, principal of the public schools of Everett, Bedford County, Pa.

Dr. Gardner has, through disheartening physical disability, largely retired from the active practice of his profession. In his chosen field of labor he has been a student, skillful in the diagnosis and treatment of disease and highly esteemed by his professional brethren. As a citizen, he has been identified with the various public enterprises of the community where he resides, and especially has he taken a deep interest in educational matters and advocated every measure tending to facilitate and improve the school system and educational work. In 1862 he was chiefly instrumental in the removal of the board of directors of the township and in the appointment of a new board pledged to construct suitable school buildings. He was prime mover in the purchase of the grounds of the Clifford Valley Cemetery Association and in instituting that organization. Dr. Gardner is a member of the Susquehanna County Medical Society and held the commission of postmaster of Clifford for over sixteen years.

Ezra Patrick, Jr., M.D., son of Ezra and Rhoda Casey Patrick, was born at New Lebanon, Columbia County, N. Y., November 22, 1815. His early education was obtained at Columbia Boarding School. At the age of twenty-one he read medicine with Dr. Harvey Barnes, of Canaan, Columbia County, one year and the remainder of his time with Prof. H. H. Childs, of the Berkshire Medical College, at Pittsfield, Mass., where he attended his first course of lectures. He attended his second course of lectures at the Vermont Medical College, at Woodstock, and his third at the Berkshire College, from which he graduated in 1839. He spent the winter of 1839–40 in one of the hospitals of New York City, and in 1840 located at Montrose, Pa., where he continued in practice for a quarter of a century. At first he was in partnership with Dr. E. S. Park for a few years, with Dr. G. Z. Dimock in 1855, and with Dr. E. L Gardner from 1859 to 1861.

In 1846 he married Miss Elizabeth Jane Niven, step-daughter of Col. F. Lusk, of Montrose. He had a son, a young man of great promise, who died in 1861, and a daughter Jenny, who is still living. Dr. Patrick removed to Great Bend village about 1866, and died there in March, 1874. His widow died in July, 1877.

He was colonel of militia of Susquehanna County. His grandfather, Robert Patrick, of the State of Connecticut, was a captain in the War of the Revolution. The doctor's youngest brother, Dr. David N. Patrick, of Schuyler's Lake, N. Y., is the sole survivor of his father's family.

Dr. Patrick was a member of the Susquehanna County Medical Society for several years prior to 1855, and was secretary in 1848. In his best days he was the leading surgeon of the county. His keen perception, ready and retentive memory were of great service to him in the practice of his profession. His intuitive judgment of human nature was rarely equaled or surpassed, while his superabundance of anecdote, wit and humor, combined with the brilliancy of his professional skill, were potent factors in the enviable popularity which he for many years enjoyed among the people of Susquehanna County.

Ezra S. Park, M.D., son of Dr. Asa and Lorana Gregory Park, was born at Mount Pleasant, Pa., August, 1811, and came with his parents to Montrose in the spring of 1812. At the age of fourteen he commenced attending the Montrose Academy winters, and worked on the farm during the summer months. He secured a good education. He read medicine with his father, Dr. Asa Park, and attended two courses of lectures at Berkshire Medical College, Mass., where he graduated in 1836. He at once commenced practice in Montrose, where, with the exception of a few months at La Porte, Pa., in 1851, he continued until 1858, when he removed to Iowa, and in 1862 to Red Wing, in the State of Minnesota, where he now resides. Failing health compelled him to abandon practice in 1876. He held the office of coroner of Goodhue County, Minn., for eighteen years.

In 1835 he married Miss Ann Warner, of Montrose. They had seven children, of which two died in infancy. Four are now living in Iowa and one in Illinois.

Dr. Park was a member of the Baptist Church. A kind, generous heart gave him a warm place in the affections of many. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1838, and for a score of years was deeply interested in its welfare. He was its president in 1847, secretary in 1857–58, and delegate to the State Medical Society in 1853. While adhering to the code of ethics, he was sensitive of unprofessional treatment, and on such occasions could express himself in a manner not to be misunderstood.

William Lee Richardson, M.D., the oldest son of Lee and Lois Carpenter Richardson, was born at Harford, Susquehanna Co., Pa., June 7, 1815. His father was son of Caleb Richardson, one of the nine partners of Harford. He owned a farm, but was a millwright by trade, and owned a saw-mill, grist-mill and carding machine. He was colonel of militia, but was generally known as, and called "Deacon Lee." William lived at home until eighteen years of age, when his father died. He had no love for farm labor, but had a fondness for mechanics, and working with his father, learned the trade of carpenter and joiner, at which he worked until October, 1839, when, on account of physical inability to work at the bench, he determined to prepare himself for the medical profession. He built the fine residence of his uncle, Dr. Braton Richardson, of Brooklyn Centre, and lived with him from the spring of 1838 until the fall of the succeeding year, when he went to Fairfield, N. Y., to attend lectures at the western district of the University of New York. This was the first course of lectures delivered by the late Frank H. Hamilton. In 1840 he attended lectures at the Geneva Medical College, N. Y., and soon afterward commenced practice in Brooklyn. In 1842 he went into partnership with his uncle Braton for two or three years, and afterwards practiced at Brooklyn independently. He attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1847–48, graduating there in the latter year.

W. L. Richardson

He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society prior to 1855—was secretary in 1859, president 1873–78, six years—represented the society in the State Society in 1859, '71, '75, '76, '84 and '85, and was a vice-president of the State Society in ——. He was a delegate from the State Society to the International Medical Congress, held at Philadelphia in 1876.

In January, 1849, he married Miss Mary Fish, whose parents were among the early settlers of Brooklyn township.

From Brooklyn Dr. Richardson removed to Nesquehoning, Carbon Co., Pa., in 1848, and was in the employ of different mining companies until October, 1858, when he removed to Montrose. At the end of a year he returned to Nesquehoning and remained there until 1867, when he again returned to Montrose, where he now resides.

His friend, Dr. R. Leonard, of Mauch Chunk, in the "History of Carbon County," says of him, "He has always been a faithful and conscientious physician, kind and attentive to his patients, gentlemanly and courteous to his brother practitioners and a strict observer of the code of ethics He takes an active interest in the local medical society where he resides."

A plain, unassuming man, these sentiments have been applicable to him in all his professional career, and there are few practitioners in the county who have found more steadfast friends among their patients than he. Childless, he has a fondness for children which is heartily reciprocated by his many little friends. He has an eye for good horses, and always drives a splendid team; and, though not a sportsman, has skill with rod and gun.

Among the people of Brooklyn he was familiarly called Doctor "Bill," to distinguish him from his uncle Braton.

Dr. Daniel Avery Lathrop, son of Hon. Benjamin and Clarissa Avery Lathrop was born in Bridgewater township, March 3, 1811. He attended school at Montrose, and commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Adam Davison and finished with Dr. Charles Fraser of the same place. He attended lectures at Jefferson College, Philadelphia in 1833–34, and practiced a short time with Dr. C. Leet, of Friendsville. A young man of good parts, with share of good sense and acquired ability, he located at Bellevue, Ohio, in 1835, where he remained until 1862, when he returned to Montrose. In 1836 he married Miss Nancy M., daughter of Dr. Forbes. They had five children—Fredrick, Chauncey, Mary, Clarissa and Benjamin. Fredrick died in 1846; Chauncey passed through the whole of the war of 1861, and was five years in the regular service after its close; he resides at Bellevue, Ohio; Mary died in her early girlhood. Clara married W. E. Green, Esq., and little Benny, the youngest, died almost instantly from being choked to death by a morsel entering the windpipe and producing spasmodic stricture of the glottis.

Dr. Lathrop remarried Miss Eudora, daughter of George and Flora Simmons Keeler, of Montrose, in 1861. He died in 1884.

The Experiment published at Norwalk, Ohio, in September following, says of him, "The doctor was one of the best known physicians and surgeons in this section of country for many years. His practice was extensive, and his attainments in his profession universally recognized. He was for some years surgeon for the "Cleveland and Toledo Railroad," and is said to have performed difficult surgical operations on the same day both at Toledo and Cleveland, one hundred miles apart. He was a man of great industry and energy, which he freely gave to the calls of his profession until past middle life, when he retired from its hardships and spent the remainder of his days in quiet, among his kindred and early friends in his native home—his health for several years having seriously broken down. He was seventy-three years of age. Death was due to loss of vital force.

He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1863 and enjoyed the fraternal regard of the profession.

Dr. Johnson C. Olmstead, son of Osborn and Violetta Raymond Olmstead, was born in New York City in 1819. In early life his parents moved to Bethany, then the county-seat of Wayne. He received his education at Bethany Academy. Among his school-mates were R. B. Little, Wm. Little, R. R. Little, David Wilmot, G. B. Eldred, Ira Vadakin and Jonathan Langdon, all since residents of Montrose.

In 1841 he entered the office of Dr. Edwin Graves of Bethany. He attended lectures at Castleton Medical College, Vermont in 1844–45, and in the following year commenced practice with his preceptor at Honesdale. In 1846 he married Dency C. Woodward, sister of Hon. W. J. Woodward, who died in 1864. He remarried to Emelyn Brownel of Dundaff, in 1868. In the latter part of 1846 he settled at Clifford, and in 1849 removed to Dundaff, Pa., where he remained in continuous practice except the year 1856, which he spent in taking lectures at University of New York and Bellevue Hospital Medical College (his brother, Dr. J. H. Olmstead, occupying his place in his absence), until his death after a short illness, in 1887, leaving his widow and one son. Drs. James L. Reed, Wm. Alexander, J. H. Olmstead and D. L. Bailey were his partners at different times.

Dr. John Williams Denison, son of Ben. Adam and Eunice Williams Denison, was born at Montrose, 1818; read medicine with his father and uncle, Mason Denison; also with Drs. Park and Patrick, of Montrose. He attended lectures at the Berkshire Medical College, Mass., in 1840, and the following year located at Mehoopany, Wyoming County Pa., where (with the exception of from 1856 to 1866 at Terrytown, Bradford County, Pa., and from 1866 to 1877 at Wilkes-Barre Pa.,) he has since resided, and is at present engaged in the drug business. He was elected to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania in 1852. He married Miss Caroline Margaret, daughter of Major John Fassett of Mehoopany, in 1843. She died in 1854. He remarried Clarissa, daughter of Timothy Whitcomb, 1856.

Calvin Colton Halsey, M.D., son of Rev. Herman and Sophia Woolworth Halsey, both natives of Bridge-Hampton, L. I., was born at Bergen, Genesee County, N. Y., March 31, 1823. His paternal ancestry is traced back three hundred and sixty-seven years. The "History of Hertfordshire, England," says the family of Halsey has been settled in Great Gaddesden for many generations. The earliest mention of the family is contained in a deed bearing date 10th of July, 1458 (now in possession of Thomas Frederick Halsey, Esq., M.P., of Gadsden Place). In 1559 there were four families of the name resident at Great Gaddesden, viz.: Halsey of the Parsonage, Halsey of the Wood, Halsey of Northend and Halsey of the Lane. March 20, 1520, the Rectory of Great Gaddesden was leased to John Halsey and William Halsey, his son. On the dissolution of religious houses this rectory came to the Crown, and was granted by Henry VIII., on 12th of March, 1545, to William Halsey. The estate known as the Golden Parsonage has since continued in the family of Halsey, and is now vested in Thomas Frederick Halsey, M.P. Thomas Halsey, great-grandson of William Halsey, was baptized in 1592; was in Lynn, Mass., in 1637, whence he removed to the eastern part of Long Island. The subject of this sketch is in the seventh generation from this Thomas Halsey.

His paternal grandfather, Dr. Stephen Halsey, Jr., was born at Southold, L. I., in 1757, served in the army of the Revolution, received a pension and died at Bridge-Hampton, N. Y., in 1837. His paternal grandmother was Hamutal, daughter of Philip and Cleopatra Howell, of Bridge-Hampton.

His father, Rev. Herman Halsey, graduated at Williams College, Mass., in 1811, and now, nearly ninety-four years of age, enjoys good health.

His maternal grandfather, Rev. Aaron Woolworth, D.D., was born at Long Meadow, Mass., October 25, 1763. He was grandson of Richard Woolworth, of Suffield, Mass., who was born in the latter part of 1600. Dr. Woolworth was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Bridge-Hampton, L. I., from August 30, 1787, to his death, in 1821. His maternal grandmother was Mary, daughter of Rev. Samuell Buell, D.D., pastor at East Hampton, L. I., from 1746 to 1798, a period of fifty-two years.

Dr. Halsey's advantages for education in early life were very limited, being mostly under the supervision of his father, a pioneer preacher among the Presbyterian Churches in Western New York.

Calvin C. Hazen

He entered Williams College, Mass., in 1840, graduated in 1844, and subsequently received the degree of A.M. from his Alma Mater. To help himself through college, he taught school in Pownal, Vt., as did also Garfield and Arthur.

In the winter of 1844–45 he taught school in Lewiston, N. Y.; came to Montrose, Pa., in April, 1845, and was principal of Susquehanna Academy until April, 1847; read medicine with Drs. E. Patrick and G. Z. Dimock, of Montrose, and attended first course of lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1847–48. In the fall of 1848 he became clerk of the Bank of Susquehanna County, and so continued until January, 1850, when the bank went into the hands of assignees; attended lectures at Castleton Medical College, Vermont, and received the degree of M.D. in 1850; practiced in Cambria, Niagara County, N. Y., one year; returned to Montrose and practiced one year; then, early in 1853, removed to Nicholson, Wyoming County, Pa., and remained until late in the fall of 1859, when he returned to Montrose, where he has remained until the present time. During an active practice of seven years at Nicholson he found time and inclination for pioneer work in Sabbath-school and religious services.

In 1859 he joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society, of which he was secretary in 1861–63, 1873–78 and 1880–87, and president 1868–71. He attended the meetings of the State Medical Society in 1863, '66, '85 and '86, and twice represented that body as a delegate to the Medical Society of the State of New York. He was elected vice-president of the State Society in 1885. He was examining surgeon for Susquehanna County for the draft of 1862, and went to Harrisburg with the drafted men. He was appointed pension examining surgeon in 1864, and after holding the position twenty-one years he was notified that his services were no longer required. Since 1865 with the exception of two years, he has held the office of jail physician for Susquehanna County. He was elected coroner for three years in 1860, and again in 1869, and re-elected three successive terms, making fifteen years of service.

In 1872 he was elected a ruling elder of the Presbyterian Church of Montrose, and in the following year clerk of the session, which position he still holds.

He became a Fellow of the American Academy of Medicine in 1880. His political faith has been Abolition, Free-Soil and Republican, his first Presidential vote being for J. G. Birney and his last for J. G. Blaine. During the war of 1861 he was active in the work of the Sanitary Commission. In December, 1862, he visited the Convalescent Camp, at Alexandria, Va., in behalf of soldiers of Susquehanna County, and in June of the following year went to Acquia Creek, Va., to get the body of a dead soldier for his parents. Soon after this General Lee invaded Pennsylvania, and the Governor called earnestly for volunteers. W. H. Jessup's company had just gone, and there seemed to be no more men ready to go. The citizens held meetings. The doctor was the first to volunteer and E. L. Weeks the next. They at once commenced recruiting, and in two days had the skeleton of a company, of which the doctor was elected captain, and Frederick Warner orderly. Proceeding the next day to Harrisburg with the volunteers, a company organization was soon effected, a squad of men from Wyoming County joining. This was Company D, Thirty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Militia. The doctor's commission was dated June 30th, to serve ninety days, unless sooner discharged. The heavy cannonading at Gettysburg was distinctly heard at Camp Curtin, but the issue of the battle was an earnest to the men that they were not likely to be pushed to the front. The regiment went as far as Greencastle, adjoining the Maryland line, and was mustered out by reason of general orders at Camp Curtin August 8th, after a service of thirty-five days. On the return of the company to Montrose the citizens gave the men a hearty welcome and an ovation.

In the fall of 1863 the doctor had a severe illness, from the effects of which he has never rallied, and for the past decade of years, by reason of impaired health, has been unable to engage in active service as a physician.

September 27, 1866, he married Miss Mary Etheridge, daughter of Jeremiah and Clarissa H. Etheridge, early settlers of Montrose, and has since led a quiet, unobtrusive life.

GEORGE MILTON GAMBLE, M. D., son of George and Anna Keeney Gamble, was born in Bradford County, 1822. His father was a native of Ireland, of Scotch parentage, while his mother was born in Wyoming County, Pa., of parents who came from Connecticut. Dr. Gamble's education was obtained at Harford University. He read medicine with Dr. Geo. F. Horton, of Terrytown, in his native county; attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, from which he graduated in 1848. He practiced medicine for ten years at Grant, Pa. From 1861, to 1878 he practiced at Harford, this county, and at Nicholson, Pa. He served six months as assistant surgeon in the United States army during the war of 1861. He was physician and surgeon of the Soldiers' Orphan School at Harford for two years. In September, 1878, he removed to Larned, Kansas, where he still resides. He married Miss Catharine C. Guile, of Harford, 1848. Of six children, only three lived to adult age. Miss Gamble died at Larned, 1881. In 1883 he re-married to Mrs. Mary S. Blanden, of Burlingame, Kansas. Owing to impaired health, the doctor combined dentistry with his practice, and at present pursues that vocation almost exclusively. Dr. Gamble became a member of the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1863.

GORDON ZEBINA DIMOCK, M. D., youngest son of Davis and Betsey Jenkins Dimock, was born in Montrose February 26, 1821. He attended school at Montrose and Mannington, Pa.; read medicine with Drs. E. Patrick and E. S. Park, of Montrose; attended lectures at Berkshire Medical College, Pittsfield, Mass., in 1840–41; at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1842–44, graduating in 1844. He was in partnership with Dr. Park, of Montrose, two years. In 1846 he married Elizabeth V. Post (daughter of Major Isaac Post), who died in 1854. He went into partnership with Dr. E. Patrick one year in 1855. He removed to Dundee, N. Y. in 1856 for two years; came back to Montrose in 1858 and resumed practice, continuing until 1861, when he enlisted as captain of Company D, Fiftieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was discharged September 29, 1864, by reason of expiration of term of service. While in the service in 1863, he was brigade quartermaster of the First Division of the Ninth Army Corps. He was regarded as one of the finest military officers from Susquehanna County, and was very popular with his men. He resumed his practice and continued in Montrose until 1869, when he again went to Dundee, N. Y., where he remained until 1876. Thence he removed to Williamsport, Pa., and in 1880 returned to Montrose, where he still resides. Physical infirmities and impaired vision, have for the past few years prevented his engaging in active practice. He receives a pension for disabilities incurred in the service. February 4, 1866, he married Mrs. Charlotte E. True, who died February 23, 1885. He has a son named Davis and a daughter named Alice.

Dr. Dimock joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1848, and represented it as a delegate to the first meeting of the State Society in the following year, and was one of the first secretaries of that body at the time of its organization. He was secretary of the County Society in 1855–6 and 1860. In 1859 he delivered the annual address, which was published in the leading paper of the county, and furnishes some data for this chapter. While at Williamsport he became a member of the Lycoming County Medical Society.

CHARLES CHANDLER EDWARDS, M. D., son of Charles and Mary M. Chandler Edwards, was born in Harford, Pa., October 1, 1825. His father was born in Rhode Island in 1797, and his mother in Connecticut in 1802. He obtained his early education in the local schools; read medicine with Dr. C. Dickerman, of Harford, commencing in the spring of 1845; attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, 1848–9; commenced practice in company with Dr. C. Dickerman in the spring of 1849 at Harford; attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College in 1874–5, and received the degree of M. D. at the close of the session. He practiced medicine and surgery in Harford, from 1849, to 1873, when he removed to Binghamton, N. Y., where he now resides, and is in active practice. In March, 1850 he married Sarah M. Stanton, of Wayne County, Pa. He has two daughters, Celia J. and Agnes E., and one son, Frank M. Dr. Edwards joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society prior to 1855, and attended, as a delegate, the meetings of the State Society in 1866 and 1867. He served as president of the County Society, and since his removal to Binghamton, he has been an active member of the Broome County Medical Society, N. Y., and is Medical Director of the Security Mutual Life Association at Binghamton, N. Y. Dr. Edwards' reputation as a surgeon was that of one of the best in Susquehanna County. He was highly popular with his numerous patrons for his professional skill and suavity of manner, and without envy, his professional brethren shared in these sentiments. It has been his fortune to reap more substantial reward for his labor than falls to the lot of the average practitioner in this vicinity.

Samuel Birdsall, M. D., son of William H., and Harriet Gilbert Birdsall, was born in the town of Butternuts, near Gilbertsville, Otsego County, N. Y., September 19, 1842. His father was a regularly ordained Baptist clergyman, and served as pastor of several churches, as well as acting as "supply" for others. His parentage on both sides is of English descent, and both the Birdsall and the Gilbert families were represented in the Revolutionary army. Dr. Birdsall acquired his early education at the public schools and Gilbertsville Academy, and had some experience as a teacher, but having early decided to enter the medical profession, he became a pupil of Dr. C. D. Spencer, of Gilbertsville, and his elder brother, Dr. Gilbert Birdsall, of North Brookfield, N. Y., and subsequently of Prof. Stephen Smith, of New York City. He attended his first course of lectures at the University of Buffalo, in 1862–'63, and having fulfilled the requirements for an appointment as a Medical Cadet of the United States Army, he reported at Washington, D. C., for examination. In the absence of Dr. W. A. Hammond, Surgeon-General, this examination was under the supervision of Dr. E. S. Dunster, since Professor in the University of Michigan, and resulted in his receiving a letter of appointment dated, September 4th, 1863, signed, E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War. The number of military cadets was limited to seventy; they were surgeon's assistants with the same rank and pay as the West Point military cadets. They belonged to the staff of the regular army, and their appointment was for one year.

After a brief visit to his brother, Andrew J. Birdsall, Ordnance-Sergeant at Fort Ward, opposite Georgetown, D. C., in pursuance of orders, he reported to John T. Carpenter, Medical Director of the Department of the Ohio, at Cincinnati, and was assigned to duty at the Licking Branch Hospital, near Covington, Ky. In a short time thereafter he was transferred to the large general hospital of over two thousand beds at Madison, Indiana, in charge of Dr. G. Grant, of New Jersey. Dr. S. S. Schultz, now Superintendent of the Insane Asylum, at Danville, Pa., was there on duty as assistant surgeon at this hospital, and his marked courtesy and kindness are recalled by Dr. Birdsall with great pleasure.

The year of his appointment having expired in September, 1864, he was mustered out with Surgeon Grant's endorsement, "Studious in his habits, character and habits excellent." He soon afterward entered Bellevue Hospital Medical College, and joined the private class of Prof. Stephen Smith, to whose influeuce and thoroughness he attributes much of his success in after years. In February, 1865, he sustained a rigid examination for assistant surgeon of United States volunteers, with successful result. The corps of assistant surgeons was limited to one hundred and twenty, and they were commissioned by the President. They belonged to the general staff of the army, and were under the immediate supervision of the surgeon-general. Dr. Birdsall was at once assigned to duty at Fairfax Seminary Hospital, near Alexandria, Va. The return of the army from Richmond filled the hospital to overflowing. After several months the hospital was closed, and Dr. Birdsall was transferred to the garrison of Washington, D. C., where having been breveted major, he was mustered out November 27, 1865.

After spending a short time at home, he located at Susquehanna, Pa., in February, 1866, where he has continued in the practice of his profession nearly all the time since. He has held the office of United States examining surgeon for pensions for many years, and when the Board of Examining Surgeons for Susquehanna County was organized, in October, 1885, he was retained as a member. He is also examiner for several life insurance companies. In 1883, he was elected coroner of Susquehanna County, on the Republican ticket. When the surgical department of the Erie Railroad Company was organized in 1874, he was appointed surgeon at Susquehanna.

Dr. Birdsall married Miss Addie E. Sweet, of Susquehanna, in 1868. She died in 1875, leaving one son, Willie S., now fifteen years of age. In 1881, he was re-married to Miss Carrie F. Haven, of Susquehanna. They have two sons,—Charles F. and Eddie S.

Dr. Birdsall has ever been a Republican. He practices total abstinence and advocates prohibition. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and a Sabbath-school teacher.

He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1867, and became a permanent member of the State Medical Society in 1869, at which time he was a delegate from the County Society, as also in 1871 and 1884. He was president of the County Society in 1881, and has served several years as one of the censors of the Thirteenth District of the State Society.

The foregoing sketch shows that Dr. Birdsall has thoroughly equipped himself for his professional duties, and his successful career as a physician and surgeon, is evidence that he engages con amore, and not from sordid motives in his chosen vocation. In the profession he has been gentlemanly and courteous; a strict observer of the code of ethics of the American Medical Association, and always intolerant of quackery in any form. The Medical Society has found in him one of the best of workers, and a faithful ally in every effort in the line of improvement.

He has always been interested in the moral as well as temporal welfare of the place of his home, never hesitating to come to the front in educational, Sabbath-school or temperance movements. Among the best citizens of the county, in the full vigor of life, he gives promise of filling a wide sphere of usefulness, while his successful practice well attests the high regard in which he is already held by those who know him best.

JOHN WESLEY COBB, M.D., son of Zipron and Sarah M. Crane Cobb, was born at Middletown, N. Y., in 1838. In 1848 his father removed to Montrose for a short time, and thence to a farm in New Milford, where John attended district school in the winter, his teacher, for one term, being Hon. J. B. McCollum. He also afterward attended school at New Milford village and at Montrose. In 1856 he began to read medicine with Dr. E. Patrick, of Montrose; attended lectures at Albany Medical College, and graduated there in 1859 and immediately commenced practice at Montrose. In July, 1862, responding to the call of the United States Government, he went to Philadelphia, and having passed a satisfactory examination, he was in August following appointed to examine volunteers at Camp Curtin, Harrisburg, and afterward was mustered into the One Hundred and Eighty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers as first assistant surgeon, Honorable M. S. Quay being its colonel. He did duty at the second battle of Bull Run and at Antietam, was in charge of general hospital at Stoneman's Station, near Falmouth, Va., at the time of the Battle of Fredericksburg, and remained in charge until ordered to Washington, D. C., with all the sick and wounded, when four hundred patients were transported by cars to Acquia Creek, Va., and thence by steamboat to the wharf and removed to the General Hospital in Washington, D. C. On his return to the camp he was ordered to take charge of the third division of the Fifth Army Corps Artillery until the Battle of Chancellorsville, when he was put in charge of the Medical Department of the Fifth Army Corps Artillery. In June, 1863, he was mustered out with the regiment and resumed practice in Montrose, remaining there until the winter of 1873, when he located in Scranton, Pa., and thence removed to Binghamton, N. Y., where he now resides in the spring of 1887. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1859, and was a delegate to the State Society in 1865 and 1866.

ALBRIGHT DUNHAM, M.D., youngest of twelve children of Elijah R. and Temperance Dunham, was born in Franklin, N. Y., in 1825, to which place his parents removed from Hartford County, Conn., in the early years of their married life. At the age of twenty years he started out from home to make his own way through life. In 1836 he went to Illinois, where he earned enough, as a carpenter, to enable him to spend two years in a school in Chicago, where he studied Latin, German and mathematics. He read medicine two years with Dr. Danforth, of Oswego, Ills., and attended lectures at the Iowa State University. He returned eastward, and continued his studies with Dr. Henry Clark, of Livingston County, N. Y., and attended a course of lectures at Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and afterward attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, where he graduated in 1855. In July of the same year he located in Rush, this county. At the end of two years he attended another course of lectures in Philadelphia.

His first wife was Helen E., daughter of Hiram Dewers, Esq., of Rush, who died four years after marriage. After spending two years at Meshoppen in the drug business, he returned to Rush. In 1868 he remarried Mrs. Olive E. Dunham, sister of Dr. G. W. Durga, and they have one child, a son. In 1878 he removed to West Eaton, Madison County, N. Y., his present residence, where he has combined the practice of medicine with the drug business.

DAVID LELAND BAILEY, M.D., eldest child of Rev. Edward L. and Mary T. Bailey, was born in Liberty township, 1851. His father was pastor of Berean Baptist Church, Carbondale, fourteen years, and pastor of the First Baptist Church at Harrisburg. He was chaplain of the State Senate three years. From 1867 to 1872 Dr. Bailey was in the drug business as prescription clerk, and at the end of that time commenced the study of medicine with Dr. D. B. Hand, of Carbondale. He attended lectures at the University of New York, where he graduated in 1875. After a brief practice at Uniondale, Pa., he entered into partnership with Dr. J. C. Olmstead, of Dundaff, for four years, at the end of which time he removed to Carbondale, where he now resides. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1877, and was vice-president of the Lackawanna County Medical Society in 1884.

SAMUEL WELLINGTON DAYTON, M.D., son of Jehiel and Lydia Harriet Dayton, was born at Athens, Pa., in 1840, and when a few weeks old his parents removed to Great Bend, which became his home for the remainder of his life. He attended school at Elmira, N. Y., and a private school at Berkshire, N. Y. He read medicine with Dr. James Brooks, of Great Bend, attended lectures at Long Island Medical College and at Jefferson Medical College, whence he graduated in 1863. He practiced medicine at Great Bend (now Hallstead), from 1865 until his death in 1883. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1870, and represented that body in the meetings of the State Society in 1872–'74–'75. As a practitioner he aimed to keep abreast of the progress of medical science and had the ability to take high rank in his profession. He was a gentleman of culture and refinement, with pleasing manner and a generous disposition, making many friends to sincerely mourn his untimely fate.

ALBERT TIBBALS BRUNDAGE, M.D., was born in Newark, N. J., in 1820, and was the son of Parmenas and Lillis Brundage. He was fitted for college by his uncle, Rev. Abner Brundage and was two years at Yale College. He read medicine with Dr. Williams and with Dr. Wheeler, of Dundaff. He was graduated in 1845 at Castleton Medical College, where he attended lectures. He practiced medicine at White Haven, Waverly and Fleetville, Pa., until 1855, was a public lecturer on anatomy and surgery for twenty years, and resided at Factoryville. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1868, and was its president in 1883. Dr. Brundage settled at Harford in the spring of 1887.

DR. ISRAEL B. LATHROP is the son of James Lathrop, and was the youngest of five children. He was born in Dimock July 21, 1821, in the log-house first erected by his grandfather, Asa Lathrop, when he came to this county in 1800. His early boyhood was uneventful, and similar to that of other farmers' boys of sixty years ago. He attended the district schools, and afterwards had the advantages of some of the best select schools of that day. Naturally of a studious disposition, he early decided, with the consent of his parents, to undertake a professional career, and his tastes inclining to the practice of medicine, he at once commenced to prepare himself to become a disciple of Esculapius. At the age of nineteen he entered the office of that well-known and eminent physician and surgeon, Dr. Ezra Patrick, of Montrose, and was his first student. Here he diligently applied himself to the study of medicine and surgery, and during the four years of student-life with Dr. Patrick, he gained not only a theoretical knowledge of medicine, but what was of equal or greater value, a practical knowledge of the same. While a student in Dr. Patrick's office he attended several courses of lectures at the Albany New York Medical College. Looking about him for a place to locate, he decided upon Springville, and in May, 1844, a modest shingle bearing the name "Dr. I. B. Lathrop" was nailed up, and he at once entered upon the practice of his profession. Here he has remained in active practice for nearly half a century, and his acknowledged ability, and the reputation he has established as a skillful and successful physician has extended his practice to many parts of this and adjoining counties. Of commanding stature, robust health and genial ways, his very presence often proves a tonic to the invalid and makes him or her forget that his visit is otherwise than a social one. In 1845 he married Mary E., daughter of Andrew and Susan Bolles, who was born in Dimock November 8, 1824, to which place her parents came from Connecticut. In 1853 he purchased the place where he now resides, which he has changed and remodeled into his present pleasant home. He was commissioned postmaster in 1853, and held the office until 1861. In 1860 he was appointed deputy marshal for taking the census of that year, but his professional engagements claiming his whole time, he declined the office. During the war he was active and instrumental in filling the quota of Springville, was treasurer of the bounty fund raised for that purpose, and often visited the board of "Enrollment" in Scranton, which he sometimes assisted in a professional way. During the war he was the only physician at Springville (Dr. Brush having entered the service), and putting a "substitute" in his place, he remained at home attending to the duties of his profession. Dr. Lathrop has also been engaged in business enterprises outside of his profession. From 1859 to 1862 he was in partnership with Minot Riley, in the mercantile business, under the firm-name of "Riley & Lathrop." In 1864 he entered into partnership with Henry N. Sherman, in the mercantile business, at Lynn, continuing the business thus until 1868, when it was removed to Tunkhannock, and from there to Wilkes-Barre in 1875, where he still continues the partnership business under the firm-name of "Sherman & Lathrop." Dr. Lathrop has not allowed his business enterprise to interfere with his professional duties. He has earned and enjoys an extended and lucrative practice, and his genial social qualities have made him hosts of friends outside of his profession and his patients. Their children are Henry Andrew (1850–1853); Edgar James (1852), educated principally in select schools, is now residing at Sayre, Pa., where he is a superintendent in the shops of the Lehigh Valley Railroad; William Arthur (1854) was educated at select schools, and after finishing a preparatory course, entered Lehigh University, at Bethlehem, Pa., where he graduated with honors in the class of '75. During his college course, besides the other scientific branches taught, he made civil and mine engineering, analytical chemistry and metallurgy a specialty, and shortly after he graduated he entered the employ of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, and is now superintendent of the companies' mines and coke manufactories at Snow Shoe, Centre County, Pa., where he has his home—being married; Homer Beardsley (1856) educated at the home district and select schools, and also at the Montrose Academy, where he graduated in 1874. He commenced a post graduate course, but in 1875 he decided to adopt the profession of medicine, and returning to Springville, he immediately commenced its study with his father, and the following year he entered the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, and graduated therefrom in 1878. Returning to Springville he immediately entered upon the practice of his profession in partnership with his father, and, with the exception of two years, when his health failed, has continued in successful practice. In January, 1886, he was appointed postmaster at Springville.

I. B. Lattrop

The grandparents of Dr. I. B. Lathrop were Asa and Alice (Fox) Lathrop, who were natives of New London, Conn. Asa Lathrop came to this county in 1800, and located, under the Connecticut title, six or eight hundred acres of land, near Lathrop's (now Elk) lake in what was then Bridgewater township. He erected a log-house, cleared three or four acres, and returned to Connecticut for his family. The father of Dr. Lathrop was James, eldest son of Asa and Alice Lathrop, and was born in Bozrah, New London County, Conn., in 1785. He was sixteen years old when his parents came to this county. He had received in Connecticut superior educational advantages, and was a fine mathematician and a good surveyor. Upon his attaining his majority his father turned over the home farm of two hundred acres to him. He shortly afterwards married Lydia Litheresa, daughter of Israel and Lydia Birchard, who was born in Massachusetts, but removed with her parents to this county, in 1803, and settled in what is now Jessup. James Lathrop took his bride to the log-house erected by his father in 1800, where they commenced housekeeping. A few years thereafter, at the solicitation of his father, he removed to the lake, built a home, and although he continued to carry on the home farm, never again resided on it. The old log-house remained a landmark for many years, and Dr. Lathrop remembers, when a boy, of stubbing his toes on the pegs that held the floor to the sleepers. Upon the death of his father the grist-mill came into his possession, and in 1837 he re-built and enlarged it, and afterwards erected near it a saw-mill. He was an enterprising, energetic business man, and was actively engaged in farming and milling until his death, in 1854; his widow survived him about twelve years. He was a man with liberal views, both in politics and religion. He was appointed justice of the peace by Governor Wolfe, and was afterwards elected by the people for several terms. Their children were William Fox (1811–1873); Austin Birchard (1813–1874); Charles Jacob, 1815, was elected to the Legislature of Pennsylvania in 1854; is a farmer residing in Brooklyn; Lydia Alice, 1817, now residing in Dimock; and Israel Birchard, July 21, 1821.

Henry Augustus Tingley, M.D., son of Thomas and Marcy Tingley, was born at Attleborough, Mass., in 1820. His parents moved to Harford in 1823, where his father died at the age of seventy-eight, and his mother at the age of ninety-nine years. Dr. Tingley's education was obtained at district schools and after the age of sixteen at Franklin Academy, Harford. In 1844 he commenced reading medicine with Dr. C. Dickerman, and taught schools winters until November, 1847, when he attended lectures at Albany Medical College. In 1848 he attended lectures at the University of Buffalo, whence he graduated in June of the same year. In October, 1848, he commenced practice at Equinunk, Pa., and was married to L. S. Ellsworth, of Harford. In July, 1852, he removed to Susquehanna, Pa., where he has been a successful practitioner for more than thirty-four years. In 1864 he entered the army as assistant surgeon, first at Mansion House Hospital, Va., and next at King Street Hospital, Alexandria, from which he was transferred to Battery H, First Pennsylvania Light Artillery, then in camp at Great Falls, Md; was discharged May 28, 1865, and immediately returned to Susquehanna. Of Dr. Tingley's two surviving children Elmer Ellsworth is telegraph operator and railroad dispatcher at Carbondale, Pa. Florence L. is music teacher and resides with her parents. Dr. Tingley joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1862.

HENRY PENNEPACKER, M. D., was born at Yellow Springs, Chester County, Pa., 1839. He entered Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, Pa., but left before graduating to commence the study of medicine and teach school. He continued teaching and the prosecution of his medical studies under the supervision of Dr. J. L. Forwood. He attended lectures at the University of Pennsylvania, where he graduated in 1866. March 22d, of the same year, he married Jennie Marshall of Chester City, and immediately went to Harford, Susquehanna County, Pa., to look after his interest in the Soldiers' Orphan School, which he and Prof. C. W. Deans originated in October of the previous year.

In 1868, he disposed of his interest in the school, and returned to Chester City. He held a position under the Census Bureau at Washington, D. C., for eighteen months, when he resigned and returned to Hartford, Pa., where he remained until 1884, when he removed to Scranton, his present residence, where he enjoys a large and successful practice. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1875, and was president in 1880. He represented that body in the State Society in 1876, and also once in the American Medical Association.

FREDERICK D. LAMB, M. D., the eldest child of Darius N. Lamb (born 1826), and his wife Lydia M. Graves (born 1828), who reside in Broome County, N. Y., farmers, was born November 21, 1849. Their children were Frederick De Forest (Dr. Lamb); Herbert A., a merchant; Mary, the wife of Dr. A. E. Blair; Alice, married Theodore Parker, a farmer; Ira Edward and Irwin D., business men, all residing in Broome County. Darius N., was the son of Ira Lamb and Alice Gates his wife, both natives of Broome County, where Isaac Lamb, the great-grandfather of Dr. Lamb, settled and founded Lamb's Corners, having removed from Dutchess County, N. Y., soon after the revolutionary war. Ira Lamb and his second wife died within a few hours of each other, and were buried together.

The early education of Dr. Lamb was obtained in the public and private schools of Broome County, and in attendance at the Whitney's Point Academy. He commenced the study of medicine with Dr. S. P. Allen, of Castle Creek, N. Y., took two courses of lectures at the University of Buffalo, at which institution he was graduated in class of '75. Immediately afterwards he located at Great Bend Village for the practice of medicine, and has there continued to date. In 1881 he, in company with George E. Hawley of Chenango County, N. Y., started the first drug store in the borough. After eighteen months partnership, Dr. Lamb bought out Mr. Hawley and still carries on that business in connection with his practice. He is a member of the Susquehanna County Medical Society, and was for two years its vice-president; he is also a member of the Broome County Medical Society. In 1885 he was the delegate from this county to the State Medical Society of Pennsylvania, to which body he also belongs. Dr. Lamb holds membership in Great Bend Lodge, No. 338, F. and A. M., and he was the first Sachem of Ottawa Tribe, I. O. R. M. He is an able physician, and has performed satisfactorily a number of difficult surgical operations; hence, he enjoys the confidence and esteem of the community. On May 27, 1879, he married Margaret N., the daughter of D. L. (born 1820) and Sarah (Williams) (born 1828) Richards, both of whom were born in Wales, and came to this country in early childhood, and lived near Pottsville, Pa., where their parents became engaged in mining. Mr. Richards forsook mining and went into farming many years ago, and now resides in Clifford Township, Susquehanna County. His children are David W.; Robert W. (now a publisher in Melbourne, Australia); Margaret N.; William G.; Sarah E.; Samuel (with his brother in Australia); and John L. Of this family Margaret N., Sarah E. and Mary E. have long been interested in educational work, and Mrs. Dr. Lamb had the honor of being the first lady valedictorian at the Bloomsburg State Normal School, whence she was graduated in 1877. Her grandparents were David M. and

F. S. Lamb

Margaret (Lewis) Richards, both natives of Wales but residents of this State since 1831, and now lying in the Welsh cemetery, Clifford Township, where they were interred upon the same day. The children of Dr. and Mrs. F. D. Lamb are Frederick, Frank R., Robert R. and Mary A.

ALFRED O. STIMPSON, M.D., C.M., son of Ornan Stimpson, a native of Windham, N. Y., was born in the village of St. Pie, Province of Canada, in 1842. His father went to Canada at the age of nineteen, and, after becoming possessed of considerable real estate, married Jane Fisk, of Abbotsford, Canada East. Dr. Stimpson, the eldest child, in 1860 pursued a classical and scientific course of study at Fort Edward Institute, N. Y. This institute becoming disorganized by the war of 1861, he went to Buffalo, N. Y., and followed the occupation of clerk and book-keeper until the spring of 1863, when he returned to his home in Canada. He pursued a classical and scientific course of study at St. Francis College, in Richmond, Quebec, whence in the spring of 1864 he graduated as Master of Arts and Bachelor of Science (A.M., B.S.) In the fall of the same year he entered McGill University Medical College, at Montreal, Quebec, as a student, and graduated May, 1869, with the title of M.D., C.M. (Doctor of Medicine and Master of Surgery). On account of ill health he did not engage in practice until 1870, when he located at Long Eddy, Sullivan County, N. Y., where he remained until April, 1876, when he came to Thomson, this county, his present residence. In 1878 he married Kate Kishbaugh of Herrick, Pa. They have a son, Ellis Alfred.

Dr. Stimpson joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1876. Previous to coming to Pennsylvania, he was a member of the Sullivan County Medical Society of N. Y., and of the Tri-States Medical Association. His professional life has been uneventful, but he has endeavored to be affable, pains-taking and scientific in the treatment of his patients.

DR. WILLIAM NELSON GREEN, son of Robert and Melissa Green, was born at Factoryville, Pa., in 1826. He was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1849, when he married Euphemia A. Carmon. He then engaged in mercantile pursuits for ten years. His wife died in 1859, leaving one child. In 1860 he married Miss Sarah J. Millard. He read medicine with Dr. A. C. Blakeslee, of Nicholson, Pa., and attended his first course of lectures in New York City. He commenced practice in Wyoming County, Pa., in 1865, and not long afterward removed to Hopbottom, where he resided and practiced almost continuously until his death, 1886. He attended a second course of lectures at the University of Buffalo in 1876–77, graduating there in the latter year. He united with the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1849. He became a member of the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1868.

DR. E. P. HINES.—James Hines was born in the north of Ireland and came to this country in early manhood. He located in Bradford County, Pa., and carried on the business of a stone-mason until a short time before his death. He married a Miss Hancock, of that county, who bore him Jesse, John and Marquis. The latter became farmers there. The former, Jesse Hines (1805–1882), moved to Susquehanna County when a young man, and there married Sarah Morley, who was born in 1807 in Auburn township, and now lives at Laceyville, Wyoming County. Their children were: Thomas M. enlisted in the One Hundred and Thirty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and died at Harrisburg from sickness contracted while in the field. Charles G., a farmer in Wyoming County. Sarah Elizabeth resides at Laceyville. Eben P. (Dr. E. P. Hines) and Alzina married Charles Ford, of Le Raysville. Eben P. Hines obtained his education at the district school and Montrose Academy, supplemented by a course at Harford University, in 1855 and 1856, for eight or nine terms succeeding which he taught schools in Susquehanna and Wyoming Counties. Having chosen a medical profession for his life-work, he pursued studies to that end with Dr. Thompson, of Laceyville, and attended the Medical Department of the University of Michigan, from which institution he was graduated in 1865. The following year he settled at Friendsville for the practice of his profession, and there remained until June, 1879, having in the meantime attended lectures and been graduated from the Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia in the class of 1874. In 1876 he was nominated by the Republican party and elected as a member of the State Legislature, in which body he sat during the two sessions of 1877–78, and served upon committees as follows: Pensions and Gratuities, Geological Survey, Labor and Industry, Corporations and Counties and Townships. Dr. Hines removed to Great Bend in 1879, and his large practice attests the consideration of the citizens for his ability. He is now serving his second term as burgess of the borough of Great Bend. He is a member of the Susquehanna County and also of the Broome County, N. Y., Medical Societies, and has upon various occasions been delegated therefrom.

Dr. Hines is active in the Masonic Order, and holds membership in the Great Bend Lodge, No. 338, Chapter No. 210, R. A. M., and Commandery No. 27, K. T. On April 12, 1870, he married Eliza Foster, of Dimock the daughter of John (born 1814) and Amanda (Tyler) (1822–1884) Foster. John Foster is the son of James and Mary (Mains) Foster, who came from Ulster, Ireland, in 1813, and settled in Orange Co., N. Y., where John was born. The family removed to Dimock township, this county, in 1838 and engaged in farming. In 1865 John Foster went into the hotel business, which he continued, first at Dimock Corners, then at Friendsville, until 1879, when he retired. His children are: Eliza (Mrs. Dr. Hines), Josephine (Mrs. Charles Glidden, of Friendsville), Frank L., a farmer near Friendsville, and John, now lumbering in Minnesota. To Dr. E. P. and Eliza (Foster) Hines have been born—Carrie, John F. (died in his third year), Lillian Josephine, Daisy, and an infant son unnamed.

Edgar Levander Handrick, M. D., second son of Wakeman and Urania Stone Handrick, was born in what is now Jessup township in 1840. His early education was in common schools and at the Montrose Academy when Prof. J. F. Stoddard was Principal. He began to read medicine with Dr. W. L. Richardson at Nesquehoning, Pa., in 1860. He attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College in 1861–'63, graduating there in the latter year. He commenced practice at Friendsville in 1863 and still resides there. In 1865 he married Martha D., daughter of the late Dr. Calvin Leet, of Friendsville. They have a son, Frank D. Dr. Handrick had an extensive practice, and is held in high regard by his patrons. He was a member of the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1868.

William Rogers, M. D., a practicing physician at South Gibson for fourteen years past, was born in Harford September 24, 1839, and is the son of Jeremiah and Margaret Martin Rogers, who were of Scotch-Irish origin, natives of Ireland, came to Newburgh, N. Y., soon after their marriage, and six years afterward about 1835, settled in Harford, where they resided the remainder of their lives. They were farmers. The father died in 1880 at the age of eighty-six; the mother died at seventy-eight years of age. William was reared on the farm, received his preparatory education at the Harford Academy and was a teacher for several terms in the home district schools. He began reading medicine in the spring of 1862 with Dr. A. M. Tiffany, of Harford, but in the fall of that year he enlisted at Harrisburg in Company C, Captain Bowen, Third Pa. Artillery, and offered his services to the Union cause. During that winter the troops remained encamped near Fortress Monroe. In the spring he was detailed on a flag of truce boat, where he served until June 1st, when he was taken prisoner but fortunately paroled the same day, and returned to Fortress Monroe where he was exchanged. In the fall of 1863 he was detailed to serve on provost guard and mounted as a scout. He served on the Peninsula until the capture of Jeff. Davis, when he was appointed a military detective under General Miles, who had charge of the noted rebel prisoner. In this capacity he served some two months, when he was honorably discharged and returned home. He at once resumed the study of medicine, and while prosecuting his studies attended Lowell's Commercial College, from which he was graduated in 1865. He attended three courses of lectures at the University of Michigan, and was graduated from that institution in the class of '69. Dr. Rogers prospected for some time, but finally after practicing his profession in different places for about two years, settled at South Gibson, where he has continued since a successful practice, his ride reaching adjoining and more distant localities.

E. P. Hines

Dr. Rogers is reputed as a physician of quick perception and correct diagnosis of disease, skillful in his treatment, and a student of the profession to which he belongs. Dr. Rogers became a member of the Susquehanna Medical Society soon after beginning the practice of medicine, and he is Post Commander of the Charles M. Holmes Post, G. A. R., of Gibson. His first wife, Mary D. Brainerd, of Harford, died 1881. His second wife, Helen M. Potter, of Gibson, died Feb. 2, 1887. The other children of Jeremiah Rogers are: James, of Harford; John M., St. Croix Falls, Wisconsin; Margaret, wife of J. W. Lewis, residing on the Rogers homestead in Harford. Jane died at the age of twenty-six, and Louisa Rogers died at the age of thirteen.

Wm Rogers

Dr. Frederick Filewood, son of John and Ann Filewood, was born in London, England, 1821. His father was a gardener or bailiff on a gentleman's estate. At the age of fourteen he began learning the machinist's trade, and served seven years. He worked at his trade about twenty-two years, first in England (came to America in 1853) then worked a few months at Piermont, then came to Susquehanna, where he lived until his death, which occurred April 11, 1886. He married Angela Benson, March 29, 1861, and about three years after this he left the machine shop and began the practice of medicine. His early education was obtained at the common schools; his medical education consisted in lectures heard at Guy's Hospital during the time he was learning his trade; he would hear two lectures in the morning before his hours begun at the shop. He is said to bear a very striking resemblance to his father in looks and manner. He had no children. His widow survives him. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1878, and was a regular attendant at its meetings.

George Martin Harrison, M.D., eldest son of Joseph H. and Mary M. Harrison, was born in Union township, Luzerne County, 1851. In 1872 he began to read medicine with A. D. Tewksbury, M.D., of Ashley, Luzerne County. In 1873 he entered the medical department of the University of Michigan, where, having attended two full courses of lectures, he graduated in 1875. He practiced in a small mining town in Luzerne County until August, 1876, when he removed to Fairdale, in Susquehanna County. In 1877 he married Eva M., daughter of David and Catharine Olmstead, of Fairdale. They have one daughter and two sons. In November, 1881, he removed to Auburn Centre, his present residence. He became a member of the Susquehanna County Medical Society in May, 1879.

David Carlyle Ainey, M.D., the third son of Jacob and Catharine (Kinnan) Ainey, was born in Dimock township, Susquehanna County, Pa., May 31, 1837. He is of French extraction, his ancestors having been Huguenots who came to this country subsequent to the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes by Louis Fourteenth, and settled in the Mohawk Valley, Montgomery County, N. Y.

His paternal grandfather, William Ainey (1776–1850), born in Fulton County, N. Y., married Hannah Crawford, who was born in Connecticut and died in 1835, and made a home a few miles south of Goshen, N. Y., whence they came to Susquehanna County in 1825, and located in Brooklyn township, where they both died. His maternal grandfather, John Morrison Kinnan, was of Irish descent, his father, Rev. John Kinnan from the north of Ireland, having settled in Orange County, N. Y., about 1767.

Jacob Ainey (1802–1854), the son of William and Hannah, was born in Orange County, and in 1824 married Catharine Kinnan (1804–1875). The following year they moved to Brooklyn township, this county, and, some years afterwards, to Dimock township. Their children were John, a prosperous farmer in Springville; William H., a lawyer, banker and ironmaster at Allentown, Pa.; David C., as stated; Albert J., a practicing physician at Brooklyn, Pa.; and Hannah M. and Sarah A., who died in early womanhood.

Dr. D. C. Ainey obtained his education at the old Woodruff Academy at Dimock, and further prosecuted his studies at Harford University in 1854, also later at Oberlin College, Ohio. He began reading medicine in 1857 with Dr. E. M. Buckingham, of Springfield, Ohio, and later with Dr. Ezra Patrick, of Montrose.

He attended lectures at the Medical Department of Yale College, New Haven, Conn., and received the degree of M.D. from that institution in 1860. In February of the same year he entered into partnership with Dr. L. W. Bingham, of New Milford, and so continued until July, 1861, when he engaged in the drug business in connection with practice, which was thus continued until 1874. He was postmaster of New Milford from 1864 to 1885. In 1869 he was burgess of the borough of New Milford. On October 28, 1861, he married Kate, daughter of Hiram and Amanda (Whipple) Blakeslee, of Dimock. They have two sons,—William D. B., a law student in the office of his uncle, Dr. E. L. Blakeslee, Montrose, and Charles H. Ainey.

Dr. Ainey is District Deputy Grand Master of the Masonic fraternity for the Fifteenth District, and holds membership in New Milford Lodge No. 507, Great Bend Chapter No. 210, and Great Bend Commandery No. 27, K. T.

He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1861, and represented that body at the meetings of the State society in 1874 and 1884.

His medical attainments and surgical ability, with his large experience and native suavity of manner, have given him high rank among his professional brethren and in the community where the active years of his life have been spent. His instruction and aid as preceptor have been obtained by a number of students who have since taken honorable rank in their chosen profession, among them being Dr. E. L. Blakeslee, now practicing law at Montrose; Dr. A. J. Ainey, of Brooklyn; Dr. J. J. Boyle, of Susquehanna; Dr. William R. Blakeslee, of Harford; and Dr. G. P. Clements, now of Harlem, N. Y.

David C. Stiney

ALBERT JOSEPH AINEY, M. D., son of Jacob and Catharine Kinnan Ainey, was born in Dimock, Susquehanna County, Pa., March 26, 1838. His early years were spent on a farm, and the educational advantages of Dimock Academy, Harford University and Montrose Academy were improved by him. In June, 1863, he enlisted in Captain C. C. Halsey's company of volunteer militia, and was in the service thirty-five days. He read medicine with his brother, Dr. D. C. Ainey, of New Milford, and attended his first course of lectures at the University of Michigan in 1864–'65, and his second at the Medical Department of Yale College in 1866–'67; receiving the degree of M. D. in the latter year. He practiced a short time at New Milford and removed to Brooklyn, Pa., in August, 1867, where he has enjoyed a large and successful practice to the present time. December 8, 1874, he was married to L. Maria Haight, of Birchardville, Pa.

Dr. Ainey joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1869, and was a delegate to the State Medical Society in 1885.

NATHAN CALLENDER MACKEY, M. D., son of David and Miranda C. Griggs Mackey, was born in Harford, Pa., September 7, 1848, and in 1852 removed with his parents to New Milford, where his early education was obtained, and subsequently at the Academy in New Milford Borough. He, at the age of eighteen, commenced teaching district school. He took a course in the State Normal School at Mansfield, from 1869 to 1871 inclusive, commenced the study of medicine with Dr. A. C. Blakeslee, of Nicholson, Pa., in June, 1871, and was principal of the Graded School of that place for two years, while pursuing his medical studies. He entered the medical department of Yale College in 1873, attended two courses of lectures, and graduated at the University of New York City, February, 1875; commenced practice at Foster, Pa., and in July, 1876, removed to Springville, where he secured a good practice, and was held in high regard. November 23, 1875, he married Nellie J. Marcy, of Nicholson. His wife died very suddenly in 1879. He married Miss Anna M., daughter of Miles W. Bliss, of Waverly, in 1883. He became a member of the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1876, and on his removal to Waverly joined the Lackawanna County Medical Society.

JAMES D. LESLIE, M. D. (1843–'81), son of John Leslie, of Harford, received his preparatory education at Harford Academy, attended lectures at Ann Arbor Medical College, Michigan, and was graduated there in the class of '69. He practiced his profession at Susquehanna for a number of years, and settled at Lincoln, Neb. He went to Hickman, Ky., during the great epidemic, yellow-fever, where he showed great heroism and skill in the treatment of the sick—for which he was presented by the citizens with many valuable presents, among which was a gold-headed cane. The eminent Dr. Blackburn subsequently introduced him to the citizens of Louisville as the hero of Hickman. He, himself, also became afflicted with the disease, from which he never recovered his former health. He was surgeon of the Burlington and Missouri Railroad, while a resident of Lincoln. He died at Susquehanna, Pa., while on a visit to his home and relatives.

ELLEN ELIZA MITCHELL, M. D., was born in New Milford township, in 1829. Her parents, Seth and Comphey Lewis Mitchell, were natives of Connecticut and among the early settlers of Susquehanna County. At the age of seven years she lost her mother. In childhood she most faithfully improved the advantages of the district school until she passed therefrom to the old Montrose Academy, where she recalls, with pleasure, Dr. C. C. Halsey, of Montrose, who was principal during two years of her attendance. The closing two years of her school-life were passed at the Academy in Hamilton, N. Y. She subsequently taught school in Bridgewater township, Smithboro, N. Y., Pella, Iowa, and Warsaw, Illinois. At different times she was an assistant in the High School at Montrose, and taught several terms of private school. In 1849 she united with the Bridgewater Baptist Church, at Montrose, and henceforth her teaching was viewed in the light of Mission work.

In May, 1861, she commenced a course of instruction in surgical nursing at Bellevue Hospital, N. Y., preparatory to assuming the duties of an army nurse, a service in which she was engaged for four years, at different hospitals about Washington, D. C., and Knight Hospital, New Haven, Conn. In May, 1864, she was at Fredericksburg, Va., and afterward at Judiciary Square Hospital, Washington, D. C., until June, 1865. A full sketch of her army work is in "Woman's Work in the Civil War," pp. 420–'26.

After recuperating from this exhaustive service, she taught in Illinois, Iowa and the colored school in Montrose, and at the same time entered her name in the office of Dr. C. C. Halsey, of Montrose, as a student of medicine. She entered the Woman's Medical College of the New York Infirmary, whence she graduated in 1870, and afterward spent a year as assistant resident physician at the Infirmary. She then practiced four years at Fond du Lac, Wis., and was one of the Censors of the County Medical Society. She returned to Montrose and joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1877, and engaged in practice until the summer of 1878, when she took a tour of two months to Europe. On her return she entered into correspondence with Mission Boards, and was appointed Medical Missionary to Maulmain, Burmah, by the Baptist Board of Foreign Missions, and sailed in October, 1879.

Here she has led an active, useful life in the service of Him, to whom thirty years before she had consecrated herself. Possessing high intellectual endowments with indomitable energy, she has sought the physical and spiritual welfare of fallen humanity in far-off heathen-lands,—and in the day of final reckoning it will doubtless be said of her "She hath done what she could."

Julius Jerome Boyle, M.D., son of Hon. John and Rachel McCarty Boyle, was born at New Milford in 1846. He received his early education at the district and graded schools of New Milford and at St. Joseph's College. Read medicine with Dr. D. C. Ainey, of New Milford. In 1866–67 attended lectures at Rush Medical College, Chicago, Ill., and the following year at Buffalo University, N. Y., where he received the degree of M.D. in 1869. He practiced about one year in Syracuse, N. Y., then in Ottawa, Ill., from 1870 to 1874, when he spent two years in California for the benefit of his health. He returned to Ottawa, but soon, finding his disease returning, he came to New Milford and remained until 1877, when he located at Susquehanna, where he has since been in continuous practice. He married Cecelia F. Kilellea, of Ottawa, Ill., in October, 1872. Four children have been born to them, of whom only two are living. Dr. Boyle was appointed examining surgeon for pensions at the time an examining board was organized in Susquehanna County, in 1885.

Emily H. Wells, M.D., daughter of Perrin and Emily Wells, was born at Towanda, Pa., November 17, 1840, and two years later removed with her parents to South Bridgewater. She received her early education at the "little red school-house," of that district, and afterward attended the schools at Montrose and Harford. She graduated at the State Normal School, at Mansfield, Pa. Attended lectures at Woman's Medical College (of New York) Infirmary, whence she graduated in 1873. Had about fifteen months hospital practice, first as student and afterward as physician. Located at Binghamton, N. Y., November, 1874, where she has been in continuous practice to the present time. She joined the Broome County Medical Society in 1875, was elected treasurer in 1885, and re-elected in 1886. She has been treated with courtesy and kindness by all the members of the profession. Dr. Wells joined the Presbyterian Church at Montrose in 1856, thence in 1873 took letter to Dr. John Hall's church, New York City and thence to First Presbyterian Church, Binghamton, N. Y.

Dr. John Dunning Vail, the well-known and popular homœopathic physician, was born at Goshen, N. Y., December 3, 1831, and after receiving his preparatory education at Farmers' Hall Academy, Orange County, entered Berkshire Medical College, Pittsfield, Mass., and was graduated therefrom in 1855. He immediately commenced the practice of medicine in Brackneyville, Pa., and married Augusta, eldest daughter of Captain John W. Brackney, of that place, who died the same year. In 1859, through the advice of Dr. Hand, of Binghamton, and following his own inclination, he began to investigate the principles of homœopathy. In this field he found a wide and interesting study, and became convinced of its superior theory of practice and consequent results, and accordingly adopted homœopathy as his regular practice. Dr. Vail maintains the highest standing among the medical fraternity, and is a gentleman thoroughly proficient in his profession, which standing he has gained from close study and practical experience. The liberal views which he entertains towards others who differ from him in the theory and practice of medicine, his care of and devotion to his patients, his safe and judicious counsel and his constant attendance upon his professional duties, have made his name widely and favorably known throughout this part of the country. Dr. Vail is a member of the Homœopathic Medical Society of Broome County, N. Y., and since 1876 has been a member of the American Institute of Homœopathy. Dr. Vail settled at Montrose in 1861, becoming the first at Montrose, if not in the county, to open an office for the regular practice of homœopathy. His wife, whom he married in 1863, is Margaret, a daughter of H. R. Esmond, who settled in Susquehanna County from Saratoga, N. Y. In 1864 he built his present residence at Montrose, where he still resides with his wife and only child, Alma Louise, an honored and respected citizen. Dr. Vail and family are members of the Presbyterian Church.

SYLVANUS SANDFORD MULFORD, M.D., son of Sylvanus Sandford and Fanny Jessup Mulford, was born at Montrose, January 24, 1830. He received his early education at Montrose and Cortland Academy, at Homer, N. Y. Graduated at Yale College in 1850. Read medicine with Dr. J. Blackman, of Montrose. Attended lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, of New York City, whence he graduated. Had considerable hospital experience in New York City and Europe. Practiced ever since in New York City, except during the war of 1861. July 4, 1861, he was commissioned by Governor Morgan as surgeon's mate, and 1st of September following as surgeon of the Thirty-third Regiment, New York Volunteers. February 28th, 1863, he received a commission as surgeon of volunteers, signed by A. Lincoln and E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War. In 1864 he was chief medical officer of United States Volunteers, on the staff of Brigadier-General A. H. Terry. June 1, 1865, he received a commission as lieutenant-colonel by brevet for distinguished services, signed by A. Johnson and E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War. The Doctor is unmarried. In June, 1887, he sailed for Europe.

DR. JAMES GRIFFIN practiced at Great Bend, and was a member of the Susquehanna County Medical Society. His death occurred January, 1858, and at the next meeting of the society thereafter the following action was taken:

"WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God in His all-wise providence to remove from among us Dr. James Griffin, an honored member of the society, after a protracted and painful illness; and,

"WHEREAS, Dr. Griffin, by his kind and courteous deportment to his medical brethren, his scientific attainments, his ardent pursuit of his profession and his highly estimable character as a man has gained him the high regard of his brethren of the society."

DR. ABRAM CHAMBERLIN, son of Abraham and Almira Chamberlin, was born in Bridgewater, Susquehanna County, Pa., in 1830. In early life he made the best use of such means as were available for getting an education, and the careful religious training of his parents is recalled with pleasure. His medical studies were chiefly under the supervision of Dr. E. N. Loomis of Harford. Not being altogether satisfied on trial of the eclectic practice, the doctor soon began to turn his attention to the regular practice, and in time followed it exclusively. In 1866–'67 he was graduated at the University Medical College of New York City. His first practice was at Le Raysville Bradford County, Pa., in 1851, but ill health prevented his doing much there. In 1853, he practiced with Dr. E. N. Loomis, and in June 1853 removed to Brooklyn, Susquehanna County, where he has since resided.

He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society January, 1871 and in 1885 was elected President. On retiring from the office he delivered an address on the "Dignity of the Medical Profession," which was published in the leading paper of the county. He was a delegate to the meeting of the State Society of Scranton in 1885.

In May 1856 he married Levira Bagley of Brooklyn. Their oldest daughter is now Mrs. T. E. Shadduck, and the younger ones are Lillian and Bessie. Their only son died in 1876.

The Doctor is a member of the Baptist church at Montrose.

PLATTE EDWARD BRUSH, M. D., son of Hon. Lewis and Lucy Ann Williams Brush, natives of Conn., was born near Montrose in 1833. He received his education in common schools except a few terms in select schools and two terms at Harford University. In 1857 and 1858 he read medicine with Dr. N. Y. Leet at Friendsville, and Dr. Richard Foote at Carbondale. He attended lectures at the University of Michigan in 1858–59, and at the Medical Department of Yale College in 1859–'60, where he graduated, and immediately commenced practice in Springville. April 7, 1863, he was mustered into the service of the United States as assistant surgeon of the One Hundred and Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, from which he was mustered out August 25, 1865. In 1865–'66 he took a graduating course at the University of Pennsylvania and continued practice at Springville until about 1868, when he engaged in keeping a hotel. In 1882 he rented the hotel and has not since been actively engaged in business. He married Mrs. Lathrop of Springville. Has no children. He was a member of the Susquehanna County Medical Society before 1868.

JUDSON C. BEACH, M. D., son of Lorenzo and Emily Beach, was born at Springville, Susquehanna County, Pa., in 1844. When a small boy his parents removed to the vicinity of Montrose, a little below Jones' Lake. In June, 1863, he enlisted in Company "B" Twenty-Eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Militia for the defense of the State. February, 1865, he re-enlisted in the Navy for two years; made a voyage round South America to San Francisco, and thence to Sandwich Islands, returning by way of Panama and was discharged in March, 1867. He read medicine with his brother, Dr. G. W. Beach, then at Little Meadow, Pa., attended lectures at Ann Arbor, Mich., 1870–71 and 1873–'74, graduating in the latter year. He then located at Etna, Tompkins County, N. Y. They have two children, a daughter and a son. He was elected President of the Tompkins County Medical Society in 1887, and is acting in his second term as one of the county coroners.

DR. FRANCIS EDMUND GRATTAN, second son of Dr. Thomas and Mary Ann Grattan, was born in Middle Smithfield township, Monroe County, in 1823. He read medicine with his father, a graduate of the Dublin Medical College, Ireland, attended lectures at Geneva Medical College N. Y , and New York City in the latter year, 1848. In the fall of that year, Dr. F. E. Grattan entered into partnership with his father for five years. He married Harriet Jackson of Carbondale. In 1854 he succeeded Dr. A. T. Brundage at Fleetville, and in 1872 removed to Springville, this county, where he had a successful practice until 1876, when on account of his wife's health, he removed to Meshoppen. His wife died in 1880 and the doctor returned to Springville. His present wife was Mrs. Annie T. Wilson, widow of the late Mason B. Wilson of Bridgewater.

CLARENCE N. VANNESS, M.D., son of Joseph Erastus and Emma Vanness, was born at Standing Stone, Pa., in 1849. In 1854 his parents removed to Jessup, and in 1864 settled in Springville, in this county. He read medicine with Dr. J. W. Cobb, of Montrose, and attended his first course of lectures at Syracuse University, N. Y., in 1871–72. Meanwhile Dr. Cobb having removed, he completed his studies with Dr. I. B. Lathrop, of Springville, and attended a second course of lectures at Fort Wayne College of Medicine, Indiana.

In June, 1875, he located at Auburn Centre, Pa., and 1877 married Mary E., daughter of John Tewksbury, Esq., of the same place. In 1882 he removed to Huntingdon, Pa. In the spring following he attended lectures at the Long Island College Hospital, and afterward another course at Fort Wayne College of Medicine, where he received the degree of M.D., in 1884. He soon afterwards commenced practice at Hallstead, Pa., his present residence. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1885.

WILLIAM RILEY BLAKESLEE, M.D., son of Hiram and Amanda Whipple Blakeslee, of Dimock, was born in Auburn township July 12, 1845. His mother died in December, 1860. He received his early education at the academy in Dimock, where his boyhood days were spent. In July, 1863, he enlisted in Captain C. C. Halsey's company of State militia, and while in the service was prostrated with typhoid fever at Greencastle, Pa. In December, 1863, he enlisted in Company I, Twenty-second Regiment New York Calvary, and passed through the campaign of the Wilderness. He returned home after the close of the war, in August, 1865.

He read medicine with Drs. D. C. Ainey, of New Milford, Pa., and A. C. Blakeslee, of Nicholson, Pa. In 1870 he was married to Rose M., daughter of Charles Risley, Esq., of Elk Lake. They have one son, Elbert W. He attended lectures at the University of Buffalo in 1871–72, and practiced a short time at Hopbottom in the latter year, and before its close removed to Harford, Susquehanna County, which is his present residence. He attended lectures at the University of New York in 1874–75, whence he graduated in February of the latter year. He at once became a member of the Susquehanna County Medical Society, and in 1876 represented that body at the meeting of the State Society at Pittsburgh. He was vice-president of the County Medical Society in 1879, and treasurer in 1881–85. In January, 1884, he was appointed physician surgeon at the Harford Soldiers' Orphan School. The doctor has taken an active part in the public improvements of Harford.

Dr. S. A. Brooks was born in Chenango County, N. Y., the son of Samuel and Dolly Brooks, in 1843. He obtained his medical education at the Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago, and graduated therefrom in the class of 1878. He served three years during the late Rebellion in Company K, Tenth New York Calvary. He practiced medicine in Tioga County, N. Y., about one year, and came to New Milford, Pa., October, 1879, and has continued in practice since. He is a member of the Broome County Homœopathic Medical Society, also of the Southern Tier Homœopathic Medical Society. He married Anna Mathews, of Cortland County, N. Y., in 1867, and has three living children.

Dr. E. E. Snyder, a native of New York State, was graduated from Eclectic Medical Institute at Cincinnati, O., and from the Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia. He came to New Milford June, 1876, and practiced here nearly four years. He is now practicing at Binghamton.

Alexander Hamilton Lewis, M.D., was born in Schenectady, N. Y., in 1829. He read medicine with his brother, Dr. Isaac W. Lewis, at Brackney, this county; attended lectures at Castleton Medical College, Vt., where he graduated in the fall of 1851. He immediately commenced practiced at Brackney, where he continued until 1873, when he removed to Apalachin, N. Y. In 1879 he returned to Brackney, and in the fall of 1881 removed to Salamanca, N. Y. In 1885 he returned to Apalachin for one year, and removed to Upper Lisle, N. Y., his present residence. He married Abbie J. Lillie, of Warrenham, Pa., 1852.

Edwin Latham Gardner, M.D., son of Latham and Angeline (Moore) Gardner, was born in Bridgewater in 1841. His early education was obtained at the common schools, Harford University and Montrose Academy. He taught in common schools from 1856 to 1859. Read medicine with Dr. E. Patrick, of Montrose, from 1859 to 1861, and graduated at the Medical Department of Yale College in the latter year. He soon after commenced practice at Montrose in partnership with his preceptor. After about eleven years he removed to Scranton, Pa., where he became one of the proprietors of the Wyoming House. He returned to Montrose in the fall of 1877, where he practiced until the spring of 1884, when he removed to Binghamton, N. Y., where he now resides. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1863, and was secretary from 1864 to 1873, and in 1879. He attended the State Medical Society, at Altoona, in 1865.

Dr. Ezra A. Kent, son of Charles and Henrietta (Watrous) Kent, was born in Brooklyn, Pa., in 1840. He read medicine with Dr. L. A. Smith, of New Milford, and after attending lectures at Ann Arbor, Mich., and Cleveland, O., began practice at Erie, Pa., where he continued for two years. He returned to Susquehanna County and practiced in Auburn and elsewhere until 1875, when he removed to the State of New York, and continued in practice until the failure of his health compelled him to abandon it. He married a daughter of A. G. Hollister, Esq., of Brooklyn, Pa. He united with the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1873.

Theodore Tyler Wing, M.D., was born in Philadelphia, 1844. He graduated at Dickinson College in 1864, and received the degree of A.M. in 1867. After a theological course at Auburn Theological Seminary of three years he graduated from that institution in 1868. He married Harriet Schlager Brandt, 1868. They have one daughter. He read medicine with S. Birdsall, M.D., of Susquehanna; attended lectures at the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, whence he graduated in 1873. He became a Fellow of the American Academy of Medicine in 1878.

He practiced one year in Carbondale, Pa.; several months at Salem Corners, Pa.; one year in Philadelphia and in Susquehanna, Pa., from 1875 to 1877. He gave up general practice in 1885, and combined the drug business with office and consulting practice since that period. Dr. Wing enlisted in the Signal Corps, United States Army, April, 1864, and served under Generals Sigel, Hunter and Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley until December, when he was transferred to the Army of the James, under General B. F. Butler, and in January, 1865, went on the successful expedition under General A. H. Terry against Fort Fisher, N. C., and was honorably discharged in May, 1865.

CHARLES WILLIAM TIFFANY, M.D., son of William Coy and Louisa Coman Tiffany, was born at Harford, Pa., 1859. He attended the common schools of the town until fifteen years of age and then the high school of Binghamton, N. Y.; read medicine with Dr. C. C. Edwards, of Binghamton, 1878–79; attended lectures at the Medical Department of the University of New York, where he graduated in March, 1881, and practiced in Montrose until September following, when he was at Franklin Forks until April, 1882. Since that time he has resided at Brackney, Pa., in the enjoyment of a good practice. In September, 1885, he married Andra La Delle Wilbur, of Brackney. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in April, 1881.

ANDERSON DANA TEWKSBURY, M.D., son of John and Lucia (Whitcomb) Tewksbury, was born in Meshoppen, Pa., 1838. His parents removed to Auburn township late in 1839, and he resided there until 1872. He obtained his education at Montrose Academy and Wyoming Seminary. He read medicine with Dr. R. H. Dana, of Wilkes-Barre, 1860–62, and attended two full courses of lectures at the University of Michigan, where he graduated in 1864. He was assistant surgeon of One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers from July 3, 1864, to the close of the war. He practiced in Auburn from 1865 to 1872, when he attended a course of lectures at Bellevue Hospital Medical College, and afterwards located at Ashley, Pa., where he practiced until 1883, when he devoted two years to the more thorough equipment of himself for the practice of his profession by attending the Post-Graduate Medical College, School of Ophthalmology and Otology, and Metropolitan Nose and Throat Hospital of New York City, the Eye Department of the University of Edinburgh, Scotland, and Mooresfield Eye and Ear Hospital of London, England. Located at Elmira, N. Y., 1885, and has limited his practice to the eye, ear, nose and throat. In 1879 he married Mary, daughter of John and Lucy C. Beardsley, of Auburn. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1866.

CHARLES ABNER JOHNSTONE, M.D., son of Cyrus Smythe and Huldah Louise Edmunds Johnstone, was born at Harford, Pa., May 1, 1853. His father was of Irish descent. His great-grandfather, Wm. Johnstone, born in Ireland in 1713, was a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, and a Presbyterian minister. He removed to America and settled in the Upper Susquehanna Valley, where he was once compelled to leave his home by Joseph Brant. Dr. Johnstone's great-grandfather, Hugh Johnstone, was a Revolutionary soldier. His mother was of Scotch descent, and her ancestors for the past two hundred years were New Englanders. Both his parents are still living at Harford. He attended school at Harford until eighteen years of age, except an absence of six months in his sixteenth year, for a voyage as sailor to Havana. He commenced reading medicine with his uncle, C. C. Edwards, M.D., at the age of eighteen; was graduated at Bellevue Hospital Medical College in the class of 1880; became a member of the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1884.

WILLIAM JESSUP CHANDLER, M.D., son of Frank B. and Mary S. Jessup Chandler, was born at Montrose in 1842. His early education was at Montrose, and Cortland Academy, Homer, N. Y. He graduated at Yale College in 1864; read medicine with Dr. J. Blackman in Montrose, and with Drs. W. H. Draper and Charles Phelps in New York City; attended medical lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York City, and graduated in 1868; entered Bellevue Hospital in 1867, and was house surgeon there in 1868 and 1869; since April, 1869, has practiced in South Orange, N. J.; was one of the incorporators of Memorial Hospital, Orange, N. J., in 1872, and has been attending surgeon there since that date. In 1880 he was appointed attending surgeon to St. Barnabas' Hospital, Newark, N. J. He married Miss Jennie Milligan, of South Orange, in 1873.

Amos Cranmer Blakeslee, M.D., was born at Springville, this county, in 1825. He read medicine with Dr. J. C. Platt, of Waterbury, Conn., and attended lectures at the Medical Department of Yale College, whence he graduated. After some hospital experience at New Haven, he located at Dimock about 1858, and joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1859. He served as a surgeon in the war of 1861, and afterward located at Nicholson, Pa., where he remained until his death, in 1882. He married Jane Bradley, of Waterbury, Conn., in 1845. He left one son, Merrick C., now living at Great Bend.

William Henry Carmalt, M.D., son of Caleb and Sarah Carmalt, was born at Lakeside, this county, in 1836; read medicine with Drs. Jeffers and Morrill Wyman, of Cambridge, Mass.; attended lectures at Harford Medical School; graduated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, in 1861; was surgeon in the New York Eye and Ear Infirmary for several years; further prosecuted his medical studies in Germany, and, in 1876, settled in New Haven, Conn.; now, also, a lecturer in Yale College.

John Cross Secor, M.D., son of Abraham and Mahala Secor, was born in Monroe, Orange County, N. Y., 1855. He attended the district school in Wyoming County, Pa., and subsequently Keystone Academy, at Factoryville, until he was qualified to teach, and having spent a number of years in this vocation, he entered the office of Dr. Darwin Kelly, of Mill City, Pa. At the end of two years he attended lectures at Bellevue Hospital Medical College, N. Y., and a second course at the University of Vermont, where he graduated in 1885. He located for a short time at Herrick Centre, and thence removed to Forest City, Susquehanna County, Pa., being the first and only resident physician in the place at that time.

Augustus Perry Rowley, M.D., son of Alexander William and Ann Caroline Priest Rowley, was born at Susquehanna, Pa., 1859. He was educated at Newton Collegiate Institute, Sussex Co., N. J.; commenced reading medicine with Dr. E. N. Smith, of Susquehanna, in the fall of 1878; attended lectures at Bellevue Hospital Medical College, where he graduated in the spring of 1882. In the summer of the same year he commenced practice at Norfolk, Va., but returned north, and in the spring of 1883 attended the post-graduate course at the University of Pennsylvania; began practice at Susquehanna in the fall of 1883, and in the spring of 1884 entered into partnership with Dr. E. N. Smith, remaining with him until the spring of 1866, when he removed to Creston, Ogle County, Ill., and thence at the end of three months to Chicago, his present residence. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1885.

James Martin Newman, M.D., son of Martin and Belinda Salisbury Newman, was born at Lanesboro', 1846. His father was a native of Stamford, Conn., and his mother of Lanesboro'. He attended school at Lanesboro', Great Bend and Montrose, and taught school two terms; read medicine with Dr. C. C. Halsey, of Montrose, and attended lectures at the University of Michigan in 1867–68. He attended a second course at a medical college at Cleveland, Ohio, whence he graduated in 1869.

He married Elizabeth Dewing, of Warrenham, Bradford County, Pa., 1873. He practiced a short time at Montrose, then at Stevensville, Bradford County, from spring of 1870 to December, 1872, then at Little Meadows, whence he removed to Elmira, N. Y., where he was in continuous practice until his death, in 1881. He was elected coroner in Elmira in 1875 for three years. He was greatly mourned by the poor, to whom he had been very kind.

Perry Schoonmaker, M.D., son of William D. and Eliza Smith Schoonmaker, was born in Brooklyn, this county, 1854. He attended the Montrose Graded School about two years, and had some experience as a teacher of common schools. He commenced reading medicine with Dr. C. C. Halsey, of Montrose, in 1876, and after attending the requisite courses of lectures at the University of Michigan, was graduated from that institution in 1880. Soon afterward he commenced practice at Hopbottom, where he continued until May, 1887, when he removed to the city of New York. In 1874 he married Ann M. Henry, who died 1879. In 1883 he married Linnie I. Utley, of Hopbottom. In 1880 he became a member of the Susquehanna County Medical Society, and represented that body at the meeting of the State Society in 1885. Faithful and conscientious in the discharge of his duties, he is a growing man and sustains an excellent reputation among his professional brethren.

Warren Willis Strange, M.D., son of Isaac and Ann E. Gregory Strange, was born at Birchardville, Pa., 1849. He attended the Montrose Graded School and taught several winter terms of district school. In 1878 he began to read medicine with Dr. C. C. Halsey, of Montrose, and attended his first course of lectures at the University of Michigan in 1879–80, and his second course at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1880–81, graduating there. He immediately commenced practice at Montrose, where he has continued to the present time. He has been jail physician and held the office of coroner by appointment of the Governor to fill an unexpired term, and was elected to that office in 1886. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1882. In 1887 he married Emma Dalrymple, of Morristown, N. J.

Covington H. Warner, M.D., was born 1837 in Pike township, Bradford County, Pa., to which place his father, Harmon Warner, came from Litchfield County, Conn., about 1817. In 1858 he commenced reading medicine with Dr. Benjamin De Witt, of Le Raysville. He attended one course of lectures at the University of Michigan and another at Georgetown, D. C., where he graduated in 1861. He was married, 1861, to Emeline M. Barnes, of Orwell, Pa. He practiced medicine at Bellefontaine, Iowa, two years and then returned to Bradford County. In March, 1864, he enlisted as a private in the One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was with the Army of the Potomac in its engagements under General Grant until November, 1864, when he was detailed as assistant surgeon to the Emery Hospital, Washington, D. C., where he remained until March, 1865, when he returned to the front and continued until the end of the war. He practiced medicine at Stevensville, Bradford County, until 1869, when he removed to Le Raysville, where his wife died. He re-married Amelia M. Brister, of the same place, in 1872. He removed from Le Raysville to Rushville, this county, in 1883, where he is engaged in a large practice. His genial manner, uniform courtesy and open hospitality have won him many friends, while his successful treatment has commanded the confidence of his patients.

Dr. Mason Dennison came from Vermont to Brooklyn, Pa., in 1811, and after a few years' practice there, removed to Montrose, where he died 1838. He married Miss Wealthy Lathrop, of Bridgewater, who died 1852. They had two sons and two daughters, of whom only Mrs. Jane A., wife of Edmund Baldwin, Esq., of Montrose, is living.

Dr. Harry Dennison Baldwin, son of Edmund and Jane Antoinette Dennison Baldwin, and grandson of Dr. Mason Dennison, was born at Montrose, 1852. He obtained his education in the schools of Montrose and studied medicine with Dr. J. D. Vail, of the same place. He attended lectures at the New York Homœopathic Medical College in 1873–74–75, whence he graduated, and has since practiced in Montrose, except about a year in Syracuse, N. Y., in 1882–83. In 1881 he was elected coroner of Susquehanna County and served part of a term. He married Mrs. Rose B. Allen in 1883.

William W. Fletcher, M.D., was born in Mt. Pleasant, Wayne County, Pa., January 20, 1845. He obtained his education in the common schools and followed teaching a number of years. In 1879 he commenced to read medicine with Dr. Henry Pennypacker and Dr. Samuel Birdsall and attended the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, and the Medical Department of the University of New York. He practiced three years at Uniondale and is now located at Susquehanna.

GEORGE W. DURGA, M.D., only son of Eliud W. Durga, of Connecticut, was born near Rushville, Pa., 1852. His mother was a daughter of Henry Pepper. He received an academic education and read medicine with Dr. A. Dunham at Rush. He attended his first course of lectures at Jefferson Medical College in 1876–77, and his second at Long Island College Hospital, whence he graduated in 1878. The same year he commenced practice in Rush, where he still continues, and in 1886 formed a partnership with W. L. Keeney in the drug business. He married Libbie Walden, of Rush, 1881.

WILLIAM SETH MITCHELL, M.D., son of Norman and Eliza Halsey Mitchell, was born at Montrose in 1844. He graduated at Madison University in 1866 ; read medicine with Dr. C. C. Halsey, of Montrose ; attended lectures at the University of Michigan in 1869–70; took second course of lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York City, whence he graduated in the spring of 1871. In the following autumn he engaged in the drug business at Susquehanna, and has so continued to the present time. In January, 1875, he married Mrs. Carrie Tait.

CHARLES JARVIS DRINKER, M.D., son of Joseph D. Drinker, late of Montrose, was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, about 1832. His parents came to Montrose when he was young, where he attended school at the academy. He subsequently took one or more sea voyages. He was a student of medicine in the office of Dr. J. W. Cobb, of Montrose, and attended a course of lectures at the University of Pennsylvania in 1860–61. He entered the army and served until 1864, when he resumed the study and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania. He was established in successful practice at South Gibson until within a week or two of his decease, in 1869, at the house of his father in Montrose.

ANDREW STRYKER BLAIR, M.D., the youngest of eleven children of Alfred and Charlotte Blair, was born at Conesville, N. Y., November 20, 1857. Dr. Blair read medicine with Dr. J. W. Burr, of Newark Valley, N. Y.; attended lectures at the University of New York, whence he graduated in 1881 ; practiced in Centre Lisle, N. Y., until June, 1883, when he located at Franklin Forks, this county, Pa., his present residence. In September, 1882, he married Lida E. Japhet, of Ketchumville, N. Y. They have a son and a daughter. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1885, and was elected vice-president in 1887.

DR. NORMAN BRUNDAGE, son of Dr. E L. and Agnes V. Brundage, was born at Upsonville, Pa., in 1842. He obtained his early education at Montrose Academy. He practiced dentistry in Montrose from Oct., 1864, to Aug., 1868, pursuing the study of medicine at the same time. He commenced practice with his father in South Gibson in 1868, and so continued until the death of his father, in 1871; then practiced at Lawsville until 1874, at Tunkhannock, Pa., a year, at Uniondale, Susquehanna County, until 1878, when, after spending a summer in Virginia, he located at Sherman, Wayne County, Pa., his present residence. He married Ellen M. Baker, of New Milford, in 1866.

DR. JONATHAN W. BRUNDAGE was born in Wallkill, Orange County, N. Y., 1796. He came with his brother, Dr. G. N. Brundage, to Gibson township, in April, 1834, where he remained in continuous practice until his decease, in 1861. He married Permelia Mills in 1820, and she died 1859. Stephen S. (the eldest of their eight children), P. Jane and George C. still reside in Gibson. His brother, Dr. G. N. Brundage, died in 1838.

DR. DUANE F. BRUNDAGE, son of Dr. Jonathan W. Brundage, was born 1823. He commenced practice in Gibson in 1841, where he continued until his death, in 1864. He received the degree of M.D. from an eclectic school in Philadelphia. In 1852 he erected a water cure establishment, forty by sixty feet in size and three stories high, which was burned in 1872. In 1853 he married Julia Edith Packer, of Woodstock, Vt., and she is now the wife of Dr.

A. B. Woodward, of Tunkhannock, Pa. His son, Dr. Arthur D. Brundage, is practicing in Tunkhannock.

Dr. Edwin L. Brundage was born in Wallkill, Orange County, N. Y., 1804. He studied and practiced medicine with Dr. Carter, an eclectic physician of his native place. In the fall of 1834 he located at Upsonville, Pa., as a practitioner of medicine; in 1856 removed to Lawsville, on the Snake Creek, in the adjacent township of Liberty, and in 1868 to South Gibson, where he was in partnership with his son Norman until his death, in 1871.

He married Agnes Vanamburgh, of Montgomery, New York. One daughter, Adelia A., is wife of Dr. L. P. Roberts, of Port Crane, N. Y.

Dr. Brundage possessed a kind, genial presence, which helped greatly to endear him to many who sought his aid, and the poor never looked to him in vain. If not one of the great and gifted, there are many to whom his memory is precious.

James A. Lewis, M.D., son of Isaac W. Lewis, was born in Silver Lake township in 1847. He was a graduate of the Owego High School; read medicine with his father, Dr. I. W. Lewis, at Apalachin, N. Y.; attended lectures at the University of Michigan in 1864–65, and at the University of New York in 1866, '67 and '68; received the degree of M.D. from the Medical Department of the University of New York in 1869, and immediately located at Brackney, Pa., where he continued in practice until the spring of 1882, when he removed to Ithaca, N. Y., where he now resides. He married Jennie L. Ferous, of Brackney, in 1870. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1877.

Charles David Mackey, M.D., son of David and Miranda Mackey, was born in New Milford in 1854. His father was a farmer and he received his education at the district school and in the graded schools of New Milford and Scranton; commenced reading medicine in 1879 with his brother, Dr. N. C. Mackey, in Springville, and afterward with Dr. G. W. Weaver, of Wilkes-Barre; attended first course of lectures at the University of New York in 1880–81, and his second course at Baltimore Medical College in 1881–82, graduating in the latter year and immediately commenced practice at Lynn, this county, where he continued until January, 1885. He located at Montrose in March, 1885, where he now resides.

June 7, 1884, he married Mary R. Lyman, of Springville.

Dr. Dever James Peck, the second of a family of three children, was born July 4, 1856, in Harford, Susquehanna County, Pa. His father, L. R. Peck, a farmer, and mother, Deborah A. Smith, sister of Dr. L. A. Smith, of New Milford, and of the late Dr. E. N. Smith, of Susquehanna, were born in Susquehanna County. Dr. Peck received his education principally in the Graded School of Harford, and followed the occupation of farming, then practical bee-keeping, and the profession of teaching for a term of seven years. He became a student of medicine in March, 1883, and attended the University Medical College of New York, where he graduated in the spring of 1886, and is now located at Susquehanna, Pa. He became a member of the Medical Society April 28, 1886.

Austin Birchard Sherman, M.D., son of Abel and Louisa Birchard Sherman, was born in Jessup township, 1829. He was the fifth of ten children. His father was a native of New York, and his mother of Massachusetts. He read medicine with Dr. G. Z. Dimock, of Montrose and Dr. W. L. Richardson, at Nesquehoning, Pa.; attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College, whence he graduated; practiced a few years at Fairdale, this county, and removed to Girardsville, Pa., his present residence. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1862.

Charles G. Estabrook, M.D., the eldest son of T. D. and Eliza T. (Buck) Estabrook, of Great Bend, was born in Cattaraugus County, N.Y., in 1850. He attended Franklin Academy, and his medical studies were pursued at the University of Pennsylvania, where Dr. William Pepper was his preceptor. He was graduated therefrom in 1870, and came at once to Great Bend and practiced medicine in connection with the drug business of his father between three and four years. He then located at Binghamton, N. Y., and practiced there until his death, in August, 1880. He married Miss Caroline M. Sears, who, with two children, survives him. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1873.

C. L. STILES, M.D., son of L. N. and Cynthia Green Stiles, was born in Sussex County, N. J., in 1837. He read medicine with Dr. S. Milton Hand, then of Windsor, N. Y., now of Norwich, N. Y., for four years, and after attending lectures at Geneva Medical College, graduated at that institution in 1865. He practiced a short time at Gibson and thence removed to Owego, N. Y., his present residence. Dr. Stiles united with the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1863.

DR. CLARK DICKERMAN (1803–53) was born in Guilford, Conn., where he read medicine with Dr. Knapp. He married Lydia Knapp, and practiced in his native place for a few years. His first wife died, and he married Sarah A. Chandler for his second wife, in 1833. He practiced medicine in Harford five years, in partnership with Dr. Streeter, and subsequently alone in that township until he died. He was highly esteemed as a physician and had a good practice. Of his children, Mary Louisa is the wife of Clemuel R. Woodin, who owns the Cooper property, which he makes his summer residence.

SANFORD J. ENGLE, M.D., a practicing physician at Jackson, was born in Newark, N. J., in 1855, and is the son of Jacob Engle, a sergeant in the late war, who was killed at the battle of the Wilderness in 1864. Dr. Engle received his preparatory education at the academy at Union, N. Y., read medicine with Dr. L. D. Witherell, of that place, and was graduated in the January class of '79, at the Albany Medical College. He practiced his profession for a few months at Union, and in July of the same year settled in Jackson, where he has continued his professional labor with success since. His ride extends throughout Gibson, and into the townships of Thomson and Ararat. He is a member of the Susquehanna County Medical Society. He married, in 1879, Ella, a daughter of James McWade, of Union, N. Y.

W. J. LOWRY, M.D., was born In 1855, in Clifford township, and is a son of Jas. W. Lowry, Esq., of Elkdale, Pa. His early instruction was received at the "city school," near Elk Mt. He entered "Keystone Academy," at Factoryville, Pa., in September, 1873, and graduated from that institution in June, 1876. He registered and studied with Dr. J. C. Olmstead, of Dundaff. He continued his studies at the University of Michigan and the Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia, graduating from the last-mentioned institution in 1882.

Since that time he has followed the practice of his profession.

He located in Harford, his present residence, in December, 1883, and became a member of the Medical Society of Susquehanna County in 1886.

DR. CHARLES DECKER, son of Densmore Washington and Miriam Cobb Decker, was born in Walkill, Orange County, N. Y., in 1844. In 1862 he came to Montrose and read medicine with his cousin, Dr. J. W. Cobb; attended lectures at Albany Medical College in 1864–65; began practice in Birchardville in 1865. In 1873 he removed to Montrose, where he has since resided. In 1861 he married Mary E. Kirby, of Montrose.

RAY LYONS, M.D., son of Frank A. and Hattie Lyons, was born at Lanesboro' in 1863; received his early education at Lanesboro' Graded School, Susquehanna High School and State Normal School, Potsdam, N. Y.; read medicine with Dr. Morgan L. Miller, of Lanesboro'; attended lectures at the University of Pennsyvania from 1883 to 1886, graduating in the latter year. In the fall of 1886 he located at Uniondale. He joined Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1887.

DR. ALBERT AUGUSTUS LINDABURY, son of John Redding and Elmira Hall Lindabury, was born at Clinton, N. J., January 15, 1858; was educated at Rutgers College and Flemington School of Science, whence he received the degree of B.S. in 1878; read medicine with Drs. W. S. Criveling and A. S. Pettinger, of New Jersey; attended lectures at the Bellevue Hospital Medical College in 1882–83; at Baltimore Medical College in 1883–85, graduating there in the latter year; was resident physician at Maryland General Hospital one year; married Miss Mary McPherson, of Scranton, Pa., July 15, 1885; located at West Auburn, Susquehanna County, Pa., March 16, 1886.

DR. ELIJAH SUELL, son of John and Demaris Suell, was born in Sanford, N. Y., in 1825. At the age of nineteen he came to Auburn Centre; read medicine with Dr. E. W. Pitts, an eclectic practitioner of Elmira, N. Y., and commenced practice at Auburn Four Corners in 1851. In 1855 he removed to Le Raysville, Pa., and thence in 1859, to Grangerville, this county, where he practiced more than twenty years. In 1881, he removed to a farm in Jessup township, where he now resides. In July, 1850, he married Betsey D. Ely, of Brooklyn, and they have four sons and four daughters, all living. He has served three years as road commissioner, three terms as school director, eighteen years as trustee of Rush Methodist Episcopal Church, and nine years as local elder of the same denomination.

PATRICK F. GRIFFIN, M.D., a native of Honesdale, Pa., and graduate of Jefferson Medical College in 1886, has located at Forest City, Susquehanna County, Pa.

DR. WILLIAM JOHN MCCAUSLAND, son of Robert and Caroline K. McCausland, was born at Gorton, Tyrone County, Ireland, in 1844. When about three years of age his parents removed to Toronto, U. C. In 1863 he married Agnes Law, of Woodstock, Canada. They had two sons and three daughters. The doctor's father gave him excellent advantages for his preliminary education. He pursued his medical studies with physicians in Woodstock, Canada, attending lectures at Victoria University, Toronto; removed to Providence, Pa., in January, 1872, and taught school there (meanwhile pursuing his medical studies) until June, 1877, when he located at Montrose, and practiced there until his death, in 1886.

GEORGE N. HALL, M.D., graduate of Syracuse University, N. Y., joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society October 14, 1884. He practiced a year or two at East New Milford, and thence removed to Binghamton, his present residence.

DENNIS WESLEY STURDEVANT, M.D., was born at Scranton, Pa; received the degree of M.D. at the University of Vermont, 1884; located at Lynn, this county, 1885, and removed to Laceyville, 1886.

ABRAHAM LEWIS BAUGHNER, M.D., was born at Tamanend, Pa., in 1856; pursued his studies at Pleasantville Collegiate Institute, Ohio, Pennsylvania State Normal School, National University, Ohio, and the University of Michigan, and completed a full course in the Medical Department of the latter institution in 1885, receiving the degrees of B.S. and M.D.; practiced in the coal-mining region in the southern part of Pennsylvania, and located at Lynn, Susquehanna County, Pa., October, 1886.

DR. RUFUS THAYER, son of Rufus and Mary Niles Thayer, of Massachusetts, was born in Lebanon, N. Y., 1820. He read medicine with Dr. Van Fleet, of Hamilton, N. Y; attended lectures at Cincinnati Eclectic Medical College, Ohio, and graduated there in 1841; practiced at Smithville Flats, N. Y., five years, when he removed to Montrose in 1846, and has lived there most of the time since. After residing several years at Hopbottom, he returned to Montrose in the spring of 1887.

He married Joanna G. Tarbell, of Smithville Flats, in 1842. She died in 1859. Her son Eugene and daughter Sybil (wife of E. L. Weeks, of Binghamton, N. Y.) survive her. In 1870 he married H. Selina Bush.

JOHN GILBERT WOODHOUSE, M.D., son of John and Sally Burch Woodhouse, was born in Dimock township in 1820; attended school at Dimock and had some experience as a teacher; read medicine with Dr. E. Patrick, of Montrose; attended lectures at Pennsylvania Medical College in 1847, '48, '49, graduating there in the latter year. He at once located at Springville, and practiced three years with Dr. I. B. Lathrop. He removed to Laceyville, Pa., in 1852, and died there 1871. He married Miss Angeline Keeney in 1861, and she died in 1866. Their only child, a daughter, survives them.

DR. URIAH (?) LEWIS came to New Milford about 1833 with wife and three children. He was eccentric, and after four or five years' practice he went away.

Dr. George D. Kimball, son of Anson M. and Ann F. (Hovey) Kimball, was born in Windham County, Conn., 1834; studied with Dr. Tarbox, Berkshire, N. Y.; was a farmer and teacher several years; graduated at Eclectic Medical Institute, Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1881; settled at South Gibson first, when he removed to New Milford in 1886; married Alma, daughter of Dr. L. W. Bingham.

Edwin Alison Butterfield, M.D., youngest child of Joseph and Sally Butterfield, was born in South Bridgewater in 1823, and died at the same place in 1851; read medicine with Dr. E. S. Park, of Montrose; attended one course of lectures at Berkshire Medical College, Massachusetts, and another in Kentucky, where he received the degree of M.D. in 1847. His residence in Kentucky was at Maysville. He married a lady of that place, who survived him. He was uncle of Dr. Edwin S. Butterfield.

Edwin Stone Butterfield, A.B., M.D., son of Benjamin Alanson and Julia Stone Butterfield, was born in Bridgewater, 1840; early education at Montrose Academy; entered Yale College in 1863 and graduated in 1867; read law with Judge Israel S. Spencer, of Syracuse, N. Y., and practiced in that city; attended three full courses of lectures at Medical College of Syracuse University, graduating in 1887; commenced practice at Susquehanna Mineral Springs, in Rush township.

Morgan L. Miller, M.D., son of David and Edney Loder Miller, was born at Stroudsburg, Pa., in 1857; received his education at Stroudsburg and Monroe Collegiate Institute; read medicine with Dr. N. G. Lesh, of Stroudsburg; attended lectures at the University of Pennsylvania in 1879, '80, '81, '82, graduating in the latter year. In October following he located at Lanesboro', Pa., his present residence. In 1883 he married Nellie E., daughter of David Taylor, of the same place. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1887.

Dr. Frederick Douglas Brewster, son of Horace and Augustus Brewster, was born in Bridgewater, 1850; received his education at Montrose, and graduated at Mansfield Normal School in 1871. He taught school several terms; read medicine with Dr. J. D. Vail, of Montrose, and graduated at the Homœopathic Medical College in New York City. He has since, to the present time, been a successful practitioner at Tunkhannock, Wyoming County, Pa.

Dr. Samuel Wright, for thirty years a practicing physician in the southern part of Susquehanna County, was born on the Wright homestead, an old landmark, at the confluence of Hopbottom and Martin's Creeks, in Lathrop, September 17, 1811. He was mostly self-educated, only receiving in boyhood the meagre opportunities offered by the early district school, which he attended, nearly two miles from home. He learned farming with his father, and was known as a young man of correct habits, good morals, and possessed with self-reliance and a laudable ambition to make his life-work a benefit to his fellow-men. He married, in 1836, Sarah B. Squires, who was born in Brooklyn April 7, 1817—a devoted wife and mother, and a woman whose Christian character, as a life-long member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, still lingers in the hearts of her children. She resides with her daughter (in 1887) on the old homestead, and is the daughter of William (1788–1865) and Betsey Brown (1795–1864) Squires, who came to Brooklyn from Vermont in 1816, and, in 1826, settled on the Colonel Phelps place, in Lathrop, where they spent the remainder of their lives and reared their family.

Naturally possessed of an analytical mind, and inclined to the study of physics, Dr. Wright, in 1845, visited his cousin, Dr. Kibby, of Cuba, N. Y., who induced him to give his attention to the study of medicine, and loaned him some medical books. From this time the inclinations of his mind and the bent of his life-work were changed. He studiously applied himself to the great work before him, became conversant with the causes and treatment of disease, and as early as 1847 began the practice of medicine in the vicinity of his home. His success with his patients, his careful diagnosis of cases which he was called to treat, and his intelligent treatment, with his untiring labor and sympathy for the sick, soon gave him a wide field of practice, in which his services were highly esteemed. The poor, where no remuneration in money could be expected, alike received his constant attention with the rich, and his words of Christian encouragement, always administered, as well as his professional advice and medical aid, were fearlessly given to those whom he attended. His ride extended throughout Lathrop, Springville, Brooklyn, Harford, Lenox and Nicholson, and he was frequently called to counsel with other physicians besides those of his school of practice. He was one of the founders of the Eclectic Medical Society of the county, and he was one of the charter members of the Eclectic Medical Association of the State of Pennsylvania in 1875. As early as 1839 he was converted and united with the Methodist Church at Hopbottom, of which he was afterward during his life one of its most influential, liberal, devoted working members. He was a pillar in the church while he lived, and as a class-leader and superintendent of the Sunday-school for many years, his whole ambition seemed to be to lead others to know the truth, and to live devoted lives as men and women. His example and influence for good, live on in the minds of all who knew him. He was a warm supporter of temperance reform and of education, and gave his children a liberal education in the district home school and at Harford Academy. He died September 6, 1877.

Samuel Wright.

The children of Dr. Wright are Frances E., born 1838, wife of William Squier, son of Arah and Fanny A. (Phelps) Squier, resides on the Wright homestead, and has children (Sarah E., wife of P. A. Lord, of Chicago, and Jennie and Samuel Squier); Jason S. Wright, 1840, for many years a merchant at Hopbottom, married Ella E., a daughter of Hiram C. and Maria R. (Watrous) Guernsey, of Bridgewater (they had one child, Robert, died at ten months old); Hersey G. Wright, 1843, a farmer in Lathrop, and owns the farm formerly owned by William Crandall, married Ellen R., a daughter of William and Phylena Crandall, of Hopbottom (children—Gertie, died young, and William S.); and Irwin Wright, born in 1847, owns the Stephen W. Breed farm, in Brooklyn, and succeeded his brother, Jason S., in the mercantile business at Hopbottom in 1885 (he married Ella E., a daughter of Stephen and Catherine Bell, of Lathrop, and has children—Cora Bell, Emma Elizabeth and Parley Stephen Wright).

Dr. Samuel Wright's father, Anthony Wright (1781–1857), came from Somers, Conn., with his wife, Sally Sweatland (1787–1850), in 1809, and settled on one hundred acres, a woodland tract in the northeast corner of Lathrop, the homestead of the family since, before mentioned. This farm had been occupied before by Ira Sweatland. His brothers, Wise and Samuel Wright, came also and settled in Brooklyn. Anthony Wright was one of the early and prominent members of the Brooklyn Methodist Episcopal Church—a man of sterling integrity in all his business relations, and a judicious and industrious farmer. His wife, formerly a Baptist, after the faith of her parents, united with the church of her husband, and reared her children under careful religious training. The old elm tree, now over four feet in diameter, then only a twig, marks the site of the homestead of the Wright family for nearly eighty years, and the spot early selected by the first settlers has been the burial-place of its members since, now known as the Lathrop Cemetery, situated on a part of the homestead. The early log house gave place to a frame one built by Anthony, and that was supplanted by the present residence built by his grandson-in-law, William Squier, in 1880.

Anthony Wright's children were Loren (1809–82), resided on the Tunkhannock, in Lenox; Dr. Samuel; Caroline (1814–83), was the wife of David Davis, of Rock Island County, Ill.; Sally (1817–57), married Joseph Hawley, of Brooklyn; Amanda, born in 1821, wife of George Sweet (grandson of Amos Sweet), of New Milford; Lois (1825), wife of James Conrad, of Lenox; and Polly, wife of Lois Baker, of Dakota. Anthony Wright's father, Captain Samuel Wright, an officer of the Revolution and a Presbyterian, came to Lathrop later, and settled on a farm one mile west of Hopbottom, which he cleared. He died in 1829. His wife, Azuba (Gibbs) Wright, died in 1824, and their remains were interred in the family burying-ground.

Dr. William W. Wheaton (eclectic), for twenty-five years a practicing physician at Jackson, was born where he now resides in 1823, and was the son of Moses B. and Mary Aldrich Wheaton, natives of Richmond, N. H. He was educated under Rev. Lyman Richardson, at the old Harford Academy, read medicine with his brother, Dr. Washington W. Wheaton, of Bradford County, and was graduated at the Eclectic Medical College, at Rochester, in 1850. For five years he practiced his profession at Newark, N. Y., and in 1855 settled at Jackson, where he remained in constant practice until some ten years since, when he partially retired from practice, and has since given his attention to agriculture. His first wife, whom he married in 1846, was Ruth, a daughter of Ira and Barbara Ballou Wheaton, of Bradford County, by whom he had three children. His second wife, whom he married in 1873, is Juliet, the widow of the late Dr. Card, of Philadelphia, the daughter of Thurston Lewis, of Harford, by whom he has two children.

Ephraim F. Wilmot, M.D., son of Gilead and Lucinda Owen Wilmot, was born at Windsor, New York, in 1826. At the age of sixteen he left home, and found the means of completing his education by teaching schcol. He read medicine with Dr. Henry Hearshbergh, of Dauphin County, and attended his first course of lectures at Berkshire Medical College, Mass., and his second course at Philadelphia Medical College in 1853–54, graduating there in the latter year. In 1855 he attended lectures at the Homœopathic Medical College of Philadelphia, and received a diploma from that institution. In 1856 he located at Great Bend, where he has continued in active practice to the present time. He married Mehitable Ann Clemons, of Bridgewater, in 1859, who died 1884. They had ten children, of whom eight are living. He joined the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1855, and represented it at the State Society, at Pottsville, in 1875. He was president of the society in 1882.

Dr. A. B. Woodward, son of Artemas Woodward, was born in Gibson in 1824. He commenced the study of medicine early. His means and facilities for obtaining medical works at that time were limited. From 1840 to 1848 his opportunities were enhanced by having the benefit and the library of two of the best physicians then practicing in that section. In 1847–48, being called upon by his neighbors, he prescribed for them, and continued to practice successfully for twenty-nine years in the place of his nativity. He subsequently practiced in Carbondale until 1871, when he moved to Tunkhannock, where he now resides. He has in connection with his practice a drug-store, and is interested, with Dr. Mulholland, in another drug-store in Pittston. For many years Dr. Woodward has been a leading, fighting pioneer of eclecticism. He helped organize the first eclectic medical society in the State in 1845, known as the Susquehanna Eclectic Medical Society. In 1850 it numbered from ten to fifteen members. The doctor held the position of president in this society two terms, in the State Society one term and was elected third vice-president of the National Eclectic Medical Association, at Springfield, Ill., 1875.

Dr. Elisha N. Loomis, for over forty years a physician at Harford, was born in Coventry, Conn., in 1809, and died in Harford, this county, on the Loomis homestead, in 1874. He came to Harford with his parents, Eldad and Fanny Jeffers Loomis, in 1824, from Coventry ; was a student at the Harford Academy, and read medicine with Dr. Dickerman, of Harford. He began the practice of medicine about the time of attaining his majority, and later, in 1852, he was examined at the Syracuse Medical College, adjudged a qualified physician, surgeon and accoucheur, and granted a diploma. He was a member of the Eclectic Botanical Society of Susquehanna County. He was a successful practitioner of medicine, a man highly respected both in his profession and in social life, and a useful citizen. His first wife, Rowena, a daughter of Laban Capron, who died in 1845, bore him four sons,—Edgar, a lawyer in Scranton ; Alonzo, a farmer in Harford ; Selwin Roscoe, killed at the battle of Chancellorsville ; and Gorton, who died at the age of twenty-four. His second wife was Edith Bell. His third wife, Laura Snow, bore him children,—Rowena, wife of John Gage, of Ararat; Mary E., wife of Nelson Tiffany, of New York State; Bertie; and Frank R. Loomis, of Lenox. Dr. Loomis' fourth wife was Mary Ann Lee, a resident in 1887 of Brooklyn, Pa.

The following persons are among the number who have left Susquehanna County and are practicing medicine elsewhere: Charles Rose Bliss, Enos S. Wheeler, Frederick Cushman Dennison, J. Arthur Bullard, William H. Knapp, Wm. H. Carmalt, William Rogers, Albert J. Brundage.

DENTISTRY.

Probably no profession in the world has made such rapid strides during the last half-century as has that of dentistry. Prior to that period the study and care of the teeth was limited to those who made the study of anatomy and physiology a specialty, and to the members of the medical profession, very much as blood-letting and tooth-drawing were once included among the functions of a barber. Many persons are still living who can distinctly remember when the scalpel and forceps were as necessary instruments in a barber-shop as a pair of shears or a razor. The first dental college in the world was established at Baltimore in the year 1839. Since that time the science of dentistry has developed until it now ranks among the most useful and artistic of the professions, and includes among its representatives men of education, culture and high social standing. The development of the science has been rapid, and a profession that is the offspring of the nineteenth century has not proven tenacious of old ideas nor unfitted itself for growth and improvement by a blind devotion to the errors of the past, so that the science of dentistry as it exists to-day is the exact antipodes of that which received the attention of its professors but a few years ago. The most rapid improvement has been made in operative dentistry, in which there has been almost an entire revolution. The highest point at first attainable was to fill such teeth as were slightly decayed, whereas, by the aid of the various improved dental instruments, together with medicinal treatment of the teeth, the profession is not only enabled to preserve teeth slightly decayed, but to restore and preserve them for many years. The early practice advocated smooth-pointed instruments for introducing the filling, and non-cohesive gold, whereas serrated instruments and cohesive gold are now recognized as the proper thing.

Artificial teeth were in use as early as Washington's time, and he himself is alleged to have worn them; but at that early day they were either carved out of solid pieces of ivory, which involved great labor and expense, or were human teeth attached to gold plates. Aaron Burr is said to have worn such teeth. The later improvements made in this direction, and their introduction into general use, have added largely to both the attractions and difficulties of the profession, and drawn to it many possessed of superior mechanical skill. Formerly the plates in which the teeth are set were made only of gold and silver or carved out of ivory, which necessarily made them both heavy and costly, whereas now plates are made not only of gold and silver, but also of platinum, rubber and celluloid. Rubber plates were not introduced until about 1854, and celluloid much more recently. The filling of artificial teeth is also a leading branch of the science, requiring both skill, judgment and delicacy when properly done.

The county of Susquehanna has a number of representative dentists, who attend assiduously to their profession and reflect credit upon it.

Dr. Horace Smith, a native of Cooperstown, N. Y., came to Montrose in 1819, and shortly afterwards opened an office for the extraction of and filling teeth and putting in artificial plates. He had been preceded by only one dentist—Dr. Sumner—who left the place about the time he came. Dr. Smith continued the practice of dentistry here for thirty years, and died in 1886, aged eighty-seven. His wife was Marilla Meacham, who bore him four sons and one daughter, the latter dying at the age of twenty. The sons are—Mortimer, a lawyer at Oregon, Ill.; Noel Byron studied dentistry with his brother, Dr. William W. Smith, at Montrose, and is practicing his profession at Port Deposit, Md.; William Wallace Smith studied dental surgery with his father, and began practice at Montrose in 1858, and has remained in continuous practice since, a period of nearly thirty years.

His wife is Deborah, a daughter of Harry Elliott, of Merryall, Bradford County, and he has five children—Carrie A., wife of Earnest Sutton, of Waverly, N. Y.; Jennie M., widow of F. H. Stevens, a late bookseller at Montrose; Frank W., Harry E., and Mort. L. Smith. Dr. Smith was born in Monroetown, Bradford County, in 1836.

DR. DUNNING, the eminent dentist of New York, and several other dentists, many years ago, occasionally visited Monrose on their professional tours, and several dentists settled here for a short time and then left for supposed better fields of labor. Among these were Drs. Sumner, Brundage, Dalrymple, Wheaton, H. Smith, W. W. Smith, Gifford and Griswold.

DR. VIRGIL came here about 1820, but remained only five years, when he settled in Meshoppen, where he afterwards died.

DR. L. S. POTTER was born in Gibson township February 28, 1853, son of Stephen W. and Emeline (Thayer) Potter. He obtained his preparatory education at Montrose Academy, studied dentistry with Dr. George W. Hallstead, of Great Bend, and in 1874 formed a partnership with that gentleman, which continued one year. In 1875 he settled at Montrose, where he has remained in practice since.

ARTHUR KING HARROUN, D.D.S., born at Stockbridge, N. Y., in 1857, a son of Rev. Thomas Harroun, for some time a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church here, received his preparatory education at the Wyoming Conference Seminary, Kingston, N. Y., and at the Cazenovia Seminary, and at the age of seventeen began the study of dental surgery with Dr. G. A. Bishop, of Binghamton. He attended lectures at the Wisconsin Dental College, from which he was graduated in the class of 1880. He at once settled for the practice of his profession at Honesdale, where he remained until 1883, when he located at Montrose.

The first dentists to open an office in Susquehanna was the firm of Smith & Williams, who began practice about 1860 and continued for two years, when Smith settled at New Milford and shortly afterwards in Binghamton. His partner, Clinton Williams, remained for a short time afterwards, and then settled in Pittston, Pa., where he has been since. The next dentist to open an office was another Williams, who practiced dentistry here for a short time, but left in 1865, and settled at Great Bend, where he died some three years thereafter. In the fall of 1865 Dr. G. W. Gleason settled at Susquehanna, and has practiced his profession with varied success until the present time (1887). He was born in Virgil, Cortland County, N. Y., in 1838, studied dental surgery with his brother, Dr. L. R. Gleason, of Cortland, and, after completing his studies, practiced dentistry at Ludlowville, at Candor, and at Owego and Watkins, N. Y. He enlisted in Company H, Twenty-sixth New York Volunteers, and served from the spring of 1861 until December, 1862, when he was honorably discharged on account of disability, having been wounded at the battle of Second Bull Run. He married Emily E., a daughter of J. H. Patrick, of Harmony, and has three children. Dr. M. Gilman came to Susquehanna about 1868, and practiced dentistry one year. He subsequently returned in 1873 and remained for four years, and then settled at Great Bend, but in 1882 removed to Forksville, Pa. Dr. Frank Barnes came to Susquehanna in 1871, and remained for two years, when he removed to Middletown, where he has practiced since.

DR. SHERWOOD settled at Susquehanna in 1873, and was in practice until his death, three years afterwards.

DR. MAXON began practice at Susquehanna in 1877, coming from Harford. After some two years he returned to Harford, where he continued to reside.

JACOB BRANDT, D.D.S., son of Henry W. Brandt, was graduated in dental surgery at the Philadelphia Dental College in the class of 1880 and 1881, and practiced his profession at Susquehanna for some two years afterwards, when he gave up the business, and has since been engaged in mercantile and manufacturing business at Brandt.

LLOYD S. GILBERT, D.D.S., son of F. H.

Gilbert, was born in Susquehanna in 1861, to which place his parents had removed from Otsego County, N. Y., in 1860. He studied dentistry with his uncle, S. E. Gilbert, of Philadelphia, and was graduated at the Philadelphia Dental College in the class of 1882 and 1883. He has had an office at Susquehanna since.

Dr. George W. Hallstead was born in Nicholson, Pa., in 1826, studied dentistry in Rochester, N. Y., and came to Susquehanna County about 1856, where he was a traveling dentist for some years. In 1859 he located at Harford, but after three years settled at New Milford, where he was the first dentist. In 1865 he removed to Great Bend, where he practiced dentistry until his death, in 1874. His wife, Jane R. Hall, of New Milford, bore him one child—Mrs. George Dickerman, of New Milford.

Dr. John Hallstead was born in Wyoming County, Pa., in 1823, the son of Samuel Hallstead. After practicing dentistry in various places for several years, he settled at Great Bend in 1865, where he remained for three years. He then removed to Lenox, and was a traveling dentist until a short time before his death, in 1885.

Dr. A. W. Hallstead, son of Dr. John and Elizabeth Hallstead, was born in Lathrop in 1854, studied dentistry with his father and uncle, George W., and has practiced his profession at Great Bend since 1875.

Dr. William L. Weston, son of William W. (1791–1853) and Sally L. Smith Weston (1808–72), was born in Brooklyn in 1840. He was educated in the Brooklyn public school, began the study of dentistry with Dr. George W. Hallstead at New Milford in 1864, and the following year settled at the same place, where he has continued the practice of his profession since. He married, in 1866, Clara J. Virgil, and has one child, Frank E. Weston.

Dr. Foster I. Smith, son of Irvin and Fanny M. Smith, of Snyder County, Pa., was born in 1862. He studied dentistry with Dr. Ahl, of Bradford, Pa.; practiced at Beaver Springs until 1882, when he settled at Great Bend. His wife is Libbie A. Duthveiler, of that place.

CHAPTER XIII.

MANNERS AND CUSTOMS.

[1] Manners and Customs of the Pioneer Fathers and Mothers of Susquehanna County.

"O list the mystic lore sublime
Of fairy tales of ancient time;
I learned them in the lonely glen,
The last abodes of living men.

* * * * * * * * * *

"Of themes like these when darkness fell
The gray-haired sires the tales would tell,
When doors were barred and elder dame
Plied at her task besides the flame."

—James Hogg.

A picture of the home life and social life of one family of the pioneers of Susquehanna County would, with slight modifications, fit almost any other, and as this home life is largely the outgrowth of their material surroundings, the resultant of their physical environments, it is not easy to describe their "Manners and Customs" without considering the conditions which produced them.

These pioneers were mainly of New England stock, and its best blood at that; for it is not the men that are wanting in energy, in courage, in strength of body or soul that strike into such a wilderness as clothed these hills and valleys a hundred years ago. Let us look at one of these primitive homes. Quite likely it stands on some commanding hill, or its southern or eastern slope. There are two or three reasons for supposing this. The higher grounds were timbered mainly with hard woods, as were, also, the eastern slopes of those hills which trend north and south. Lands so timbered are much more easily "cleared" than the valleys, with their dense forests of hemlock. When cleared, they would produce two or three times as much wheat or other grains, and, lastly, the stumps would much sooner decay, so as to admit the plow.

In all probability the mansion-house is a log cabin—possibly the planks on the floor were flattened with a broad-axe. The one door opens to the south, from which we look down across the little "clearing" into a valley, where a trout stream wanders away towards the river, till it is lost in the interminable wilderness. The beams may project six or eight feet, forming a "stoop," on which axes and other rude tools are stored—on whose floor "the house-dog on his paws outspread" shall sleep on sunny days. The chimney is built of stone—perhaps entirely—without the wall, and beside this may be an oven whose flue opens into the chimney. The "fire-place" is an institution. It is wide enough to admit a back-log three feet or more in length and of corresponding depth.

[1] By Prof. S. S. Thomas.

In one of the "jambs" is inserted a "crane," which reaches nearly to the other jamb. To this crane numerous "pot-hooks" are attached for the pots and kettles in which the daily meals are cooked. The meat is usually fried in a "spider" over a heap of coals drawn out on the stone hearth. Not unfrequently, on festive occasions, such as Christmas, a turkey, a goose, a spare-rib or a haunch of venison is suspended by a string to a friendly beam, and hangs before the fire, till, by turning and basting, it is cooked, seasoned as never was meat cooked and flavored in any other way. Ah! the thought of it makes our mouth water, and our spirits sigh for the days that are gone. And then the potatoes roasted in hot ashes, "that to be honored need but to be known."

Around that fire-place gathered a home circle of from eight to a dozen—sometimes more—for no Malthusian philosophy regulated or even remotely suggested the number which should constitute that household band. Yet no matter how numerous the family, there was always room and hospitable greeting for any neighbor; nay, the traveler, though an entire stranger, was welcomed as if he had been a long-expected guest. Matches were unknown. The fire was carefully covered each night, for if, through any inadvertence, it failed to "keep," recourse must be had to the flint and steel and tinder-box, which latter was a piece of spunk, more commonly called "punk," procured from some half-decayed maple log.

In the absence of these, it was sometimes necessary to go a mile or more, on a bitterly cold morning, to some more fortunate neighbor and borrow some fire. Stoves were almost unknown as late as 1840.

It is but a step from the pioneer's hearth to his table, and here we note quite as marked a contrast from that of to-day. The menu was meagre enough, yet could it boast some things now most eagerly sought. Our ancestors were more familiar with the flavor of flesh from the forest and the stream than with that from the stall or the pen. Venison, bear-meat, quail and pheasant (ruffed grouse) and wild turkey were no rare treat; while any one of the streams could furnish such a string of trout as the modern disciples of Izaak Walton and Frank Forrester have dreamed of all their lives, and "died without the sight." Even the pork was largely a forest product,—a semi-transparent, greasy stuff, known as beech-nut pork. The pigs were turned into the woods in the autumn, where they subsisted on the mast for months, even when the snow was quite deep. Grist-mills were few and far between; hence "hulled" corn, boiled wheat and boiled rye were among the dishes that graced that table. Ten miles was often the shortest distance to mill, and this journey must be made with oxen, or a horse that carried the grist on his back, guided by a man or boy, who found his way by marked trees. We have been told of going to Wilkes-Barre to mill in this manner, the trip requiring three days.

WILLIAM PENN'S TEA SERVICE.

The only sugar known was obtained from the maples. Salt could not be had in exchange for grain or dairy products. That was a cash article, a term still in use, which has almost wholly lost its significance.

The word "browsing" has become sadly corrupted. To the average boy, nowadays, it suggests the idea of a school exercise, more stimulating than refreshing, while to the cattle of that early time it often meant the only alternative of starvation. When the farmer of that day was out of feed for his stock, he was out; no railroad brought him corn from beyond the Mississippi, and the chances were that every other man in the settlement was alike destitute of fodder. The writer, even as late as 1842, has seen his father start with his axe each morning for the woods, while the cattle followed with hungry cries, eager to devour the twigs of the fallen maples, beeches and birches. Cutting timber for this purpose was sometimes facetiously called "uncapping a ninety-foot haystack." The maple "browse," on account of the sugar it contained, was reckoned best, and cattle could subsist on it much better than would at first be supposed.

There was no Brussels carpet or upholstered furniture in the dwellings. The chairs were splint-bottoms,—that is, the seats were made of splints, split from ash or oak, or of bark stripped from an elm tree, while the broom was made of a yellow birch sapling. It would take too long to give a description of its manufacture; so we just call it a splint-broom, and let it pass.

Passing to the wardrobe of our ancestors, we notice the same self-reliance, the same ability to live independent of the outside world, that distinguished them in other matters. Nearly every article of clothing or bedding was fabricated in that same log mansion. For winter wear the wool was carded, spun, dyed and woven by the light and warmth of that old stone fireplace, while summer clothing, sheets, ticking, towels and grain-bags were the product of the flax, grown on the premises, pulled by the small boy of the period, at the expense of an aching back, rotted, subjected to a terrible punishment in a machine called a flax-break, and spun by "mother" on that funny little old wheel, with its shrouded distaff, its gourd shell of water, in which she wetted her fingers every half-minute, and the pedal which supplied the motive-power for its musical hum. That little flax-wheel was the organ that furnished the music of the household in that distant day.

A single fact will convey an idea of what "store-clothes" meant. The writer's mother has told him that the first dress her husband ever bought for her was a calico one, purchased in Wilkes-Barre, at one dollar per yard. When it is remembered that the money for the purchase came from the sale of choice pine boards, that were cut, sawed, hauled ten miles to the river, rafted and "run" to Marietta, and sold for four dollars per thousand, some notion may be formed of the value of a dress that her great-granddaughter would think hardly good enough to wear to school, though containing twice the material and of most elaborate architecture.

LADY'S FASHIONABLE HEAD-DRESS, 1776.

In passing, may be noted the fact that about the only way any money could be obtained was from the sale of pine, cherry or curled-maple lumber or oars. These last were split from white-ash trees, hewed and dressed,—that is, shaved ready for use on boats. Sometimes, however, they were shipped in the rough. They were of different lengths, from ten to twenty-six feet. The oars were sometimes loaded on a raft of lumber, at others on an "ark"—a rude boat of large size, specially made for carrying shingles, boards or oars. When spring came, the lumbermen watched for a rafting-fresh, as a freshet was called, and "went down the river." Sales were usually made at towns along the Lower Susquehanna; if not, they hired a schooner to tow their stock around to Philadelphia. The homeward trip was made on foot.

For shoes and boots, in families that did not have some member who could make them, an itinerant shoemaker came once a year with his bench and kit of tools and "shod up" the entire family. The sole-leather was imported; but very excellent upper-leather was made by placing calf-skins in a large trough, filled with hemlock bark crushed by pounding. In this bark, which was kept wet, the skins were allowed to remain a year, and then dressed with fresh butter instead of oil.

For lights, the usual thing was a tallow-dip. It was an all-day job for the matron of the house to "dip" candles. The usual number made at one batch was twenty dozen. The wicks were first prepared and hung on "candle-rods," a dozen on each rod. The tallow was melted in a large kettle nearly filled with water. Into the mass of tallow, floating on the hot water, the wicks on the rods were dipped, one rod after another,—we don't know how many times,—till the candles assumed the required proportions. Not unfrequently light was furnished by burning pine-knots or a saucerful of lard, on the margin of which a lighted rag was floating. No other light was needed in the kitchen when a roaring fire was burning. Somehow, we know not why, the strongest, yet tenderest, of all our memories cluster and linger about that old stone fire-place, and we have a sort of pity for those children who grow up by stoves, and never sit on the hearth and watch the big coals fall from behind the "fore-stick," and the ever-changing pictures on them.

The farming-tools were neither numerous nor far-fetched. The grain was cut with a sickle, forged by the local blacksmith, as was, also, the hoe, that had an "eye" in which to insert a handle. Forks came from the same shop, while the plow was a monstrous engine, the product of the joint labors of the smith and the carpenter—its mould-board of wood, its point of wrought-iron, which from time to time was sharpened. Around that old log house the honey-suckles and many-hued morning-glorys clambered, while all the old-fashioned flowers bloomed in profusion near the door, in company with the well-known herbs that were grown for their medicinal virtues. Doctors' visits were like those of angels are supposed to be.

A peach-stone buried beside a stump would, in three or four years, bear fair fruit, and as there was no communication with markets abroad, this fruit was sometimes so plentiful that it could hardly be given away and was left to rot on the ground. The protection afforded by the forests had, doubtless, something to do with this abundance of peaches, which, with the forests, is a thing of the past.

In those early days the sheep had to be gathered, each night, into an inclosure that was proof against wolves; to leave them out meant certainty of their destruction before morning. Every neighborhood in the county has its own store of local traditions of fierce encounters with wolves, bears, wild-cats and panthers. The rifle, with its flint-lock, was a necessary piece of furniture.

The history of the world's heroism has never been written and never can be. In a million instances, all through the world's history, deeds have been enacted in humble life yet never chronicled, that would put to blush the boasted achievements of those "Whose distant footsteps echo through the corridors of Time."

That mother, who, surrounded by a half-dozen children, none of them more than twelve years old, spent the winter months with them, while her husband was miles away in the "shingle-woods," with no neighbor nearer than a mile, and wolves howling in the door-yard every night, had a courage that would not suffer in comparison with Queen Elizabeth or the Maid of Orleans, and a nobleness of soul that can scarcely be measured.

Passing to the social habits in those old times, we cannot fail to notice a contrast from those of to-day. There was no caste based on wealth when all were alike poor; no arrogant independence, when all were mutually dependent; no exclusion from society on the grounds of fashion in dress, when all were clad so nearly alike. Growing out of mutual dependence, perhaps, was a spirit of mutual helpfulness unknown in older communities.

Logging "bees," stone "bees" and huskings were among the most common gatherings, in which both sexes mingled—the women to cook and serve the food, and it was a good wether that would furnish meat and "pot-pie" for dinner and supper, to say nothing of the pumpkin pies and Indian pudding. Nearly every man had a "fallow" each year. Quiltings came later, to which all the elder and younger dames gathered, not more to help a neighbor than to visit with each other. Possibly the young men came in the evening to see their best girls home, or to engage in the invigorating and fascinating exercise of "snap and catch 'em." At rare intervals a ball was given, and, if at some distance, a gallant young knight would mount a steed that, for spirit and fleetness, might vie with Don Quixote's Rozinante, and take his fair one up behind him on a "pillion." Thus mounted, they would thread the sombre mazes of the forest to the appointed place of rendezvous. And then the visits, pure and simple visits, made for the sake of visiting. With all their isolation and lack of means of conveyance and roads, there was unquestionably more social intercourse among the farmers of this county sixty years ago than there is now. Development of material resources and growth in wealth have brought many advantages for personal comfort and intellectual culture, but they have imposed conditions on us which fetter friendly intercourse and have well-nigh crushed out all social feeling. No such free and unrestrained visits now as when one family started out in the morning with oxen and sled, stopped at each house for reinforcements till the load contained a round dozen, who would rush in on some unsuspecting household and make them a surprise party that was not a donation, and of which the host was not apprised in advance.

We have been with the pioneer at his fireside, at his table, in the field and the forest, and among his neighbors. His splendid work in the attempt to educate his children under adverse circumstances will be reviewed by another, than whom none is better fitted for the task. It remains for us only to consider him in that highest outcome of our human nature—his religious life. And just here we would fain lay down our pen, for it may be difficult to make the young reader understand the zeal, the earnestness, the charity and the hospitality of those old-time Christians.

It is not for us to discuss the cause or its moral significance, but the fact is that the congregations that assemble at public worship are not as large as they were when the population was less than half what it now is. This volume might easily be filled with the records of missionary work performed by the ministers of all denominations. The itinerant Methodist, whose circuit extended from Wyoming Valley to Central New York, holding service every day or night in some house, or barn, or grove, is but an example of the work done by all the preachers of that day.

> "They felt that they were fellow-men,
> They felt they were a band
> Sustained here in the wilderness
> By Heaven's upholding hand."

Many of the settlers from Connecticut were Episcopalians, and wherever a sufficient number of them had settled near enough together to erect a house of worship, there was always one church festival in the year, so fraught to us with pleasant memories, that we cannot resist the prompting to give it mention. We mean the decoration and "illumination" of the church for the Christmas-eve services. For a week or more previous to Christmas, the young people, and some of the old ones, worked with a will to fill the edifice with decorations of evergreens —hemlock, pine, the two varieties of laurel, and that exquisite little creeper, the running ground-pine—till every pillar was wreathed, every window draped, the walls festooned and every baluster in the chancel entwined. Over the pulpit, in large capitals wrought in evergreens, these words formed an arch: "For we have seen his star in the east and are come to worship him," while a transparency in the form of a five-pointed star shone below the arch. Immense chandeliers hung from the ceiling, improvised of narrow boards framed into successive circles one above another, forming a cone, with holes bored to receive the candles. Two, at least, of similar construction, except that they were semicircular, were sprung from the casings of each window, while two seven-branched candlesticks shed light upon the pulpit. At either corner of the chancel stood a pine tree a dozen feet in height. Through these, too, candles were generously scattered. When all the candles were lighted, it was a scene not soon to be forgotten by the children of a day when such scenes were unusual. To witness it and join in the services, the entire population for miles around gathered. A dozen ox-teams stood around the church while the white-robed priest within was telling to the assembled people the old, old story of those other cattle that ate at the manger in Bethlehem, where the child was cradled at whose feet the wise men came to worship.

"Time rolls his ceaseless course, the race of yore
Who danced our infancy upon their knee,
And taught our marveling boyhood legends store
Of their strange ventures, happ'ed by land or sea,
How are they blotted from the things that be.

"How few, all weak and withered, of their force
Wait on the verge of dark eternity,
Like stranded wrecks, the tide returning hoarse
Shall sweep them from our sight.
Time rolls his ceaseless course."

All honor to the pioneer fathers and mothers of Susquehanna County. They had hearts of oak, but those hearts were warm and tender and true. It well becomes us, who are reaping so richly the harvest which they planted with such infinite toil and pain, to stand with heads uncovered in their presence. We feel satisfied with having prepared this imperfect sketch, if it shall do aught to render their labors honored and keep their memory green.

CHAPTER XIV.

[1] TEMPERANCE.

Temperance in Susquehanna County—Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

THE early settlers of the county were mainly industrious, prudent, eminently social and temperate, as the word temperate was then used; but the use of spirituous liquors was common among all classes of the people. Drunkenness was not approved, but preachers and church members used spirituous liquors as a beverage, and at all special gatherings some form of liquor was an important appendage.

New England rum, New Orleans molasses and Bibles, with the many other articles in a country-store, were grouped together in advertisements in the public prints. Cider was made in large quantities and freely drank.

As in other States, so here in these early days, occasional addresses and sermons were delivered upon the evils of strong drink; yet, but little was accomplished; the people continued the use of stimulants. From 1835 to 1840, and after that time, efforts were made to secure "total abstinence," and pledges for that purpose were presented to the people, with some immediate success.

The early advocates of total abstinence met with bitter opposition, and in cases resort was had to denunciation, locking-out of churches, and an occasional use of the mob's missile, rotten eggs; but truth and patience, with Christian fidelity, produced a change in sentiment which gradually spread, until the churches were brought to acknowledge the wrong in any use of spirituous liquors, including beer, wine and cider, as beverages; and several churches added a pledge to the church covenant, to abstain from their use.

In 1841–44 large and enthusiastic meetings, or conventions, were held in Montrose for the promotion of temperance, and to devise means whereby the license and sale of intoxicating beverages might be lessened and finally abolished. Many of the public and prominent business men, and clergy of the county, were active in these gatherings; and the speeches made and resolutions adopted, strongly condemned the use of such beverages; also claimed the right and necessity of restraint by legal enactment. The thought of Prohibitory Laws is not of recent origin; the fathers saw, with a degree of clearness, the necessity for public safety and personal prosperity. A stirring appeal was adopted and sent to licensed dealers in hotels and other places, urging the evil and wrong in the business; pleading in behalf of helpless women and children, and fallen manhood; that they continue no longer in this work of destruction. Good results followed these efforts. Many were saved from intoxication; a sentiment was implanted that has borne fruit in after-years, even earnest men and women for the temperance work. From 1860 to 1870 a number of Good Templar lodges were formed, and for a time were influential in holding in check the evil of strong drink.

[1] Written by Rev. W. C. Tilden.

The blue ribbon or Murphy movement came in its time, and aroused many; saving some from the evil into which they had fallen; awakening others to new or firmer resolves to contend for total abstinence.

For a few of the years just past the work of the Constitutional Amendment Associations, of which a number were formed, of the Women's Christian Temperance Unions, of the political Temperance party—each and all have added much to the strict temperance sentiment of the county. While the vote of the Temperance party had not been large, yet the influence was felt; and on the issues taken by the Prohibition party, with the efforts made to inform the public of the situation and necessities now pressing upon the great interests of our country, many have come to feel that prohibition of the manufacture and sale of all intoxicating liquors, as a beverage, is necessary to the safety of the family, society, business and the welfare and security of State and nation.

The large majority in favor of No-License in 1873, with the indignation when the Local Option Law was repealed, testified to the generally correct sentiment of the people; and the vote with the Prohibition party in 1886, with the manifest feeling in the old parties concerning the submission of a prohibitory clause to our State Constitution to a vote of the people, indicate very clearly that a large majority of the people would rejoice in the success of such a measure.

[1] THE WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION IN SUSQUEHANNA COUNTY.—In sympathy with the movement started in Hillsboro', O., by Mrs. Judge Thompson, and deeply impressed with the feeling that the liquor traffic was becoming a power of destruction to all that was good and pure upon earth, woman, true to her nature, rallied to the rescue; nor were the women too soon in the crusade movement; not only peril of home and friends seemed imminent, but self-government itself, in the hands of men weakened by dissipation, seemed upon the verge of ruin. In Pennsylvania the organization of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was first made by Congressional Districts, and the Fifteenth District, comprising the counties of Bradford, Wayne, Susquehanna and Wyoming, were for eight years organized together; afterwards each county was organized separately.

The first Union in the Fifteenth Congressional District was organized in Montrose July 10, 1874. The first officers were Mrs. G. H. Drake, president; Mrs. William Cox, vice-president; William Euphrasia Keeler, secretary; Miss E. C. Blackman, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Fanny Lathrop, treasurer. There were a large number interested in the work, and the names of Mrs. Eleanor Post for eleven years president, Miss E. C. Blackman, county superintendent of jail work, Mrs. Edwin Lathrop, whose devotion was a worthy example, Dr. Ellen Mitchell, now in Burmah, and many others might be mentioned. A Band of Hope for the children was sustained for years under the direction of Mrs. Euphrasia Keeler. Weekly prayer-meetings, with few exceptions, have been kept until the present date. Most of the work of organizing for the district was done by the women of Susquehanna County. Mrs. Cook, of Susquehanna County, president of the Congressional District, Mrs. S. B. Chase, and Mrs. Henry Warner, of Great Bend, Mrs. Dr. L. A. Smith and Mrs. John Hayden, of New Milford, assisted and sustained by many others equally interested, spared neither time, effort nor means to give character and influence to the work. New Milford was organized April 6, 1876. The first officers were Mrs. H. L. Hewitt, president; Mrs. M. R. Gibson, vice-president; Mrs. H. G. Smith, corresponding secretary; Mrs. L. A. Smith, recording secretary. The names of Mrs. C. B. Arnold, Mrs. L. J. Barlow, Mrs. M. E. Hayden and many others are given as interested in the work. Unions were organized in Gibson and Thomson. Lawsville and other towns which have not regularly-organized Unions have been identified with the work.

[1] Contributed by Mrs. Henry D. Warner.

For many years the work was purely a gospel work, and often in churches stirring meetings were conducted by the pastors, many persons signing the pledge. Lately, the distribution of temperance literature became an important part of the work.

Great Bend organized July 30, 1874. The first officers were Mrs. James B. Johnson, president; Mrs. R. B. Thomas, vice-president; Mrs. C. E. Baldwin, secretary; and Mrs. George Baldwin, treasurer.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has for many years sustained a monthly Union meeting on the first Saturday evening of each month, the pastors of the different churches assisting in the services.

In the winter of 1887 a grand temperance revival occurred, which resulted in the organizing of a Law and Order League. Mr. J. Will McConnell labored with great success, and many signed the pledge.

Great Bend is a railroad town, with no Sabbath, irregular meals and sleep, subjecting men to very unnatural ways of living, and to great temptations. Railroad companies will be held responsible in a great degree for the ruin of many, although there are men of sufficient will-power to stand for the right under all circumstances. Mrs. S. B. Chase, of Great Bend, and Mrs. Judge Cook, of Susquehanna, were delegates to the first National Convention, at Cleveland, O., November 16, 1874.

Circulating petitions to influence State legislation has been one important branch of work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Susquehanna; and although not always as successful as they hoped, it showed their interest and willingness to work in every possible way to do away with the license system.

The Scientific Instruction Bill was passed March 31, 1885. Mrs. Hunt, the author and national champion of the bill, assisted by Mrs. J. D. Weeks, Pennsylvania State superintendent, pressed the bill strongly, and urged the women of the State to do their best for it, and of the 102,581 signatures presented in favor of the bill, Susquehanna County contributed her share. The women of Pennsylvania have reason to respect Governor Pattison for his consideration of and prompt signature to the bill, causing it to become a law. Scientific instruction is now taught in the public schools in Susquehanna County, and from an intelligent education of the young, good results are hoped for in the near future.

Susquehanna.—The large and flourishing town where the shops of the New York and Erie Railroad are located may well be called the banner-town of the county. The first union was organized April 18, 1874. The first officers were Mrs. William Emery, president; Mrs. Judson Cook, vice-president; Miss Casteline, secretary; Mrs. Griswold, treasurer. "Working and praying and praying and working" has been their motto from the first. A large number of men employed in the shops and along the line found at the headquarters of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union many warm friends and encouraging words. The young ladies were very active. They were twice burned out, but succeeded in keeping their organization, literature, reading-room, etc., in good order for work. Bands of Hope were sustained for the children. In the winter of 1887, J. Will McConnell spent three weeks in earnest temperance work under the auspices of the Union. He was sustained by the pastors of the churches and the best people in the community. As a result, about thirteen hundred persons signed the pledge, and to many it was the beginning of a better life. Mr. McConnell received three hundred and ten dollars for his services; all expenses were paid, and fifteen dollars left for the treasury of the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

A Law and Order League was formed, and a fund of three thousand five hundred dollars was subscribed to carry on the work. A public sentiment was educated which says, "The saloon must go." The present officers of the Union are,—President, Mrs. J. Barnes; Vice-President, Mrs. Carrie W. Cook; Treasurer, Mrs. Levi Page; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Lizzie Cook.

The county officers are,—President, Mrs. Judge Cook; the vice-presidents are the presidents of the several local unions; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. J. Barnes; Treasurer, Mrs. Emma Perkins.

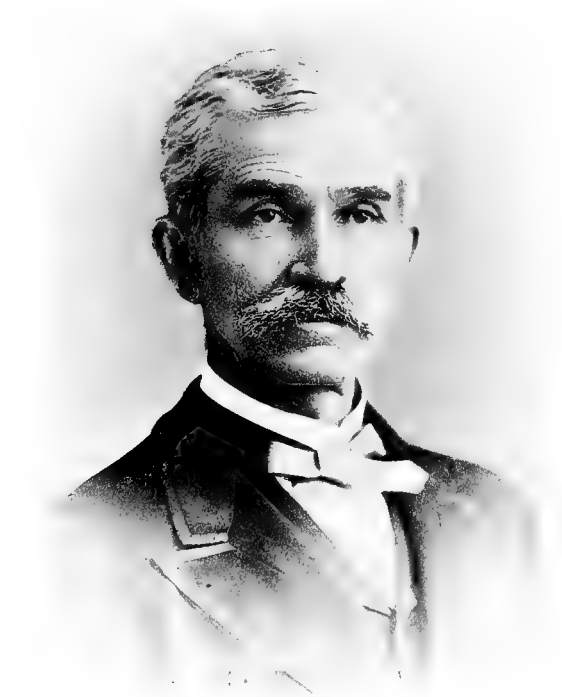
Superintendents of Departments.—Sunday-school work, Mrs. S. B. Chase, Great Bend; legislative and legal work, Mrs. Henry Warner, Montrose (formerly of Great Bend); jail work, Miss E. C. Blackman, Montrose; Sabbath observance, Mrs. Lizzie Cook, Susquehanna; mothers' meetings, Mrs. Levi Page, Susquehanna; scientific instruction, Mrs. U. B. Gillett, Gibson; temperance literature, Mrs. Dr. L. A. Smith, New Milford; influencing the press, Mrs. C. Hawley, Montrose.

The writer of this article being interested that our taxpayers of the county should know something of the expense of crime caused by intemperance, subjoins the following statement, obtained from the county officers, the burgess of Great Bend (where the crime was committed), and from State reports of prison expenses.

On the night of November 9, 1884, Theodore Gillen was murdered in a saloon, and his body placed upon the railroad track. The following will show the expense of "one night in a saloon:"

Commonwealth vs. Patrick Winters, Thomas Driscoll, and Valdine Wilmot.	Indictments. Murder and Accessory to it.

COSTS OF PROSECUTION.



Witness bill, April 18, 1885	$168.43
" " August 15, 1885	173.20
" " November 13, 1885	101.15
Costs of Justice's Court, District Attorney, Clerk of Court and Coroner's Inquest	100.00
Detectives' bill	215.00
Cost of four days' session in April, 1885	400.00
" " " " August, 1885	400.00
" two " " November, 1885	200.00
Extra expenses in bringing witnesses outside the Commonwealth, and incidentals thereto	200.00
Cost of transporting prisoners to penitentiary	143.00
Expenses to borough of Great Bend, not paid by county	985.00
Board of prisoners in jail	423.00
" " penitentiary	1700.00
Total	$5204.80

This report was published in the county at the time, and accepted as correct.

Good Templars.—The Independent Order of Good Templars had fifty lodges and five thousand members in the county at one time. There are only a few of these lodges in active operation now, but take the order throughout the world, and it is larger now than it ever was before. Previous to the War of the Rebellion a number of the States had enacted prohibitory laws; during the war most of these laws were repealed, and the excitement consequent to a soldier's life, with its demoralizing tendencies, affected every neighborhood in the land. The old temperance organizations, such as Washingtonians and Sons of Temperance, were nearly all disbanded. At this crisis the Good Templars' Order was instituted, and it spread rapidly throughout the Union. It admitted women and enlisted them in this great work, and although most of the Good Templars' lodges have surrendered their charters, the influence of this organization still lives and is bearing fruit in the increased interest which is being manifested in the temperance question throughout the land. The Prohibition party of Susquehanna County polled 472 votes for St. John in 1884, 550 for Wolfe in 1886, and 934 for W. C. Tilden; but the vote for the Prohibition candidates does not indicate the temperance sentiment of the county by any means. Both of her Representatives and State Senator voted to submit a prohibitory constitutional amendment to the people, and they represent a large majority of the voters of the county, regardless of the old party lines. We close this temperance chapter with a biographical sketch of Hon. Simeon B. Chase, of Great Bend, who was prominently connected with the Good Templars for many years, and whose wife is now prominently identified with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

HON. SIMEON B. CHASE was born at Gibson, Susquehanna County, April 18, 1828. He is a descendant of English ancestry that settled in New England in the pioneer days of our country's history. Aquila Chase (1618–70), one of three brothers that came from Cheshire, England, in 1639, settled in Hampton, N. H., and had a family of eleven children. Thomas, one of these children, married Rebecca Follansbee; their son, Elder Daniel Chase (1770–1850), came to Jackson township in 1816, and subsequently resided in Windsor, N. Y., and Mt. Pleasant, Wayne County, Pa. He was a well-known Baptist elder, who preached and engaged in missionary work in this section of the country. He married Catharine Fillbrook, and of their seven children, Amasa (1805–76) married, in 1827, Sarah, daughter of Samuel and Hannah (Coleman) Guile, a settler of Harford township, where the family history will be found. He did not remove with his parents, but remained in Harford, where he learned the tanner's trade of Gaius Moss. Simeon B., their only son, attended the common schools of the county, and by teaching school in the winter to earn the means, together with diligence in his studies at all times, he prepared himself for admission into Hamilton College, where he was graduated with honors in 1851. He partially defrayed his collegiate education by acting as deputy prothonotary. His industrious, persevering efforts at this time, and throughout his career, in fact, illustrate the power of self-help, a prominent characteristic in many of our most illustrious men. He read law with F. B. Streeter, and was admitted to the bar of Susquehanna County in 1851. He was a Democrat, and, in connection with his brother, E. B. Chase, edited the Montrose Democrat for four years, commencing with 1851. In 1856 he, with other Free-Soil Democrats, assisted in forming the Republican party, and became at once a leading and influential member. He was chairman of the convention of 1856, that nominated David Wilmot for Governor, and has been chairman of the Committee on Nominations once since. He was elected Representative to the State Legislature in the years 1856, '57, '58, '59. Here he took high rank, occupying the position of chairman of the Ways and Means, Judiciary and other important committees. He was a prominent candidate for Speaker one term, though not elected; he occupied the Speaker's chair most of the session, on account of the protracted illness of the Speaker-elect. Thoroughly familiar with parliamentary law, self-possessed, firm, an excellent speaker and of commanding and agreeable address, he presides with dignity and ease over the most turbulent bodies, always preserving order and decorum during the most exciting discussions. As a presiding officer he probably has no superior in the State. In 1868 the Good Templars employed him to give his entire time to the temperance work, and probably no more fitting selection could have been made, for he signed the Washingtonian pledge when but nine years of age and has ever kept it inviolate. He also worked with the Sons of Temperance from 1850 to 1853, and with the Good Templars from that time forward. Always a master-spirit, he at once took and kept a controlling position among his co-workers, and has held many important positions in the Order of Good Templars. He was presiding officer of either State or National Lodges almost continuously for about twenty years from 1856, and attended every session of the R. W. G. L. of North America, over which he presided for five consecutive years. He was Grand Worthy Chief Templar of the State of Pennsylvania for seven years, and discharged the duties of his office with ability and dignity. His reputation thus became extended beyond his home surroundings, throughout the State and nation. Mr. Chase commenced to make temperance speeches when he was only sixteen years old, and his clarion voice has rung out in opposition to the traffic ever since. Since 1872 Mr. Chase has acted with the Prohibition party and was president of the first National Convention of that party when James Black, of Pennsylvania, was nominated for President of the United States. He was candidate for Governor on the Prohibition ticket in 1872, for judge of the Supreme Court in 1878 and from the Bucks, Lehigh and Northampton district for Congress in 1886.

Simeon B. Chase

Mr. Chase is a polished writer and has written much that has had an extended influence. His "Digest and Treatise on Parliamentary Law," which has passed through many editions and has had a large circulation in Europe as well as America, became a standard work in the Good Templars' Order. "Good of the Order" and "Manual of Good Templarism," for "Mills' Temperance Annual," are among his well-known works.

He is the author of the ritual of the Grand Lodge of the order. He was connected with the banking business at Great Bend and New Milford for a few years, and is now practicing law at Easton, Pa., although he continues to make his residence at Great Bend, where he usually spends Saturday and Sunday. He is a Presbyterian and an elder in the church and was twice commissioner to the General Assembly of the United States. He has also been superintendent of the Sunday-school for many years. He was married, May 1, 1851, to Miss Fanny Du Bois, daughter of Abraham and Juliet (Bowes) Du Bois. Mrs. Chase is a worthy companion of her distinguished husband and has contributed her full share to the success of the temperance cause. She was active with her husband from 1854 until 1874. She was delegate to the National Convention in 1874 in Cleveland, Ohio, which organized the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and was chosen vice-president for Pennsylvania, and the same winter called and presided over the convention that organized, and was the first president of, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Pennsylvania. She held the office of president for five years thereafter, and has been State superintendent of the Sunday-school department of their work ever since. Mrs. Chase is the author of a book on Good Templar work entitled "Derry's Lake," which has been republished in Edinburgh and London. She also wrote the three degrees, "Faith, Hope and Charity" in the Good Templars' Ritual, which have been translated into eighteen different languages and are still in use. Their children are Nicholas Du Bois, 1852, a lawyer in Easton, Pa.; Martha Ellen, who died at the age of twenty-one; Emmett C., 1858; George A., 1862; Marcella, Simeon and Catharine died in childhood.

CHAPTER XV.

[1] GENERAL EDUCATION.

Pioneer Schools—Public Schools—Academies—County Institutes—Superintendents and Teachers.

THE earliest settlers of Susquehanna County, coming as they did from Connecticut, Massachusetts, Vermont and Eastern New York, were people who highly appreciated that basal truth, "Knowledge is Power."

At that early period, amid their trials and sacrifices, they organized and sustained common schools of a valuable character. Next to their reverence for the God of their religion, perhaps, was their desire for knowledge; and few were the localities which had not at least one man or woman who was energetic in establishing a public school.

Of necessity, the school buildings were rude and simple in style. They were built of logs; the scholars sat on slab benches with faces towards the writing tables and their backs toward the centre of the room. The fire-place occupied one end of the building, and logs were used for fuel to warm the school-room.

Not a few of the early teachers undertook the preparation of this fuel as a healthy morning exercise. Pupils often traveled more than three miles to school. Many New England customs, religious and social, were firmly established by the early settlers; also the New England method of teaching. Teachers were seldom educated specially for the business, however; but the best educated among the farmers and mechanics often spent a part of each year in teaching. Male teachers taught for ten and even eight dollars a month, and a female for one dollar per week and board. Schools were kept open from three to six months in a year.

[1] Written by Professor B. E. James.

The method of hiring and paying teachers was in substance as follows: Notices of a school meeting were written and posted in the neighborhood. At the meeting a school committee was chosen in their own way, which committee selected the teacher, and exercised a general supervision over the school. The teacher was paid by the patrons of the school in proportion to the number of days they sent to the school. Not less than twenty-four and often twenty-six days were expected as a month's service. The teacher made out the rate-bills and the committee, or the teacher for them, collected the bills. Prior to the law of 1834 no assistance by public money or appropriation was given, except from "the county funds."

Aid from this source could be secured in special cases by an act passed in 1809, in the following manner: The assessor was instructed to make inquiry if any persons there were in the district so poor as to be unable to pay tuition for their children, or a part of them. In case names of such indigent children were returned to the commissioners, a warrant for the tuition of such children was drawn on the county treasurer in favor of the teacher instructing them.

According to the commissioners' books, Susquehanna County paid $273.60 in 1832 "for pupils' tuition;" the orders varying in amount from three shillings to two dollars. These orders were drawn in favor of sixty teachers. While in a majority of cases this assistance was received gratefully, in others it acted unfavorably to attendance at the schools, pupils and parents objecting to the term "County Scholars." There were no blackboards, no uniformity of text-books and little attempt at class recitation. Much time was wasted by this lack of organization. The pupil, when puzzled in arithmetic, walked across the room to the teacher, who "worked out the sum" and handed it back to the pupil, who returned to his seat.

In some of the homes of the county may be found The English Reader, The American Preceptor, Hale's History, Murray's Grammar, Webster's, Dillworth's and Cobb's Spelling-Books and Daboll's Arithmetic as representative text-books of those times. Fool's-cap paper was easily arranged into writing-books, in which the copies were written by the teacher, who used a goose-quill pen. A teacher who could make a good quill pen enjoyed, justly, an enviable prestige on account of that artistic acquirement. Occasionally ambitious boys and girls were instructed in the art.

According to Superintendent William C. Tilden's excellent report of the schools in 1877 and other available records, it is probable that the earliest common school of the county was started in Harford township in 1794. Later, schools were begun in Great Bend in 1800 and 1801; in Brooklyn in 1800; those at Great Bend were taught by Alba Dimond and Abijah Barnes, and at Brooklyn by Leonard Tracy. Mollie Post taught a school in Lenox, near Glenwood, in 1804, using a barn for a school-house till needed for hay, then closing the term under a large tree. Miss Post taught a school in Gibson in 1807. Esther Buck taught a school in Franklin in 1806, and Joshua Raynsford one in Bridgewater in 1803, having an attendance of forty-two scholars.

It is not possible within the limits assigned the present chapter to refer to many of the names of worthy pioneer teachers, or enterprising committees and trustees of common and higher schools. We are assured that all such persons will be fully presented in the detailed history of townships and boroughs. But with all their discouraging circumstances and defective methods of instruction, they accomplished an educational work which told mightily for the mental and moral future of Susquehanna County, and the work of the teachers and promoters of those schools is to be the more highly valued in view of the fact that then, even more than now, there were stubborn opposers to public education, opposers who maintained that general education was not only needless, but positively harmful.

Of the higher public and select schools, the Susquehanna Academy was incorporated by act of Assembly passed March 19, 1816; the Legislature also granting two thousand dollars towards the erection of a building in Montrose, the law then allowing appropriations for aiding public classical schools.

In 1850 a new academy building was completed at a cost of four thousand two hundred dollars. A normal school was established in this building in 1857, J. F. Stoddard being principal.

In 1863 the borough school directors leased the building for graded school purposes. It has since been known as the Montrose Graded School. Owing to the constantly-increasing demand for public education, but few branches beside those found in the common-school curriculum can be undertaken. Formerly boys were prepared for college at this school.

In 1817 the Centre School-house was built in Harford, in the edge of a beautiful and thrifty grove of evergreens; and Lyman Richardson opened in it a classical select school.

Young men were there prepared for college, teaching and the professions; and Harford became the prominent educational centre of Northern Pennsylvania. Lyman Richardson, entering the ministry, was succeeded by his brother Preston, a graduate of Hamilton College, in 1829.

Thus organized, it continued nearly forty years. This classical institution was wholly a private affair, but was the germ of the Franklin Academy, incorporated in 1836. Franklin Academy was afterward enlarged, under the more ambitious title of Harford University.

Though never a denominational school, the life of the school came largely from the Congregational Church at Harford. The annual commencement exercises grew to be elaborate affairs. The close of the term occurred the last of June. Large stages were erected under cover in a spacious field. The attendance numbered thousands, including many from adjoining counties, as well as States. Horace Greeley was once a visitor, and delivered an address. The library of the institution at one time embraced several thousand volumes. A laboratory and a large amount of philosophical apparatus added effectiveness to its course of study. The benefits of this popular institution were within the reach of those of slender means, and the accommodations for students to board themselves were so ample that the best of the youth from all parts of the country were there constantly represented.

A glance at the detailed history of Harford will show that an unusually rich harvest of distinguished men attended at some time in their careers Harford University—many reaching eminence in law, the ministry and in the faculties of colleges. Not a few have stood high in the councils of Legislatures and the United States Congress. The buildings and grounds were purchased by Charles W. Deans, and an orphan school was opened in 1865. In 1868 Henry S. Sweet took charge of the school, continuing his supervision till December, 1886, when it passed into other hands. The success of the Harford Soldiers' Orphan School has given a true worth to this noble State work in Northeastern Pennsylvania.

An academy was built at Dundaff in 1833, Hon. Almon H. Read being instrumental in procuring two thousand dollars from the State for its improvement, in 1839.

John Mann opened a select school in 1833. In 1839, with improved facilities, it was incorporated as Mannington Academy. Saint Joseph's College was opened near the site of Mannington in 1852, continuing till 1864, when it was destroyed by fire. It had an attendance of about one hundred.

Four professors and four priests, with other assistants, aided in carrying on the school. The valuable library connected with the college was lost. The college has never been rebuilt. The loss of that institution was keenly felt by the people of Choconut and adjoining localities.

A building was erected at Dimock Corners by L. H. Woodruff, in which select or academic schools were taught for many years. Some years later another building was erected, by a company of citizens, in which select schools often comprising two grades, were taught. The building finally passed into the hands of the township school directors, who have since used it for public school purposes.

A school known as the "Newtonville Seminary" was opened by Samuel Newton in 1839. This was situated about four miles from Montrose. It continued several years. A private Catholic school was taught at Susquehanna by Thomas Wall in 1856. Laurel Hill Academy, also Catholic, was established at Susquehanna in 1857. It still continues with a large attendance. This, in brief, is an outline of the private and higher schools which have existed in the county.

According to Miss Blackman's history, "In June, 1830, Hon. Almon H. Read offered three memorials from Susquehanna County, praying for a general system of education. An act to establish a general system of education, by common schools, was approved by Governor Wolf, April 1, 1834, to which an act supplementary was passed a fortnight later. Both these were still far from satisfactory to the public." Mr. Read was instrumental in afterward securing the passage of legislation more acceptable to the general public. There were those, however, who opposed persistently, and often, through the county press of those days, the principle of the majority's imposing a tax upon the whole people for the purposes of universal education.

Hon. William Jessup issued a circular to the districts urging the assembling in convention, with a view of at once adopting the amended law of 1834 and agreeing upon plans for the application of the general law throughout the county. A majority of the districts were represented and co-operated in this move.

It is a notable fact that while Harford stood in the foreground as to school privileges, that township was one of the last to accept the law of 1834. Being satisfied with their excellent high and other schools, it was with a sigh of regret that they relinquished the old régime for the new. While numbers of common schools were faithfully and cheerfully maintained according to the spirit of the school law in different localities of the county, it is unquestionable that the schools in the aggregate were greatly benefited by the enactment of 1854, which created the superintendency. It is probable, however, that no office ever commenced its history in Susquehanna County with a more bitter opposition.

Willard Richardson was chosen by the directors' convention in 1854 and his salary fixed at three hundred and fifty dollars.

Mr. Richardson's successors in office were elected in the following order:

B. F. Tewksbury, elected 1857, one term; A. N. Bullard, elected 1860, one term; E. A. Weston, elected 1863, one term; W. W. Watson, elected 1866, two years; A. W. Larrabee, appointed 1868, one year; W. C. Tilden, elected 1869, three terms; O. E. French, elected 1878, one term; B. E. James, elected 1881, two terms; U. B. Gillett, elected 1887, present incumbent.

Educational meetings were at once organized by the first superintendent, and with little intermission they have been continued during a large part of the school year to the present time.

Many were the discouragements met by the men, and successfully. It may fairly be said that Mr. Tilden, during his long and industrious term of service, first popularized public schools in Susquehanna County. He left the office with the people friendly to the public school system. His successor, O. E. French, began a movement in the line of grading salaries, consolidating terms and preparing school exhibits for the County Institute. A very perceptible elevation of the standard of scholarship in the rural schools was effected by a comparative test in arithmetic, language and penmanship undertaken throughout the county. The people of the county have rendered his successor, Mr. James, a most cheerful co-operation in any and all efforts to further perfect or newly organize educational progress or reform. An efficient school superintendency meets with a sincere appreciation by the forty thousand people of our county.

Of all the available educational agencies known to the present school system, none, perhaps, has had a more constant growth than the Teachers' Institutes. They had their inception in the "Teachers' Association," organized as early as 1853. The following is the report of the first of these, as found in one of the early newspaper files:

"At a meeting of teachers held in the courthouse at Montrose for the purpose of forming a Teachers' Association for Susquehanna County, December 31, 1853, S. T. Scott, of Bridgewater was chosen chairman and B. F. Tewksbury was made secretary. C. W. Deans, E. McKenzie, J. Jameson and George McKenzie were appointed a committee to draft a constitution. They reported a constitution, which was adopted, and S. T. Scott was chosen president; J. Jameson, vice president; B. F. Tewksbury, recording secretary; and E. McKenzie, treasurer. William H. Hayward, George McKenzie, J. Jameson, A. B. Johnston, O. E. Burtch were chosen an executive committee; E. McKenzie, S. G. Barker, and A. Johnson, business committee.

This association met in different boroughs of the county, and everywhere to the awakening of educational spirit. The names of E. A. Weston, A. N. Bullard and Amos Kent are often found on the minutes of their proceedings. This association gave place to the County Teachers' Institute, provided for by law. It meets annually at the county-seat for five days, every three days' attendance by teachers entitling the institute to one dollar, the sum not to exceed two hundred dollars, to be paid from the county treasury. In 1881 teachers actively engaged at the time of holding the institute were allowed time and wages while in attendance at its sessions. In 1884–85 this act was repealed. To the credit of the teachers be it said, no diminution in the attendance was perceived. In 1886–87 the Legislature again passed an act allowing the teachers their time while attending the institute. But the attendance and faithfulness of the teachers of Susquehanna County to the institute does not depend on legislative pressure or provision. Without such enactments the majority of the working teachers are present. Local institutes are held throughout the county yearly. Beside the work accomplished in the way of instruction in the branches and methods of teaching, the literary tastes of the teachers and public are yearly developed at these institutes. It is but a statement of fact to say that the Teachers' Institute has sustained the strongest and most popular lecture-course to be found in the county during the past two decades.

In 1868 one hundred and sixty teachers were present at the institute. In 1886 over three hundred were in attendance. Section drills, a feature of the northern tier of counties, are a prominent feature of these yearly sessions. As a result of a resolution passed by the institute in 1884, and in sympathy with the proclamation of Governor Pattison, more than one thousand trees were planted on the school grounds the two years following. A directors' organization was effected in 1885, which meets yearly with the institute, and promises to become a potent educational lever in giving support to the needed reforms urged at its sessions. The agricultural fairs held at Harford and Montrose have recognized and financially encouraged educational exhibits and contests at their displays of the last two years. A brief comparative list of school statistics of the county from the State Department may profitably take place at the close of this chapter,—

FROM THE REPORT OF 1861.

No. of school districts	33
No. of schools	261
Average no. of months taught	5.76
Salaries of male teachers (average)	$25.95
" " female " "	$17.31
No. of scholars	7190
No. of mills levied for school purposes	7.51
From State appropriation	$3,314
From taxes levied	$21,243
Total receipts	$24,557

FROM OFFICIAL REPORT OF 1886 (twenty-five years later).

No. of districts	42
No. of schools	315
Average no. of months taught	6.34
Average salaries of male teachers	$33.75
" " " female "	$20.80
No. of scholars	9446
No. of mills for school purposes	10.65
From State appropriation	$9,427.21
From taxes levied	$69,251.21
Total receipts	$78,679.42

Showing an increase in months taught and salaries paid; while the State appropriations and taxes levied for the aggregate expenditures for the maintenance of the schools have more than tripled. There are in the county seventeen borough and township graded schools, employing fifty-nine teachers. Of the present acting corps of teachers in the county, the following are known to be teachers of twenty or more years' experience: S. S. Thomas, James W. Raynor, U. B. Gillett (present superintendent), C. T. Thorpe, E. S. P. Hine, David Ring, W. L. Thacher, James Gillin, Julius Tyler, A. H. Berlin, C. W. Cook, Lydia Chamberlin, Mary Chamberlin, Mary Bradley, Anastatia Sweeney, Addie Gillett, Mattie Hayward, Mary Nicol, Katie Coleman, Minnie Burdick, Nettie Chamberlin, Helen Tyler, Frank Newell, Sarah Jones, Mary Sherer.

Probably Samuel Wright, of Great Bend township, had as lengthy an experience as a teacher in the common schools as any person who ever lived in the country. He died while teaching his one hundred and thirty-sixth term, in 1883, at the age of sixty-six. As possessing the model spirit of a teacher he was a pattern. He taught his last term, not as an "antiquated master," but as a teacher of ripe experience, keenly aware of, and fully appreciating modern facilities and ideas of instruction.

Benton Elgyn James was born at West Auburn, Susquehanna County, December 28, 1851. His grandfather, Thomas W. James, was born in New Jersey, and moved to Auburn in 1817. He was a man of powerful physique, six feet three inches tall, weighing two hundred pounds, well fitted to endure the hardships of pioneer life. He walked to Wilkes-Barre by marked trees one day, a distance of fifty miles, for a letter. He married Hannah Smith, of New Jersey, and she became a woman of some local repute in West Auburn, where she assisted in the pioneer religious work of the place. Their son, Abijah S. James, was born in West Auburn, and followed school-teaching as his principal occupation. He is a man of independence in his political and religious views. His wife was Sarah B. daughter of Dexter Marshall, who came to Susquehanna County from Vermont about 1840. Mr. Marshall was a teacher of vocal music in Forest Lake and adjoining townships. His wife, Fannie T. (Colby) Marshall, exerted considerable local influence in the churches, possessing a wonderful memory and rare powers of expression. For years she exhorted occasionally in the schoolhouses and churches in Forest Lake, Middletown and Rush, and always to respectable and attentive audiences; being bed-ridden for twenty years, she was visited by hundreds who were impressed by her conversational powers and her deep religious convictions. Abijah S. James' children are Benton E. and Harry A., who is now principal of the schools at Athens, Pa., sons; and Effie M. Dickinson, a teacher of instrumental music at Cedar Rapids, and Mrs. Cora W. Bouter, of Cavour, Dakota, daughters. Benton E. James, at two years of age, went to Canada with his parents, where his advantages in the common schools (at great painstaking on the part of his parents) were good. At the age of eight years, his parents having returned to Susquehanna County, he attended school a part of the time, working on a farm during vacations to aid a crippled father in maintaining the family. In 1863, at twelve years of age, he had the sole charge of a canal lock at Meshoppen and had to work every day, Sundays not excepted, and many times late at night, "locking boats through." On one occasion he came near losing his life by falling fourteen feet into the lock. Having learned to swim a few weeks previous, he barely kept afloat until the lock was filled with water again. At thirteen his mother died, and one year later his father, owing to failing health, was unable longer to keep his family together, and our youth, at this critical age in a boy's history, was left to care for himself. He worked for farmers in summer and did chores for his board and attended school in winter, usually making his home with T. C. James, of West Auburn, N. Sterling, of Cartertown, and Thomas S. James, of East Rush. At seventeen he taught his first school in a neighborhood known as Retta. For two years he attended select school in the fall at East Rush, and taught there in the winter. At twenty he attended the seminary at Kingston for some time, still continuing to teach in his own county. In 1877 he was graduated at the Mansfield Normal School and commenced teaching a select school at Auburn Four Corners, having an attendance of nearly one hundred pupils, about one-fourth of whom were preparing to teach. In 1880 he formed a business partnership with D. C. Titman and engaged in the mercantile business until elected county superintendent of the schools of Susquehanna County in 1881, which position he held by re-election until 1887, when he declined to be a candidate for a third term, with a view of engaging in County Institute instruction and general lecturing as future work. The six years of his incumbency of the office of county superintendent have been years of earnest work and progress. He organized the institute into class drills, planned and completed a school directors' organization in connection with the County Institute, conducted over one hundred local institutes and delivered seventy-five evening addresses in the interest of popular education and organized and pushed tree-planting on school-grounds for three years. He takes a lively interest in agriculture and in the breeding of pure-blooded cattle. Mr. James went out of office June 1, 1887, with the general feeling that he had discharged the duties of his trust with ability and fidelity, inspiring the teachers with zeal and earnestness in their work and elevating the standard of the schools. As a speaker, Prof. James is animated, instructive and entertaining, which secures the thoughtful attention of his hearers. Benton E. James married Jesse Benton Adams, October 20, 1881. Her father, Elijah Adams, born August 4, 1824, in Auburn, is now justice of the peace in that township, a man noted for his enterprise in building, having erected nearly one-half the buildings standing in and about Auburn Corners. Chester Adams, her grandfather, married Susan Sherwood, and came from Connecticut to Auburn in 1813. Elijah Adams' wife was Phebe Ann Bushnell, daughter of David Bushnell and Tirzah (Hitchcock) Bushnell, pioneer settlers in Bridgewater. The latter is still living, aged ninety-one, with her mental powers unimpaired. B. E. James has one daughter, Anna Sarah, born June 4, 1884.

Benton E. James

CHAPTER XVI.

AGRICULTURE, GRANGES AND STOCK.

Agricultural Societies—Patrons of Husbandry—Stock-Breeding.

"[1] THE first agricultural society in Susquehanna County was organized January 27, 1820, and was mainly the result of the energy and enthusiasm of Robert H. Rose. He was one of the corresponding secretaries of the Luzerne Agricultural Society, as early as 1810. The first officers of the society were R. H. Rose, president; Putnam Catlin, vice-president; Isaac Post, treasurer; J. W. Raynsford, secretary; I. P. Foster, recording secretary. The society held a meeting in September following its organization, but in December it was deemed expedient to organize anew, so as to obtain the benefits of an act of Assembly for the promotion of agricultural and domestic manufactures, passed in March preceding. The same president and secretary were re-elected December 6, 1820; Dr. Asa Park, treasurer; Colonels Fred. Bailey and Thos. Parke, D. Post, Z. Bliss, Rufus Lines, Jonah Brewster, Joab Tyler and Walter Lyon, Esqs., Messrs. Calvin Leet and William Smith, directors. The meeting was opened with prayer by Elder Davis Dimock, and was followed by an address by Dr. Rose. In this he stated:

"'The soil of the beech and maple lands which compose the greater part of Susquehanna County is a sandy loam, about eighteen inches in depth, resting on a compact bed of argillaceous earth and minute sand, which from its retentive nature is extremely well calculated to prevent the escape of moisture, and to preserve the fertilizing quality of the manures which may be intermingled with the superincumbent soil.'

"Dr. Rose was indefatigable in promoting farming interests; offered large inducements to the raising of stock; and in carrying out his own extensive plans, furnished employment to many persons—thus incidentally extending his ideas doubtless to the permanent benefit of this section.

"The first agricultural show occurred November 10, 1821. Captain Watrous' artillery company accompanied members to the court-house after they had viewed the stock, when they listened again to an address from the president. He said: 'To the hilliness of the county we are indebted for the salubrity of the air, the abundance of the springs, and the purity of the water; also, for the fewest sheep with disordered livers.' He referred to the fact that our soil is peculiarly adapted to grazing. He advised farmers to fatten cattle with grain in winter, discouraging distilleries; 'whiskey must be taken in wagons to market, but cattle can walk to market with their fat; whiskey does mischief, good beef hurts no one.' He believed one thousand dollars' worth of cattle could be driven from this county to New York or Philadelphia for the sum which it would cost to haul one thousand dollars' worth of wheat five miles.

"He stated that the cost of clearing land here was not more than the expense of hauling out the manure and ploughing old lands, and added: 'Putnam Catlin, on his first settlement, cleared a field of thirty acres; the first crop of grain paid all the expenses of clearing and those attendant on the crop, paid for the land, and left $3.00 per acre over.'

"STATEMENTS OF THE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY FOR 1821.—To personal subscriptions, personal and county donations, and paid for 1882, $177; paid the following persons premiums from $5 to $2, amounting to $109.

"To William Ross, for the best acre of wheat; David Post, best oats, and best half acre of potatoes; R. H. Rose, best quarter acre ruta baga; Jacob P. Dunn, best mare; Archie Marsh, best bull; John Griffin, best cow; Charles Perrigo, best yoke of oxen; R. H. Rose, best ram; Putnam Catlin, best ewe; William Ward, best boar; Robert Eldridge, best cheese; Peter Herkimer, greatest quantity of maple sugar (upwards of one hundred tons were manufactured the previous spring in the county); R. H. Rose, best quality of maple sugar (J. C. Sherman made 1127 pounds from 200 trees); Erastus Catlin, best woolen cloth; John Kingsley, second best do.; Putnam Catlin, best specimen flannel; S. S. Mulford, best carpeting; Samuel Weston, best specimen linen; James Dean, second best do.; Jesse Sherman, best plough; R. H. Rose, best harrow; Dalton Tiffany, greatest quantity of stone fence; Jonah Brewster, greatest quantity of harvesting without spirits; Mrs. Rice, a grass bonnet; Mrs. Emmeline Chapman, a straw bonnet; William C. Turrel, hair cloth."

[1] Blackman's "History."

In 1822 the premiums paid amounted to $89. This society seems to have discontinued about 1824. "In 1838 there were 2768 farms, average size 105 acres; 5459 acres were given to wheat, 1624 to rye, 8404 to oats, 3330 to corn; meadow, 34,792; potatoes, 2367; turnips, 73; buckwheat, 3546; flax, 195; ruta bagas, 32. There were 3998 horses, 2919 oxen, 8187 cows, 51,609 sheep, 9033 swine, 22,746 neat cattle of all kinds. Butter sold, 257,325 lbs.; cheese, 58,559 lbs.; maple-sugar, 293,783 lbs."

The first call for a meeting of farmers and mechanics, with practical results, was made January 7, 1846. On the 26th following a meeting was held at the court-house, at which a meeting of fifteen from the different townships were appointed to draft a constitution, and another of three to prepare a circular calling attention to the subject; and a committee of five from each township to attend a meeting for organization. A permanent organization was effected March 4, 1846, with the following officers:

Caleb Carmalt, president; Benjamin Lathrop, Thomas Johnson, vice-presidents; Thomas Nicholson, corresponding secretary; George Fuller, recording secretary; D. D. Warner, treasurer; William Jessup, Wm. Main, Frederick Bailey, George Walker, Chas. Tingley, Abraham Du Bois and Stephen Barnum, executive commttee. A constitution and by-laws had been drafted the day before at Judge Jessup's office. August 24, 1864, Thomas Nicholson, M. L. Catlin, Charles F. Reed, S. S. Mulford, Daniel Brewster, S. H. Mulford, B. S. Bentley, William L. Post, Albert Beardsley, Azur Lathrop, M. C. Tyler, C. L. Brown, Henry C. Tyler, W. H. Boyd, Henry Drinker, A. Chamberlin, W. K. Hatch, F. B. Chandler, W. W. Smith, William Jessup, W. H. Jessup, G. A. Jessup, A. Baldwin, J. P. W. Riley, L. C. Keeler, J. W. Chapman, D. R. Lathrop, Daniel Sayre, W. J. Mulford petition for a charter for the Susquehanna County Agricultural Society, which, upon motion of William H. Jessup for the petitioners, was granted by the court.

The first fair-ground was upon the land of David Post, adjoining the garden of G. V. Bentley on the south. Mr. Post gave the use of the land for that purpose. In November, 1861, the society procured one hundred and three and one-half acres of land in the upper part of the borough of Avery Frink, which, with additions, constitutes the present fair-ground. The grounds are inclosed with a board fence and contain an exhibition building twenty by eighty, with two wings twenty by thirty-four, stalls for stock and no race-course. The location is elevated and rather romantic; the view from this point is extended and picturesque. The existing books of the society date from 1861. At least two presidents had succeeded Caleb Carmalt previous to that year,—William Jessup and Henry Drinker. The officers since 1861 have been as follows:

Presidents: Abel Cassidy, M. L. Catlin, Samuel F. Carmalt, Benjamin Parke, J. C. Morris, William H. Jessup, James E. Carmalt, C. M. Gere, H. Skinner, William J. Turrell, A. Lathrop, H. Brewster, H. H. Harrington, R. S. Searle, J. H. Munger, John S. Tarbell. William H. Jessup has been president the greatest number of times.

Vice-Presidents: J. F. Deane, J. Blanding, W. H. Jessup, S. F. Carmalt, B. Barker, Stephen Breed, R. S. Birchard, H. M. Jones, M. L. Catlin, H. H. Harrington, David Summers, E. T. Tiffany, Eli Barnes, John Tewksbury, F. H. Hollister, James Kasson, H. H. Skinner, C. J. Hollister, H. C. Conklin, Abner Griffis, E. C. Potter, H. K. Sherman, Friend Hollister, Abner Griffis, Avery Frink, C. M. Crandall, W. H. Jones, A. Lathrop, H. M. Bailey, D. Brewster, C. F. Watrous, P. C. Conklin, J. H. Williams, H. C. Jessup, D. C. Titman, D. Sayre, William White.

Recording Secretaries: C. L. Brown, C. M. Gere, C. W. Tyler, G. A. Jessup, M. M. Mott, H. C. Tyler, Jerome R. Lyons, D. T. Brewster, A. D. Birchard, E. C. Smith, Myron Kasson, D. A. Titsworth.

Corresponding Secretaries: C. M. Gere, A. N. Bullard, C. L. Brown, C. W. Tyler, J. E. Carmalt, G. A. Jessup, J. R. Lyons, William A. Crossman, J. F. Butterfield, John F. Hunter, H. C. Tyler, H. C. Jessup, D. Sayre.

Treasurers: Azur Lathrop, C. M. Gere, B. L. Baldwin, H. C. Tyler, M. J. Harrington.

Executive Committee (first appointed in 1863): Alfred Baldwin, S. F. Carmalt, J. C. Morris, F. H. Hollister, J. S. Tarbell, J. E. Carmalt, A. Frink, H. H. Skinner, H. H. Harrington, D. F. Austin, Allen Shelden, Henry Sherman, John C. Morris, J. F. Butterfield, A. L. Kent, J. H. Munger, H. Lake, J. M. France, John Hunter.

Members of the executive committee are elected for three years, one each year, so that the committee consists of three members. The names of officers and committeemen have not been repeated, although many of them have served a number of years in the same office. The officers elected for 1887 are: President, A. Lathrop; First Vice-President, R. S. Searle; Second Vice-President, Myron Kasson; Treasurer, John R. Raynsford; Secretary, D. A. Titsworth; Cor. Secretary, J. H. Munger.

Various changes have been made in the constitution and by-laws from time to time, in order to adapt the society to changed conditions. The Fortieth Exhibition was held September 16 and 17, 1886. Exhibitors were permitted to enter animals or articles free of charge, excepting horses. Among other things, there was an exhibition of pupils' work in the common schools.

[1]PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY.—A grange of the Order of Patrons of Husbandry was organized January 9, 1874, at the Tarbell House, in Montrose, by S. W. Buck, Deputy of the National Grange. This organization has for its objects the uniting of the farmers in one common brotherhood, in order to develop a higher manhood and womanhood among them. To this end, women are eligible to membership and office in the order. The better education of the farmer and his family in order that he may make his home more attractive, co-operations in buying and selling, opposition to monopoly in all its forms, high salaries, high rates of interest, and exorbitant profits in trade are matters that receive attention in the order. Its members desire the protection of every true interest of our land by legitimate transactions, legitimate trade and legitimate profits. It is not a political or party organization, does not discuss religious or political questions in its meetings, never calls political meetings or conventions nor nominates candidates; yet the principles it teaches underlie all true politics, all true statesmanship, and if properly carried out, will tend to purify the whole political atmosphere of our country; for it seeks the greatest good of all. No person by joining it has to leave the political party with which he affiliates; on the contrary, he feels it incumbent upon him to do all in his power to influence for good the action of his party—to put down bribery, corruption and trickery, and see that none but competent, faithful and honest men are nominated for positions of trust, and to try and carry out the principle that the office should seek the man and not the man the office.

After this grange was thoroughly organized, the first to apply for admission to its membership was F. H. Bunnell, of Dimock, and he was the first man initiated in Susquehanna Grange, No. 74, and his wife, Mrs. Harriet Bunnell, was the first woman to take the four degrees of the order in this grange. They are both members of Grange, No. 74, Pomona Grange, No. 7, and the State Grange of Pennsylvania. Mr. Bunnell is at present the Deputy of the southern portion of the county. This grange movement rapidly spread over the county, some sixteen or seventeen granges were soon organized, and the order had a membership of one thousand or more; but as many persons went into it for the purpose of making money out of it, and many more from mere curiosity, many of the granges soon became dormant, and remain so to this day, while others, that had members that studied the true principles of the order, lived and flourished, and have became a power for good in the county; and to-day the order has a large membership, composed of men and women that know the teachings of the order and believe in them. And as the children get old enough, they are taking them to the grange, where they will become educated in such a manner that they will become farmers and citizens that the county will be proud of. The fact that there are a couple of empty Grange Halls in the county does not argue that the order is dead, any more than a couple of empty churches would argue that the Christian religion has died out in the county. The nine live granges in the county are doing such effective work as will ere long revive many more of the dormant ones and make some new ones besides—and may the good work go on until all the agricultural toilers in this county are united in this noble fraternity, is the wish of the Deputy, F. H. Bunnell.

[1] Written by F. H. Bunnell.

Susquehanna Grange, No. 74, South Montrose. Organized January 9, 1874, by S. W. Buck, Deputy of National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry. Master, R. S. Searle; Secretary, J. R. Lyons; Charter Members, R. S. Searle, M. L. Catlin, Horace Brewster, Apollos Stone, L. C. Smith, O. M. Hall, E. L. Cool, J. R. Lyons, Kirby Bunnell, John S. Tarbell, I. G. Lake, G. S. Johnson, D. A. McCracken, N. S. Harrison, J. W. Allen, F. H. Hollister, M. M. Mott, H. H. Harrington, J. F. Hunter, C. J. Hollister, Jacob Tewksbury, Margaret Lake, A. S. Hall, S. A. Bunnell, L. B. Stone, Ellen E. Searle, Anna E. Lyons, R. A. Allen, J. N. Catlin, H. C. Harrison, S. E. Harrington, E. C. Hunter, Lucy Smith, Chloe Tewksbury. Present Master, Silas Decker; Secretary, F. H. Bunnell.

Auburn Grange, No. 101, organized by S. W. Buck, February 7, 1874. Good hall and active membership. Charter members, Alexander Stevens, J. M. France, Elijah Crane, Norman Sterling, I. R. Low, Wm. White, Jr., W. W. Lee, G. Carter, Daniel Seely, Amasa Wilcox, G. W. Kirkhuff, John C. Rifenbury, Emmett Tewksbury, J. B. Young, W. H. Ming, C. W. Pierson, M. H. Vanscoten, W. N. Bennett, George Harris, Mrs. J. M. France, Christine Harris, Mrs. W. W. Lee, Dianna Wilcox, Sallie Sterling, Jeanette Stevens, Mrs. E. Ming, Mrs. C. W. Pierson, Mrs. G. Carter, Mrs. Daniel Seely, Floyd Tewksbury.

Brooklyn Grange, No. 246, organized by S. W. Buck, May 8, 1874; reorganized by R. S. Searle, November 20, 1884. Master, H. W. Kent; Secretary, E. G. Williams; Charter members, H. W. Kent, E. H. Westen, J. J. Roper, G. I. Giles, G. B. Rogers, C. F. Perigo, E. G. Williams, E. F. Stephens, A. E. Waldie, D. S. Watrous, Ansel Sterling, Ralph Sterling, Lodowick Bailey, George Sterling, Fred Miller, Mrs. E. H. Westen, Mrs. G. I. Giles, Mrs. J. J. Roper, Mrs. E. F. Stephens, Mrs. A. E. Waldie, Mrs. R. Sterling, Mrs. D. S. Watrous, Mrs. L. Bailey, Mrs. George Sterling, Mrs. Fred Miller.

Union Grange, No. 152, Lathrop, organized by S. W. Buck, March 5, 1874. Master, G. S. Bronson; Secretary, C. R. Bailey; Charter members, P. S. Bronson, S. P. Mack, G. S. Mackey, Jesse Silvius, M. V. Bisbee, C. R. Bailey, J. E. Sanders, G. C. Bronson, R. O. Silvius, Z. Mackey, I. A. Hotchkiss, C. W. Parker, H. G. Mack, H. B. Wood, Mrs. A. E. Bronson, Mrs. C. C. Risley, Mrs. J. E. Mack, Mrs. E. Bailey, Mrs. K. Bisbee, Mrs. Esther Mackey, Miss Mina Mackey, Miss Lizzie Bronson, Miss Mattie Mackey; reorganized by F. H. Bunnell, December 11, 1886.

Middletown Grange, No. 172, organized March 20, 1874, by S. W. Buck. Master, Geo. L. Wells; Secretary, L. A. Howard; Charter members, Geo. L. Wells, J. J. Canfield, L. W. Camp, J. W. Lewis, L. A. Howard, Chas. Camp, E. Stedwell, A. I. Coleman, Samuel Dodge, N. W. Bauman, P. S. Ross, A. I. Lewis, John Alderson, J. W. Bent, F. E. Briggs, G. H. Hurdy, O. H. Coleman, G. N. Deimm, M. A. Shafer, Henry Alderson, Mrs. E. J. Stedwell, Mrs. Sarah Coleman, Miss Lucy I. Wells, Miss Media Camp, Miss Anna J. Ross, Mrs. S. A. Lewis, Mrs. A. Lewis, Mrs. J. J. Canfield, Mrs. Mary Alderson, Miss Mary Alderson.

East Bridgewater Grange, No. 187, organized by R. S. Searle, November 19, 1874. Master, Samuel Smyth; Secretary, S. Jewett; Charter members, Samuel Smyth, S. Jewett, Daniel McCollum, C J. Curtis, Wm. C. Curtis, John C. Curtis, N. O. Passmore, A. J. Baldwin, H. Griffin, Geo. Mackey, S. Frink, J. Baldwin, Daniel Stewart, Libbie Jewett, Jennie Smyth, Mary Curtis, Mary Passmore, Harriet Frink, Chas. Curtis, L. E. Baldwin, I. C. Mackey, Eva Fort, Mrs. S. Kennard.

Franklin Grange, No. 263, organized by R. S. Searle, May 12, 1874. Master, Benj. Vance; Secretary, David Marsh; Charter members, Benj. C. Vance, R. R. Bailey, David Mursh, John P. Fish, Wm. Watson, L. B. Cole, F. L. Smith, John J. Stockholm, N. S. Buck, E. C. Parks, H. W. Ives, A. L. Southworth, Wm. Meeker, Jr., D. B. Townsend, Mrs. Kate Vance, Mrs. Cora Bailey, Mrs. Maria Mursh, Mrs. Mary Buck, Mrs. M. E. Cole, Mrs. H. Watson, Mrs. Elizabeth Smith.

Springville Grange, No. 266, organized by Roger S. Searle, State Deputy, May 20, 1874.

Master, H. R. Sherman; Secretary, A. D. Woodhouse; Charter members, H. R. Sherman, A. D. Woodhouse, F. A. Muzzy, Ezra Schooley, James Wallace, Wm. Main, O. F. Blakeslee, John Main, S. S. Tyler, J. I. S. Wallace, Samuel Blakeslee, Asher Quick, Amy P. Sherman, R. P. Muzzy, G. Schooley, Sarah Tyler, Mary Blakeslee, E. Woodhouse, Ruth Quick.

Jackson Grange, No. 342, organized by R. S. Searle, State Deputy, September 22, 1874. Charter members.—H. H. Stoddard, H. W. Tyler, J. R. Crandall, H. D. Corse, Avery W. Barrett, Alvin W. Barrett, Edson Barrett, I. C. Hill, Stephen Barnard, E. C. Chandler, Friend Barrett, H. A. Barrett, H. S. Stoddard, T. J. Tallman, S. E. Morse, E. O. Perry, Mrs. H. H. Stoddard, Mrs. H. W. Tyler, Mrs. J. R. Crandall, Mrs. A. D. Corse.

This Grange never became dormant; it has a good hall, and store-room well filled with goods, and an active membership.

Milford Grange, No. 289, organized by State Deputy R. S. Searle, June 20, 1874. Master, Jno. Bisbee; Secretary, George Williams; Charter members, G. S. Corwin, L. A. Smith, Jno. Bisbee, S. P. Smith, C. Fletcher, J. W H. Bradford, F. Wellman, G. N Wellman, G. P. Terwillager, J. P. Harding, William Harding, J. W. Bennett, O. Bennett, Mrs. M. Corwin, A. A. Bisbee, A. Smith, Jane Wellman, Sarah Wellman, F. E. Terwillager, Mrs. Carrie Bennett, E. R. Bennett, Julia A. Davis.

Rising Sun Grange, No. 417, of Forest Lake, organized by State Deputy R. S. Searle, December 17, 1874. Has a good big hall, good membership and is in a flourishing condition. Master, Levi Birchard; Secretary, Randolph Turrell; Charter Members, Levi Birchard, H. F. Handrick, Randolph Turrell, Lester Turrell, W. G. Small, W. C. Small, A. B. Griffis, E. Griffis, Perry Birdsall, E. L. Rinevault, Philip Rinevault, S. R. Wright, Albert Ball, Edward Ball, A. S. Horton, J. E. Birchard, F. S. Turrell, S. Turrell, Phœbe A. Small, Theresa Small, Aggie Griffis, Cipena Griffis, Julia Birdsall, Rebecca Rinevault, Martha Rinevault.

Harford Grange, No. 418, organized by State Deputy R. S. Searle. Master, Abel T. Sweet; Secretary, D. P. Brewster; Charter members, Watson Jeffers, A. T. Sweet, C. A. Stearns, T. Brewster, D. P. Brewster, Andrew Adams, S. Alworth, Geo. Lindsley, Geo. Whitney, O. P. Tiffany, O. L. Hine, E. N. Carpenter, Walter Wilmarth, Horace Lindsley, G. Hotchkiss, L. E. Carpenter, S. E. Carpenter, L. Moore, Geo. Fort, Mrs. W. Wilmarth, Mrs. W. Jeffers, Mrs. A. T. Sweet, Mrs. D. P. Brewster, Mrs. L. Brewster, Mrs. A. J. Adams, Mrs. L. Moore, Mrs. M. J. Alworth, Mrs. G. Whitney.

Cascade Grange, No. 452, organized by State Deputy R. S. Searle, January 23, 1875. Master, Geo. McKune; Secretary, P. L. Norton; Charter members, Geo McKune, John Warbomes, J. F. McKune, J. R. Comfort, L. E. Shutts, W. W. Watrous, B. F. McKune, G. E. McKune, C. F. Bailey, P. L. Norton, Francis Comfort, Julia McKune, Delia Watrous, Mary McKune, Nina Muse, Sarah Norton, Sarah Bailey, L. M. Shutts, Betsey McKune.

Niven Grange, No. 457, Springville, organized by State Deputy R. S. Searle, January 28, 1874. Master, Jerry Stephens; Secretary, S. G. Lewis; Charter members, Jerry Stephens, H. Stark, Calvin Mangett, T. L. Conklyn, M. Stephens, John Thomas, A. G. Lewis, A. A. Stark, D. Stark, John Oakley, Jasper Billings, Oliver Squier, Albert Squier, Rosetta Stephens, Sarah Conklyn, Amelia Smith, Sarah E. Lewis, Mary Stark, Emeline Billings, Nancy Palmester, F. Stark, Elizabeth Squier, Eva Squier.

Topeka Grange, No. 458, Silver Lake, organized by State Deputy R. S. Searle, January 29, 1875. Master, C. H. Clarke; Secretary, T. H. Gage; Charter members, C. H. Clarke, T. H. Gage, S. R. Wilbur, B. M. Gage, J. C. Gage, M. D. Lee, W S. Meeker, H. F. Indelied, W. J. Wilbur, D. C. Cameron, A. M. Gage, Thos. Rogers, Jr., Antoinette Gage, S. Wilbur, S. S. Clarke, Lydia Gage, Jane S. Gage, E. M. Lee, Hannah Wilbur, Melissa Cameron, A. M. Meeker, Hattie Gage.

Clifford Grange, No. 514, organized by State Deputy R. S. Searle, March 27, 1875. Master, Reese Hughes; Secretary, C. L. Halstead; Charter members, Reese Hughes, J. B. Stephens, Thos. Maxey, H. Cudderback, Jas. Decker, W.

R. S. Searle

A. Tincker, John Bolton, D. L. Richards, L. C. Abers, J. G. Wetherby, S. D. Robinson, A. A. Lindley, Wm. Barber, J. R. Bennett, J. Halstead, H. Rivenburgh, C. L. Halstead, Warren Halstead, Mrs. Rivenburgh, E. Tingley, Mrs. B. F. Halstead, Mrs. R. L. Rivenburgh, Mrs. M. A. Decker, Salome Stephens, A. Hasbruck, Elsie Robinson, Hannah Cudderback, C. S. Halstead, Minerva Hobbs, Charity Rivenburgh.

Gibson Grange, No. 798, organized by State Deputy R. S. Searle, March 11, 1886. Charter members, G. R. Berry, Rufus Barnes, E. R. Gelatt, D. S. Walter, G. P. Barnes, R. W. Gelatt, R. T. Smith, E. O. Perry, Mrs. G. R. Berry, Mrs. Rufus Barnes, Mrs. E. R. Gelatt, D. S. Walter, Mrs. O. P. Walter.

Elk Lake Grange, No. 806, organized by State Deputy F. H. Bunnell, August 1, 1886, Master, Otis B. Titus; Secretary, V. N. Young; Charter members, Otis B. Titus, V. N. Young, Isaac B. Woodhouse, Elijah Lathrop, B. L. Brush, H. C. Miles, A. W. Fargo, J. G. Cart, Harry Lyon, John Tyler, John Ralston, G. T. Lowe, James Lathrop, Wealthy M. Titus, Rose Woodhouse, Emma Griswold, Sabra Brush, Mary Miles, Anna Fargo, Adelia Cart, Dora Lyon, M. A. Young, Dora Tyler, Hester Ralston, Emily E. Henry, Jennie E. Henry, Lizzie Henry, Frankie Lathrop, Dell Lathrop.

Highland Grange, No. 339, Oakland, was organized with the following officers and charter members: L. E. Griffis, Master; S. J. Northrop, Secretary; charter members, S. J. Northrop, E. Bradford, Orrin Foster, Theodore Galloway, Warren Estabrook, L. E. Griffis, A. F. Galloway, Wm. W. Blaisdell, Sylvester Griffis, Henry Helmer, Chas. Bradford, Hanna M. Bradford, Mrs. C. M. Northrop, N. A. Foster, Ella A. Estabrook, Mrs. B. C. Griffis, Mrs. J. W. Galloway, J. M. Bradford, Mercy A. Galloway, Hulda Blaisdell, Aurilla Griffis.

ROGER S. SEARLE, eldest son of Daniel and Johannah (Stark) Searle, was born at the homestead in Pittston, Luzerne County, September 24, 1826, and came to Montrose with his parents the following year. He was educated at the Moravian School at Nazareth, Pa., John Mann's Academy, St. Joseph, and at the Montrose Academy. At the age of fourteen he began a clerkship in the store of his father and Uncle Rasselas, where he remained, together with attending school, until he reached his majority. His father had purchased a large timber property in Lathrop township, this county, and in connection with his other business was manufacturing lumber and shipping to various markets.

Immediately after becoming of age Roger succeeded his father in this lumber business, manufacturing and shipping down the Susquehanna to Columbia and Baltimore. He took large contracts for the supply of timber and lumber, and furnished the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, from a point on that road at Nicholson, with quantities of pine and oak and wood for fuel.

He shipped timber to Richmond, Va., and furnished timber for the Smithsonian Institute at Washington, D. C., under contract with one Sniffen. Upon the breaking out of the Rebellion in 1861 he discontinued his business, and, under the solicitation of Generals Meylert and Morris, gathered together a large number of men in that vicinity and went to Harrisburg. Most of these men enlisted in the three months' service. Mr. Searle at once entered service as sergeant-major, under Colonel Seiler and Colonel Biddle. After the act of May 15th, creating the Pennsylvania Reserves, he enlisted in Company B, under Captain Harding, was transferred to Company H, Fourth Pennsylvania Reserves, and went with his regiment to Baltimore on July 21st, the day of the fight at Bull Run. There he was detailed in the Medical Directory under Doctor Page, where he remained until the regiment was ordered to Tenallytown. He rejoined his regiment, was appointed hospital steward and, a short time afterwards, sergeant-major Fourth Pennsylvania Reserves, and served in that capacity until Christmas. Under an order from Governor Curtin he returned and raised a company of men for the Twelfth Pennsylvania Reserves, mostly from Susquehanna and Wyoming Counties, and took them to Harrisburg. Among the number were Ira and Loren Burritt; the former became captain of a company, the latter colonel of a colored regiment, and, after his return from the war, a member of the Legislature. Mr. Searle subsequently, after recovering from sickness consequent upon camp life, went as a volunteer in the hospital department under Doctor Horn to the Peninsula, and was there during the Seven Days' Fight. He was appointed drill-master by Governor Curtin at the camp that bore his name, where for one year he drilled four companies of cavalry and four companies of infantry, the latter commanded by Captains M. C. Morris and Isaac S. Little. These, together with two companies of militia, were commanded by Major-General Reynolds, and formed the advance guard, ready to be called upon if required, at the battle of Antietam; none, however, were ordered into the fight.

Mr. Searle returned with the eight companies to Camp Curtin, where he remained until the Wyoming regiment was formed, when he was tendered a major's commission, but was unable to accept on account of disability and returned home. In the spring of 1863 he took charge of his father's real estate in the county, and one year later settled at the foot of Jones' Lake, in Bridgewater, on the property which his father had purchased in 1848, where he has continued to reside since.

Mr. Searle has been greatly interested in agriculture and in everything that would improve the condition of the farmer. He was the prime mover in organizing the first Grange—Susquehanna, No. 74—of which he was elected master, and made State Deputy. He subsesequently organized Granges at New Milford, Brooklyn, Jackson, Highland, Union, Harford, Clifford, Rising Sun, Topeka, Auburn, Springville, East Springville, Lanesboro' and at Damascus, Starrucca and Dyberry, Wayne Co. He was elected in the fall of 1885 member of the executive committee of the State Grange. Mr. Searle was elected president of the Susquehanna Agricultural Society in 1884, and in January, 1885, he was elected a representative of the State Board of Agriculture for three years. He was influential with the State Board in obtaining an appropriation for the establishment of a Farmers' Institute, which was organized at Montrose in May, 1886, of which he was elected president. During his residence at Nicholson, while engaged in the lumber business, he had charge of the stage line from Montrose to Scranton, a section of the route from Great Bend to New York, and continued the management of this until it was superseded by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad. Mr. Searle is an advocate of temperance, and strongly urges every measure calculated to promote its principles and put down the liquor traffic. He married, in 1858, Ellen, a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Barry Croad) Spaulding, the former a native of Vermont, who settled in Lathrop township, the latter a native of London, England. She was born November 17, 1836. Their children are Anna C.; Barry, an analytical chemist at Hurley, Wisconsin, who was graduated at Lehigh University; Ellen; and Daniel Searle.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE.—The Farmers' Institute of Susquehanna County was organized at the court-house at Montrose May 5, 1886. Roger S. Searle, who had been the prime mover in the enterprise, called the meeting to order, and the organization was effected by electing H. H. Harrington president, and D. D. Lathrop secretary. Later, Mr. Harrington resigned and Mr. Searle was elected president. On motion of J. S. Tarbell, W. W. Williams and William H. Jones were chosen vice-presidents.

Hon. J. B. McCollum delivered the opening address in the interests of agriculture, and during the two days' session many speeches were made and valuable papers read, among which were the following:

"The Vital Needs of Industry," by E. A. Weston, of Brooklyn; "How we manage our Dairy," by E. G. Ball, Forest Lake; "How to make Home Happy," by Mrs. E. A. Weston, Brooklyn; "The Progress and Art of Agriculture," by Roger S. Searle, Bridgewater; "Fruits and Trees," by E. A. Weston, Brooklyn; "The New Agriculture; or, The Waters led Captive," by Hon. A. N. Cole, Wellsville, N. Y.; "Small versus Large Farms," by Hon. N. F. Underwood, Lake Como, Pa.; "The Art of Breeding," by James E. Carmalt, Friendsville; "A Practical Education," by Mr. James, superintendent of schools; "General Farm Topics," address by Colonel Victor E. Piolett, Wysox, Pa.; "Disease of our Farm Animals," by J. F. Butterfield, South Montrose; "Legislation for the Protection of Farmers," by Roger S. Searle; "Twenty Years' Experience with Ayrshires," by Christopher Byrne, Choconut; "Experiments on Five Acres," by S. B. Eldridge, Brooklyn; "Devons," by William H. Jones, South Montrose; "Farm Life for the Young," by Rev. W. C. Tilden, Forest Lake; "Sheep Husbandry," by L. T. Birchard, Birchardville; "Graded Schools," by Prof. A. H. Berlin, Montrose; "Advanced Agriculture," by Hon. J. H. Selkreg, Ithaca, N. Y.

A committee of five was appointed to report a plan of permanent organization. This committee, on Thursday, made the following report:

"The undersigned committee of the Farmers' Institute respectfully report that the following citizens of Susquehanna County, in their respective townships, be invited to join under the leadership of Mr. Roger Searle as chairman, until this convention is called, organized and elects his successor, and appoint such executive committee as they may think proper to organize a series of institutes as may seem best to hold the farmers of the county in working harmony to protect their united interest:

"Apolacon, Samuel Rice; Ararat, James Bushnell; Auburn, C. E. Davis; Bridgewater, Roger Searle; Brooklyn, Frank Kent; Clifford, F. S. Green; Choconut, Christopher Byrne; Dimock, F. H. Bunnell; Franklin, R. K. Bailey; Forest Lake, Lester Turrell; Gibson, E. B. Potter; Great Bend township, John Crosson; Harmony, Charles Beebe; Herrick, Silas Churchill; Harford, A. T. Sweet; Jackson, E. O. Perry; Jessup, William Clark; Lathrop, P. S. Bronson; Lenox, Warren Tingely; Liberty, Theron Smith; Middletown, Samuel Davis; New Milford township, Jasper T. Jennings; Oakland, George Squires; Rush, Clark Kinney; Silver Lake, Thomas Patton; Springville, Samuel Shook.

"All of which is respectfully submitted.

"C. E. Davis.
"E. O. Perry.
"F. H. Bunnell.
"M. J. Harrington,
"James E. Carmalt."
"Committee.

"Montrose, May 6, 1886."

By an act of the State Legislature during its session in 1886, one thousand dollars was voted the counties of the State for the purpose of establishing Farmers' Institutes. In accordance with this law, Susquehanna County received an appropriation of one hundred and eight dollars from the State Board of Agriculture for the purpose of organizing the Institute.

The second Farmers' Institute for Susquehanna County was held at Montrose, in the court-house, February 9 and 10, 1887, Roger S. Searle, chairman; Charles F. Watrous and Charles Bailey, secretaries. James E. Carmalt, Esq., of Apolacon, made the opening address. Papers were read by E. A. Weston on "Roads and Road-Making;" Mrs. M. H. France on "How to Induce the Children to Stay on the Farm;" Mrs. H. Mary Tewksbury on the subject of poultry-raising; Jasper T. Jennings on the "Duty of Farmers to Organize;" G. A. Lathrop, D.V.S., gave a talk on pleuro-pneumonia and tuberculosis; F. H. Hollister on butter-making; W. L. Sterling on "Winter Dairying." George E. Resseguie read an essay on "Strawberry Culture;" W J. Baker, of Dimock, on "Horse-Breeding; S. W. Lester, of Troy, Bradford County, gave his experience in running a creamery. The inequality of taxation was discussed and denounced. Chairman Searle called out a young man by the name of Frank Carter, who gave a very encouraging account of farming in Susquehanna County, as follows:

"I have 70 acres of cleared land, and from that land everything had been taken off, and nothing put back for 12 years. I bought it April 1, 1884. I put on 12 cows that year and from those cows the first year I made 1800 pounds of butter and sold it at 20 cents per pound. My receipts that year were 1800 lbs. butter, at 20 cents per pound, $360; veal and calves raised, $72; pork sold, $50, potatoes, $75. I bought 8 cows and wintered them. The first of April, 1885, found me with 18 cows and 3 yearlings. I made from those 18 cows that year 3600 pounds of butter and sold it at 25 cents per pound, making $900. My other receipts that year were, pork sold, $100; veal and calves raised, $140; poultry and eggs sold, $30. The first of April, 1866, found me with 24 cows. I have made this year, or will by April 1, 1887, 5500 pounds of butter and sell it at 25 cents per pound, making $1375; other receipts, calves, $125; pork, $10; poultry, $30; apples, $30. During the year I have fed $300 worth of grain and have cleared $50.44 per head from my cows. I fed ensilage to all my stock, horses included."

[1] Principles of Stock-Breeding. — All breeding is founded on the principle that like begets like. This is, however, liable to some exceptions, and is much more generally true when breeding down than when breeding up. If two animals (which can never be exactly similar in all respects) are requisite to the perpetuation of the species, it necessarily results that the progeny must differ more or less, from each parent. With wild animals, and such of the domestic animals as are allowed to propagate without the interference of art, and whose habits, treatment and food are nearly similar to their natural condition, the change through successive generations is scarcely perceptible. It is only when we attempt to improve their good qualities that it is essential carefully to determine and rigidly to apply what are adopted as the present scientific principles of breeding. We cannot believe that we have penetrated beyond the mere threshold of this art. Unless, then, we launch into experiments, which are necessarily attended with uncertainty, our duty will be to take for our guide the most successful practice of modern times, until further discoveries enable us to modify or add to such as are already known and adopted. We may assume, then, as the present rules for this art:

[1] By Wm. H. Jones.

First. That the animals selected for breeding should unite in themselves all the good qualities we wish to perpetuate in the offspring.

Second. These qualities, technically called points, should be inbred in the animals, as far as practicable, by a long line of descent from parents similarly constituted. The necessity for this rule is evident from the fact that in mixing different species, and especially mongrels, with a long-established breed, the latter will most stamp the issue with its own peculiarities. This is forcibly illustrated in the case of the Devon cattle, an ancient race, whose color, form and characteristics are strikingly perpetuated, sometimes to the sixth, or even a later generation. So far is this principle carried by many experienced breeders, that they will use an animal of indifferent external appearance, but of approved descent (blood), in preference to a decidedly superior one, whose pedigree is imperfect.

Third. All the conditions of soil, situation, treatment and food should be favorable to the object sought.

Fourth. As a general rule, the female should be relatively larger than the male. This gives ample room for the perfect development of the fœtus, easy parturition, and a large supply of milk for the offspring, at a period in its existence, when food has greater influence in perfecting character and form than at any subsequent time.

Pairing should be with a strict reference to correcting the imperfections of one animal by a corresponding excellence in the other. The in and in breeding, or propagating from animals nearly allied, may be tolerated under certain circumstances, though seldom, and only in extreme cases between those of the same generation, as brother and sister. When the animal possesses much stamina and peculiar merit, which it is desired to perpetuate in the breed, it may be done either in the ascending or descending line, as in breeding the son to the parent, or the parent to his own progeny. This has been practiced with decided advantage, and in some cases has even been continued successively as low as the sixth generation. It is always better to avoid too close relationship, by the selection of equally meritorious stock-getters of the same breed from other sources. Wholesome, nutritious food, at all times sufficient to keep the animals steadily advancing, should be provided; but it is always best to avoid too much of the fat-producing kind, as young calves must never be allowed to get fat, only when intended for the butcher; of the two evils, starving is preferable to surfeit. Careful treatment, and the absence of disease, must be always fully considered. Animals should never be allowed to breed either too early or too late in life. The periods cannot be arbitrarily laid down, but must depend on their time of maturity, the longevity of the breed and the stamina of the individual. Effect of the first impregnation upon future progeny. Farmers who are breeders on a small scale are sometimes careless as to the male serving their cows or mares for the first time, the argument being too often used that the first produce is seldom worth raising, and anything will answer until they see how they will breed, etc., and if the animal proves to be a good breeder, as they term it, they will next time use a better sire. This is a sad mistake. When our breeders realize that the first impregnation exercises a powerful effect upon subsequent ones, and in some cases may even nullify those which will follow, we will have taken a very important step forward, and one which in the future will show its results in our farm animals. We might and, only that space forbids, could write pages citing cases to prove the correctness of this theory, but a few must suffice. The writer has known cases where mares have raised mules, and afterwards colts; those colts had the appearance of mules, and the mares could never after be depended upon for raising fine horses. A gentleman had a lot of pure-bred hens, and lost his rooster, and used one of another breed one season; of course the progeny was a cross between the two. He sold all of the progeny and the rooster, and obtained a pure-bred rooster, and kept all of his hens. He now had a pure rooster and pure hens, and the second year's progeny was quite as much on the mixed order as the first. Chester White sows have been bred to Berkshire boars, in which the former produced more spotted pigs when bred to white boars at the second impregnations than their first litters.

We have now explained the principles of breeding, and deem it necessary to explain the general form and characteristics; within certain limits these may be reduced to a common standard. All animals should have a good head, well set up; a clean, fine muzzle, and a bright, clear and full, yet perfectly placid eye. With the exception of the dog and cat, whose original nature is ferocious, and whose whole life, unless diverted from their natural instincts, is given to plunder and prey, and the race-horse, which is required to take the purse, at any hazard of life and limb to the groom, a mild, quiet eye is indispensable to the profitable use of the domestic animal. The neck should be well formed, not too long, tapering to its junction with the head, and gradually enlarging to a firm, well-expanded attachment to the back, shoulders and breast. The back or chine should be short, straight and broad; the ribs springing out from the backbone nearly at right angles, giving a round appearance to the carcass, and reaching well behind to a close proximity to the hip; tail well set on and full at its junction with the body, yet gradually tapering to fineness; thighs, fore-arms and crops well developed; projecting breast, or brisket; the forelegs straight, and hind ones properly bent, strong and full where attached to the carcass, but small and tapering below; good and sound joints; dense, strong bones, but not large; large bones always denote an ill-bred and coarse animal; but plenty of fine muscles in the right places, and the hair firm and soft. The chest in all animals should be full, for it will be invariably found that only such will keep the healthiest, do the most work, and will fatten easiest and quickest on the least food.

The principal domestic animals reared for economical purposes in this county are horned or neat cattle, horses, sheep and swine, and for a number of years our farmers have greatly increased their herds and flocks both in quality and in numbers, by the introduction of improved breeds. Of the improved cattle in Susquehanna County, the Devons are by far the most numerous and the most universally favorite. This popularity is well deserved, and is based upon several substantial considerations. The cows invariably yield milk of superior richness, and have never been beaten in public tests; none surpass them in the richness of their milk, and they are wonderfully hardy and docile, and easy keepers. Their principal breeders in this county are Orrin Prichard, of Springville; C. E. Davies, of Auburn Four Corners; William H. Jones & Son, South Montrose; B. L. Brush, Elk Lake; Byron E. Smith, Great Bend; and D. &. J. Banker, Franklin Forks. Messrs. Prichard and Jones are by far the oldest breeders. They have both bred them for over thirty years. Next is Mr. Davies. At this time they all possess very good individual animals, and their stock are kept recorded. In the cow test by the Pennsylvania Agricultural Society, in 1884, one of the cows owned by William H. Jones produced the most milk of any breed, and her yield of cream was thirty-five per cent. Hon. J. Buckingham, of Zanesville, Ohio, paid a fifty-dollar premium to D. & J. Banker, on the cow "Bright Promise," for a sworn testimony that she made twenty pounds five ounces of butter in seven consecutive days. Mr. B. L. Brush for a time kept Durhams, but not being satisfied with them and having an eye for beauty, hardiness and milking qualities, changed to Devons, and is well pleased with the change.

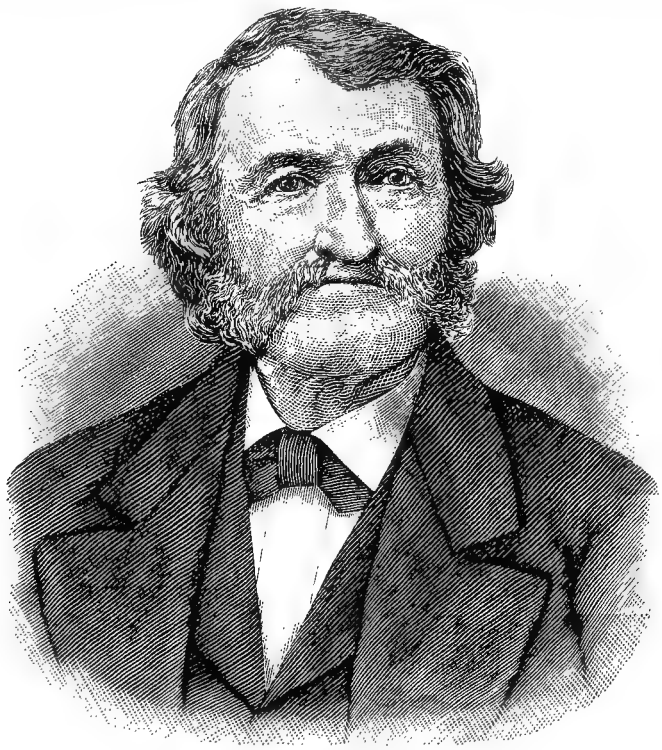
The Ayrshire Cattle.—This breed is also very valuable, and is much sought after of late years from their reputation for fine dairy qualities. The milk is good both in quantity and quality, yielding according to statements the average of fifteen quarts per day, during the best of the season, twelve of which make a pound of butter. The product of the latter averages about one hundred and seventy pounds per annum to each cow. This, while it is a good yield, has been greatly surpassed by the forcing process of individuals. They are bred by Messrs. Christopher Byrne, of Friendsville and J. F. Butterfield, of South Montrose. Mr. Byrne has made excellent purchases. The foundation of his herd started from the well-known herd of E. P. Prentice, of Albany, New York, who now makes occasional purchases of animals from some of the best herds. He finds them profitable dairy cows and now has a dairy of fifteen, with ready sale for his surplus stock, and from frequent trials, twenty pounds of their milk has made a pound of butter of fine color and good keeping quality.

Red Polled Cattle are bred by Mr. D. L. Stevens, of Elkdale. He informs us that his first purchase was in 1882, of one bull and two heifer calves, from G. F. Taber, an importer of Paterson, Putnam County, N. Y., and now has forty head. He gives names and numbers of his animals from the American record, and adds, that with him they have been very hardy, superior milkers and first class beef-makers. James E. Carmalt, of Friendsville, is also a breeder of Red Polled Norfolk cattle, Shorthorns and fine horses, etc., and Hon. William H. Jessup, of Montrose, breeds Shorthorns, Chester White swine, etc., and Mr. L. B. Birchard, of Birchardville breeds fine horses, Jersey cattle and sheep. Mr. Amos L. Green, of Fairdale, has a herd of cattle called by the name of American Holderness; also Albert Squires, of Springville, has a herd of the same breed, which they obtained from a Mr. T. A. Cole, of Solsville, N. Y. William Norris, M. D., of Dimock, breeds Jersey and Guernsey cattle, and trotting bred and carriage horses; and William B. Baker, of South Montrose, is breeding Norman and Percheron horses, and has an imported stallion.



This county by nature is specially adapted to dairying and stock-raising.

ORRIN PRICHARD.—The progenitor of the Prichard family, Roger Prichard, came from Massachusetts, and settled in Milford, Conn., previous to 1635. From him descended Amos, whose son, Amos, born in 1770, was the grandfather of Orrin Prichard. Amos married Lamira Lounsbury in Connecticut, and came from there to Springville in 1824 (his son, Asahel B., having preceded him several years), and located a farm, upon which was a log house. He married that season, then returned to Connecticut, and the following year returned with his family to the farm he had purchased, where he resided until his death. They had children,—Asahel B. (1792–1869); Roxanna, married Simeon Nichols, and removed to Ohio; Erastus also removed to Ohio, and at one time owned the land where the city of Cleveland stands; Marinda married Merritt Warner, and settled in Ohio; Marshall went to Ohio and settled; Esther is the widow of John Hudders, now residing at Catasauqua, Pa.; Betsey, wife of Wm. H. Coho, residing in Rockford, Ill.; and Isaac, a resident of Iowa.

Asahel B. Prichard, was born in Connecticut, August 31, 1792. At the age of fourteen he went to learn the trade of a carpenter and joiner and served an apprenticeship of seven years. Worked at his trade after attaining his majority until his marriage. In 1815 he married Melinda (1792–1864) daughter of Joseph and Phebe Cooper, a native of Connecticut. In 1817 he removed with his wife to Springville, bought a piece of land, erected a log house, and built a saw-mill, which he run for a time. He sold out after a few years, and came to the Corners, where he built a house and resided there until his death. He worked at his trade most of the time, but he engaged in farming during the latter years of his life. Their children are Miles, 1819, learned the trade of a carriage-maker, which business he has carried on at Springville, where he has always resided; Orrin, 1823; Jane (1825– 36); Amy, 1828, wife of H. K. Sherman, a farmer of Springville; Roxanna, 1830, widow of Frederick Muzzy, residing in Dimock.

Orrin Prichard was born November 11, 1823, in Springville. He had the usual advantages of the district schools, and remained at home with his father. A few years subsequent to his grandfather's death, himself and father purchased from the heirs the homestead farm, and worked it together, he still residing at home.

Orrin Prichard

In 1866 he married Hester A., daughter of Giles and Polly Rogers, who came from Connecticut to Springville, where Mrs. Prichard was born May 24, 1837. After marriage he remained at his father's house until 1869, when he removed to a farm he had previously purchased, in 1860, where he remained six years. He then removed to the old homestead, into the new and commodious house he had that year erected, and which still continues to be his pleasant home. About the year 1847 himself and father commenced the breeding of Devon cattle, procuring their original stock from Connecticut, and were the first to introduce thoroughbred Devon cattle in this section. Their efforts have done much to improve the stock in this county, and Mr. Prichard has spared no pains or expense in keeping his stock up to its original standard of excellence. He has been to Connecticut several times and purchased stock, which he has transported to his Springville farm, in order to keep his Devon blood pure. From his boyhood he has been a lover and admirer of fine cattle and horses. He has now on his farm a valuable herd of eighteen Devons, that would delight the eye of an appreciative farmer. Whenever he has exhibited at fairs, his stock has been awarded first premiums.

The Devon stock introduced by Mr. Prichard forty years ago has borne fruit in the improved breed of cattle now raised in the county, and his example has stimulated other to follow in his footsteps. While agriculturists may differ as to the value of the various breeds of cattle, yet no one will dissent from the statement that Mr. Prichard deserves the thanks of the farmers of the county for his efforts at improvement in the breeding and raising of cattle. He is a typical farmer, devoting his whole attention to his farm and his stock-raising, in both of which he seeks best methods and best results. In politics he was originally a Whig, but has been identified with the Republican party since its organization, and while never seeking office, has felt a lively interest in political affairs, and always exercised his franchise in accordance with his political convictions.

WILLIAM H. JONES was born October 24, 1821, in Parish Pistill, County of Caernarvon, North Wales, Great Britain. His father, Hugh Jones (1786-1855), married Elizabeth Roberts (1791-1881), both natives of the same place. He was the son of Elder John Jones, a Baptist clergyman of Garn, of the same county, who was also a large land-owner. Hugh Jones and his family emigrated to New York City in 1831, where he followed his trade as a tailor until 1845, when he went to Oneida Co., N. Y., but afterwards settled at Frankfort Hill, Herkimer Co., where he spent the remainder of his life on his farm. He was a very religious man, and while in New York and subsequently, exhorted in public meetings and fervently advocated the truth according to the Baptist belief. Both himself and wife were buried at Utica. Of their children, John died in New York City; Catharine in Wales; Hugh resides on the farm in Herkimer Co.; Mary is the widow of the late Owen Williams, of Slatington, Northampton Co., Pa: Robert resides with his brother Hugh; and Thomas is carrying on the slate business at Lafayette, Sussex Co., N. J.

William H. Jones, second son, on arriving in New York with his parents, upon the solicitation of his aunt, Mrs. Owen Evans, of Columbia, Warren Co., N. J., went to live with her, whose husband was engaged in the slate business at that place. What opportunities for an education were offered him before leaving Wales and after reaching his new home here he improved, and by reading and study since reaching mature years he has made himself one of the well-informed men among agriculturists of his day. At the age of seventeen he took charge of Mr. Evans' slate works on the Jersey side, which he conducted until about one year after his marriage, in 1847. His wife is Harriet Taylor, a native of Rockport, Carbon Co., Pa., where she was born February 24, 1826. The children of Wm. H. and Harriet Jones are Elizabeth Lodeska, a lady of recognized talent as an artist painter, wife of W. J. Holding of Albany N. Y.; Samuel T., died in 1879, aged twenty-six; Annie, first the wife of Mason B. Wilson, and who after his death married Dr. F. E. Grattan, of Springfield; Alfred H. married Edna Garfield, of Little Meadows Pa.; Catharine resides at Troy, N. Y.; Benjamin F. Howey; Gertrude died in 1885 at the age of nineteen; and Martha Jones. Mr. and Mrs. Jones are members of the Auburn Baptist Church and are identified with the various charitable enterprises of their church and neighborhood.

Mrs. Jones' father, Samuel Taylor, born in 1800, was a native of Providence, Lackawanna Co., resided at Easton for many years where he acted as deputy sheriff of Northampton Co.; afterwards resided at Slateford, and is at present with his daughter, Mrs. Clancy. Her fraternal grandfather, John Taylor, of English descent, was a native of Danbury, Conn., and removed to Providence, Lackawanna County, a large landowner. Her mother, Ellen Hartz, was a daughter of Colonel Jacob and Barbara (La Vann) Hartz, of Carbon County. Barbara La Vann was of French descent. Colonel Jacob Hartz was sheriff of Northampton County, and had Samuel Taylor for his deputy. The children of Samuel and Ellen Taylor are Harriet (now Mrs. Jones) and one son, George, connected with the Eutaw Savings Bank, at Baltimore, Md. By his second marriage, to Hetty Johnson, after the death of his first wife, at the age of thirty, he had children,—Amanda, a noted teacher, and at one time principal of Lewisburg Seminary; Mary Jane, wife of Elder T. F. Clancy, a Baptist minister at Drakesville, Morris County, N. J.; Hetty Almira, wife of Harry Smith, Pittsburgh; and Anna, wife of Elder Alfred Harris, a Baptist clergyman at Baltimore.

He removed in 1848 to Slatington, Pa., where he took charge of the slate quarries for Samuel Taylor, James M. Porter and Robert McDowell. Upon the death of his uncle Evans, three months later, at his aunt's request, he returned, settled up his uncle's estate and conducted the slate business there for the following six years on his own account. He sold the lease of this property to his partner, Hugh Hughes, and for two years following superintended the Slateford Quarry, owned by James M. Porter and Samuel Taylor. In 1855 he removed to Susquehanna Co., where he purchased a farm at Elk Lake (now owned by Charles Ely), which, after managing for ten years, he sold, and removed to Springville Hollow. In 1867 he bought his present farm in southwestern Bridgewater, of one hundred and fifty acres, where he has carried on farming and stock-raising since. In May, 1868, upon the organization of the Farmers' Institute at Montrose, Mr. Jones read a paper before the convention entitled "Devon Cattle," which was favorably received and published in the newspapers at the time, and showed his thorough knowledge of pure-blooded "Devons" and the practical utility of this stock to the Susquehanna farmers.

In 1855 he began giving largely his attention to blooded stock, especially "Devons," and since that time has bought, bred and sold hundreds of these choice cattle. He keeps a record of his stock, and has at present eighteen head. "Rose of Baltimore, 5th" produced in one week three hundred and twenty-seven and one-half pounds of milk; "Helena," three hundred and twenty-seven and one-fourth pounds during the same length of time. The former's milk, when tested in 1884 at Philadelphia, proved to be thirty-five per cent. cream. From her he has bred "Prince Albert," "Baltimore Prince," "Blanche," "Castellaw." From "Pride 2d, No. 2265," he has bred "Pride 3d," which took the first prize at Montrose and Harford; also "Prince Howell," "Pride 4th," "Fairfield Bloom," "Leva," "Bernice," a pair of twin steers, "Temperance Quick," "Cogswell," "Shadeland" and "Queen of the Prides."

CHAPTER XVII.

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Revolutionary Soldiers—Militia—War of 1812.

SUSQUEHANNA COUNTY was not opened up to settlement until after the defeat of the Six Nations by General Sullivan, and no settlements were made therein until after the close of the Revolutionary War. When Connecticut undertook to establish her supremacy over this territory, the most venturesome and courageous men in the State would find ample inducement in the offers which the Delaware and Susquehanna Companies made to forego all the dangers incident to pioneer life and Pennsylvania's opposition. The most natural class of men to embark in such ventures would be persons who had lost their strong attachment to their homes, and the localities of their birth by long disassociation, and who had become reckless of danger by hardships and perils of war. Such a class of persons were found in the recently discharged soldiers of the Revolutionary Army; hence a large number of the pioneer settlers of Susquehanna County had seen service in the War of the Revolution. The following is as complete a list of that hero band that suffered so much to establish our liberties as can now be obtained:

Asa Adams, at Bunker Hill.
Jedediah Adams, six and one-half years in the war.
John Adams, died in Harford.
Ezekiel Avery.
Benjamin Babcock.
—— Babcock (Dimock).
John Baker.
Nathaniel Balcom.
Joel Barnes.
Nehemiah Barnes.
Reuben Beebe.
Amos Bennett.
Elias Bennett.
Abiel Bills.
John Blaisdell.
Nathan Brewster, Sen.[1]
Isaac Brown.[2]
—— Brownson.
Jonas Brush.
Capt. Ichabod Buck, Great Bend.
Major Daniel Buck.[3]
Isaac Bullard.[4]
John Burnham.
Joseph Button.
Andrew Canfield.
Capt. Benjamin Case, Great Bend.
Putnam Catlin.[5]
Benjamin Chamberlain.
Daniel Chamberlain, Choconut.
Moses Chamberlain, Gibson.
Wright Chamberlain, Gibson.
Dr. Robert Chandler, Gibson.
Samuel Clark, Forest Lake.
Darius Cook.
Ezekiel Cook.
Ozem Cook.
Henry Congdon.
Dyer Crocker.
John Darrow.
Josiah Davis.
Peter Dickey.
Lieut. David Dimock, Bridgewater.
Edward Dimmick, Herrick.
David Doolittle.
Capt. Ezra Doty.
Isaac Doud.
Jonathan Dimon, Great Bend.
Jonathan Edwards.
James Eldridge.
Stephen Ellis, Herrick.
Gabriel Ely, Brooklyn.
Pardon Fish.
Simeon Foot.
—— Ford.
Silas Fowler.
Cosider Fuller, Brooklyn.
Nathaniel Gates, Gt. Bend.
Geo. Gelatt.[6]
Asahel Gregory.[7]
Abner Griffis.[8]
Stephen Griffis.
Timothy Hall.
Israel Hewitt.
Capt. Bartlett Hinds, Bridgewater.
Dudley Holdridge.
Seth Holmes.
Garner Isbell, Montrose.
Joshua Jackson, Brooklyn.
Nathaniel Jeffers, Harford.
Luther Kallam.
Rufus Kingsley.[9]
Gershom F. Lane.
Hezekiah Leach.
Daniel Lawrence.
Capt. Luther Leet.
Rufus Lines.
Capt. John Locke.[10]
Elder Gideon Lewis.[11]
Gideon Lyman.
Ezekiel Maine.
Nathan Maxon.
Joseph McKune.
Jesse Miles.
—— Miller.
Capt. Josiah Mills.[12]
Solomon Millard, Lenox.
Almon Munson, Gt. Bend.
Jonathan Moxley, Harford.
Jonathan Newman, Gt. Bend.
Patrick Nuang.
Robert Nichols.
Issachar Nicherson.
David Olmstead.
Hezekiah Olney.
Thaddeus Peet, Rush.
Joseph Potter, Gibson.
Capt. Hazard Powers, Sen.[13]
Jotham Pickering, Gibson.
Henry Pruyne.
Joseph Raynsford.[14]
John Reynolds.
Simeon Reynolds.
Capt. Caleb Richardson.[15]
Caleb Richardson, Jr.[16]
Jonathan Ross.
Isaac Rynearson.
Bristol B. Sampson (colored).[17]
Samuel Scott.
Zerah Scott.
Capt. Westol Scoville.
Ichabod Seavor.
Christian Shelp.
David Sherer.
Christopher Sherman.
William Shufelt.
Garrett Snedaker.[18]
Asahel Southwell.
—— Staples.
Capt. Jarah Stephens.
William Stephens.
Nathaniel Stewart.
Clement Sumner.
Capt. Joshua Sabin.
Lawrence Tarpining.
John Thatcher.
Thomas Thatcher.
Eseck Thayer.
Joseph Thomas.
Hozea Tiffany, Harford.
Thomas Tiffany, Harford.
Noah Tiffany, Brooklyn.
Nathaniel Tower, Lenox.
Isaac Turrell.
David Turrell, Jessup.
Moses Tyler.
Elias Van Winkle.
David Wakelee.
Sylvanus Wake.
Lemuel Wallbridge.

[1] In American and French Revolutions. [2] Died in Lathrop aged 98.
[3] In French and Indian War. [4] Bridgewater, died 1842, aged 97.
[5] Drummer at the Battle of Bunker Hill.
[6] Died it Gelatt Hollow, aged 105.
[7] Herrick, with Arnolds expedition to Quebec.
[8] Forest Lake, Minute-Man. [9] Drummer at Bunker Hill.
[10] Of the Boston Tea Party, 1773.
[11] Baptist preacher and early settler in Clifford.
[12] Drummer at the Battle of Bunker Hill.
[13] Gibson. [14] Bridgewater. [15] Harford, French War.
[16] Drummer in Revolution. [17] Brooklyn. [18] New Milford.

Ephraim Warfield.
Amos Webster.
Jacob Wellman.
Cornelius Westbrook.[1]
John Whitely.
Thomas Williams.[2]
Barnard Worthing.
Capt. Samuel Wight.
Simeon Wylie, Gt. Bend.
Samuel Yeomans.
Total, 150.

"SERGEANT SIMEON WYLIE served his country through the War of the Revolution, having entered the service in the spring of 1776, at the age of eighteen years. He was early detached from the ranks as waiter to General Arnold, and served as such until the time of Arnold's defection, and was the principal witness to prove the identity of Major André, his visits to Arnold at his quarters at the Robinson house, and the manner of Arnold's escape. From that time he served as a sergeant to the close of the war. He was in the battle of Long Island and White Plains, in 1776, in the northern campaign at the battle of Bennington, and at the capture of General Burgoyne, in 1777. He was also in a preceding battle in which Arnold was wounded, and was in the battle of Monmouth in 1778.

"In the confusion of the retreat from Long Island, on the evening after the battle, Sergeant Wylie was one of a party of seventeen (including a lieutenant), left in a piece of woods near the enemy. Not knowing, in the dark, what course to take, they agreed to wait until daylight, and then attempt to cross the East River or Sound. As soon as it was light they sent two of the party to search for a boat and give a signal to the detachment remaining in the woods. Upon hearing the signal the latter hurried to the shore, where they found a boat which had been drawn upon the beach, and while pushing it with some difficulty into the water, they saw a party of 'red-coats' passing. They, however, succeeded in launching the boat and took to the oars. The enemy, being near, discovered them, ordered them to halt and surrender, or they would fire upon them. Disregarding the threat, they pushed on, and the enemy fired, and continued to fire, until the boat reached the New York shore, and so well was their aim taken that every man except the lieutenant and Sergeant Wylie was either killed or wounded. The killed were buried with the honors of war, and the wounded taken to the hospital in New York. Some forty years after, a crippled pensioner, traveling through this part of the country, stopped for the night with Mr. Wylie. In the course of the evening he spoke of the Revolution and the cause of his lameness. He proved to be one of the seventeen. He remained with Mr. Wylie through the winter and taught school. Sergeant Wylie was a brave man and a good soldier. This bloody transaction, with many other Revolutionary reminiscences, he was accustomed to narrate with thrilling effect.

"In the spring of 1835 he buried his wife (a daughter of Rev. D. Buck), with whom he had lived forty-nine years. She had resided forty-three years on the farm where she died, and had been a member of the Presbyterian Church eighteen years. He died suddenly while on a journey into the State of New York to visit one of his sons, September 14, 1836, aged seventy-eight years."

DRAFT FOR THE WAR OF 1812.—A company was drafted for the defence of Baltimore in the War of 1812.—A class was drawn from each company in the regiment, making up one company of nearly a hundred for the famous Danville campaign; being marched to Danville with companies drawn in like manner from other regiments of militia for organization, where, after a brief encampment, they were discharged, the danger to Baltimore being over. In drawing for captain, the lot fell on the late Col. Frederick Bailey, of Brooklyn, who had then just been promoted to the colonelcy. The lieutenant and orderly sergeant happened also to be drawn from the same company.

MUSTER ROLL.

Officers.

Captain Fred. Bailey.
Lieutenant Cyril Giddings.
Ensign Hiel Tupper.
1st Sergeant Jesse Bagley.
2d Sergeant Samuel Baldwin.
3d Sergeant James Truesdell.
4th Sergeant Joseph Marsh.
Corporals Josiah Davis, Orange Whitney, John L. Travis.

Privates.

Asahel Adams.
Phineas Arms.
Roswell Babcock.
Gideon Beebe.
Richard Bill.
John Bullock.
Daniel Bump.
Levi Chamberlin.
Isaac A. Chapman.
Gurdon Darrow.
James Dean.
Eliphalet Elsworth.
Jason Fargo.
Joseph Fish.
Hiram Guernsey.
John Greek.
Jesse Hale.
Stephen Harding.
John Haywood, Jr.
Nathaniel Ives.
Eleazer Kimball.
Dyer Lathrop.
Ralph Lines.
Josiah Lord, Jr.
Robert McCarty.
Alick McGee.
Thomas Oakley.
Noah Reed.
William Rockwell.
Elisha Safford.
Sylvester Smith.
James Steenback.
Ezra Sturdevant.
Nathan P. Thatcher.
Dalton Tiffany.
Noah Tiffany, Jr.
Jonathan Treadwell.
Hiland Vickery.
William B. Welsh.
Latham Williams.
Eseck Wood.
Jonathan Woodruff.
Levi S. Agard.
George Avery.
Thomas Bagley.
Calvin Bell.
Calvin Blasdell.
Jacob Bump.
David Carpenter.
Moses Chamberlin.
Harry Clark.
Peter Davis.
Joseph Doolittle.
John Fancher.
James Farguson.
Joseph Guernsey.
Oliver Greatracks.
David Hale.
Amasa Harding.
William Harkins.
David Holmes.
Enos Jewell.
Zeb. Lathrop.
Ebenezer Lines.
Nathaniel Locke.
Jonathan Miles.
Hugh McCollum.
John Newman.
Corbett Pickering.
James Robinson.
Jesse Ross.
Thomas M. Safford.
Joshua Smith, Jr.
Wells Stanley.
Daniel C. Thacher.
Daniel Tingley.
Lewis Tiffany.
Bradley Thomas.
Michael Van Winkle.
Samuel Ward.
Hiram Whipple.
Daniel P. Wiley.
Jonathan Wood.
Josiah Woodworth.

[1] Brooklyn.

[2] In American and French Revolutions; lived to be 104 years old, dying in 1826.

Among others who were in the War of 1812, who either were residents at the time or afterwards became residents, are the following: P. Turner Baldwin, Daniel Brewster, Billings Burdick, Calvin Corse, Zeph. Eldred, S. B. Fessenden, Jonas Fuller, Martin Hall, Jonathan Howard, Joseph McKune, N. Norris, Eldad Loomis, Major Isaac Post, Philander Pepper, Joseph Peck, Charles Payn, Samuel Pickett, A. H. Read, Enoch Smith, Luther Stanley, Saxa Seymour, Amos Tiffany, Tingley Tiffany, Job Tyler, Nathan P. Thatcher, Wareham B. Walker, Samuel Wilson, Lieut. J. B. Worden, Aaron Dewitt, Thos. Garland, Andrew Rogers, Erastus Caswell, Lodowick Bailey, Libbeus Rogers, P. G. Burch, Joshua Baker, S. B. Blake. Mexican War: James Johnson and William P. Carr.

MILITIA.—[1] "The earliest item found respecting military organizations in this section after its settlement is the appointment by the Governor, December, 1797, of Putnam Catlin as brigade inspector for Luzerne County. A year or two later, when it was feared the country was on the eve of a war with France, the inhabitants of this section were alive to the situation. In the Wilkes-Barre Gazette and Luzerne Advertiser, about this time, appeared a notice to attract the attention of 'ambitious, spirited and patriotic young men, tired of lounging about their fathers' houses, and who wish to exchange a life of tasteless indolence for that of glory,' offering them a chance to join the army.

"The first military movement within the limits of Susquehanna County appears to have been in 1806, when the first militia training was held at Parkevale. There is special mention of training there in 1807–8. In the spring of 1808 there was a 'muster and inspection' at Joseph Chapman, Jr's. Thomas Parke was then colonel, and Walter Lyon major of the 129th Regiment, Pennsylvania Militia. In 1811, at a military election, William C. Turrel was chosen lieutenant-colonel; Isaac Post and Asa Dimock majors; Elias Bell, Hezekiah Leach, Hiel Tupper, Amos Tiffany, Seth Mitchell, Fred. Bailey, John Bard and Calvin D. Cobb were early captains in this regiment; and at some time, probably, Rufus Fish, Jeremiah Spencer and Jabez A. Birchard.

"The War of 1812 furnished practical reasons for military duty. An 'Appeal to Patriots,' published in the Luzerne County papers in 1813, offered a bounty of $16 (for enlistment for three years) and three months' pay at $8 per month, with one hundred and sixty acres of land. Those who enlisted for only eighteen months received no land.

"Complaint of taxes increased as hostilities continued. May, 1814, bounty was raised to $124, besides 160 acres. In the summer a call appeared in the Luzerne County papers (none were then established in Susquehanna County) for a meeting immediately after court, 23d August, at Edward Fuller's, 'friendly to a restoration of peace or a more vigorous prosecution of the war.'

"The burning of the Capitol at Washington stimulated militia organizations. At a militia election, in the summer of 1814, Fred. Bailey was elected colonel, Joseph Burgess lieutenant-colonel, J. Slocum and Benjamin Lathrop majors.

"Isaac Post was appointed inspector of 2d Brigade. From his diary we learn that, October 23, 1814, he 'received orders for marching the militia, and set out for Wilkes-Barre on the 24th. Arrived at Danville, Pa., November 1; with detachment of militia on the 13th; received orders to halt 19th; to dismiss the detachment 21st; the whole discharged 24th and 25th, same month.' Colonel F. Bailey accompanied this expedition. It was held up to ridicule, while the militia were waiting for their pay until April, 1819, and afterwards for its fruitlessness. Ezra Sturdevant, drafted from Harford or New Milford, was left sick at Danville, died, and was buried with military honors. It is laughingly asserted that Major Post brought back one hand-rifle and one tin camp-kettle as the spoils of this expedition.

"After the war the old organization died out, and the 76th Regiment appears to have taken its place. Walter Lyon and Joseph Washburn were majors of this regiment, and Austin Howell, Job Tyler (afterwards colonel), Daniel Lathrop and John Comfort captains. In 1819 Daniel Lathrop was elected lieutenant-colonel of the same. I. Post declined a reelection as brigade inspector, and Samuel Thomas was chosen in 1823. The 2d Brigade, 8th Division, was composed of the 2d Regiment, Luzerne County, the 76th in Susquehanna, and the 70th in Wayne. Colonel Aden Stevens had command, very early, of a regiment composed of Bradford and Susquehanna men. At some time Francis Fordham was colonel of the 76th Regiment.

"Luman Ferry was captain of an independent volunteer company, formed in 1816. Several similar companies sprang up, among which we find the Harford Artillery, Captain Asahel Sweet and also Obadiah Carpenter; a Rifle Company at Great Bend, Captain Jonathan Treadwell; the Choconut Infantry, Captain Goodsell; the Bridgewater Yeomanry Guards, Captain Benjamin Sayre, and later, Bela Jones, A. C. Luce and Horace Smith; the Brooklyn Infantry and the New Milford Infantry, Captain Seth Bisbee; the Montrose Artillery, Captain H. J. Champion; the Susquehanna Troop, of which Fred. Stephens was orderly-sergeant, and Samuel Gregory, Hyde Crocker, Samuel Bard, captains; Montrose Rifle Grays, David Francis, captain; Springville Rifle Company, and Captain Canfield's Infantry (Middletown ?).

"In 1824 nine companies united to form the 126th Volunteer Regiment, William Jessup, colonel; Saxa Seymour, lieutenant-colonel; B. Jones, adjutant; Stephen S. Jewett, and Simon S. Chamberlain, majors.

[1] Blackman, p. 621.

For a few years succeeding military trainings were great occasions. Then came a lull—a sort of disrepute, while the question of temperance was prominent in the public mind. But the country was awake to the interests of the patriots of the Revolution, and many availed themselves of the benefits of acts of Congress on their behalf.

"In 1837 there was a revival of military matters. Colonel D. D. Warner was elected brigadier-general. Mention is made of the 76th and 136th Regiments—4 battalions; the Washington Guards and Northern Guards Volunteer battalions, and 70th Regiment—2 battalions, Wayne County—with which Susquehanna was connected.

"May, 1852, the Montrose Artillery procured a cannon."

There were ten independent companies within the county, besides the Dundaff battalion, in Clifford. They met for drill three times per year, and were armed by the States. There were also a few cavalry companies. Asa Dimock, M. C. Tyler, C. M. Gere and others were colonels, and C. D. Lathrop was elected major-general by Wayne and Susquehanna Counties.

CHAPTER XVIII.

SUSQUEHANNA COUNTY IN THE WAR OF THE REBELLION (1861–65).

WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY CAPTAIN H. F. BEARDSLEY.

"The rolling seasons pass away,
And Time, untiring, waves his wing;
Whilst honor's laurels ne'er decay,
But bloom in fresh, unfading spring."

It is eminently fitting and proper in this, the Centennial year of our county's history that an effort be made to place in convenient form a permanent record of the names, at least, of the men who dared death for the flag, and whose brave deeds and achievements reflect so much credit and honor upon the county.

While it would be impossible in one chapter, or even one volume, to recount the part taken by the soldiers from Susquehanna County in the late Civil War, the writer has aimed to mention all by name, and, when possible to do so, has placed each soldier in the organization in which he served. The attempt to do this has entailed much time and research; and, after the lapse of a quarter of a century, the undertaking was beset with difficulties that at times seemed insurmountable. Susquehanna being a border county, many of her sons enlisted in New York and other States, and no "official" record of their service could be given—the writer having to depend on the personal recollection of comrades. Of those who served in Pennsylvania organizations, their record of service, as published by Bates, in his "History of the Pennsylvania Volunteers," has been followed; and, while in this compilation errors will doubtless be found, yet much care has been exercised to prevent them. Some names will be misspelled, some may be duplicated, and doubtless the names of a few soldiers are published who did not belong in the county, for, where a doubt existed, the name was retained.

It is not the purpose of the writer to attempt to picture or embellish the part taken by the soldiers from this county in the war; but, as citizens of the old Keystone, we have a just and pardonable pride in the part taken by our grand old commonwealth in that terrible struggle with treason that commenced with the firing on Sumter and ended at Appomattox. It was Pennsylvania soldiers who first marched to the defense of the imperiled Capitol; and the five companies of Pennsylvanians that arrived there the morning of April 18, 1861, were the head of the grand column of two millions of men that were afterwards mustered, and of which number Pennsylvania furnished nearly one-fifth.

It is not our purpose to recapitulate and recall the events that transpired immediately preceding the war, or attempt to follow the footsteps of our "boys in blue" through that sanguinary and bloody struggle. In its patriotic efforts in defense of the Union Susquehanna County bore well and manfully her part with her sister counties in the State; and the devotion and sacrifices of her sons, together with the record of their brave and heroic achievements, forms one of the brightest and most interesting chapters of her one hundred years of history.

We regret that the space at our disposal will not admit of our giving a brief résumé of the service, of other organizations, many of which made noble records, and in which the "boys" of the county have a just pride. There were many who belonged to the "scattering" organizations, who were among the first to enlist in 1861. We have already alluded to the fact that many enlisted outside of the county and State, and, being scattered among scores of different organizations, it has been difficult to establish their identity correctly or to credit them to the place of their enlistment.

The actual number that enlisted from the county can never be definitely fixed; but, from the best information at our disposal, the number is ascertained to be a little more than thirty-one hundred.

Comrades of this county, I am indebted to a number of you for valuable assistance in the prosecution of this difficult task, which was undertaken with many misgivings. Its labors have been lightened by the interest you have manifested, and if the result shall prove reasonably satisfactory to the soldiers of the county and their friends, I shall feel that my efforts have not been in vain.

The Pennsylvania Reserves.—No body of troops, whether great or small, that participated in the War of the Rebellion, earned greater distinction or covered themselves with more deserved and lasting renown than did the "Pennsylvania Reserve Corps." It is proper in this connection to briefly review the history of its formation.

It is known that previous to the breaking out of the Rebellion many of the Southern people and some Southern sympathizers believed that if war resulted from secession, it would be on Northern soil. As early as February, 1861, Jefferson Davis, in a speech at Jackson, Miss. declared:—"If war must come, it must be upon Northern and not upon Southern soil." The national authorities were not oblivious to this threatened contingency, and early in April, 1861, took measures to co-operate with Governor Curtin in protecting the Pennsylvania border from invasion. But the killing of the Massachusetts soldiers in the streets of Baltimore on the 19th of the same month, and the severing of all communication between Pennsylvania and Washington served to increase the apprehension already felt. Finding that under existing laws there was no provision whereby the military power of the State could be used for its protection, Governor Curtin, on the 20th of April, 1861, issued his proclamation, convening the Legislature in extra session ten days thereafter. In his message to the Legislature he said: "The time is past for temporizing or forbearing with this rebellion, the most causeless in history. * * * The insurrection must now be met by force of arms. * * * A quarter of a million of Pennsylvania's sons will answer the call to arms, if need be, to wrest us from a reign of anarchy and plunder, and secure for themselves and their children, for ages to come, the perpetuity of this government and its beneficent institutions. * * * To furnish ready support to those who have gone out, and to protect our borders, we should have a well regulated military force. I, therefore, recommend the immediate organization, disciplining and arming of at least fifteen regiments of cavalry and infantry, exclusive of those called into the service of the United States."

This message was at once referred to a select committee of seven of the House, and two days thereafter, in compliance with the recommendations of the Governor, a bill was reported, creating a loan and providing for arming the State, and on the 15th of May it received the signature of the Governor and became a law. Among other provisions, the act authorized and directed the commander-in-chief (the Governor) to organize a military corps to be composed of thirteen regiments of infantry, one of cavalry and one of light artillery, to be enlisted in the State service for three years, or during the war, and to be subject to muster into the United States service upon requisition of the President.

In compliance with the act of Assembly, Governor Curtin immediately issued his call for men to compose this corps, apportioning them to each county according to population, in order that each section of the State might have due representation in it. Enlistments were rapid and great enthusiasm was felt to enter its ranks. Four camps of instruction were established—one at Easton, one at Westchester, one at Pittsburgh, and one at Harrisburg. Geo. A. McCall, a West Point graduate, who had distinguished himself in the war with Mexico, was appointed a major-general to command the corps, and he entered upon the duty of organizing and preparing it for the field with the zeal of a volunteer and the skill of a veteran.

The First Regiment of the corps were organized on the 19th of June following, and became the Thirtieth in the line; and while the whole corps was principally recruited during that month, owing to delays in a few of the regimental formations, notably the First Cavalry, the corps was not fully organized until September 1st. But the angry tide of rebellion did not stay its onward course, and long before the last "Reserve" regiment was in the field, the timely wisdom of the Executive and loyal people of Pennsylvania, in thus forming the nucleus of a reserve army, was widely noted and commended. The camps of instruction became such only in name, for many of the regiments were ordered into active service almost immediately upon their organization.

The disasters at Bull Run, that culminated on the 20th of July in the defeat of the Union army, caused the government to call loudly for troops. Fortunately for the country, and to the lasting honor and glory of Pennsylvania, she had an organized body of troops ready for duty. We have thus briefly noted the inception and formation of this corps, which was designated by the act of Assembly creating it, the "Reserve Volunteer Corps of the Commonwealth;" but the name that struck terror to its foes, and which will go down in history side by side with its glorious achievements, was "Pennsylvania Reserves," in the formation of which, Susquehanna County promptly furnished her full quota, and more. This was composed of Company H, Fourth "Reserves," and thirty-third in the line; Company K Sixth "Reserves," and thirty-fifth in the line, and parts of Batteries A, F and H, First Pennsylvania Light Artillery, which was forty-third in the line.

Fourth Pennsylvania Reserves (Thirty-third Regiment).—The companies composing the Fourth Regiment were recruited, one from each of the counties of Chester, Monroe, Montgomery, Lycoming and Susquehanna, and the remaining five from the city and county of Philadelphia. The companies were ordered to rendezvous at the "reserve" camp at Easton, where they assembled early in June. On the 20th of that month a regimental organization was effected by the election of the following field officers: Colonel, Robert G. March; Lieutenant-Colonel, John F. Gaul; Major, Robert M. McClure.

The regiment received clothing and equipments early in July, and on the 16th it was ordered to Harrisburg, proceeding thither by rail, and the following day it was mustered into the United States service. On the 21st of July, in obedience to orders from Washington, it moved by rail to Baltimore and was on duty in that city, under command of Gen. Dix, until the last of August, when it was ordered to the general camp of rendezvous of the Reserves at Tenallytown, Md. Upon the organization of the division, the Fourth was assigned to the Second Brigade, commanded by Brigadier-General Geo. G. Meade, which, besides the Fourth, was composed of the Third, Seventh and Eleventh Regiments of the Reserves. On the 9th of October, in company with the whole division, the Fourth broke camp and crossing the Chain Bridge, first stepped foot on the "sacred soil" of Virginia, and became an integral part of the Army of the Potomac, so soon to become the object of deepest solicitude to every loyal heart, and destined to win a place in history second to no army of ancient or modern times. On the 20th of December occurred the brilliant little victory at Drainsville, which was won by General Ord's brigade (the Third), but the Second Brigade marched rapidly to its support, but arrived too late to take part in the action.

In the spring of 1862, upon McClellan's departure for the Peninsula, the Reserves were left with the First Corps under command of General McDowell; but early in June the plan of the campaign was changed; the Reserves were detached from McDowell's Corps, and ordered to proceed by water to White House, and thence march and form a junction with McClellan's army. The Fourth reached the vicinity of Mechanicsville on the 20th of June, and on the 26th a severe battle was fought. In this engagement the Fourth was held in reserve, and although not actively engaged, was under fire during the entire battle. During the night following the division was withdrawn to Gaines' Mill, when the next day the rebel army, sixty thousand strong, commanded by its most skillful and trusted generals, attacked the single corps of Fitz-John Porter. In this engagement McCall's division was held in reserve until three o'clock P. M., when it was ordered in and immediately became desperately engaged. The Fourth, supporting Duryea's Zouaves, drove the enemy from the woods, after which it was ordered to the extreme left, where it charged the rebel line; but they were met by the overwhelming numbers of the enemy and were forced to fall back with much loss.

Following on the heels of this desperate engagement came, on the 30th, the battle of Charles City Cross-Roads, that was to prove to the Fourth even more desperate and bloody. The Fourth was posted in the front line on the right, in support of Randall's battery. General McCall says in his official report: "The most determined charge of the day was made upon Randall's battery by a full brigade, advancing in wedge shape, without order, but with a wild recklessness that I never saw equalled." After referring to other charges that had been made by single regiments upon Cooper's and Kern's batteries, which had been gallanted repulsed, the general continues: "A like result appears to have been anticipated by Randall's battery, and the Fourth Regiment (as was subsequently reported to me) was requested not to advance between the guns, as I had ordered, as it interfered with the cannoneers, but to let the battery deal with them. Its gallant commander did not doubt, I am satisfied, his ability to repel the attack, and his guns fairly opened lanes in the advancing hosts." But nothing daunted, the rebel column closed up, and with trailed arms came on at a run to the very muzzles of the guns, where they pistoled and bayoneted the cannoneers and attacked their supports (the Fourth) with such fury and in such overwhelming numbers that they were broken and thrown into confusion. But the regiment rallied and held their ground with the most determined obstinacy. General McCall, continuing, says: "It was here my fortune to witness, between those of my men who stood their ground and rebels who advanced, one of the fiercest bayonet fights that perhaps ever occurred on this continent. Bayonets were crossed and locked in the struggle; bayonet wounds were freely given and received. I saw skulls crushed by the heavy blow of the butt of the musket, and, in short, the desperate thrusts and parries of a life-and-death encounter, proving indeed that Greek had met Greek when the Alabama boys fell upon the sons of Pennsylvania."

The enemy was successfully held in check, and during the night the Reserves retired to Malvern Hill. During the battle that followed McCall's division was held in reserve and was not called into action. The casualties in the Fourth Regiment, during the seven days of battle, were upward of two hundred. But weary marches and fierce fighting were still in store for the Fourth before the beginning of a new year. From Malvern Hill to Harrison's Landing, to the Rapidan, to the plains of Manassas it marched, and here, on the 29th and 30th of August, it again met the enemy at the second battle of Bull Run, where the Reserves were under the command of General John F. Reynolds—General McCall having resigned. On the 14th of September the Fourth again encountered the enemy at South Mountain and was heavily engaged, that battle resulting in the retreat of the enemy. On the evening of the 16th the Reserves crossed Antietam creek, with the Fourth in the advance, and opened that important and bloody battle. They slept that night on the ground where they fought, and at daybreak renewed the battle, which raged with great fury for five hours, when the Reserves were relieved. The enemy retreated, leaving substantial evidence of victory in the hands of the Union army. At the battle of Fredericksburg, on the 13th of December, the Fourth held the right of the second line in the memorable charge of the "Pennsylvania Reserves" on Marye's Heights, when they broke through the enemy's lines, carried the summit, which was the key to his position, but failing of support, they were forced to retire. The casualties in the Fourth Regiment during these series of battles exceeded one hundred and twenty-five.

On the 8th of February 1863, the Reserves, now greatly reduced by active service, were ordered to the defences of Washington to rest and recruit. Here the Fourth remained, engaged in various duties, until the 6th of January, 1864, when it was ordered to duty in West Virginia. Of its subsequent honorable service we shall make mention in the brief history which follows of Company H.—The writer is indebted for such facts in relation to Company H as are not found in the "official" records to a very complete and comprehensive history of the company, published a few years since, compiled by Mrs. M. H. France, and of which Sergeant M. H. Van Scoten, of Auburn, is historian. We have before alluded to the fact that the company was the army family, and companies, like families, often had family secrets. It must not be inferred from this that Sergeant Van Scoten disclosed any family secrets in his history. We wish that space allowed us to quote copiously from this work; but we have only place for such facts as bear upon the military record of Company H, and the men who made it.

Shortly after Governor Curtin had issued his call for men to compose the "Reserve Corps," heretofore alluded to, E. B. Gates, of Dimock, applied to and received authority from the Governor to recruit a company for the corps. He was materially aided in this undertaking by George W. Crandall, of Liberty, and other patriotic citizens, many of whom became members of the company, and June 11, 1861, eighty-five men assembled at Montrose, who not only represented more than half of the towns in our county, but its intelligence and the patriotic loyalty of its citizens. On the 13th they left Montrose, via the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, for Easton, where, after passing a rigid medical examination, they were, on the 20th, mustered into the State service. The company had previously organized by electing E. B. Gates, captain; George W. Crandall, first lieutenant; and Edwin Rogers, second lieutenant, and its "muster" roll showed an aggregate of seventy-five men. Its assignment as Company H, of the Fourth Regiment, has already been alluded to, and the history of the movements of the company, its marches and battles up to Jan. 6, 1864, would only be a repetition of the Fourth Regiment's history already given.

On the 15th of October, 1861, Lieutenant Crandall, on account of failing health, resigned and returned home, and Lieutenant Rogers was promoted to first lieutenant. Lieutenant Crandall afterwards re-enlisted and became captain of Company A, One Hundred and Fifty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers. On the 16th the first death in the company occurred—that of Samuel Hathaway, and on the 29th Edwin Bennett died in the hospital at Washington. On the 2d of November Lieutenant Rogers, on account of continued ill health, resigned. He was a native of Brooklyn, and died before the close of the war. His memory is cherished and preserved by "Lieutenant Rogers" Post, G. A. R., of that town. The resignation of Lieutenant Rogers left Company H with but one commissioned officer. At an election held to fill the vacancies, Sergeant A. T. Sweet was elected first and Sergeant Wm. McGee second lieutenant. "But," says Sergeant Van Scoten in his history, "General Meade refused to recommend Sergeant McGee for promotion, having a friend in Philadelphia—Wm. M. Watmough—whom he desired the company to elect second lieutenant, that he might have him on his staff, and against the protests of the company they were obliged to accept him, and he was duly commissioned."

At the battle of Charles City Cross-Roads Captain Gates was struck by a piece of shell that shattered the ankle joint and necessitated the amputation of his leg. He was discharged from the service Oct. 7, 1862, and given a commission as captain in the Veteran Reserve Corps, which he held for eight years, doing duty in various capacities in that corps. After his discharge from the service he returned to Dimock, where he resided until a few years ago, when he went West, where he is now permanently located. He has been engaged in agricultural pursuits since his discharge from the service. In the spring of 1863, while the company was in the vicinity of Washington, Lieutenant A. T. Sweet was promoted to captain, Sergeant T. P. Mills to first lieutenant, and Private James P. Gay to second lieutenant, while on the non-commissioned staff M. H. Van Scoten and C. E. McCrackin were promoted to sergeants, and W. J. Lawrence and J. B. Hinchman to corporals. From the history of Company H we learn that at the end of two years' service the company numbered but thirty-three. Seven had been killed or died of wounds, five died from disease, three were discharged for wounds and twenty for disability, three officers had resigned and four privates were "absent without leave." Jan. 6, 1864, the company started on their West Virginia campaign and arrived at Martinsburg on the 7th. On the 25th thirteen of the company re-enlisted for three years or the war, and as twelve had previously re-enlisted, this made twenty-five veteran volunteers in Company H. Early in March following those who had re-enlisted received a "veteran furlough" for thirty days and returned to their homes. But amid friends and the delights of home, how swift flew the days, and all too soon came the leave-takings and the good-byes! On the 16th of April they again assembled at Harrisburg, and there found that twenty-one recruits had joined the company, all from Susquehanna County, and many of them neighbors and acquaintances. A few days thereafter they received transportation and rejoined their regiment in West Virginia.

On the 9th of May occurred the battle of Cloyd Mountain, which, though not prominent in the annals of the war, was a severe and desperate engagement for the forces that participated. The Third and Fourth were the only regiments of the "Reserves" sent to act with the other troops in this campaign in West Virginia. At this battle the two regiments numbered from five to six hundred, and had nearly one hundred killed and wounded. Colonel Woolworth, of the Fourth, fell mortally wounded at the head of his regiment, but strange to relate, Company H, although in the thickest of the fight, did not lose a man. This was the first battle of the new recruits, but their unflinching valor on this occasion proved them worthy to belong to a company of "Old Vets."

On the 28th of May, the three years' term of enlistment of the Third and Fourth Reserves having expired, those who had not re-enlisted were ordered home to be mustered out, while the "Vets" and recruits of the two regiments were organized into a battalion of five companies, and placed in command of Captain A. T. Sweet. Thus ended the service of the Fourth Regiment as an organization. It arrived at Philadelphia on the 8th day of June, and on the 15th was mustered out. We will now briefly follow the fortunes of the "Vets" and recruits of Company H. During the remainder of the campaign in West Virginia the battalion shared in all its battles and terrible marches, at one time being without food and with no halt for rest for eight days and nights. On the 13th of July, 1864, they arrived on the Upper Potomac, above Martinsburg. Here Captain Sweet and Lieutenant Gay, both having served thirty days beyond their three years' term of enlistment, bade good-bye to their comrades and proceeded to their homes.[1] Here the veterans and recruits of the two "Reserve" Regiments were transferred to the Fifty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. On the 18th the company, as re-organized, had a short but severe engagement with the enemy, in which five of the original members of Company H, including Sergeant Van Scoten, were wounded, two or three of them subsequently dying of their wounds. They shared the disasters and triumphs of Sheridan's campaign in the Shenandoah Valley, and late in December they proceeded, via Washington, to City Point, on the James River. In this vicinity they passed the winter, and March 25, 1865, they broke camp for their last and final campaign, that was to end at Appomattox. By the fortunes of war, three days before the final surrender of Lee, the Fifty-fourth Pennsylvania and the One Hundred and Thirty-second Ohio Regiments were captured. We would like to recapitulate and review the past; we would like to mention the survivors of this company, and note the positions of trust and honorable citizenship they to-day occupy, but we have only room for their names and their "official" military record, which follows:

[1] See personal sketch of Captain Sweet.

ABBREVIATIONS USED.

Adjt., Adjutant.	Mis., Missing.
Ab., Absent.	Muc., Musician.
Bur., Buried.	Mus., Mustered.
Bvt., Brevet.	Pr., Promoted.
Capt., Captain.	Priv., Private.
Capt'd, Captured.	Pris., Prisoner.
Cem., Cemetery.	Regt., Regiment.
Cert., Certificate.	Res., Resigned.
Chap., Chaplain.	Re., Re-enlisted.
Cor., Corporal.	Serv., Service.
Com., Commissioned or Commissary.	S. O., Special Order.
	Surg., Surgeon.
Cav., Cavalry.	Sergt., Sergeant.
Ch., Church.	Tr., Transferred.
Disch., Discharged.	Vet., Veteran Volunteer.
Exp., Expiration.	V. R. C., Veteran Reserve Corps.
Fur., Furlough.
G. O., General Order.	Wd., Wounded.
Hos., Hospital.	Wds., Wounds.
Lieut. or Lt., Lieutenant.

The date following name indicates date of muster into service.

COMPANY H, FOURTH PENNSYLVANIA RESERVES.

Mustered into service June 20, 1861, unless otherwise stated; mustered out June 17, 1864.

Capt. E B. Gates, wd. June 30, '62, at Charles City Cross-Roads; foot amputated; disch. Oct. 7, '62; recommissioned capt. of Invalid Corps, and served eight years.

1st Lt. Geo. W. Crandall, res. Oct. 15, '61; re. in Co. C, 151st P. V.

2d Lt. Edwin Rogers, pr. to 1st. lt.; res. Nov. 2, '61 (see "Rogers Post, G. A. R.).

1st Sergt. William McGee, honorably disch. July 1, '62; re. in Co. H, 141st P. V.

Sergeants.

Horton Ellis, ab. on detached service at mus. out.

A. T. Sweet, pr. to 1st lt. and capt.

Theodore P. Mills, pr. to 1st lt.; disch. by S. O. at expiration of term.

William E. Gates, disch. Dec., '62.

Corporals.

Marshall H. Van Scoten, tr. to Co. E, 54th P. V.; pr. to sergt.; wd. at Snicker's Gap, Va., July 18, '64; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65; vet.

Wallace E. Southworth, tr. to 54th P. V.; pr. to sergt; captd; died in rebel prison; vet.

Charles M. Chapman, wd. and captd. at Gaines' Mills, Va., June 27, '62.

Americus M. Murray, tr. to 54th P. V.; pr. to sergt.; tr. to Invalid Corps; vet.

Elbert L. Blakeslee, disch. Dec. 31, '62.

Privates.

Anderson, John, tr. to 54th Regt., P. V.; pr. to cor.; pris. 7 mo.; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65; vet.

Ackerman, Newell, Mar. '64; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65.

Ackerman, Stephen, Mar. '64; died in '64.

Bennett, Alex., killed at Gaines' Mills June 27, '62.

Bennett, Edwin, died Oct. 29, '61.

Beebe, Stephen H., disch. Oct. 24, '62.

Brown, Bernard, disch. Nov. 18, '62.

Buchanan, Jackson, Mar., '64; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65.

Brotzman, George, Mar., '64; wd. July 18, '64, at Lynchburg, Va.; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65.

Cokely, Jeremiah, not on mus. out roll.

Corey, Isaac D., wd. at South Mountain, Md., Sept. 14, '62; tr. to 54th P. V.; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65; vet.

Corey, John W., tr. to 54th Regt., P. V.; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65; vet.
Carter, Chas. A., Mar., '64; was in 35th Regt, Pa.; in 3 mos. service; wd. twice at Winchester, Va.; disch. Jan. 19, '65.
Corey, Geo. W., Mar., '64; mus. out with Co. July 15, '65.
Clapp, Dennis, Mar., '64; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65.
Dailey, Patrick, not with Co. at mus. out.
Davidson, Asa, tr. to 54th Regt., P. V.; mus. out with Co.; vet.
Darrow, H. A., Mar., '64; wd. at Lynchburg, Va., July 18, '64; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65.
Ely, Anson T., killed at Fredericksburg Dec. 13, '62.
Frink, William, disch. Aug. 25, '62.
Gay, Calvin S., wd. at South Mountain, Md., Sept. 14, '62; re.; vet.
Gathany, John S., tr. to 54th Regt. P. V.; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65; vet.
Gay, James P., pr. to 2d lt. for bravery in battle.
Gray, Wm. H., tr. to 54th Regt. P. V.; pris. 5 mos.; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65; vet.
Guernsey, Silvester, disch. June, '62.
Gunsalus, Virgil P., tr. to 54th Regt. P. V.; mus. out by G. O. May 3, '65
Gates, Chas. S., Mar., '64; pris. 4 mos.; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65.
Hinchman, Jas. B., tr. to 54th Regt. P. V.; pr. to sergt. killed at Snicker's Gap, Va., July 18, '64; vet.
Hall, Aaron J., disch. June 15, '62; re. and killed in front of Petersburg, Va.
Hathaway, Samuel C., died Oct. 16, '61.
Holenbeck, Ezekiel M., died Mar. 10, '62.
Hickok, Thomas S., disch in '62; re. in Co. H, 141st P. V.
Higley, De Witte, died Jan. 3, '62.
Hawley, Daniel E., Mar., '64; mus. out with Co. July 15, '65.
Kinyon, Charles, tr. to 54th Regt. P. V.; muc.; not on mus. out roll.
Knowles, John W., Mar., '64; mus. out with Co. July 15, '65.
Lawrence, Wm. J., was in 3 mos. serv.; pr. to corp.; wd. June 30, '62; tr. to 54th P. V.; disch. July 15, '65; vet.
Larney, Jos. R., tr. to 54th P. V.; mus. out with Co.; vet.
Lasure, Baronet J., tr. to 54th P. V.; wd. Oct. 15, '64; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65; vet
Lewis, Llewellyn C., tr. to 54th P. V.; wd. April 7, '65; disch. by G. O. May 3, '65; vet.
Luce, Russell S., disch. April 1, '62.
Lewis, Hanford S., Mar., '64; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65.
McCracken, Chas. E., tr. to P. V.; pr. 1st lt. Co. E, 54th P. V.; wd. at Lynchburg, Va., June 19, '64; pr. to capt. April 3, '65; not mus.; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65; vet.
McCracken, Daniel, was in 3 mos. serv.; tr. to 54th P. V.; pris. 4 mos.; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65; vet.
Osterhout, Henry, Mar., '64; wd. April 2, '65, at Ft. Gregg, Va.; in hos. at mus. out.
Ousterhout, Philip, Mar., '64; wd. July 18, '64, at Snicker's Gap, Va.; disch. by G. O. June 6, '65; died from effects of wound 7 years afterwards.
Paul, Geo. R., died June 29, '62.
Perkins, David B., killed at Antietam Sept. 16, '62.
Reynolds, Joseph L., disch. April, '63.
Reynolds, Philander, disch. April 31, '62.
Riley, Edward, disch. Aug. 25, '62.
Stone, Thos. W., killed at Gaines' Mills, June 27, '62.
Sherman, Perry C., killed at Charles City Cross-Roads June 30, '62.
Smith, George W., wd. and capt'd at Gaines' Mills June 27, '62; disch. for wds.
Smith, John L., tr. to 54th P. V.; pr. to sergt.-major; mus. out with Co.; vet.
Smith, Denmark, died May 1, '62.
Smith, Franklin G., tr. to 54th P. V.; mus. out with Co.; vet.
Smith, Alfred, not with Co. at mus. out.
Searle, Roger S., disch. by S. O. May 6, '62.
Springer, Tunis, disch. Aug. 25, '61.
Simpson, Stephen G., disch. in '61.
Shaddock, Thomas E., Mar., '64; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65.
Stevens, Jesse, Mar., '64; pris. 4 mos.; disch. by G. O. June 19, '65.
Swackhammer, Alden, Mar., '64; died in '64.
Truesdell, John W., tr. to 54th P. V., wd. July 18, '64, at Snicker's Gap, Va.; leg amputated; vet.
Tripler, Wm. K., disch. Aug. 25, '61.
Warner, Geo. L., tr. to 54th P. V.; not on mus. out roll; vet.
Warner, William, not on mus. out roll.
Warner, Dennis, injured at Gaines' Mills, Va., June 27, '62; disch.
White, Marshall, tr. to 54th P. V.; wd. at Snicker's Gap July 18, '64; died in Danville prison, Va.
Woodruff, George E., tr. to 54th P. V.; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65; vet.
Woodward, Lauriston S., wd. at Bull Run Aug. 29, '62; tr. to 54th P. V.; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65; vet.
Youngs, John B., mortally wd. June 30, '62; died Aug. 25, '62.

SIXTH PENNSYLVANIA RESERVES (THIRTY-FIFTH REGIMENT).—The companies composing this regiment were recruited, one from each of the counties of Susquehanna, Columbia, Dauphin, Tioga, Snyder, Franklin, Montour and Wayne, and two from the county of Bradford. It is a remarkable coincidence, that, although recruited in different sections of the State, six of the ten companies were organized on the same day, April 22, 1861, and this included the company from this county—the "Susquehanna Guards." The companies rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, where, on June 22d, a regimental organization was effected by the election of William W. Ricketts, colonel; William M. Penrose, lieutenant-colonel; and Henry J. Madill, of Towanda, major. On the 22d of July it received orders to proceed to Washington, where it arrived on the 24th, and on the 27th was mustered into the United States service. Shortly afterwards it proceeded to the camp of the Reserve Corps at Tenallytown, Md. Here it was assigned to the Third Brigade, commanded by Brigadier-General Ord, which, besides the Sixth, was composed of the Ninth, Tenth and Twelfth Regiments of the Reserves.

On the 20th of December, at Dranesville, the Third Brigade won the initial victory of the Reserves, and thus early in their army-life did the Sixth go forth to battle and to victory. In our history of the Fourth Regiment we have recounted the transfer, in the spring of 1862, of the Pennsylvania Reserves from McDowell's corps to McClellan's army, then operating on the Peninsula.

The Sixth arrived at White House on the 14th of June. Here much alarm existed on account of the cavalry-raids of Stewart, which threatened destruction to the vast stores here accumulated for the supply of McClellan's army. When the Third Brigade marched to join McClellan, the Sixth was detailed to remain behind for the delicate and responsible duty of guarding this important base of supplies. But the advance of the rebels on the right-flank of the Union army rendered White House no longer tenable, and hasty preparations were made to evacuate.

The available transports were laden to the water's edge with government stores, and huge piles were burned for lack of transportation. Five companies of the Sixth, under command of Colonel Sinclair, were at Tunstall's Station, four miles from White House, and at four o'clock on the afternoon of May 28th, we received orders to march to White House without delay. On the way he was twice urged forward by orders from General Stoneman, and finally directed to throw everything away but their guns and cartridge-boxes, and move at double-quick. The enemy followed closely, but they reached the landing in safety and immediately embarked—the other five companies of the regiment having already departed. From White House they proceeded to Harrison's Landing, arriving there the 1st of July. That night the wagon trains from McClellan's discomfited army began to arrive, and towards morning brigade after brigade came pouring in. A sad spectacle was presented as the worn and thinned regiments, just from the fields of the Seven Days' battles, many not larger than a full company, came toiling in through the mud. The meeting of the Sixth with its comrades of the division was touching indeed, their greatly reduced numbers enabling the regiment to fully realize how dreadful had been the late contest before Richmond.

On the 4th the Sixth was transferred to the First Brigade, and thus became associated with the First, Second and Fifth Regiments of the Reserves. From the Peninsula the Sixth moved by water to Acquia Creek, and from there by rail to Falmouth, where it arrived on the 16th of August. In the sanguinary battles of the 28th, 29th and 30th of August, known as the Second Bull Run, the Sixth was hotly engaged and bore a conspicuous part. While gallantly charging the enemy on the 30th, the flag of the Sixth was shot from the staff while in the hands of Major Madill. It was instantly taken by the gallant Reynolds, who, holding it aloft, dashed along the line, the wind catching it as he turned and wrapping it about his noble form. The sight inspired the men of the Sixth to deeds of greater valor, and for an instant they paused in the midst of battle and gave a tremendous soul-stirring cheer for their commander. The casualties in the Sixth during these three bloody days were nearly fifty.

On the 30th of August Major Madill was elected colonel of the One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment, and a few days thereafter, took leave of the Sixth, not without many regrets; for in the battle they had just passed through, he had displayed conspicuous daring and gallantry, and had won the confidence of all. The Sixth next met the enemy at South Mountain on the 14th of September, and during the engagement, five companies of the regiment had a fierce encounter with the Eighth Alabama Regiment, which they drove in confusion from the mountain, but with the loss of twelve killed and forty-one wounded. Scarcely had the echoes of this battle died away ere the Sixth again confronted the enemy on the memorable field of Antietam. Here its heroic courage was again put to the test, and nobly sustained; its losses in killed and wounded aggregating one hundred and thirty-two. But the day of its greatest trial had not yet arrived. Yet, the 13th of December came all too soon, and the dawn of that day found the Sixth confronting the rebel hosts on the heights of Fredericksburg. The charge of the "Pennsylvania Reserves" on Marye's Heights has already been alluded to, and the Sixth fought fierce and well, as its depleted ranks gave sad and convincing evidence. Its colonel was borne from the field wounded, and of the three hundred men who went into action, one hundred and twenty-two were killed and wounded, and nineteen were missing. After the battle the Sixth went into camp near Belle Plain and, excepting participating in Burnsides' "mud march," remained there until February 7th, 1863, when it was ordered to Alexandria. Nothing of moment occurred until the 25th of June, when it joined the general movement of the Army of the Potomac in the memorable campaign that ended at Gettysburg. The Sixth reached Gettysburg at two o'clock, P. M., of the 2d of July, and made a charge from Little Round Top. It remained on the field that night and on the morning of the 3d, was again engaged, and in a charge made towards evening of that day, it captured a number of prisoners and re-captured a gun and five caissons, and relieved a large number of Union prisoners. It sustained a loss of two killed and twenty-two wounded.

During the remainder of 1863 it had several encounters with the enemy, one at Bristoe Station and again at New Hope Church. The spring campaign of 1864, opened for the Sixth by its breaking camp, April 29th, and marching to the bloody battle-fields of the Wilderness, where on May 5th, 6th and 7th it was actively engaged, contesting with determined obstinacy every inch of ground. At Spottsylvania, on the 8th, it was heavily engaged. On the 10th it made two determined charges upon the enemy's works, and again on the 22d. Its losses in these engagements were thirteen killed, sixty-four wounded and nine missing. Constantly upon the skirmish and picket-line, the Sixth met the enemy on every field with unflinching courage. On the 22d it captured ninety men belonging to Hill's Corps.

At length, the final day of its service came, and with it its crowning triumph at Bethesda Church. The Sixth being deployed as skirmishers, was attacked by an overwhelming force and compelled to retire. It then threw up a rifle-pit, upon which the enemy impetuously charged. Reserving its fire until the foe was sufficiently near, it poured into their ranks a volley which inflicted most terrible slaughter. Although, but about one hundred and fifty strong, the Sixth captured one hundred and two prisoners, and buried seventy-two dead rebels in their immediate front.

After three years of service in camp and on field, from its first victory at Dranesville to its final brilliant success at Bethesda Church, sharing always the hardships and privations of the Army of the Potomac, as well as the glory which clusters around its name, the Sixth, on the 1st of June started for Harrisburg, where, with other regiments of the Reserves, it was enthusiastically received on the 6th, and on the 14th was mustered out of service.

COMPANY K.—This company, which was organized at Susquehanna, April 22, 1861, was largely recruited from the borough of Susquehanna, and the township of Harmony. J. R. McCauly, of the latter place, assisted by John Shull, David Mason and J. A. Bonawitz, was largely instrumental in recruiting the company. It left Susquehanna on the 22d of April, 1861, for Harrisburg, and was known as the "Susquehanna Guards,"—its distinguishing uniform being a red-flannel blouse, which was manufactured and given to them by the ladies of Susquehanna. Upon reaching Harrisburg it was mustered into the State service, being the first company from the county. Its officers were John Shull, captain; David Mason, first lieutenant; and J. A. Bonawitz, second lieutenant. Captain Shull was a Virginian by birth, and had served in the Mexican war from April, 1846, to June 1847, and was a captain in the Pennsylvania militia in 1834-51. At the time of his enlistment, in 1861, he was a locomotive engineer.

After the war he became crippled by rheumatism, contracted in the army during his three years' service. He died in 1885, near Cowan, Tenn.; where he had resided the last ten years of his life, engaged in farming. Lieutenant David Mason is a well-known resident of Susquehanna, to which place he returned after nearly three years' honorable service. The present whereabouts of Lieutenant Bonawitz are unknown.

We have followed the fortunes of the Sixth from Dranesville to Bethesda Church, and in its achievements, its toils, and its triumphs, no company in the regiment shared more fully than did Company "K." On the 25th of December, 1863, P. L. Norton, who had previously been promoted from orderly-sergeant of the company to commissary-sergeant of the regiment, with twelve or fourteen more of Company K, re-enlisted. We doubt if these men had turkey that day for dinner, but they could have made no more valuable Christmas-offering upon the altar of their country. Just previous to the muster out of the regiment, at the expiration of its term, the veterans from the Sixth were transferred to the One Hundred and Ninety-first Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers,—those from Company K, forming part of Company E, of that regiment. P. L. Norton was promoted to first lieutenant of that company June 6, 1864, and to captain, December 3, 1864, and on April 1, 1865, was made major by brevet. George W. Belcher was made orderly-sergeant of the company, and on November 1, 1864, was commissioned first lieutenant but was not mustered, being a prisoner.

It was the misfortune of this regiment to be captured, with others, on the 19th of August, 1864, while gallantly defending an advanced position near the Weldon Railroad. The men suffered all the horrors of Salsbury, not being released until near the close of the war.

COMPANY K., SIXTH PENNSYLVANIA RESERVES.

Mustered into service April 23, 1861, unless otherwise stated; mustered out June 11, 1864.

Capt John Shull, mus. out with Co.

1st Lt. David Mason, disch. on surg. cert. March 25, '64.

2d Lt. Jacob A. Bonawitz, mus. out with Co.

1st Sergt. Perez L. Norton, wd. and captd. Dec 13, '62; pr. to com. sergt., to 1st Lieut. Co. E, 191st Reg. P. V., June 6, '64; to capt. Dec. 3, '64; to bv. major April 1, '65; mus. out with Co. June 28, '65; vet.

1st Sergt. James Riordan, mus. out with Co.

Sergeants.

George W. Belcher, tr. to Co. E. 191st Reg. P. V. May 31, '64; captd. at Weldon Railroad, Va., Aug. 19, 1864; com. 1st lt. Nov. 1, '64; not mus.; disch. by G. O. May 27, '65; vet.

Jas. P. Van Gorder, mus. out with Co.

Aug. B. Williams, mus. out with Co.

Wm. F. Kresky, May 29, '61, wd. in action, date unknown; disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 31, '62.

Alexander Ives, tr. to Vet. Res. Corps March 28, '64; vet.

Isaac W. Day, died at Richmond of wds. recd. at Fredericksburg Dec. 13, '62.

Edward Broeser, not with Co. at mus. out.

Corporals.

John Connelly, July 17, '61, mus. out with Co.

Charles Brock, mus. out with Co.

Wm. McKeever, disch. on surg. cert. Nov. 3, '62.

C. J. Harrington, disch. on serg. cert. April 27, '62.

Thomas G. Newman, tr. to 191st Reg. P. V. May 31, '64; mus. out June 28, '65; vet.

A. G. Townsend, died Nov. 21, '61.

H. E. Demander, died Jan. 2, '63, of wds. rec. at Fredericksburg Dec. 13, '62.

Privates.

Ackerman, Newell, disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 3, '62; re. in Co. H, 4th Pa. Res.

Anderson, Thomas, disch on surg. cert. Dec. 12, '62.

Allman, Isaac, Oct. 8, '61; tr. to 191st Reg. P. V. May 31, '64; capt'd at Weldon R. R., Va., Aug. 19, '64; vet.

Andre, Jefferson, Oct. 8, '61; tr. to 191st Regt. P. V. May 31, '64; disch. Oct. 6, '64; exp. of term.

Attwood, Elijah, Aug. 12, '61; tr. to 2d Vt. Regt. Sept. 20, '61.

Attwell, Lucius C., died March 13, '62.

Athony, Stephen, May 29, '61; killed at Spottsylvania C. H. May 12, '64; bur. at Wilderness burial ground.

Belcher, Oscar L., mus out with Co.

Bagley, Daniel B., tr. to Bat. A, 1st Pa. Art. Aug. 15, '62.

Brown, John M., absent; sick at mus. out.

Belcher, Charles T., disch. on surg. cert. Nov. 3, '62.

Blanchard, Ferris, July 17, '61; disch. on surg. cert. March 28, '62.

Babcock, Charles F., disch. on surg. cert. May 30, '62.

Bronson, James M., July 17, '61; disch. on surg. cert. Jan 3, '63.

Bowers, George, tr. to Co. E, 191st Reg. P. V.; pris. from Aug. 19, '64, to March 12, '65; pr. to cor. June 1, '65; mus. out with Co. June 28, '65; vet.

Blanding, Osman L., killed at Nashville, Tenn., April 17, '62.

Brisbing, Andrew, May 29, '61; not with Co. at mus. out.

Banks, Edward S., not with Co. at mus. out.

Callan, John, mus. out with Co. June 11, '64.

Comfort, Isaac L., disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 17, '62.

Daffy, John, mus. out with Co.

Denning, John, tr. from V. R. C.; mus. out with Co.

Du Bois, Richard C., disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 25, '62.

Fitzmyer, Albert, mus. out with Co.

Fisher, Hiram, May 29, '61; not with Co. at mus. out.

Fitzgerald, Michael, wd. at New Hope, Va., Nov. 27, '63; disch on surg. cert. April 4, '64.

Grotevant, H. H., July 17, '61; mus. out with Co.

Gregory, Benjamin, mus. out with Co.

Garman, Eldridge, May 29, '61; mus. out with Co.

Garvey, Daniel, disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 8, '62.

Garver, Nicholas, May 29, '61; tr. to Co. E, 191st Reg. P. V. May 31, '64; capt'd at Tolopotomy, Va., May 30, '64; vet.

Grotevant, George M., died Dec. 29, '62, of wds. rec. at Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, '62; bur. at Mil. Asy. Cem.

Holgate, Richard H., May 29, '61 ; mus. out with Co.
Hamilton, James W., May 29, '61 ; disch. on surg. cert. Aug. 2, '61.
Hawkins, Charles, disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 8, '62.
Hoagland, Charles, July 17, '61 ; disch. on surg. cert. Aug. 30, '61.
Hunt, Warren, killed at Bull Run Aug. 30, '62.
Henderson, V. F., July 17, '61 ; killed at Fredericksburg Dec. 13, '62.
Hough, Alonzo, not with Co. at mus. out.
Illig, Alexander, disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 29, '62.
Kay, George, mus. out with Co.
Lewis, Sidney, disch. on surg. cert. Aug. 26, '62.
Larrabee, Melvin, July 17, '61 ; disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 9, '63
Lydon, Michael J., not with Co. at mus. out.
Martin, John B , pris. from May 30, '64, to April 20, '65 ; disch. June 9, '65.
Maynard, David P., disch, on surg. cert. Aug. 2, '62.
Moynahan, John A., pr. to hos. steward, date unknown ; regular army vet.
Mathewson, Charles, disch. on surg. cert. Aug. 26, '61.
Millins, Luman S., died March 9, '63, of wds rec'd at Antietam, Sept. 17, '62.
Morris, Joseph B., killed at Fredericksburg Dec. 13, '62.
Pope, Charles L., absent ; sick at mus. out.
Pennell, William, mus. out with Co.
Parrish, William A., mus. out with Co.
Purdy, Abram, May 29, '61 ; tr. to Co. E, 191st Reg. P. V. May 31, '64.
Ritter, John, disch. on surg. cert. March 11, '62.
Remmele, John, disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 8, '62.
Rotharmel, Jacob, Oct. 8, '61 ; disch. on surg. cert. May 14, '63.
Radman, Theodore, Oct. 8, '61 ; tr. to Co. E, 191st Reg. P. V. ; capt'd at Weldon R. R., Va , Aug. 19, '64.
Streetan, Patrick, mus. out with Co.
Seigler, Samuel, tr. from V. R. C. ; mus. out with Co. June 11, '64.
St. Clair, George W., disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 8, '62.
Shafer, Stoughton P., May 29, '61 ; disch. on surg. cert. April 27, '62.
Shunk, Jacob, May 29, '61 ; disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 5, '62.
Scranton, Oliver, disch on surg. cert. Feb. 24, '62.
Sims, Robert F., May 29, '61; tr. to Co. E, 191st Reg. P. V. May 31, '64 ; capt'd, died in Salisbury prison, N. C., Feb. 13, '65 ; vet.
Sloat, Urbane, July 17, '61 ; tr. to Co. E, 191st Reg. P. V. May 31, '64 ; mus. out with Co. June 28, '65 ; vet.
Slawson, Henry D., killed at Fredericksburg Dec. 13, '62.
Tracy, Frank M., tr. to Co. E, 191st Reg. P. V. ; wd. at Spottsylvania C. H., Va., May 12, '64 ; ab. in hos. at mus. out ; vet.
Tanner, Gaylord C., killed at Antietam Sept. 17, '62.
Tinsman, Henry, not with Co. at mus. out.
Ulrich, Philip, mus. out with Co.
Underwood, A. E., disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 7, '62.
Utter, Calvin, July 17, '61 ; tr. to Battery C, 5th U. S. Art. Dec. 20, '62.
Van Dusen, Granto, July 17, '61 ; disch. on surg cert. Aug. 30, '61.
Warner, E. D., disch. on surg. cert. Aug. 2, '61.
Walker, Charles N., Aug. —, '61 ; disch. on surg. cert. Aug. 7, '61.
Webster, Isaac D., disch. on surg. cert. Nov. 18, '62.
Young, David, pris. from May 30, to Nov. 19, '64 ; disch. Nov. 25, '64.

FOURTEENTH RESERVES, FIRST ARTILLERY (FORTY-THIRD REGIMENT).—This was the artillery regiment of the Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, and was composed of eight batteries,—A, B, C, D, E, F, G and H. The men composing these batteries were recruited from all sections of the State. Susquehanna County furnished more than one hundred men for this regiment, who principally enlisted in Batteries A, F and H. May 29th, 1861, a regimental organization was effected, and early in August the regiment was ordered to Washington. As fast as the batteries were armed and equipped, they moved to Camp Barry, east of the Capitol, from which camp the several batteries were assigned to different divisions and corps of the army, and never came together again as a regiment.

Battery A.—This battery, known as Easton's Battery, was principally recruited at Chambersburg by Captain Hezekiah Easton, and after his death was commanded respectively by Captains Simpson and Stitt. In 1861 twelve men from Susquehanna County joined it, and in 1864 about twenty more. Battery A was the first of the "Reserve" artillery to meet the enemy, it participating with the Third Brigade in the battle of Dranesville, December 20, 1861. The fine artillery practice then displayed by Easton's Battery was such as to elicit commendation from General McCall in his official report. On the 27th of June, 1862, at Gaines' Mills, while the battery was hotly engaged with the enemy, in a sudden emergency, the regiment of infantry supporting it was withdrawn to another part of the field.

The enemy, seeing its exposed position, immediately charged upon it. Under cover of a cavalry charge, the guns were attempted to be withdrawn; but the charge was repulsed by the terrible infantry fire of the enemy, and the cavalry came pouring through the battery, carrying with them to the rear all the available teams and limbers. The enemy, yelling like demons, rushed boldly to the guns, now left without ammunition, crying out to Captain Easton and the brave men who stood by him, to surrender. His reply, never to be forgotten by his comrades who clustered about him, was: "No! we never surrender!" Alas! the next moment that voice was hushed in death. He fell beside his guns; none were left to surrender them.

The battery was reorganized and received new guns upon the arrival of the army at Harrison's Landing. It participated in the battles of Bull Run, South Mountain, Antietam and Fredericksburg, ever maintaining its reputation for skill and bravery, and during the last-named battle it held its position under a concentrated fire of the enemy's artillery, marks of his shot and shell being visible, after the engagement, on every gun and caisson. Battery A was afterwards detached from the Army of the Potomac and assigned to what was known as the Army of Virginia or Army of the James; and while with this command it operated on the Black Water, at Deep Bottom, Fort Darling, Seven Pines and Petersburg. Upon the fall of Richmond, under command of Captain Stitt, it entered the fallen city, with Weitzel's Corps, on the day of its surrender. It remained on duty in that city until early in July, 1865, when it received orders to turn in its horses and guns and proceed to Harrisburg. Here, on the 25th of July, 1865, after four years and four months of service, it was mustered out.

Battery F.—This battery was recruited principally from Schuylkill County, and organized with Ezra W. Mathews as captain. Upon his promotion as major of the regiment, R. Bruce Ricketts succeeded to the command, who in turn was promoted to major, when John F. Campbell was commissioned captain, and commanded the battery during the remainder of its term of service. In the spring of 1861, twenty-one men, a majority of whom were from the township of Jackson, enlisted with T. LeRoy Case, and joined Battery F. When the battery was organized, Mr. Case was made second lieutenant, and eight of the other Susquehanna County "boys" were placed on the non-commissioned staff of the battery. When it is called to mind that nearly three hundred and fifty men were borne upon the roll of this battery, it was no small compliment to the men from our county to be thus selected. From the camp of the Reserves at Tenallytown, Battery F was ordered, on the 12th of September, 1861, to join General Banks' command at Darnstown, Md., and was never afterwards in any way connected with the regiment or the Reserves. On the 20th of December a section of the battery, under command of Lieutenant Ricketts, had an engagement with a body of the enemy's artillery and cavalry.

In the latter part of February, 1862, the battery was furnished with new guns (six, three-inch rifled) and new equipments. The battery, on the 1st of March, started with Banks' advance up the Shenandoah Valley, and had frequent engagements with the enemy, the more important being Cedar Mountain and the spirited engagement had with the enemy's artillery when Pope withdrew his forces across the Rappahannock. In the latter, the battery had two guns disabled, and Lieutenant Godbald was struck by a percussion shell, and from the effects of the wound he soon after died. At the second battle of Bull Run, August 30, 1863, the battery was posted near the Henry House. On the afternoon of that day Lieutenant Case was ordered, with one section (two guns), to report to General Stevens, leaving Lieutenant Brockway alone with his section, the two disabled guns not having been repaired. A fierce cannonade ensued; but the troops supporting the battery being withdrawn, it was moved to a new position. But the enemy gained possession of the Sudly Spring Road, the only avenue of escape, and the guns were lost. Another gun was placed under Lieutenant Brockway, with orders to "fill the chest with ammunition," and at dusk he was directed by General Heintzleman to "hold the position until further orders and keep up a steady fire in the direction of the enemy." Supposing he was to be supported, he continued his fire until suddenly he was charged upon by the enemy, who came swarming on all sides. Much to the chagrin of the rebel commander, this bold charge of the enemy's hosts resulted in the capture of one gun and caisson and eight men. "It was intended," said Lieutenant Brockway afterwards, "that we should hold the hill until killed or captured, while the army retreated across Bull Run. The ruse succeeded, and I afterwards learned that while our single gun was booming from the Henry House, the Bucktails were cutting down the bridge across Bull Run." Only one gun was saved, and the remnant of the battery marched all night, and the next day reached Centreville. Here the guns and horses of an Indiana battery were turned over to Captain Mathews, and the battery was partially refitted. Early in September Lieutenant Case was obliged to leave the battery on account of sickness, and never afterwards returned, being honorably discharged in February, 1863. On the 17th of September, at daylight, Battery F opened the battle of Antietam, being posted just in rear of the cornfield which has become historic. During this engagement Captain Matthews had his horse killed under him, and this was the fate of most of the horses of the battery. The battery sustained a loss of four killed and fifteen wounded. At the battle of Fredericksburg, December 13th, it was engaged, and afterwards went into winter-quarters near Belle Plain. In March, 1863, Captain Matthews was promoted to major, and Lieutenant Ricketts became captain of Battery F. At the battle of Chancellorsville, May 1st to 5th, the battery passed through another baptism of fire, and in such close quarters did the battery fight, that grape and canister was almost the only ammunition used. But it was at Gettysburg that "Ricketts' Battery" won fresh and lasting laurels. It was upon the position where this battery was posted that the famous charge of the Louisiana Tigers was made. It was the supreme moment of that terrible and memorable battle. On rushed the maddened and yelling rebels, and into their ranks the battery of Ricketts poured a stream of canister at the rate of four discharges a minute. But closing up the gaps, the determined enemy advanced into the very midst of the battery, when a hand-to-hand contest ensued, the men of the battery defending their guns with hand-spikes, rammers and stones. At this critical moment Carroll's brigade came to the rescue, and the enemy retreated. The battery was engaged in a most exposed position on the following day. Its losses were nine killed, fourteen wounded and three taken prisoners, while more than forty of its horses were killed or disabled. On the 14th of October, at Bristow Station, five of the enemy's guns were captured, and in acknowledgment of the part taken by Ricketts' battery, it was selected to take the captured guns to the headquarters of the commanding general. Early in January, 1864, more than one hundred men of the battery re-enlisted, and were granted a veteran furlough. During the campaign of 1864 it participated in the bloody battles of the Army of the Potomac under Grant. At the Wilderness, at Cold Harbot, at Petersburg, the guns of Ricketts belched forth their iron hail. In the final campaign it bore a conspicuous part, and after the fall of Richmond, April 3, 1865, was sent to City Point. From here it proceeded to Washington, where its guns and horses were turned over, and from there to Harrisburg, where, June 10, 1865, it was mustered out.

Battery H.—This battery was recruited principally in the city of Philadelphia, by James Brady, who was commissioned its captain, but after his promotion to major of the regiment the battery was commanded respectively by Captains Fagan and Richards. In the early part of 1861 William J. Park, of Dimock, and seven more Susquehanna County men joined the battery, and upon its organization, Mr. Park was made first lieutenant. In 1864 about thirty more from this county became members of the battery. Battery H, soon after being equipped, was assigned to the artillery brigade of Buell's division. On the 10th of March 1861, the battery was transferred to Couch's division of the Fourth Corps, with which it remained during the Peninsula campaign. For a month, during the siege of Yorktown, the batttery was actively employed. At the battle of Fair Oaks the battery was hotly engaged, and after it had exhausted its canister and grape, it fired Parrott shells without fuse. After the battles of Charles City Cross-Roads and Malvern Hill, Battery H, with others, covered the rear of the army on its retreat to Harrison's Landing. When the army of McClellan returned from the Peninsula, Battery H and Battery E, of the same regiment, was left with the Fourth Corps at Yorktown, to garrison that post and Gloucester. At the opening of the Gettysburg campaign the battery was ordered to Washington, and from there, on the 1st of July, made a forced march to the battle-field, but did not arrive in time to participate in that battle. It was again ordered to Washington and placed on duty as a reserve battery at Camp Barry. In May, 1864, Battery H was dismounted in common with other volunteer batteries, and placed in the defences south of the Potomac, being stationed at Fort Whipple. It remained in the defences of Washington, and on picket duty at Edwards' Ferry until June, 1865, when it was ordered to Philadelphia and on the 27th it was mustered out of service.

BATTERY A, FIRST PENNSYLVANIA LIGHT ARTILLERY.

Mustered into service May 29, 1861, unless otherwise stated; mustered out July 25, 1865.

Sergt. Wm. H. Whitmarsh, Sept. 4, '61; pr. to sergt. June 16, '65; mus. out with battery; vet.

Corp. Geo. W. Bennett, Sept. 7, '61; wd. at Gains' Mills; mus. out with battery; vet.

Corp. Daniel B. Bagley, July 27, '61; pr. to corp. June 16, '65; mus. out with battery; vet.

Artificer James M. Warner, Dec. 1, '61; mus. out with battery; vet.

Privates.

Barriger, Simon, Mar. 28, '64; mus. out with battery.
Barriger, Jonathan, Aug. 5, '64; mus. out with battery.
Ball, Thos., Mar. 25, '64; mus. out with battery; vet.
Bass, Andrew J., Sept. 5, '61; died Sept. 11, '62, at Washington, D. C.; bur. in Mil. Asy. Cem.
Craft, James M., Sept. 4, '61; pr. com. sergt. June 1, '65; mus. out with regt. July 19, '65; vet.
Case, Marcus, Mar. 28, '64; mus. out with battery.
Churchill, Carvarso, Mar. 29, '64; not on muster-out roll.
Daniels, James H., Oct. 31, '61; mus. out with battery; vet.
Daniels, Azarius L., Mar. 24, 64; mus. out with battery.
Daniels, Thos. J., Mar. 24, '64; mus. out with battery.
Dutcher, George E., Mar 9, '64; mus. out with battery; vet.
Green, William A., Mar. 28, '64; capt'd; died May 30, '65; bur. at Richmond, Va.
Hardy, Wm. W., Mar. 28, '64; mus. out with battery.
Jayne, David P., Sept. 10, '61; disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 5, '62.
Michael, Joseph, Mar. 25, '65; disch. May 25, '65; from '63 to '64 was member of 14th Conn.
Osborn, Charles, killed at Antietam, Md., Sept. 18, '62.
Rought, Rufus, Mar. 28, '64; mus. out with battery.
Stark, Griffin G., Sept. 5, '61; dropped from roll by S. O Mar. 16, '62.
Stemback, Byron, Sept. 10, '61; disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 17, '61.
Stephens, Addison, Mar. 8, '64; died at Point of Rocks, Md, May 21 '65.
Tennant, Frederick M., Mar. 31, '64; disch. by special order May 31, '65.
Tennant, Byron, Mar. 31, '64; not on muster-out roll.
Washburn, Henry, Mar. 30, '64; mus. out with battery.
Wescott, J. G., Mar. 28, '64; mus. out with battery.
Weston, William, mus. out with battery; vet.
Whitney, Newell D., Mar. 25, '64; mus. out with battery.
Whitmarsh, Frank C., Aug. 5, '64; mus. out with battery.

BATTERY F, FIRST PENNSYLVANIA LIGHT ARTILLERY.

Mustered into service July 8, 1861, unless otherwise stated; mustered out June 9, 1865.

Second Lieut. Truman L. Case, disch. Feb. 4, '63.

Sergeants.

Smith L. French, mus. out with battery; vet.
Myron French, killed at Gettysburg (see sketch with "Myron French" Post, G. A. R.).
Lee Greenwood, pr. to sergt.; disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 13, '63.
Oscar G. Larrabee, capt'd at second Bull Run; wd. and taken pris. at Gettysburg; mus. out with battery; vet.
Alfred W. Larrabee, pr. to sergt.; wd. at second Bull Run; disch. on surg. cert. Mar. 5, '63.

Corporals.

Wm. Patterson, wd. at Bristoe Station, Vt., Oct. 14, '63; tr. to Battery G Mar. 26, '64; mus. out July 20, '64; Exp. of term.
Delos D. Bryant, disch. on surg. cert. May 19, '62.
Elijah Eastman, capt'd at second Bull Run; pr. to cor.; tr. to Battery G Mar. 26, '64; mus. out July 20, '64; exp. of term.

Privates.

Dix, Burton W., mus. out with battery June 9, '65; vet.
Estabrook, Whitmore, disch. on surg. cert.; date unknown.
Fox, Enoch, died Aug. 19, '61.
French, Merritt C., not with company at muster-out.
Gates, Maynard, tr. to Battery G Mar. 26, '64; mus. out July 20, '64; exp. of term.
Galloway, Aaron B., Sept. 7, '61; disch. on surg. cert. Aug. 8, '62; re. in company A, 151st P. V.
Lake, Velasco O., wd. at battle of Wilderness; mus. out with battery June 9, '65; vet.
Larrabee, J. Wesley, Feb. 3, '64; mus. out with battery June 9, '65.
Mattison, Orrin, disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 5, '61.
Maynard, David P., Sept. 11, '61; disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 26, '62.
Sweet, Oney F., Jan. 1, '61; wd. at Gettysburg; mus. out with battery; vet.
Scott, Raymond T., mus. out July 16, '64; exp. of term.
Tiffany, Bernard, Aug. 1, '61; disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 24, '63.
Tiffany, Henry M., Dec. 11, '61; died while home on furlough Jan. 16, 64; vet.
Wells, C. M., Mar. 31, '64; not on the muster-out roll.

BATTERY H, FIRST PENNSYLVANIA LIGHT ARTILLERY.

Mustered into service July 8, 1861, unless otherwise stated; mustered out June 27, 1865.

First Lieut. William J. Parke, Aug. 1, 61; res. Jan. 12, '62.
Sergt. J. W. Throckmorton, Aug. 5, '61; mus. out with battery June 27, 1865; vet.

Privates.

Avory, Addison.
Avery, David, Mar. 25, '64; mus. out with battery.
Brink, Geo. W., Mar. 25, '64; mus. out with battery.
Brink, Calvin D., Aug. 5, '61; not on muster-out roll; vet.
Burr, Samuel G., Mar. 25, '64; mus. out with battery.
Bronson, James F., Mar. 31, '64; mus. out with battery.
Bolles, Chas. M., Aug. 29, '64; mus. out July 3, '65.
Barrett, Alonzo, not on muster-out roll.

Barrett, Elias R., not on muster-out roll.
Curtis, John L., Mar. 25, '64; mus. out with battery.
Clark, Rufus D., Aug. 5, '61; not on muster-out roll.
Doyle, Theodore W., Mar. 25, '64; mus. out with battery.
Fowler, William H., Mar. 26, '64; mus. out with battery.
Gregory, Warren W., Aug. 26, '64; mus. out with battery.
Gregory, Daniel, Aug. 26, '64; mus. out with battery.
Gates, Nathaniel H., July 30, '61; disch. on surg. cert. Oct. 16, '62.
Grow, Jas. A.
Grow, A. C.
Hungerford, Clark E., Mar. 27, '64; tr. and pr. to colored troops May 9, '65.
Hungerford, John R., Mar. 26, '64; pr. to lt. of colored regt.; date unknown.
Jackson, John W., Mar. 25, '64; mus. out with battery.
Lewis, Geo. W., Mar. 25, '64; disch. May 30, '65.
McVey, Seymore, Mar. 25, '64; mus. out with battery.
Moore, Geo. W., Nov. 27, '63; ab. sick at muster-out.
Mason, Jonas, Aug. 26, '63; disch. on surg. cert. Aug. 18, '64.
Norris, Edward F., Aug. 5, '61; not on muster-out roll.
Reauch, Henry.
Shepherdson, Jarvis E., Mar. 25, '64; mus. out with battery.
Sweet, Emerson, Mar. 26, '64; mus. out May 30, '65.
Severson, Edward C., July 30, '61; disch. at Fortress Monroe, Va., '63.
Spencer, Orville T., July 30, '61; disch. on surg. cert. Oct. 22, '62; for wds. received at battle of Fair Oaks, Va.
Taylor, Francis W., Mar. 31, '64; mus. out with battery.
Taylor, Llewellyn, Mar. 25, '64; mus. out with battery.
Tennant, Frederick M., Mar. 31, '64; disch. by S. O. May 31, '65.
Tiffany, Thos. W., Mar. 18, '64; mus. out with battery.
Williams, Benjamin.
Williams, Geo. L., Dec. 1, '63; mus. out with battery.
Williams, Henry B., Mar. 30, '64; mus. out with battery.
Williams, Rudolph, Mar. 30, '64; mus. out with battery.
Wallace, George, Mar. 25, '64; mus. out with battery.
Ward, Ira, Mar. 25, '64; mus. out with battery.

The following were also members of the First Light Artillery. (For letter of battery, see column of "Remarks.")

Sergt. Arba Dimmock, June 13, '61; Battery D; mus. out June 21, '64, exp. of term.
Sergt. Alford G. Lewis, Aug. 5, '61; Battery D; mus. out with battery June 30, '65; vet.

Privates.

Reeder, Theodore W., Sept. 1, '64; Battery D; mus. out June 21, '65.
Gates, Charles, Aug. 31, '64; Battery G; mus. out with battery June 29, '65.
Pickering, Warren, not on muster-out roll.
Sutliff, Solomon, Aug. 19, '62; Battery B; tr. from Co. B, 143d P. V. Dec. 28, '63; tr. to battery I Mar. 25, '65; mus. out June 9, '65.
Van Horn, Jackson W., Mar. 23, '65; Battery E; mus. out with battery July 20, '65.
Larrabee, Wm. H., Mar. 23, '65; Battery E; not on muster-out roll.

FIFTIETH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.—The Fiftieth Regiment was recruited one company from each of the Counties of Susquehanna, Lancaster and Luzerne, two companies from each of the Counties of Bradford and Schuylkill, and three companies from the County of Berks. It was organized as a regiment on the 25th of September, 1861, by the election of the following officers: Benjamin C. Christ, Colonel; Thomas S. Brenholtz, Lieutenant-Colonel; and Edward Overton, Jr., Major. The regiment received its colors from the hands of Governor Curtin on the 1st of October. The prominent features of its varied and honorable service are given in the following brief history of Company D.—One Saturday evening in the middle of June, 1861, Frederick Warner, Benjamin Lyons, Luke Lyons and Thomas Foster called upon Dr. G. Z. Dimock and said that they had decided to enlist in the army and, desiring to keep together, they requested him to act as captain and proceed to raise a company. At first Dimock refused, feeling that he had no qualifications for the position; but September 6, 1861, he locked his office and commenced to recruit a company. In this work he was ably assisted by John C. Foot, J. R. Cornwall, George Doolittle and Benjamin Doolittle, who had served three months under Lincoln's call for seventy-five thousand men. As they had been drilled they were of great assistance at first. Charles Warner, a West Point cadet, drilled squads of the boys also. September 24, 1861, the company arrived at Camp Curtin one hundred and twenty-five strong, being the largest new company that marched through Harrisburg.

When the boys left Montrose Hon. Wm. J. Turrell made a speech, and they were conveyed to the depot in carriages, accompanied by many of the citizens. Colonel Gere went as far as Harrisburg and assisted Captain Dimock in selecting non-commissioned officers and in making out the first muster-roll. The company was organized by electing Gordon Z. Dimock captain, John C. Foot first lieutenant and B. R. Lyons second lieutenant. Frederick R. Warner was the first orderly-sergeant. They were mustered in Monday, September 26, one hundred and one strong, as Company D, and attached to the Fiftieth Regiment, which only lacked one company, and were sent to Washington, October 2, and encamped at Kalorama Heights, where it remained until the 9th, and thence moved to Annapolis. From Annapolis they were sent, October 19, on board the transport Winfield Scott, to Hilton Head. They encountered a fearful storm, a portion of Captain Dimock's thrilling account of which is here given:

"The blue sky lowered itself down and grew black. The gentle undulations became heavy swells; the swells got themselves up to huge billows; the soft breeze increased to a strong wind; the wind stiffened into a fierce gale. Then the storm came. Such a storm! * * * We looked back and saw the Governor lift her bow toward heaven and sink stern foremost into the ocean. We passed the Union, saw her signals of distress and heard her cries for help. In reply the Winfield Scott run her flag up to half-mast, with the union down, as signal of her own distress, then sped on without waiting to witness the final catastrophe of her consort. She went rolling and pitching and floundering along like a tub in the water. She was nothing more than a tub with wheels attached to her sides." The guns were fired until the ammunition was exhausted, then thrown overboard. "A large, heavy wave struck the side of the boat careening well over, carried away part of the wheel-house, swept over the hurricane deck and broke the connection between the rudder and pilot's wheel, while the soldiers were clinging to the extra guards of rope which had been thrown around the boat. Levers and tackle were rigged to the rudder and managed by six men sitting on the deck on each side. The harsh sound of the trumpet heard for the first time, sent a thrill through every fibre and made every soldier feel the full force of the couplet,

"It is a fearful thing at midnight to be shattered by the blast,
And hear the rattling trumpet thunder, 'Cut away the mast.'"

By the dim light of a lantern the masts were cut away, and were borne by a gale over the side of the boat, into the ocean. The gunboat "Bienville" hove in sight, but every boat that she lowered was dashed to pieces against the side of the vessel. The two boats tried to lash together, but the first big wave parted their cables like two strings.

Attempts to rescue having failed, the soldiers held a prayer-meeting on the forward deck. Men confessed their sins who had never before been penitent; and men prayed who had never prayed before. Sailors tied ropes around the breasts of the soldiers and hung a coil of it upon the arm, and showed them how to lash themselves to anything they could find that would float them, and informed them that the boat would sink in two hours. All stood dumb with consternation. Company D grasped each other's hands in silence. One of the number was missing. Search was made everywhere. Was he washed overboard? At length he was seen below, sitting by the fire of the furnace. He was informed that the boat was about to sink, and was called to come up and get his rope. "Ah! now, you just be afther waiting a minute," says Jimmy; "I've found a bully place for gracing boots!" There is sometimes an opportune moment. It so happened that while the boys were in good humor, a little cheered by Jimmy's remarks, the command was given, "Attention, Company D! Man the buckets, man the casks, man the tackles, take the water out of the hold and you shall go ashore! If you don't take the water out of the hold you are all drowned in less than two hours!" The boys went to work with a will. Captain Burket's company, composed mostly of boatmen from Schuylkill Canal, handled the buckets well. The other companies soon fell in. Among the casualties to Company D, were: Spafford, of Friendsville, was so overworked that he came home to die; McMillan, of New Milford, shared the same fate; Lieutenant Lyons shouted heave away until he could hardly speak; Lieutenant Cornwall and William Sutton, of New Milford, were lashed with ropes under their arms to upright posts in the hold, to sink the casks with their feet, until their breasts were galled and crushed by the ropes. The boys finally jumped into the ocean, and all reached shore. At Hilton Head the boys made a charge on the fort, and Company D was so fleet of foot and pursued General Drayton so closely, that he dropped his field-glass, and it was captured by Amos Quick.

Company D was the last company that joined the regiment. The captains of the other companies all agreed with Captain Dimock, that if he would join the regiment so that they could get away from Camp Curtin, he should not be called upon to do any fatigue duty or guard duty. This created some dissatisfaction after awhile, which probably was the reason why his company was detached from the regiment from February until June, 1862, to guard part of St. Helena Island. It was Captain Dimock's duty to guard all the property on the island, besides doing scout duty, consequently, his company made their raids on the mainland. One day they captured a cow and calf. Captain Dimock kept the calf and sent a hind-quarter of the cow to General Stevens. Shortly after Captain D. noticed a boat approaching the island from headquarters, and he repaired to the beach in full dress, with some trepidation. The officer approached, saluted him and handed him a sealed order, and retired. The order was from General Hunter directing that Captain D. and his men should be passed by the guards and pickets at all points along the line. Dimock asked General Stevens what it meant, and he said, "Get more beef."

When an overseer intended to promote a negro, he first gave him an old saddle; if he did well this was followed by a horse, which gave the negro a chance to ride to church, which was quite an honor above a field hand; and finally, if he did well he made him a household servant. The Christian Commission had missionaries there to teach the negroes. Probably some of them were unworthy of the mission they had undertaken. One of them wanted a saddle and quarreled with a negro who did not want to give up his badge of honor. Captain D. promptly arrested the "Gideonite," as he called the missionary, and sent him to General Stevens, who sent him back and told Captain D. to attend to all those matters himself. "Old Iron Gray," as they called Captain D. then realized that he was in full command, and he lived in clover after that. He had three horses, a pair of mules and a cart, three good boats and eighteen skilled negro oarsmen. The stroke oarsman was very faithful, and always on duty. Dimock sent to Stevens for whiskey and quinine to keep off fever, and he sent him a barrel of whiskey and three bottles of quinine. One day he was ordered to catch all the negroes on the island and send them up to Hilton Head. He commenced at midnight, and sent up about one hundred. When at Hilton Head they were invited to enlist in the First South Carolina Colored Regiment, and about fifty of them did so. Lieutenant Foot made a raid on the mainland and captured nine pickets.

January 1, 1862, General Stevens led his brigade under cover of the gun-boats across the Coosaw, and captured a fort in process of construction at Port Royal Ferry and two heavy guns. The battle of Coosaw was the first engagement in force in which the company was engaged. Colonel Christ, with the Fiftieth Regiment, two companies of the First Massachusetts Cavalry and a section of artillery, was ordered to burn the railroad bridge near Pocotaligo. The approach to this place was by a narrow causeway a fourth of a mile long, flanked on either side by a marsh through which a canal had been dug to irrigate rice-swamps. The plank had been removed from the bridge, and the only way of crossing was over the stringers exposed to the enemy's fire. Captain Charles Parker, of Company H, gallantly led across, and his own and five other companies, including Company D, followed him. Captain Parker was killed, but they drove the enemy and re-planked the bridge. The enemy being reinforced and ammunition being nearly exhausted, it was decided to return across the bridge. The loss was four killed and nine wounded. July 12th the regiment, now under command of Lieutenan-Colonel Brenholtz—Colonel Christ being in command of this brigade—was ordered to Fortress Monroe, and was incorporated with the Ninth Corps under General Burnside. At Fredericksburg Stevens' Division, now forming part of Reno's command, was detached from the corps and pushed forward to confront the advance of Lee, and had several skirmishes with the head of his column at the fords of the Rapidan and the Rappahannock. On the first day at Bull Run, Christ's Brigade was attached to Schurz's Division of Sigel's Corps, and was engaged during a greater part of the day, occupying a position on the right wing of the army, and driving the enemy at several points, sustaining heavy loss. At night the brigade returned to Stevens' Division.

"In the second day's fight," says Captain Dimock, "we lost less but fought harder. Stevens' Brigade drove the whole line in front of it, the enemy parted and left it open in front, and we supposed we had gained a victory. I heard Captain Lusk, aid to General Stevens, order Colonel Christ to bring his men out of the woods. He did so, faced his men towards the enemy, and ordered rest after giving three cheers for victory. We had scarcely laid down before Captain Lusk returned in great excitement, exclaiming: 'for G——'s sake, Colonel Christ, get your men away from here.' We now observed, as it grew dark, that the fighting to the right and left of us was terrific, that the two wings were driven far back of us, and that we were nearly inclosed in a horse-shoe. We beat a hasty retreat, and were soon joined by General Stevens, who said the Eighth Michigan was missing. In less than five minutes after his arrival a volley from the enemy forced us again to fall back." General Stevens sent Captain Dimock on a scout in order to ascertain where the rebel picket-lines were, and gave him instructions to throw up his arms and surrender if he was confronted by the enemy, rather than get killed, unless he obtained important information—then he was to take greater risk. While Dimock was gone, Stevens was ordered to guard the supply-train, and on the thirty-first Christ's Brigade was posted upon the heights beyond Centreville, where it was vigorously shelled. On the following day it was engaged in the battle of Chantilly, where the brigade was early in the fight, driving the enemy before them. The Fiftieth bore itself with great gallantry in this battle, and was led by Major Overton, and Company D was led by Lieutenant Foot, Captain Dimock not having yet been able to find his company since he was sent on that scouting expedition. General Stevens, who had warned the captain not to get killed, was himself killed while carrying the colors of the Seventy-ninth (Highlander) Regiment, after several of the color-bearers had been shot down. The division moved to South Mountain, where General O. B. Wilcox took command. It formed part of the left wing, and was engaged at Turner's Gap, the Fiftieth still under Major Overton being the first engaged. Next they were engaged at Antietam, where Major Overton was wounded. Captain Dimock next commanded two companies at Fredericksburg, where they stood in sight of the battle all day, though not actively engaged. After this they removed to Newport News, thence to Kentucky, where it was attached to the Army of the Ohio. During the siege of Vicksburg, the Fiftieth was posted on Haines Bluff, and after the fall of that place it was attached to General Sherman's command, and was deployed as skirmishers in the campaign to Jackson, where the gallant Lieutenant-Colonel, Thos. S. Brenholtz, was mortally wounded. August 10th the regiment moved from Mississippi to Kentucky, thence across the mountains via Cumberland Gap to Knoxville. At this time the number present for duty in the regiment was but eighty. At Blue Springs Christ's Brigade assisted in driving the enemy back near the Virginia line. Next they were engaged with Longstreet's Corps near Chattanooga, and were compelled to retire through the deep mud where the books, papers and baggage of the regiment were lost. November 17th they commenced fortifying Knoxville, subsisting on fresh pork and corn-cob bread. On the 29th of December the enemy charged Fort Sanders. The attack was repelled with great slaughter, and the Fiftieth, which held a position on the right, pursued to Blaines Cross Road, where it went into winter-quarters. January 1, 1864, nearly the entire regiment re-enlisted, and they were ordered to Nicholasville, Ky., a distance of two hundred miles. They had drawn no clothing or shoes since September, and thirty raw hides had been made into moccasins which answered a good purpose until they came to muddy ground, when they stretched until they loosened and came off their feet, leaving many of the men barefoot. On arriving at Harrisburg, February 6th, the regiment was given a veteran's furlough. The thirty-three men remaining of Company D were treated to an ovation as they came back to Montrose. They arrived at the depot at night, where they were met by citizens and taken in carriages to the suburbs of the borough, where the veterans formed in line and were escorted into town by the fire companies and a band of music, amid the ringing of bells and the illumination of the town. The streets were thronged with citizens. Judge Bentley made the address of welcome, followed by Messrs. Turrell, Jessup and others. A sword was presented to Captain Dimock, J. B. McCollum making the presentation speech. During the thirty days the company remained home, the citizens vied with each other in giving them suppers and in doing them honor. March 20th the regiment was again rendezvoused at Annapolis, and assigned to the Second Brigade of the First Division of the Ninth Corps. They lost—seventeen killed and fifty-three wounded and missing at the battle of the Wilderness. On May 9th they were engaged at Ny River, near Spottsylvania Court-House, gallantly charging the enemy up a steep ascent, driving them from their position; but at a loss of one hundred and twenty men killed and missing from the Fiftieth Regiment. Company D lost heavily at this battle. The regiment was engaged in that series of battles that preceded the fall of Petersburg, and was one of the first regiments to enter that place. When the three years were expired, Captain Dimock was discharged and Captain Thos. Foster commanded the company until it was mustered out.

Upon the laying of the corner-stone of the National Monument at Gettysburg, on the 4th of July, 1865, by order of the Secretary of War and upon the recommendation of General Grant, the Fiftieth Regiment was honored by being selected to represent the infantry of the army in the ceremonies of that occasion. Returning from Gettysburg it went into camp near Georgetown, and on the 30th of July was mustered out of service, the members of Company D reaching Montrose early in August, after nearly four years of service. Captain Dimock claims for the Fiftieth that it sailed more miles on steamboats, traveled more miles on foot, and fought in more battles than any other regiment. During his term of service, Captain Dimock was on "detached" service for nearly a year as brigade-quartermaster, but was in fifteen of the thirty-two engagements in which the regiment participated.

COMPANY D, FIFTIETH REGIMENT.

Mustered into service September 6, 1861, unless otherwise stated; mustered out July 30, 1865.

Capt. Gordon Z. Dimock, mus. out Sept. 29, '64, expiration of term (see medical chapter).

Capt. Thomas F. Foster, pr. from cor. to sergt. major Apr. 1, '62; to 2d lieut. Apr. 8, '64; to capt. Nov. 26, '64; wd. at Wilderness May 6, '64; mus. out with Co.; vet.

1st Lt. John C. Foot, was in command of the Co. nearly one year; res. Feb. 17, '63.

1st Lt. Jonathan A. Cornwall, pr. from sergt. to 2d lt. Aug. 1, '62; to 1st lt. Dec. 13, '63; mus. out Oct. 27, '64, exp. of term.

1st. Lt. Wilbur H. Wilcox, pr. from priv. to sergt.; to 1st lt. Dec. 4, '64; mus. out with Co.; vet.

2d Lt. Benjamin R. Lyons, died July 6, '62, of wds. received in action (see Four Brothers Post, G. A. R.).

2d Lt. Hugh Mitchell, pr. from cor. to sergt. Mar. 1, '65; 2d lt. Apr. 16, '65; mus. out with Co.; vet.

1st Sergt. Amos B. Baldwin, Feb. 27, '62; capt'd May 12, '64; pr. to cor.; to sergt. Mar. 1, '65; to 1st sergt. May 1, '65; mus. out with Co.; vet.

1st Sergt. Luke L. Lyons, pr. from cor. to 1st. sergt.; died May 15, '64, of wds. rec. in action; vet. (see Four Brothers Post, G. A. R.)

1st Sergt. Frederick R. Warner, pr. to 1st lt., Co. G, Feb. 15, '62; res. Oct. 31, '63.

Sergeants.

Daniel W. Brundage, pr. from priv. to sergt.; mus. out with Co.; vet.

Edwin S. Howell, pr. from priv. to sergt.; mus. out with Co.; vet.

Jordan Palmer, pr. to cor.; to sergt. May 1, '65; mus out with Co.; vet.

Edward J. Messinger, pr. to cor. Mar. 1, '65; to sergt. May 1, '65; mus. out with Co.; vet.

Alfred J. Stephens, pr. from priv. to sergt.; to sergt. maj. Nov. 21, '64; to 1st lt., Co. B, Mar 25, '65; mus. out with Co.; vet.

Charles W. Lung, pr. to cor.; to sergt.; tr. to V. R. C. Jan. 25, '65; vet.

Cyrill Depue, Feb. 28, '62; pro. to cor.; to sergt.; killed at Wilderness May 6, '64; vet.

George A. Doolittle, disch. July, '63, for pr. in reg. army; served during war; remained in serv. until his death.

Truman G. Larrabee, disch. on surg. cert.

E. W. Rosencrance, disch. on surg. cert.

Henry L. West, pr. from muc. to sergt.; disch. for wds. rec. in action.

Corporals.

Levi S. Blaisdell, capt'd May 12, '64; pr. cor. July 1, 64; mus. out with Co.; vet.

Velosco V. Leonard, pr. to cor. Dec. 4, '64; mus. out with Co. July 30, '65; vet.

Peter W. McFall, pr. to cor. Mar. 1, '65; mus. out with Co.; vet.

William H. Fordham, pr. to cor. Mar. 1, '65; mus. out with Co.; vet.

Peter H. Allen, pr. to cor. May 1, 65; mus. out with Co.; vet.

Marble Wells, Mar. 25, '64; pr. to cor. May 1, '65; mus. out with Co.

John Smith, Mar. 7, '64; pr. to cor. July 1, '65; mus. out with Co.

Walter L. Beebe, pr. to cor. Dec. '62; wd. at Bull Run Aug. '62; mus. out Sept. 29, '64, exp. of term.

Charles W. Snyder, pr to cor; killed at Wilderness May 6, '64; vet.

Frederick A. Holebrook, pr. to cor.; killed at Cold Harbor, Va., June 3, '64; vet.

Daniel R. Day, capt'd May 12, '64; died at Montrose, Pa., May 24, '64 shortly after release from rebel prison; vet.

Silas E. Leonard, died May 12, '64.

Hugh Lenox, disch. on surg. cert.

Ezra N. Dewers, disch. on surg. cert.

Ledyard P. Mack, pr. to cor.; disch. on surg. cert.

Joseph A. Beebe, died, date unknown.

Musicians.

Edward J. Malone, Mar. 25, '64; Absent, sick, at mus. out.

Horace P. Snyder, Mar. 8, '64; Absent, sick, at mus. out.

Henry C. Lines, Sept. 16, '61; disch. on surg. cert.

Privates.

Allen, Henry C., Mar. 3, '64; mus. out with Co.

Anderson, John, Feb. 27, '65; drafted; mus. out with Co.

Avis, William C., Mar. 3, '64; died at Florence, S. C., Oct. 8, 1864.

Ayers, Ashman C., disch. on surg. cert.

Alderson, Thomas W., disch. on surg. cert.

Burgess, Henry C., on detached serv.; disch. Oct. 1, '64, exp. of term.

Blowers, David E., Mar. 10, '65; sub.; mus. out with Co.

Benjamin, W. S., mus. out Sept. 29, '64, exp. of term.

Brown, Theodore F., Mar. 8, '64; disch. by G. O. May 26, '65.

Bolls, William D., Apr. 2, '64; disch. by G. O. May 30, '65; previously served in 27th N. Y. Vols.

Beebe, Alonzo H., Mar. 3, '64; pris. from May 12, '64, to Feb. 27, '65; disch. by G. O. July 19, '65.

Bodine, Charles, Mar. 3, '64; died at Florence, S. C., Oct. 13, '64.

Brown, Martin V., Mar. 30, '64; died at Andersonville, Ga., Aug. 1, '64.

Baldwin, Lyman M., disch. on surg. cert.

Baldwin, H. Scott, disch. by G. O. May 25, '65.

Baldwin, Edwin F., ab., sick at mus. out.

Backus, Samuel A., disch. on surg. cert.

Benson, Philander K., disch. on surg. cert.

Babcock, B. F., pr. to 2d lt., Co. D., 55th Regt, P. V., Apr. 5, '62; res. July 31, '62.

Baker, George M., Feb. 25, '62 ; disch. on surg. cert.
Burdick, Joseph, Mar. 28, '64 ; not on mus. roll.
Canfield, John S., Mar. 3, '64 ; mus. out with Co.
Chapman, James Q., Apr. 12, '64 ; mus. out with Co.
Cornell, Judson L., mus. out Sept. 29, '64, exp. of term.
Chamberlain, C. W., Feb. 28, '62 ; mus. out Mar. 23, '65, exp. of term.
Canfield, Lyman B., Mar. 29, '64 ; killed at Spottsylvania C. H. May 12, '64.
Carter, Charles T., or R., Mar. 29, '64 ; died June 3, '64, of wds. rec. at Spottsylvania C. H. May 12, '64.
Corey, James H., Feb. 25, '64 ; died at Scranton, Pa., Mar. 25, '65, just released from Andersonville Prison.
Cross, Isaiah H., Sept. 9, '61 ; mus. out Sept. 29, '64, exp. of term.
Cool, David, Sept. 9, '61 ; disch. on surg. cert.
Coddington, W. H., Sept. 9, '61 ; disch. for wds. rec. in action.
Day, Thomas, Apr. 1, '64 ; ab., in hos., at mus. out.
Dennis, William H., Apr. 2, '64 ; mus. out with Co.
Doloway, Hiram, Apr. 2, '64 ; disch. June 28, '65, for wds. rec. at Wilderness May 9, '64.
Davis, Thomas P., Mar. 1, '64 ; tr. to Co. F Apr. 30, '64 ; wd. June 18, '64 ; pr. to 1st sergt. July 1, '65 ; com. 2d lt. May 2, '65 ; not mus. ; mus. out with Co.
Denel, Benjamin, disch on surg. cert.
Darrow, Oscar B., Feb. 24, '62 ; disch. for wds. rec. in action.
Estes, Joseph W., Apr. 2, '64 ; tr. to V. R. C. Jan. 25, '65.
Estes, John N., Apr. 2, '64 ; died at Philadelphia July 31, '64.
Estes, Andrew, Apr. 2, '64 ; died at Florence, S. C., Oct. 5, '64.
Estes, Miles R., died of wds. rec. in action.
Esterbrook, W. D., Sept. 6, '64 ; disch. on surg. cert.
Fessenden, C. E., Apr. 2, '64 ; ab., in hos., at mus. out.
Fish, William C., wd. in South Carolina and battle of Wilderness ; mus. out Sept. 29, '64, exp. of term.
Frink, Charles C., disch. on surg. cert. Nov. 17, '64 ; vet.
Fordham, Abram, died at Andersonville June 26, '64.
Foster, Charles A., died at Knowville Feb. 5, '64.
Fisher, James, Mar. 27, '64 ; not on mus. roll.
Hoage, Charles A., Apr. 2, '64 ; wd. at Petersburg ; ab., in hos., at mus. out.
Hyde, Jonathan, Feb. 24, '65 ; drafted ; mus. out with Co. July 30, '65.
Howard, Joseph W., Mar. 31, '64 ; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65.
Hacket, James, died at Andersonville, Ga. July, '64.
Hufteln, Palmer, not on mus. out roll.
Howard, John W., not on mus. out roll.
Jackson, James, Mar. 30, '64 ; died June 18, '64, of wds. rec. in battle.
Jenks, George E., disch. on surg. cert.
Kirhuff, Barney, Mar. 7, '64 ; mus. out with Co.
Kanaway, Joseph G., mus. out with Co. ; vet.
Krause, Edgar F., Mar. 3, '64 ; disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 2, '64, for wds., loss of arm at Wilderness.
Kelsey, Samuel A., mus. out by S. O. Jan. 17, '66, to date July 30, '65 ; vet.
Leary, John J., Mar. 28, '64 ; ab., in hos., at mus. out.
Lines, Orrin A., Apr. 12, '64 ; mus. out with Co.
Lester, William H., pr. to cor. ; mus. out Sept. 29, '64, exp. of term.
Lord, Franklin, mus. out Sept. 29, '64, exp. of term.
Lindsley, George A., mus. out Sept. 29, '64, exp. of term.
Lindsley, Henry, disch. on surg. cert.
Lewis, Francello, died, date unknown.
Lee, Thomas, died, date unknown.
Manzer, Price, Mar. 7, '64 ; mus. out with Co. July 30, '65.
Mallison, Joshua D., Mar. 28, '64 ; absent in hospital at muster out.
Messinger, Rufus, Aug. 9, '62 ; wd. in front of Petersburg, Va. ; disch. by G. O. July 10, '65.
Millins, Seth, mus. out with company ; vet.
Miller, Elijah, Feb. 24, '65 ; drafted ; disch. by G. O. May 10, '65.
Mooney, Eben B., Feb. 26, '62 ; trans. to V. R. C. Jan. 23, '64.
Maynard, Elvin, died May 12 of wds. rec. at Spottsylvania C. H. ; vet.
Marsh, Darius, Mar. 25, '64 ; died at Andersonville July 2, '64.
Moore, Andrew J., Apr. 2, '64 ; died May 13, '64, of wds. rec. in action.
Mulkey, James A., Apr. 2, '64 ; died at Andersonville, Ga., July 13, '64.
Mott, De Wolf, disch. on surg. cert.
Mitchell, Geo. W., mus. out Sept. 29, '64 ; expiration of term.
McKune, Michael, mus. out with the company ; vet.
McKenzie, Chas., killed at Wilderness May 6, '64.
McRoy, John, disch. on surg. cert.
McMillan, Daniel F., disch. on surg. cert.
Newcomb, Edgar E., Mar. 3, '64 ; mus. out with company.
Nichols, James, Mar. 8, '64 ; mus. out with company; vet.
Owens, Ebenezer, Mar. 7, '64 ; died at Andersonville, Ga., Sept. 20, '64.
Perkins, William A., Apr. 2, '64 ; mus. out with company.
Pennington, Isaac, Feb. 26, '64 ; drafted ; mus. out with company.
Pickering, John D., Mar. 9, '64 ; disch. by G. O. May 15, '65.
Patterson, David, Apr. 2, '64 ; died Oct. 13, '64.
Price, Chauncey, Mar. 7, '64 ; died May 13, '64, of wds. rec. at Spottsylvania C. H.
Pierson, Henry T., died, date unknown.
Pierson, David C., disch. on surg. cert.
Potter, Charles B., disch. on surg. cert.
Quick, Amos M., died, date unknown.
Rose, Wm. S., Apr. 2, '64 ; died at home while on a fur. Mar. 23, '65.
Rockwell, W. C., disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 8, '64 ; re. Mar. 28, '64 mus. out with company July 30, '65 ; vet.
Ryan, Philip, Sept. 5, '61 ; mus. out with company ; vet.
Rodgers, Henry B., disch. on surg. cert.
Resseguie, Amasa, died, date unknown.
Sterling, Collins M., mus. out with company ; vet.
Smith, John P., Feb. 24, '65 ; drafted ; mus. out with company.
Smith, Wm. G., Feb. 27, '65 ; drafted ; mus. out with company.
Shippy, John, Feb 24, '64 ; drafted ; mus. out with company.
Stanton, John, Mar. 13, '65 ; substitute ; mus. out with company.
Snyder, Hiram J., mus. out Sept. 29, '64 ; exp. of term.
Spencer, Edwin D., died May 12, '64, of wds. rec. at Wilderness, May 9, '64.
Smith, Mark, disch. by G. O. May 9, '65 ; vet.
Stephens, Chandler, Mar. 7, '64 ; disch. on surg. cert. Nov. 17, '64.
Smith, Thos., mus. out with company July 30, '65 ; vet.
Smith, David, Feb. 24, '65 ; disch. by G. O. May 10, '65.
Sloat, Edwin H., Mar. 7, '64 ; died at Andersonville, Ga., July 28, '64.
Snyder, Sylvester, Apr. 6, '64 ; died May 10, '64, of wds. rec. in action.
Spencer, Milo A., Mar. 7, '64 ; died May 16, '64, of wds. rec. at Fredericksburg.
Stephens, Daniel H., Mar. 7, '64 ; died at Washington, D. C., June 19, 1864, of wds. rec in battle of Wilderness.
Street, Wm. H,, disch. on surg. cert.; date unknown.
Spafford, Milton L., disch. on surg. cert. ; date unknown.
Sutton, Wm. A., disch. on surg. cert.; date unknown.
Sutton, Edward L., died ; date unknown.
Shaw, Henry A., disch. on surg. cert.; date unknown.
Stebbins, Wm. H., disch. on surg. cert. ; date unknown.
Tiffany, Alonzo M., Mar. 27, '64 ; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Tarbox, Samuel A , April 2, '64 ; disch. by G. O. May 15, '65.
Tallon, James, April 2, '64 ; died at Florence, S. C., Nov. 15, '64.
Todd, Theodore L., died ; date unknown.
Turner, John W., disch. on surg. cert.
Van Wye, Moore T., Feb. 28, '62 ; not with company at mus. out.
Warner, Ansel L., April 2, '64 ; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Weaver, Wm. H., Mar. 28, '64 ; mus. out with company July 30, '65.
White, Samuel, Mar. 9, '65 ; substitute ; mus. out with company.
Weiman, Geo., Mar. 2, '65 ; substitute ; mus. out with company.
Webb, Thos. H., Mar. 14, '64 ; substitute ; mus. out with company.
Warner, Julius, Mar. 3, '64 ; died Sept. 24, '64.
Westbrook, John, Mar. 7, '64 ; died May 10, '64, of wds. rec. at Wilderness.
Williams, Porter S., disch. on surg. cert.
Warner, Theodore F., died of wds. rec. in action ; vet.
Warner, Edson S., pr. to 1st lt. Company K, 56th Regt. P. V. Mar. 3, '62.
Watkins, Azariah J., died ; date unknown.
Wells, Horatio M., disch. on surg. cert. ; date unknown ; re. in same company in '64 as Marble Wells.

COMPANY G.

Mapes, Milton C., Mar. 8, '65 ; substitute ; mus. out July 30, '65.
Markham, Rufus A., Feb. 20, '62 ; mus. out Feb. 30, '65 ; exp. of term.

COMPANY K.

Corp. Jerry Bolles, Sept. 9, '61 ; killed at Bull Run Aug. 28, 62.

FIFTY-SIXTH REGIMENT.—The men composing this regiment were from various sections of the State, but principally from Philadelphia and the counties of Indiana, Centre, Luzerne, Schuylkill, Susquehanna and Wayne. The regiment was organized at Camp Curtin in the fall of 1861. Sullivan A. Meredith was made colonel and commanded the regiment until his promotion to brigadier-general in November, 1862. The other field-officers were J. William Hofman, lieutenant-colonel, and John B. Smith, major. The regiment remained at Camp Curtin during the winter, and on the 8th of March, 1862, broke camp and proceeded to Washington. It remained in the vicinity of Washington until April 4th, when it proceeded by steamer to Budd's Ferry, on the Lower Potomac, and was there engaged on guard duty. On the 24th it embarked for Acquia Landing, and upon its arrival was engaged in repairing damages done by the rebels to the railroad and landing. Until August 9th it was occupied in doing guard duty, but on that date was assigned to Doubleday's Brigade, King's Division of McDowell's corps, and became associated with the Seventy-sixth and Ninety-fifth New York Regiments, the Seventh Indiana and the First New Hampshire Battery. The Brigade immediately moved with the corps across the Rappahannock, and on the 21st, near Rappahannock Station, the men of the regiment first heard the shriek of shells. On the 28th it had a short but sharp encounter with the enemy, in which Colonel Meredith was severely wounded. On the 29th it again engaged the enemy and was deployed to hold in check the rebel line of battle while our troops changed position. The regiment changed front under fire and held its ground until ordered to retire, but suffered severely in killed and wounded. On the morning of the 30th, the day on which was fought the principal battle of the second Bull Run, the regiment mustered but one hundred and fifty-four men for duty. It was engaged that day, but mainly in support of other troops. When the army retired it, with the brigade to which it belonged, was the rear-guard and suffered some loss. The campaign in Maryland soon opened, and the Fifty-sixth again encountered the enemy at South Mountain, when it inflicted severe blows and suffered severe loss.

In the battle of Antietam, which occurred two days afterwards, it participated, but did not suffer serious loss. Its next serious engagement with the enemy was had after crossing the Potomac, on the 30th of October, when it moved to the support of Pleasanton's cavalry and met the enemy near Union, on the 2d of November. They defeated and drove the enemy from his position, but with considerable loss. The Fifty-sixth, for its gallant action on that occasion, received the congratulations of the division commander. At the battle of Fredericksburg, December 13, it occupied the left of Franklin's division, but was not actively engaged, although within range and under fire of the enemy's guns. Early in January, 1863, Lieutenant-Colonel Hofman was promoted to colonel, and Captain George B. Osborn to lieutenant-colonel of the regiment. In the Chancellorsville campaign the regiment bore an active part, but its movements were confined to the operations in and about Fredericksburg, designed to divert the enemy from Hooker's real point of attack. On the 7th of June the Fifty-sixth was detailed with the Seventh Wisconsin, to support the cavalry at Brandy Station, and had several sharp encounters with the enemy. On the 25th of June the regiment started on its march to Gettysburg. It reached Frederick on the 28th, and Emmittsburg the morning of the 30th. At this time the regiment belonged to the Second Brigade of the First Corps, and when the corps reached the battle-field on that ever-memorable 1st of July the Second Brigade had the advance, and the Fifty-sixth was the second in the brigade column. Getting into position a little in advance of the other regiments, and seeing the enemy advancing, it was ordered to fire and thus opened the battle. General Cutler, then in command of the First Division of the First Corps, in a letter to Governor Curtin dated November 5, 1863, says: "In noticing in the papers to-day an account of the proposition for a national cemetery at Gettysburg for the men who fell there in July last, I am reminded that I have neglected a duty which I owe to one of your regiments, the Fifty-sixth, and its brave commander, Colonel Hofmann. * * * It was my fortune to be in the advance on the morning of July 1st when we came upon the ground in front of the enemy. Colonel Hofmann's regiment got into position a moment sooner than the others. The atmosphere being a little thick, I took out my glass to examine the enemy. Being a few paces in rear of Col. Hofmann, he turned to me and inquired, 'Is that the enemy?' My reply was yes. Turning to his men, he commanded: 'Ready, right-oblique, aim, fire!' and the battle of Gettysburg was opened. The fire was followed by other regiments instantly; still, that battle on the soil of Pennsylvania was opened by her own sons, and it is just that it should become a matter of history. * * * I desire to say to your Excellency that the Fifty-sixth is one of the very best regiments in the service. * * * I hope you will cause proper measures to be taken to give that regiment the credit, which is its due, of having opened that memorable battle." It was fiercely engaged on the 2d, and on the 3d supported the batteries at the cemetery. Its losses, mainly sustained the first day, were ten killed, sixty-seven wounded and seventy-eight missing. Among the wounded was Captain Burritt, of Company K. On the 10th of March, 1864, a sufficient number having re-enlisted to retain its organization as a veteran regiment, it was granted a veteran furlough and returned to Philadelphia. On the 20th of April it returned to the front, and after a few days of camp life started on the memorable Wilderness campaign. The regiment crossed the Rapidan on the morning of May 4th, and at noon of the 5th became desperately engaged with a vastly superior force of the enemy, and, though bravely contending, was forced to fall back with heavy loss. Among the killed was Lieutenant Titman, of Company G, a brave officer whose sword—drawn for the first time in this battle—was presented to him in acknowledgement of his services in the ranks. On the 6th it was in the thickest of the fight, and towards evening assisted in re-capturing the intrenchments wrested from the Second Corps, and was the first to plant its flag on the works where a moment before had floated the rebel colors. Again on the 7th it bravely faced the foe, and during the bloody battles that followed it was ever at the front. On the 19th of August, during a fierce attack of the enemy, the Fifty-sixth settled an old debt with the rebels. At the battle of Bull Run in '62 its color company was surrounded and colors captured. It now saw an opportunity to avenge the loss. The foe was repulsed, and, hotly pursuing them, the regiment captured the battle flag of the Fifty-fifth North Carolina. It shared in the perils and honors of the last campaign, and on the 1st of July, 1865, was mustered out of service at Philadelphia.

Company K.—Susquehanna County furnished something over fifty men to this company, the remainder being principally from the county of Schuylkill. Upon its organization David Mitchell, of Schuylkill County, was made captain; Edson S. Warner, at the time a member of Company D, Fiftieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, was promoted to first lieutenant; and Ira N. Burritt, also of this county, was made second lieutenant. That Company K was a part of the gallant Fifty-sixth, whose brilliant record we have briefly traced, is sufficient commendation. Upon the resignation of Captain Mitchell, in December, 1862, Lieutenant Warner was promoted to captain, and was in command of the company until February, 1863, when he resigned. He is now in the postal service of the United States, being mail agent on the Montrose Railway, and resides at Montrose. Lieutenant Burritt was promoted to the command of the company when Captain Warner was discharged, which he retained until November, 1864, when, on account of wounds, he was discharged. Lieutenant B. C. Stoddard, of Company A, was then promoted to the captaincy, who, although residing in Wayne County before the war, is now and has been for many years, a resident of the borough of Susquehanna. Captain Burritt is a resident of Washington, D. C., where he is engaged in editing and publishing a newspaper. Loren Burritt, when the company was organized, was made first sergeant, from which he was promoted to second and to first lieutenant. November 7, 1863, he was commissioned major of the Eighth Regiment, United States Colored Troops. On the 20th of February, 1864, at Olustee, Florida, Major Burritt was severely wounded. He was afterwards promoted to lieutenant-colonel and brevet-colonel, but, on account of his wound, was obliged to relinquish command of the regiment, and was placed on detached service. November 10, 1865, Colonel Burritt was mustered out with his regiment and returned to Susquehanna County. The next year he was elected to the Legislature, and again in 1867. But he had never recovered from the wound received in Florida, and about this time it began to affect his health in an alarming manner. Baffling the skill of the most eminent physicians of the country, his disease soon completely prostrated him, and for more than twenty years he has been a helpless invalid.

But Susquehanna County was represented in the Fifty-sixth by fifty or sixty other patriotic "boys" who enlisted in other Companies—principally in A, D and I, and their names appear in the record of their service, which follows. When the "date of muster into service" is marked 1864, it refers to date of re-enlistment:

COMPANY K, FIFTY-SIXTH REGIMENT.

Mustered into service March 3, 1862, unless otherwise stated; mustered out July 1, 1865.

Capt. Edson S. Warner, pr. from 1st lt. Feb. 3, '63; res. Feb. 27, '63.

Capt. Ira N. Burritt, pr. from 2d to 1st lt. Feb. 3, '63; to capt. Feb. 27, '63; wd. at Gettysburg, Wilderness and Weldon R. R.; disch. Nov. 21, '64.

1st Lt. Loren Burritt, Mar. 7, '62; pr. from 1st sergt. to 2d lt. Feb. 3, '63; to 1st lt. Apr. 1, '63; to major, 8th Regt. U. S. Colored Troops, Nov. 7, '63; afterwards pr. to lt.-col and bev. col.

Sergt. John L. Vanauken, Apr. 19, '62, died May 12, '64, of wds. recd. in action.

Corporals.

Drake, Henry W., Mar. 6, '64; wd. four times; mus. out with Co.; vet.

Baxter, Orrin, W., Jan. 25, '64; mus. out with Co.; vet.

Potter, Richard B., Jan. 28, '64; pr. to cor. June 1, '65; mus. out with Co.; vet.

Richards, Joseph D., Mar. 27, '64; pr. to cor. June 1, '65, mus. out with Co.; vet.

Maxfield, Cyrus N., Jan. 23, '64; disch. June 16, '65; vet.

Privates.

Ainey, Peter, wd. at Gettysburg; leg amputated; disch. Feb. 7, '64.

Brown, George, July 27, '63; drafted; mus. out with Co.

Brown, Josiah R., Mar. 7, '64; ab. sick at mus. out.

Bradshaw, E. M., Feb. 3, '64; not on mus. out roll; vet.

Chase, Wm. J., Jan. 30, '64; mus. out with Co.; vet.

Crow, Patrick, Feb. 13, '64; mus. out with Co.; vet.; enlisted after war in Mexican Army.

Coy, Asa, Feb. 17, '62: died at Annapolis, Md., June 17, '62.

Colvin, Jared B., com. 1st lt. Nov. 22, '64; not on mus. out roll.

Driscol, Jerry C., Apr. 19, '62; died June 17, '62.

Devine, Hiram, disch.; date unknown.

Doud, William, disch.; date unknown.

Eldridge, Wm. H., disch. June, '62.

Ellis, John H., not on mus. out roll.

Goss, Edward A., Feb. 14, '64; ab. sick at mus. out; vet.

Gleason, Stephen, Feb. 27, '63; tr. to V. R. C. Mar. 2, '64.

Garvey, James, not on mus. out roll.

Hughes, Geo. W., Jan. 27, '64; mus. out with Co.; vet.

Hughes, Thos. W., Sept. 10, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Sept. 11, 63.

Jewett, Allen, Jan. 29, '62; died at Alexandria, Va., June 23, '63, of wds. recd. in action.

Kerr, Christian, Mar. 28, '62; mus. out Apr. 5, '65; exp. of term.

Lindsay, Ezra D., Jan. 29, '62; disch.; date unknown; re. in Lgt. Art.

Lynch, Harvey W., Jan. 29, '62; disch. on surg. cert.; date unknown.

McKinny, Chester, Mar. 25, '62; died at Knoxville, Tenn.; date unknown.

Otis, Leander, Mar. 25, '62; not on mus. out roll; re. in U. S. Navy.

Perkins, Julius G., Feb. 27, '62; mus. out with Co.; vet

Perkins, Chas. L., Feb. 27, '62; not on mus. out roll.

Richards, Lemuel, Mar. 27, '64; mus. out with Co.; vet.

Reynolds, Wm. H., Mar. 27, '64; not on mus. out roll; re. in 2d Pa. Heavy Art.

Rhinevault, Sylvester P., Mar. 27, '64; not on mus. out roll.

Richards, Chas. F., Mar. 27, '64; not on mus. out roll.

Snyder, Philo J., Feb. 21, '64; mus. out with Co.; vet.

Swisher, Andrew J., Feb. 2, '64 ; mus. out with Co. ; vet.
Sanders, James E., Apr. 5, '62 ; disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 9, '62 ; re. in Co. B, 17th Pa. Cav.
Slade, James, Mar. 24, '62 ; disch. on surg. cert. ; date unknown.
Sanders, Benj. F., Mar. 24, '62 ; disch. on surg. cert. ; date unknown.
St. Clair, Geo. W., Mar. 24, '62 ; disch. on surg. cert. ; date unknown.
Thompson, John J., Feb. 24, '62 ; mus. out with Co. July 1, '65 ; vet.
Vergason, Newell J., Feb. 24, '62 ; disch. on surg. cert. ; date unknown ; re. in Co. K, 187th P. V.
Westbrook, John, Feb. 27, '62 ; disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 28, '63.
White, William, Feb. 27, '62 ; disch. on surg. cert. ; date unknown.
Whitford, Adney J., Mar. 28, '64 ; disch. Apr. 26, '64 ; vet.
Wilbur, Charles, Feb. 27, '62 ; tr. to Battery B, 1st Pa. Art.
Wilbur, Isaiah S., Feb. 13, '64 ; killed in action Aug. 20, '64 ; vet.

The following-named men were also members of the Fifty-sixth Regiment :

COMPANY A.

Sergt. Andrew J. Archer, Oct. 2, '61 ; not with Co. at mus. out.
Cor. Avery Porter, Feb. 12, '64 ; pr. to cor. Apr. 1, '65 ; mus. out with Co. ; vet.

Privates.

Avery, George, Mar. 30, '64 ; not on mus. out roll.
Burman, George H. Oct. 4, '61 ; capt'd at Bull Run Aug. 29, '62.
Bloxham, Arthur E., Feb. 24, '62 ; killed at Bull Run Aug. 29, '62.
Burman, David, died at Camp Curtin Jan. 25, '62.
Burman, Danford, Mar. 30, '64 ; disch. by G. O. June 17, '65.
Cass, Frederick, Oct. 2, '61 ; disch. on surg. cert. ; date unknown.
Foster, Archibald L, Oct. 2, '61 ; not with Co. at mus. out.
Gelatt, C. W., Oct. 22, '61 ; disch. for wds. recd. at Gettysburg July 1, '63.
Hine, Isaac, died at Camp Curtin Jan. 20, '62.
Lathrop, Eugene, not on muster out roll.
Lagier, George, disch. on surg. cert. May 7, '62.
Perkins, Lewis L., Oct. 22, '62 ; killed at North Anna River.
Robinson, Henry J., Mar. 6, '62 ; disch. on surg. cert. May 6, '62.
Sillick, Milton, Feb. 4, '62 ; disch. ; date unknown.
Sillick, Wm. H., Oct. 22, '62 ; not on mus. out roll.
Storer, Isaac F., Oct. 22, '61 ; disch. on surg. cert. ; date unknown.
Schriver, Jeremiah, not on mus. out roll.
Ticknor, George B., Oct. 22, '61 ; capt'd at Bull Run Aug. 29, '62.
Wood, Albert N., Oct. 2, '61 ; killed at Bull Run, Aug. 29, '62.
White, Orrin B., Oct. 2, '61 ; died of wds. recd. at 2d Bull Run.
Washburn, Luman, died at Camp Curtin Dec. 2, '61.

COMPANY D.

Capt. Robert H. Day, Nov. 1, '61 ; pr. from 1st sergt. to 2d lt. Sept. 27, '62 ; to 1st lt. Mar. 1, '63 ; to capt. June 13, '63 ; disch. Jan. 10, '65.
Sergt. Wm. H. Miller, pr. to sergt. June 24, '62 ; disch. for wds.
Cor. Walter F. Aldrich, pr. to cor. Jan. 24, '62 ; tr. to V. R. C.

Privates.

Brush, Geo. A., disch. ; date unknown.
Brush, Edgar J., capt'd at 2d Bull Run.
Grimes, Curtis F., Feb. 13, '64 : mus. out with Co. July 1, '65 ; vet.
Gordon, Samuel G., disch. on surg. cert. ; date unknown.
Morse, Joel Furman, died June 2, '63 ; bur. at Antietam.
Middaugh, Charles, died ; date unknown.
Martin, Edward F., Feb. 13, '64 ; disch. for wds., with loss of leg, recd. June 20, '64.
Lung, Addison W., not on mus. out roll.

COMPANY G.

1st Lt. Henry C. Titman, 1861 ; pr. from sergt. to 1st. lt. Dec. 6, '63 ; killed at Wilderness May 5, '64. (See Lt. "Titman" Post, G. A. R.)
Strunk, Wm. C. Priv. died Aug. 12, '64.

COMPANY I.

Sergt. William Anderson, Feb. 13, '64, pr. to sergt. Apr. 1, '65 ; mus. out with Co. July 1, '65 ; vet.
Sergt. Urbane Barrager, Feb. 13, '64 ; pr. from cor. to sergt. May 21, '65 ; mus. out with Co. July 1, '65 ; vet.
Cor. Jasper Gardner, Feb. 13, '64 ; wd. in action June 18, '64, ab. in hos. at mus. out ; vet.
Cor. M. J. Slocum, Feb. 13, '64 ; pr. to cor. Feb. 25, '62 ; not on mus. out roll ; vet.
Mus. Winfield S. Carr, not on mus. out roll.

Privates.

Bennett, Geo. E., not on mus. out roll.
Coil, Charles, tr. to Co. A ; date unknown.
Coil, John, Aug. 20, '64 ; tr. to Co. A ; date unknown.
Coil, Thomas, Aug. 20, '64 ; tr. to Co. A ; date unknown.
Coil, James, not on mus. out roll.
Canfield, James A., not on mus. out roll.
Galloway, E. F., not on mus. out roll.
Weed, Phineas, not on mus. out roll.

FIFTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT.—The men of this regiment were mainly from the counties of Mercer, Crawford, Venango, Tioga, Bradford, Wyoming and Susquehanna. The regiment was organized early in December, 1861, by the choice of the following officers: William Maxwell, colonel; Elhanan W. Woods, lieutenant-colonel; and Jeremiah Culp, major. The regiment left Camp Curtin for Washington on the 14th and encamped on the Bladensburg Pike. In February, 1862, it crossed the river into Virginia and joined the Army of the Potomac. It was here assigned to General Jameson's brigade of the Third Corps, being associated with the Eighty-third and One Hundred and Fifth Pennsylvania regiments and the Eighty-seventh New York. On the 4th of April it moved with the army to Yorktown, and after remaining under the fire of the enemy's guns for a few days it was moved to a wooded swamp in the rear, where, for a month, the men labored in the trenches. "Here," wrote Surgeon Lyman, "the men walked in mud, slept in mud, and drank water from holes scooped out of the mud; and the combined remonstrances of the medical officers of the brigade were met by the silencing reply, 'It is a military necessity.' But the result proved the fears of the surgeons well founded, and nearly half the regiment were rendered unfit for duty and many of them died. On the 11th the regiment had a brief but sharp engagement with the enemy, and on May 4th, while on the march to the battle-field of Williamsburg, it was ordered to throw off knapsacks, blankets and overcoats, and proceed 'double quick' to the front. They reached the field, but, night coming on, they were not engaged; and, overheated by their rapid march, wet to the skin by a drenching rain, without rations, blankets or fires, they remained under arms all night." "It seemed," writes Colonel Perkins, then adjutant of the regiment, "immediately after, as though the regiment had been struck by a pestilence. I think the loss to the regiment by discharges, on account of that night's exposure, was greater than our casualties in any battle during the war." At the battle of Fair Oaks the regiment suffered severely, having eleven men killed and forty-nine wounded.

In the severe battle of the 30th the enemy assaulted the Union lines in vastly superior numbers, but he was repulsed with great slaughter, and the conduct of the Fifty-seventh on that occasion was highly commended by that accomplished soldier, General Kearny. The loss in the regiment was seven killed and fifty-six wounded. But, with undaunted spirits and unflagging zeal it met the enemy at Malvern Hill on the following day, and in this, the last of the series of bloody battles of that Peninsular campaign, it sustained well its reputation for efficiency and bravery. But, without a field officer and with only a few line officers fit for duty—reduced by battle, by sickness and by death to only fifty-six effective men—it presented a marked contrast to the thousand strong that, scarcely three months before, had marched forth to battle. But before leaving the Peninsula, recruits were received, the sick rapidly returned and the regiment was restored to almost its original efficiency.

From the Peninsula the regiment proceeded to Alexandria, and from there joined Pope's army in time to participate in the second Bull Run battle on the 29th and 30th of August. By a forced march the regiment reached the battle-field of Chantilly. Here the gallant Kearny, having ridden into the enemy's lines while reconnoitring, was killed, and his body fell into the hands of the enemy. On the following day four companies of the Fifty-seventh were sent, under a flag of truce, to receive his body and bear it within our lines. On the 13th of December the regiment crossed the Rappahannock on pontoons, and soon was fiercely engaged with the enemy on the bloody field of Fredericksburg. On the 14th, in company with the One Hundred and Forty-first Pennsylvania, it was ordered to the extreme front line, where it remained until the night of the 15th. Upon recrossing the river it returned to its old camp, but with sadly-thinned ranks. Of the three hundred and sixteen men with which the regiment went into that battle, twenty-one were killed, seventy-six wounded and seventy-eight were missing. About the 1st of March, 1863, in the reorganization of the army under Hooker, the Fifty-seventh was assigned to Graham's brigade, composed entirely of Pennsylvania regiments, viz.: The Fifty-seventh, Sixty-third, Sixty-eighth, One Hundred and Fifth, One Hundred and Fourteenth and One Hundred and Forty-first. On the 28th of April it started on the Chancellorsville campaign, crossing the river on the 30th and reaching the field on the 1st of May. On the 2d it moved to the front, but, with the exception of some skirmishing, was not seriously engaged. At daylight of the 3d, the brigade being in column of regiments, the enemy suddenly assaulted it with great fury. It immediately moved by the flank at double quick and deployed in line of battle near the Chancellor House, where it charged and drove the enemy; but, after a desperate encounter, was forced to fall back. The regiment again suffered a grievous loss, having thirteen of its number killed, forty-eight wounded and twenty-three missing. On the 6th it recrossed the river and returned to its old camp. On the 11th of June the regiment started on the Gettysburg campaign, arriving at Emmittsburg, Md., July 1st, and reaching the battle-field that night. Early on the 2d it moved to the front, and during the fierce fighting that occurred the Fifty-seventh was in the thickest of the fray. While the regiment was in position near Sherfy's house the brigade was compelled to fall back by a flank movement of the enemy, and a number of the men having taken cover in an old cellar, did not hear the order to retire, but continued a rapid and destructive fire. When too late, they discovered their isolated position and were nearly all captured. During the 3d it remained at the front and at night was placed on picket. The casualties of the regiment were again heavy, being twelve killed, forty-five wounded and forty-seven missing. In the pursuit of Lee, and in all the subsequent campaigns and engagements in the Valley of Virginia, including Mine Run, Auburn Creek, Kelly's Ford and Locust Grove, the regiment participated, and at noon, on the 9th of April, when within a mile of Appomattox Court-House, the joyful tidings was brought that Lee had surrendered.

Company A.—Nearly half of Company A enlisted from this county, and the remainder were mostly from our neighboring county of Wyoming. J. R. Lyons was mainly instrumental in recruiting the men from Susquehanna, having a recruiting station on the fair-ground during the county fair in September, 1861. Upon the organization of the company he was chosen first lieutenant, and upon the promotion of Captain Sides to lieutenant-colonel, soon after, he was made captain of the company, and continued in command until obliged to leave the service on account of wounds received in the severe engagements his regiment participated in. His brother, Clark M. Lyons, was made adjutant of the regiment, and died from wounds received in battle. Henry H. Hinds was promoted to captain of the company, and Edgar Williams was promoted to captain Company E, and died of wounds. The company bore manfully its part during the severe service of the regiment, as the record of its members will bear evidence.

COMPANY A, FIFTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT.

Mustered into service November 11, 1861, unless otherwise stated; mustered out June 29, 1865.

Capt. Jerome R. Lyons, Dec. 4, '61; pr. from 1st lt. to capt. Sept. 15, '62; disch. Oct. 4, '64, for wds. rec. in action (see Capt. Lyons Post. G. A. R.)

Capt. Henry H. Hinds, Dec. 4, '61; pr. from 1st sergt. to 1st lt. Jan. 7, '63; taken pris. at Gettysburg; pr. to capt. May 15, '65; disch. May 15, '65.

Sergeants.

Wm. Doherty, Feb. 10, '64; pr. from cor. to sergt. June 1, '65; mus. out with Co.

Edgar Van Loan, April 1, '62; mus. out April 10, '65, exp. of term.

Edgar Williams, Oct. 4, '61; pr. to 2d lt. Co. E., Nov. 4, '63; to 1st lt. Sept. 1, '63; to capt. Nov. 1, '63; died May 23, '64, of wds. rec. in action.

Wm. W. Hinds, Dec. 4, '61; wd. at Malvern Hill; mortally wd. at Fredericksburg, Va.; died Dec. 22, '62.

Corporals.

Gilbert H. Mitchell, Jan. 1, '64; mus. out with Co. June 29, '65; vet.

Theodore S. Clink, Dec. 4, '61; not on mus. out roll; disch. April 19, '62.

Adelbert B. Robinson, Dec. 4, '61; wd. at Chancellorsville; knocked senseless by a shell at Gettysburg; on detached serv. at mus. out of Co.; vet.

Edward F. Hawley, Oct. 23, '61; capt'd; died at Andersonville, Ga., July 7, '64.

John L. Strunk, Dec. 4, '61; died June 4, '62, at Yorktown, Va.
Bentley Stark, Dec. 4, '61; died at Harrison Landing, Aug. 3, '62.

Privates.

Anson, Levi, Dec. 31, '63; mus. out with Co. June 29, '65; vet.
Anson, Lafayette, Oct. 22, '61; mus. out Oct. 25, 64, exp. of term.
Austin, John, Dec. 4, '61; tr. to V. R. C. Nov. 1, '63.
Bronson, Philander S., Dec. 4, '61; disch. Sept. 16, '62, for disability.
Brotzman, Isaac, Dec. 4, '61; taken pris. at Chancellorsville; died at Camp Parole, Annapolis, Md., Aug. 17, '63.
Bolls, Lyman, Dec. 4, '61; disch. Nov. 16, '62.
Bump, Dennis L., Dec. 4, '61; disch. Nov. 14, '62, at Ft. Hamilton; re. in Co. C, 203d P. V.
Barnes, Horace J., Dec. 4, '61; wd. at Fair Oaks, and left in the hands of the enemy.
Bray, Levi T., Feb. 12, '62; taken pris. at Fredericksburg; on detached duty at mus. out; vet.
Bramlee, Wm. J., Jan. 29, '62; re. as a vet.
Bramlee, Alonzo T., Mar. 10, '62; not on mus. out roll.
Clink, Adam, Oct. 22, '61; not on mus. out roll.
Clink, James, Oct. 22, '61; disch. Jan. 16, '63.
Coggswell, Aaron, Oct. 22, '61; died at Ft. Monroe, June 17, '62.
Doherty, Patrick, Dec. 31, '63; mus. out with Co. June 29, '65; vet.
Devine, Daniel, Nov. 1, '61; wd. at Glendale; disch. Jan. 16, '63.
Devine, Jno. Wesley, Nov. 1, '61; taken pris. at Chancellorsville; returned to Co. Dec. 10, '63; vet.
Fargo, Jason E., Nov. 1, '61; not on mus. out roll.
Granger, John W., Nov. 1, '61; pr. to cor. Feb. 18, '63; to sergt. July 1, '63; tr. to V. R. C. Jan. 15, '64.
Granger, Luther A., Nov. 1, '61; killed at Gettysburg.
Hinds, Frederick M., Oct. 22, '61; pr. to cor. Mar. 1, '62; disch. Oct. 14, '62.
Jackson, Fred., not on mus. out roll.
Keator, W. B., Nov. 1, '61; not on mus. out roll.
Kennard, Lewis C., Jan. 30, '62; in actions of Williamsburg, Fair Oaks; killed at Glendale.
Kennedy, Richard V., Nov. 1, '61; left arm shot off at Gettysburg; disch. Dec. 3, '63.
Kirkhoff, J., died April 12, '65; bur. at Arlington, Va.
Larum, Joseph, April 8, '65; substitute; ab. sick at mus. out.
Lines, Sumner E., Nov. 1, '61; killed in front of Petersburg, Va., June 18, '64.
Lyons, Clark M., Nov. 1, '61; pr. to 1st lt. and adjt. May 2, '64; died June 20, '64, of wds. received in action (see "Four Brothers" Post, G. A. R.)
Lewis, Kennard, Nov. 1, '61; not on mus. out roll.
McCauley, John, Nov. 1, '61; disch. for disability Dec. 9, '62.
McCormick, John C., Nov. 1, '61; wd. at Gettysburg; disch. at Harrisburg, Pa.
McCormick, Chas., Nov. 1, '61; wd. at Gettysburg, leg amputated; died from wds. July 12, '63.
McCracken, Volney, Feb. 13, '64; not on mus. out roll.
McDonald, Myron, Feb. 13, '64; not on mus. out roll.
Osborn, Wm. H., Nov. 1, '61; disch. March 10, '63, disability.
Osborn, Stephen M., Nov. 1, '61; wd. at 2d Bull Run, and died of his wds. at Alexandria, Va., Sept. 17, '62.
Otis, Ferdinand, Nov. 1, '61; killed in action Dec. 13, '62.
Otis, Dudley M., Nov. 25, '61; died near Falmouth, Va., June 9, '63, of wounds received at Chancellorsville, Va.
Otis, Israel, Nov. 1, '61; wd. at Chancellorsville, Va.; pr. to cor.; killed.
Potter, Henry W., Nov. 1, '61; died Jan. 12, '62, at Union Heights, Georgetown.
Penny, Wm. H., Nov. 1, '61; not on mus. out roll.
Penny, Sidney E., Nov. 1, '61; not on mus. out roll.
Roberts, Mortimer, Nov. 1, '61; disch. Sept. 20, '62, at Ft. Monroe.
Stage, Geo. E., March 31, '64; wd. at Wilderness, Va., May 5, '64; ab. at mus. out.
Seeley, Benj. E., Feb. 13, '64; disch. on surg. cert. April 14, '65.
Stage, Aaron, Feb. 11, '62; fifer; tr. to Co. I, April 1, '62; died at Ft. McHenry Oct. 28, '62.
Stage, Richard H., March 31, '64; died May 7, '64, of wounds received in action; previously served 9 mos. in Co. H, 177th Regt.
Shaddock, Joseph, Feb. 15, '62; not on mus. out roll.
Seeley, Malory, not on mus. out roll.
Sembler, Frank O., Nov. 1, '61; not on mus. out roll.
Stephens, Fred., Nov. 1, '61; killed Dec. 13, '62.
Sherwood, N. Y., Nov. 1, '61; disch. Dec. 12, '62, of disability.
Simpson, Walter B., Nov. 1, '61; pris. at Fredericksburg; exchanged; wd. at Kelly's Ford; re-enlisted; vet.
Stark, Mitchell O., Nov. 1, '61; not on mus. out roll.
Strickland, P. B., Nov. 1, '61; died at Ft. Monroe June 17, '62, of wounds received at Fair Oaks, Va.
Seeley, Hollis, Feb. 22, '64; not on mus. out roll.
Seeley, Malvern E., Feb. 22, '64; not on mus. out roll.
Smith, Daniel, Mar. 22, '64; died June 14, '64.
Sweet, Perry, Feb. 1, '64; ab. in hos. at Phila. at mus. out; disch. by G. O. June 12, '65.
Sweet, Henry, Feb. 1, '64; died at Beverly hos., N. J., Oct. 22, '64; had served 9 months in Co. A., 15 1st P. V.
Terry, Henry W., Feb. 25, '62; wd. at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, '63; ab. at mus. out.
Tallon, James, Nov. 1, '61; disch. for disability Oct. 28, '62; re. in Co. D, 50th P. V.
Tiffany, Volney W., Nov. 1, '61; killed at Fair Oaks, May 31, '62.
Whitney, Willard J., Oct. 5, '61; wd. at Charles City Cross-Roads June 30, '63; wd. and capt'd at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, '63; disch. Nov. 15, '63.
Wickson, Joshua, Nov. 1, '61; re-enlisted; killed at battle of Wilderness May 5, '64; vet.
Wood, Warren S., Nov. 1, '61; disch. for disability April 13, '62.
Warner, Erastus, Nov. 1, '61; wd. at Fair Oaks; on detached duty at mus. out; vet.

COMPANY I.

Privates.

Maxum, Charles, Feb. 28, '62; died in hospital Aug. 2, '63.
Parker, Joseph W., Feb. 28, '62; disch. for disability Sept. 30, '62.

COMPANY D.

Privates.

Dimmick, Addison, Feb. 21, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Aug. 8, '62.
Freer, Du Bois, Feb. 28, '62; died June 3, '62.
Thatcher, C. E., Feb. 16, '62; tr. to V. R. C. Oct. 7, '63.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIRST REGIMENT.—The three counties of Bradford, Susquehanna and Wayne furnished the men composing this regiment, seven companies being recruited in Bradford, two in Susquehanna and one from Wayne. The companies rendezvouzed at Camp Curtin, where, on the 28th of August, 1862, the commissioned officers of the several companies met to select regimental officers. With a unanimity that thus early evinced that the purpose of both officers and men of the regiment was to stamp out rebellion, and not self-aggrandizement, they decided to call to the command of the regiment a soldier of experience and known ability; and their choice fell upon Major Henry J. Madill, of the Sixth Pennsylvania Reserves, a resident of Bradford County. At the moment of his election Major Madill was participating with his regiment in the bloody battles that culminated on the 30th in another disaster to the Union troops at Bull Run. The organization was completed by the selection of Guy H. Watkins and Israel P. Spalding, of Bradford County, as lieutenant-colonel and major, Daniel W. Searle, of Susquehanna, as adjutant, and Robert N. Torrey, of Wayne, as quartermaster. The total number on the rolls of the regiment, including field and staff, was nine hundred and forty-nine men. On the evening of the 28th orders were received for the regiment to proceed to Washington the next day, which was received with great satisfaction and obeyed with alacrity. The regiment left Camp Curtin the next afternoon, and reached Washington the following day. The booming of cannon from the battle-field of Bull Run could be distinctly heard, and all was excitement and confusion at the Capitol. Taking dinner at the Soldiers' Rest, the regiment was immediately ordered to Arlington Heights; but upon reaching Long Bridge, they were detained until dark by an ambulance train going to Bull Run, and did not reach their destination until eleven o'clock. Here, weary and exhausted, they threw themselves down to sleep; but within an hour orders came to proceed to Chain Bridge, some nine miles distant. Pope's defeat was now known, and the regiment fell into line for this march, not knowing at what moment it might encounter the victorious foe. To add to the perils of the situation, the regiment was practically without arms; for there was not a round of ammunition that would fit their old Austrian muskets, nor a hundred bayonets that could be used. Had the men of the regiment known at that time what they soon afterwards learned—the value of having in their hands a trusty musket, capped and primed, with "forty rounds" in their pockets—they might have done what never occurred during their term of service—disobeyed orders. The survivors of the regiment will never forget that night-march. No glimmering star illumined the blank darkness, and to add to its misfortunes the guide lost his way, and it was daylight when the regiment halted near its destination. Less than two hundred men were in line. The remainder, overcome by fatigue, had "fallen by the way;" but during the forenoon most of the men arrived in camp. Bates, in his "History of the Pennsylvania Volunteers," speaking of the regiment at this time, says: "For two days it was kept marching and counter-marching among the defences of Washington, being held in readiness to repel an attack of the enemy, which seemed to be hourly anticipated. The days were intensely hot and the nights cool, and for more than a week after its arrival the regiment was without tents. Rations also were scarce, and privation and exposure soon began to tell fearfully upon the health of the men, nearly three hundred being carried to hospitals, and five hundred reported unfit for duty." On the 12th of September the regiment was assigned to the First Brigade, First Division of the Third Corps, and became associated with the Sixty-third, Sixty-eighth, One Hundred and Fifth, and One Hundred and Fourteenth Pennsylvania, and the Twentieth Indiana Regiments. General John C. Robinson, now a resident of Binghamton, N. Y., commanded the brigade. He was a regular army officer, a gallant soldier and strict disciplinarian.

In the following brief account of the regiment's services the writer is indebted for many items of interest to a very complete and accurate history of the One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment, written by Chaplain David Craft, and published in 1885. The regiment remained in the defences of Washington until the 10th of October, when, with the brigade, it made a forced march to Poolsville, Md., in a fruitless attempt to intercept Stewart on his return from his rebel raid into Pennsylvania. It is said that "severe marches are more destructive to armies than battles;" and this march, so far as the One Hundred and Forty-first was concerned, was a striking illustration of its truth The surgeon of the regiment reported that more than one hundred cases of hernia alone were traceable to the Poolsville march. The regiment remained here on picket duty until the 28th, when it crossed the river at White's Ford, and joined the army in its march to Warrenton. When Burnside assumed command, it moved with the army towards Fredericksburg, reaching Falmouth on the 22d of November. The battle of Fredericksburg was the first engagement in which the regiment participated. It was under arms all day the 10th, and on the morning of the 11th of December it was awakened by a "reveille" it will never forget—the booming of cannon at Fredericksburg. All day and the next it waited, momentarily expecting orders to cross the river. On the morning of the 13th it marched to a point on the hills opposite the head of Franklin's pontoon bridge, and stacked arms. Here it lay, a silent spectator, in full view of the terrible battle now raging across the river, until nearly two o'clock in the afternoon, when it received orders to cross and hasten to the relief of the gallant Reserves, who were being forced back by overwhelming numbers. For nearly a mile the regiment was exposed to the fire of the enemy's artillery, which, as the brigade approached the field, was concentrated upon it, and shot and shell flew thick and fast. The arrival of the brigade was most timely. The yelling rebels of Early's brigade were within a hundred yards of Randolph's battery, and would doubtless have captured it but for the withering fire poured into their ranks by the advance regiments of the brigade, which compelled them to fall back. The One Hundred and Forty-first was ordered in support of Randolph's battery, upon which the enemy did not cease their fire until dark. On the night of the 14th Major Spalding, with twenty men from each company and six commissioned officers, were placed on advanced picket, within twenty rods of the enemy's lines. Here they remained from five o'clock Monday morning until two o'clock Tuesday morning, when, the army having safely recrossed the river, they silently withdrew, and were among the last to reach the north bank of the Rappahannock. The regiment returned to its old camp and erected winter-quarters. On the 20th of January the regiment started on what was afterwards known as Burnside's "mud march;" and its particular significance to the regiment arises from the fact that in this well-planned movement it had been selected for the important and perilous duty of crossing the river in boats, and taking possession of the hill and holding it while the pontoon bridge was laid. The confidence thus placed in the courage and ability of the officers and men of the regiment was no small compliment; but fortunately for them, the elements interposed, and they were spared the ordeal. Returning to camp, it quietly passed the remainder of the winter, and the spring found it ready and waiting for the campaign that followed.

On the 27th of April, 1863, orders were received to be ready to march on the following day. The regiment participated in the operations of Sedgewick in and about Fredericksburg, designed to divert the attention of Lee from Hooker's real point of attack at Chancellorsville, but did not cross the river. On the 30th the regiment started up the river, and early on the morning of May 1st it crossed the pontoon bridge at United States Ford, and marched to the front. It will be remembered that in the Chancellorsville campaign the regiment was in Graham's brigade, Birney's division,[1] and Sickles' (Third) corps. We have space to only briefly note the part taken by the regiment in the terrible battles then fought. During the day of the 1st, Graham's brigade was ordered to the support of the Twelfth Corps, and was subjected to the fire of the enemy's artillery, losing some men. On the 2d it participated in the advance in which the enemy were driven back, but just before dark "Stonewall" Jackson's rebel legions swooped down upon the Eleventh Corps, "rolling it up like a scroll," and placing the regiment, with the other troops in the advance, in a perilous condition. But aided by the darkness, they withdrew, and that night were placed on picket. At daylight on the morning of the 3d, while the brigade was in column of regiments, the enemy suddenly opened fire upon it. Says Bates: "The brigade was unprepared for the shock, but retiring by the flank it rapidly re-formed near the Chancellor house and delivered a counter-charge upon the enemy, who had followed them up sharply, and was now crossing an open field towards a wood, where he was met, and where a fierce, almost hand-to-hand fight ensued. The fighting on the part of the regiment One Hundred and Forty-first was here most heroic, and resulted in driving the enemy from its front and holding him in check until nearly surrounded, when it retired in good order, repeatedly rallying and pouring destructive volleys into the faces of the closely pursuing foe. * * * For its discipline and bravery exhibited on the memorable 3d of May, the regiment was warmly complimented by both Generals Birney and Graham." In his report of the battle, General Graham says: "I would give especial praise to the One Hundred and Forty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, a new regiment, for the second time under fire. No men could have behaved better. Its thinned ranks are better proof of its steadiness under fire than any words can be; of four hundred and seventeen men taken into the fight, it lost two hundred and thirty-four." On the evening of the 6th the regiment reached its old camp on Potomac Creek. On the 11th of June the regiment again broke camp, and on the night of July 1st bivouacked on the battle-field of Gettysburg. At dawn of the 2d the regiment was in line of battle. It was not seriously engaged until after noon, when, being temporarily detached from the brigade, it was placed in support of the batteries in the Peach Orchard. We quote from Bates—"For two hours it held this exposed position, when the enemy's infantry charged in heavy force along his whole line. Already had his lines reached the fence which skirted the orchard, counting on the easy capture of the Union guns, when the regiment, which had lain concealed from view, leaped the wall and dashed forward upon the foe. Bewildered by its sudden appearance, and from front the enemy gave ground, and the regiment held its advanced position until the guns could be dragged by hand to a place of safety. * * * The enemy's attack was now renewed with overwhelming force and the Union lines were forced to give way. Though fearfully torn, the regiment preserved a bold front, and again and again rallied and turned upon the foe. Its loss in this day's fight was probably greater, in proportion to the number engaged, than almost any other regiment in the army." Colonel Madill, in his report of the battle, says: "I took two hundred men into the fight, with nine officers. Out of that number I lost one hundred and forty-five men and six officers." Of these, one-third were killed on the field or died of their wounds—among the number, the gallant Major Spalding.

The regiment participated in the fall campaign, and among other engagements in which it participated were Auburn, Kelly's Ford and Mine Run. It went into winter-quarters early in November near Brandy Station. Upon the opening of the spring campaign of 1864 the regiment, having received accessions to its ranks by recruits, and by men returned from hospitals, numbered about three hundred and twenty-five officers and men present for duty. Under Grant it started on the bloody Wilderness campaign, breaking camp on the 3d of May. On the fifth it was hotly engaged, and early on the morning of the 6th it charged a line of breastworks, carrying them and capturing the colors of the Thirteenth North Carolina Regiment and fifty prisoners. On the 12th the regiment, occupying a portion of the works wrested from the enemy, was repeatedly assaulted in their desperate efforts to regain their lost ground, but were each time bloodily repulsed. In front of the position occupied by the One Hundred and Forty-first stood the large tree which was entirely cut off by bullets, the trunk of which is preserved at Washington as a memorial of the war. Around this the enemy were slain by hundreds. The losses in the regiment were again severe, being, from May 5th to 18th, nine killed, ninety-eight wounded and twenty-nine missing. At North Anna, Cold Harbor and at Petersburg the regiment met the foe, and at the latter place, on the 18th of June, while gallantly leading the regiment, Colonel Madill being in command of the brigade, Lieutenant-Colonel Watkins was almost instantly killed. Captain Tyler, of Company H, was commissioned major June 22d, and soon afterwards was promoted to lieutenant-colonel. In the remaining engagements of the year the regiment bore manfully its part of hardship and fighting. In the final campaign, and almost to the very day of Lee's surrender, it was at the front, winning new laurels by its gallantry. On the 11th of April it commenced the march to Washington, where, after participating in the Grand Review, it was mustered out of service on the 28th of May. Colonel Madill, in the "Introductory" to Chaplain Craft's history of the regiment, speaking of its members, says: "Through the thirty-three battles in which they fought they never became demoralized, or willingly turned their back to the foe." The same authority states: "The records of the State Department show that it sacrificed more men upon the altar of its country's needs than any other regiment in the service, save one, and that a regiment that entered the service with a good many more men." The total number borne upon the rolls of the regiment was ten hundred and thirty-six. Of these, one hundred and fifty-six were killed or died of wounds, four hundred and four were wounded, seventy-five were reported captured or missing and eighty-two died of disease. Its brave commander, Colonel Madill, for gallant and meritorious services in the field, was breveted brigadier-general in 1864, and a major-general in April, 1865.

Company F.—As has already been stated, Susquehanna County furnished two companies to the One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment—"F" and "H." The history of their service in the field is but a recapitulation of the service of the regiment; and the writer, in the limited space at his disposal, can only briefly refer to their organization, and a few matters of local interest to surviving members and friends of the two companies. About the middle of July, 1862, H. F. Beardsley, of New Milford, and A. A. Hempstead, of Brooklyn, having received authority from Governor Curtin, began to enlist men for a "three years'" company. In this they were assisted by E. B. Brainard, of Gibson, and others, and on August 22d, a sufficient number being enrolled, they were directed to rendezvous at New Milford, prepared to leave at once for Harrisburg. On that day ninety-six men reported, who were principally from the townships of New Milford, Brooklyn, Lathrop, Gibson, Harford, Jackson, Thomson and Great Bend. They repaired to the Academy building, where a company organization was perfected by the election of Henry F. Beardsley, captain; Albert A. Hempstead, first lieutenant; and Elisha B. Brainard, second lieutenant. After its organization the company sat down to a bountiful repast provided by the citizens of New Milford, after which appropriate addresses were made; and then, with tearful adieus and lingering hand-clasps, the company marched to the depot, where the train was in waiting, and proceeded to Scranton. The next day, being joined by Company "H," they reached Harrisburg; on the 24th they passed the medical examination, and on Monday, the 25th of August, they were mustered into the United States service, and became Company "F" of the regiment. That it bore well its part through the terrible ordeals the regiment passed through, is attested by a glance at the "muster-out" roll of the company which follows. At Chancellorsville, where half the regiment were killed and wounded, the losses in Company "F" were seven killed, or died of wounds, and nineteen wounded—being more than one-eighth of the total casualties in the regiment. Again at Gettysburg, when forty-nine of the regiment were killed, six of the number were from Company "F." Of the officers of the company, space admits of but brief notice. Captain Beardsley was discharged June 8, 1864, by special order of the War Department, on account of disability. (See personal sketch.) Lieutenant A. A. Hempstead was the son of G. D. and Mary L. Hempstead, of Brooklyn, and was born in Dimock, March 8, 1835. Previous to entering the service he was engaged in selling fruit trees. When the regiment left Poolsville, in October, 1862, Captain Beardsley was left there sick, and Lieutenant Hempstead had command of the company on the march to Falmouth, and until just before the battle of Fredericksburg, when Captain Beardsley returned. He was with the company at Fredericksburg, and was one of the officers detailed to hold the advance picket line while the army withdrew. But during the winter he suffered from disabilities contracted by exposure in the field, and on the 10th of February, 1863, he was honorably discharged from the service. He resides at Lemon, Wyoming County, where, for several years, he has been engaged in farming. He is a member of Reynolds Post, No. 98, G. A. R., of Tunkhannock, Pa.

Lieutenant E. B. Brainard is the son of Lewis and Louisa Brainard, and was born in Gibson, January 26, 1840. He was engaged in farming, and teaching school winters, at the time of his entering the service. He was promoted to first lieutenant December 5, 1863, and when Adjutant Searle was discharged, on account of wounds, Lieutenant Brainard was promoted to adjutant, in which position he served to the close of the war.

In 1869 he moved to Kansas—first to Bourbon Co., and afterwards, in 1871, to Butler, where, two years afterwards, he was elected commissioner, and served two years. In 1875 he was elected treasurer of the county, and re-elected in 1877. He is at present engaged in farming and stock-raising, and resides at Brainard, Butler Co., Kansas.

Captain Nelson J. Hawley is the only son of Joseph W. and Sally Hawley, and was born in Brooklyn, September 14, 1841. At the time of his enlistment he was preparing himself for the ministry, and attempting, by his own unaided efforts, to obtain an education that would fit him for that high calling. But the war came, and to respond to the call of his country seemed his highest duty, and he enlisted in Company "F." He was promoted to corporal, and placed in charge of the pioneer corps of the regiment. He was afterwards promoted to sergeant, to first sergeant, and on February 14, 1865, he was commissioned captain of the company, and served as such to the close of the war. After the war he completed his studies at Wyoming Seminary, and soon afterwards joined the Wyoming Conference. He successfully continued his pastoral calling until his health failed, and in January, 1886, he removed to Grove Park, Florida, where he now resides.

Lieutenant Salmon S. Hager is a son of Nelson Hager, and at the time of his enlishment was residing in New Milford borough. Upon the appointment of Lieutenant Bramard to be Adjutant of the Regiment, he was, on July 2, 1864, promoted from Sergeant to First Lieutenant, and took command of the Company. At the engagement at Deep Bottom, on the 16th of August, following, he was captured, and remained a prisoner in the enemy's hands until April 14, 1865, when he was exchanged. After Lieutenant Hager's capture, Sergeant George R. Resseguie commanded the Company for a time. After the war Lieutenant Hager engaged for a time in the mercantile business, and then entered the employ of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company as station agent at Gouldsboro', Pa. He was elected, in 1886, a member of the Legislature from Wayne County.

Company H.—About the same time that men were enrolling themselves in the eastern part of the county in Company F, Casper W. Tyler and Daniel W. Searle, two rising young lawyers of Montrose, commenced recruiting men for a Company. The meeting held at the court-house, July 21, of which we have already made mention, was called at their suggestion. Enlistments were rapid, and, besides the gentlemen named, Aaron Bunnell, of Auburn, was instrumental in enlisting a number from that town. On the 16th of August the men met at the court-house in Montrose and organized the Company by electing Casper W. Tyler, captain; Daniel W. Searle, first-lieutenant, and Aaron Bunnell, second-lieutenant. The men were principally from Montrose, Auburn, Bridgewater, Franklin, Liberty, Silver Lake, Forest Lake, Rush, Dimock and Springville. On the 22d the Company re-assembled at Montrose preparatory to leaving for Harrisburg, and a large concourse of citizens assembled to witness their departure; and thus, not only by their presence, but by words and acts did they evince their interest in the brave men who were about to go forth to battle for their country and flag. In the afternoon they took cars for Scranton, and the following day, with Company F, proceeded to Harrisburg. After their medical examination they were mustered into the United States service on Tuesday, August 26th, and became Company H of the Regiment. Of its valor, its sacrifices, its achievements, they are recorded with the history of the Regiment, to which every member of the Company can point with pride. Almost every battle-field from Fredericksburg, to Appomattox was stained by the blood of some of its members. We make the following brief mention of its officers: Captain Tyler was wounded at Chancellorsville and Gettysburg, and after the death of Major Spalding, he was, June 22, 1864, promoted to Major, and in July following, upon the death of Colonel Watkins, to Lieutenant-Colonel. On the 1st of March, 1865, his disabilities unfitting him for duty in the field, he was honorably discharged from the service. He returned to Montrose and resumed the practice of his profession, but in 186— removed to Meadville, Crawford County, Pa., where he now resides. He is a prominent member of the bar, and has represented that county in the State Legislature.

Lieutenant Searle, as noted in the history of the regiment, was, upon its organization, promoted to Adjutant, the responsible duties of which position he filled with such marked efficiency as to elicit the commendation of his superior officers. The duties of his position brought him in constant contact with the officers and men of the regiment, and although as its "executive" officer, those duties were sometimes unpleasant, both to them and himself, yet no officer was more popular, and his long form will long remain in their remembrance. [1]

Lieutenant Bunnell was one of those who were obliged to succumb to the exposure and exhaustion of that first night's march to Chain Bridge; and broken in health and unfitted for duty, he resigned September 22, 1862, and returned to Auburn. He subsequently removed to Russell Hill, Wyoming County, where he now resides.

Lieutenant Logan C. Tyler was a native of Montrose, where he was born June 22, 1836, and was a cousin of Captain Tyler. Upon the organization of the company he was made "Orderly"-Sergeant, and upon the promotion of Lieutenant Searle, and resignation of Lieutenant Bunnell, he was, September 22, 1862, promoted to First Lieutenant of the company. Being on detached service at the time the battle of Fredericksburg was fought, he was not present; and when the regiment started for Chancellorsville, although suffering from rheumatism and advised to go to the hospital, he refused to be left behind. On the Sunday morning of that fatal 3d of May, during the fierce fighting of the regiment in the woods in front of the Chancellor House, Lieutenant Tyler having stooped down to give a drink of water to one of the men of his company who was severely wounded, was in the act of rising when he was struck by a minie-ball in the right temple and instantly killed. His loss was sincerely mourned in the regiment, and every man in his company felt he had lost a friend and a brother.

[1] He was wounded at Gettysburg, on account of which he was honorably discharged, June 2, 1864. (See personal sketch.)

Captain John L. Gyle was promoted from Sergeant to Second Lieutenant December 10, 1862; to First Lieutenant, December 5, 1863; and to Captain, July 4, 1864, in which position he served to the close of the war. While in the ranks, and as commander of the company, he had the respect of his fellow-soldiers and the confidence of his superior officers. He resides at Auburn, Pa., where he is engaged in farming.

Lieutenant B. B. Atherton was promoted from Sergeant to First Lieutenant August 10, 1864. He was wounded at Spottsylvania, but served with the company until the close of the war.

COMPANY F, ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIRST REGIMENT.

Mustered into service August 25, 1862, unless otherwise stated; mustered out May 28, 1865.

Capt. Henry F. Beardsley, Aug. 26, '62; disch. for disability by S. O. War Department June 8, '64 (see personal sketch).

Capt Nelson J. Hawley, pr. to capt. Feb. 14, '65; mus. out with Co.

1st Lt. Albert A. Hempstead, Aug. 26, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 10, '63.

1st Lt. Elisha B. Brainard, Aug. 27, '62; pr. from 2d lt. Dec. 5, '63; to adjt. July 1, '64; mus. out with reg.

1st Lt. Salmon S. Hager, pr. from sergt. July 2, '64; pris. from Aug. 16, '64, to April 14, '65; mus. out with Co.

1st Sergt. Richard H. Kent, died May 14, '63, of wds. received at Chancellorsville, Va.

1st Sergt. George R. Resseguie, wd. at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, '63; pr. from sergt. Feb. 14, '65; mus. out with Co.

Sergeants.

Wm. H. Doolittle, wd. at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, '63; disch. by G. O. May 31, '64.

Jackson B. Ferris, killed at Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, '63.

Philip Peckins, died July 9, '63, of wds. received at Gettysburg, Pa.

Augustus J. Roper, wd. at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, '63; killed at Petersburg, Sept. 11, '64.

David T. Salsbury, pr. to sergt. July 2, '64; mus. out with Co.

Ellis W. Steadman, wd. at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, '63, and at Auburn Oct. 13, '63; pr. to sergt. Sept. 12, '64; mus. out with Co.

John A. Brown, pr. to sergt. Feb. 14, '65; mus. out with Co.

Henry M. Stearns, wd. at Poplar Grove Church, Va., Oct. 2, '64; disch. by G. O. May 15, '65.

Corporals.

Edwin A. Leonard, capt'd at Poolsville, Md., Nov. 28, '62; pr. to corp. July 2, '64; mus. out with Co.

Charles H. Tripp, capt'd at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, '63; wd. at Wilderness May 6, '64; pr. to corp. July 3, '64; mus. out with Co.

Leander Brooks, pr. to corp. Dec. 5, '63; mus. out with Co.

Urbane T. Hall, pr. to corp. July 2, '64; mus. out with Co.

Christopher C. Nicholas, capt'd at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, '63; pr. to corp. July 2, '64; disch. by G. O. June 25, '65.

George Taylor, pr. to corp. Sept. 12, '64; mus. out with Co.

Elisha M. Skinner, pr. to corp. Feb. 16, '65; mus. out with Co.

Julius H. Burr, wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, '63; pr. to corp. Feb. 16, '65; mus. out with Co.

John H. Green, disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 12, '63.

Benjamin F. Barnes, wd. at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, '63; tr. to V. R. C. Jan. 15, '64.

Jerome Davison, wd. at Chancellorsville May 3, '63; tr. to V. R. C. Jan. 11, '64.

Price F. Miller, wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, '63; tr. to V. R. C. Dec. 25, '64; disch. June 28, '65, by G. O.

William P. Brainard, died at Poolsville, Md., Nov. 1, '62.

Frederick D. Young, died Dec. 14, '62; bur. at Washington, D. C.

Musicians.

Nelson D. Coon, pris. from May 3, '63, to Oct. 10, '63; mus. out with Co.

William H. Nutt, disch. by G. O. June 12, '65.

Privates.

Aldrich, Moses B., tr. to V. R. C. May 15, '65; disch. July 6, '65, by G. O.

Adams, Jacob B., wd. at Chancellorsville May 3, '63; tr. to V. R. C. April 14, '64.

Austin, John C., tr. to 57th Reg. P. V.; date unknown.

Baldwin, Albert J., wd. at Chancellorsville May 3, '63; mus. out with Co.

Bennett, Wm. H. H., disch. on surg. cert. May 15, '63.

Barnes, Myron, disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 20, '63.

Bonner, Philander J., capt'd at Poolsville, Md., Nov., '62; wd. at Chancellorsville May 3, '63; tr. to V. R. C. May 15, '64.

Burchel, Warren, wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, '63; killed at Petersburg, Va., June 22, '64.

Benson, Manger, missing in action at Deep Bottom, Va., Aug. 16, '64.

Chrispell, Hiram, wd. at Chancellorsville May 3, '63; tr. to V. R. C. Aug. 26, '64.

Crandall, Wm. J., died May 21, '64, of wds. received at Spotsylvania Court House; bur. at Arlington.

Duren, Daniel D., disch. on surg. cert. Nov. 18, '62; re. Aug. 19, '64; wd. at Poplar Grove Ch., Va.; mus. out with Co.

Doughty, Adelmer, wd. at Chancellorsville May 3, '63, and at Wilderness May 6, '64; disch. by S. O. May 16, '65.

Doloway, John W., disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 8, '63.

Davison, Orimel S., wd. and capt'd at Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, '63; died at Richmond, Va., Jan. 24, '64.

French, Edson M., wd. at Chancellorsville May 3, '63; tr. to V. R. C. Nov. 1, '63; disch. Aug. 24, '65.

Green, Asa, disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 30, '62.

Gollaher, Patrick, disch. on surg. cert. May 15, '63.

Goss, David S., tr. to 57th Reg. P. V.; date unknown.

Hawley, Francis, wd. at Chancellorsville May 3, '63; ab. in hos. at mus. out.

Hobbs, John M., disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 18, '63.

Hempstead, John E., Dec. 16, '62; wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 3, '63; died at Phila. Aug. 28, '63, of his wds.

Hughes, Cyrenius W., died Dec. 2, '62.

Kenyon, Henry W., disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 23, '65.

Linsey, Samuel, disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 8, '62.

Lindsey, Pardon T, disch. on surg. cert. Nov. 13, '62.

Lewis, Nathan, disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 18, '63.

Lord, Asahel, disch. on surg. cert. Nov. 9, '62.

Lord, John, disch. on surg. cert. May 15, '62.

Lord, Enoch W., tr. to V. R. C. July 3, '64; disch. by G. O. Nov. 22, '65.

Loomis, Roscoe S., died May 19, '63, of wds. rec. at Chancellorsville, Va.

Martin, Nicholas, mus. out with Co.

Merrill, Jonathan H., disch. on surg. cert. Nov. 25, '62.

Miller, Harvey W., disch. on surg. cert. Mar. 12, '63.

Melody, Henry, killed at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, '63.

Moss, Levi, missing in action at Wilderness May 6, '64.

McRoy, James M., wd. at Chancellorsville May 3, '63; disch. on surg. cert. Sept. 4, '63.

McDonald, Melanchton, killed at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, '63.

Ousterhout, James T., mus. out with Co.

Ousterhout, John, capt'd at Warrenton, Va., Nov. 18, '62; mus. out with Co.

Oakley, Orrin A., mus. out with Co.

Osborn, Wm. D., died July 24th, of wds. rec. at Gettysburg, Pa.

Osman, Wm. E, tr. to 57th Regt. P. V.; date unknown.

Potter, Victor A., wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, '63; mus. out with Co.

Potter, Herman I., tr. to V. R. C. Sept. 30, '63.

Phillips, Davis N., died Dec. 13, '62.

Pierson, Phineas H., tr. to 57th Regt. P. V.; date unknown.

Riker, John L., wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, '63; tr. to V. R. C. Aug. 30, '64; disch. by G. O. June 29, '65.

Reynolds, John N, died Mar. 29, '63.

Seely, Charles L., disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 6, '62.

Squires, Jonathan, tr. to V. R. C. July 25, '64; disch. by G. O. July 26, '65.

Salsbury, Charles B., tr. to Co. C., 57th Regt. P. V., May 28, '65.

Saunders, Perry D., killed at Wilderness May 6, '64.

Sweet, George M., wd. at Chancellorsville May 3, '63; died July 13, '63, of wds. rec. at Gettysburg.

Tewksbury, Wm. P., disch. on surg. cert. Nov. 25, '62.

Tennant, John V., wd. at Chancellorsville May 3, '63; disch. on surg. cert. Aug. 27, '63.

Tennant, Orange W., disch. on surg. cert. Nov. 28, '62.
Thayer, Christopher C., tr. to V. R. C. Nov. 13, '63; disch. by G. O. July 5, '65.
Tiffany, Linus N., killed at Chancellorsville May 3, '63.
Trowbridge, Oscar, killed at Chancellorsville May 3, '63.
Tennant, Eldridge G., tr. to 57th Regt. P. V.; date unknown.
Vanauken, Daniel, pris. from May 3 to Oct. 10, 1863; wd. at Wilderness May 6, '64: disch. by G. O. June 5, '65.
Van Horn, Simon M., died Oct. 24, '62; bur. at Alexandria, Va.
Wilson, George A., mus. out with Co.
Whitman, Jacob, pris. from May 3 to Oct. 25, '63; mus. out with Co.
Wilmarth, C. C., died June 9, '63, of wds. rec. at Chancellorsville, Va.

COMPANY G.

Corp. Theodore Fuller, wd. at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, '63; disch. by S. O. Oct. 9, '63.

COMPANY B.

Bunt, Wm. H., priv.; Aug. 22, '62; disch. for wds. rec. at Chancellorsville May 3, '62; loss of limb.

COMPANY H., ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIRST REGIMENT.

Mustered into service August 26, 1862, unless otherwise stated; mustered out May 28, 1865.

Capt. Casper W. Tyler, Aug. 27, '62; pr. to maj. June 22, '64; to lt.-col. July 4, '64; disch. on surg. cert Mar. 1, '65.
Capt. John L. Gyle, pr. from sergt. to 2d lt. Dec. 10, '62; to 1st lt. Dec. 5, '63; to capt July 4, '64; mus. out with company.
First Lieut. Daniel W. Searle, Aug. 27, '62; pr. to adjt. of regt. Aug. 29, '62; disch June 2, '64, for wds. rec. at Gettysburg, Pa. (See personal sketch.)
First Lieut. Logan O. Tyler, pr. from 1st sergt. Sept. 22, '62; killed at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, '63.
First Lieut. B. B. Atherton, pr. from cor. to sergt. Sept. 23, '62; to 1st lt. Aug. 10, '64; mus. out with company.
Second Lieut. Aaron Bunnell, res. Sept. 22, '62.
First Sergt. Parker J. Gates, pr. from priv. Sept. 23, '62; wd. at Poplar Grove Ch., Va., Oct. 2, '64; disch. G. O. June 5, '65.

Sergeants.

John Harris, wd. at Wilderness, Va., May 6, '64; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Wm. Magee, mus. out with company.
H. H. Daugherty, pr. from cor. June 30, '64; mus. out with company.
Isaac Z. Babcock, disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 27, '63.
Philip E. Quick, pr. from cor. Mar. 1, '64; died May 19 of wds. rec. at Spottsylvania C. H. May 12, '64; buried at Arlington, Va.

Corporals.

James H. Weaver, ab., sick, at mus. out.
Albert B. Gates, mus. out with company.
Thos. Hickock, pr. to cor. Sept. 23, '62; mus. out with company.
Abram V. Alden, pr. to cor. Mar. 1, 64; mus. out with company.
H. J. Millard, pr. to cor. June 30, '64; mus. out with company.
Lorenzo W. Sullivan, pr. to cor. June 30, '64; mus. out with company.
Horace A. Roberts, pr. to cor. June 30, '64; mus. out with company.
Asa H. Decker, tr. to V. R. C. Jan. 1, '65.
Jeremiah Hayes, tr. to V. R. C. Nov. 15, '64.
Frederick Fargo, Aug. 23, '62; tr. to V. R. C. Mar. 15, '64.

Musicians.

Geo. W. Hewett, mus. out with company.
Geo. C. Hill, disch. on surg. cert; re. in 1st N. Y. Mounted Rifles; disch. June 17, '65.

Privates.

Avery, Charles, tr. to V. R. C. Feb. 15, '64; disch. Aug. 25, '65.
Baker, Horace, mus. out with company.
Bayley, Jas. H., disch. by G. O. June 30, '65.
Bookstaver, Chas. tr. to V. R. C. Jan. 31, '64.
Bonnell, Ahara A., Mar. 18, '64; tr. to Co. H, 57th regt. P. V. May 28, '65.
Baker, Hiram V., Aug. 6, '64; tr. to Co. H, 57th regt. P. V. May 28, '65.
Baker, Henry, Mar. 18, '64; tr. to Co. H, 57th regt. P. V. May 28, '65.
Beeman, Stephen S., Mar. 18, '64; tr. to Co. D, 57th Regt. P. V.; disch. by G. O. May 26, '65.
Carney, Henry D., must out with company.
Carney, Geo. D., mus. out with company.
Conrad, Ithamar, disch. on surg. cert. Sept. 30, '62.
Cox, John, disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 11, '62.
Conrad, John, tr. to V. C. R. Aug. 20, 63.
Corwin, Adelbert, killed at Petersburg, Va., June 17, '64; buried at City Point.
Chapman, Geo, killed at Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, '63.
Carter, Hiram, Mar. 18, '64; died at Brattleboro', Vt., Aug. 3, '64; buried in Soldiers' Cemetery.
Corwin, Gilbert, mis. in action at Boydton Plank Road, Va., Oct. 27, '64.
Conger, Hampton A., Mar. 18, '64; tr. to Co. D, 5th Regt. P. V. May 28, '65.
Dewitt, Alexander, mus. out with company.
Daley, Patrick, mus. out with company.
Davis, Thos., Mar. 18, '64; disch. Dec. 23 for wds., with loss of arm, rec. at Spottsylvania C. H., Va., May 12, '64.
Darrow, Jonathan C., killed at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, 1863.
Darrow, Lewis F., died at Washington, D. C., Dec. 18, '62.
Delameter, Jacob, mis. in action at Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, '63.
Eckert, Jonathan M., died Feb. '65; buried in Poplar Grove Cemetery, Petersburg, Va.
Grant, Henry, mus. out with company.
Garey, Samuel, mus. out with company May 28, '65.
Goodsell, Nathan, absent, sick, at mus. out.
Gates, Wm. S., disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 7, '63.
Gates, Elwood F., disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 6, '62; re. in Co. H, 89th N. Y.; killed at Rice Station.
Gates, Harlan W., disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 6, '62.
Gary, Joseph, Mar. 19, '64; tr. to Co. H, 57th P. V. May 28, '65.
Hyna, Dutch, mus. out with company May 28, '65.
Hill, Michael G., pr. to principal muc. Dec. 31, '64; mus. out with regt.
Hill, Oliver B., killed at Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, '63.
Hobbs, Asahel, Mar. 18, '64; died at Andersonville, Ga., July 28; wds. rec. at Wilderness.
Hotel, Wm., died near Falmouth, Va., Feb. 26, '63.
Hast, Henry S., tr. to 57th Regt. P. V., date unknown.
Kishpaugh, Richard M., Mar. 16, '64; must out with company.
Kunkle, John W., died Aug. 8, wds. rec. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, '63.
Kellogg, Henry N., Mar. 18, '64; wd.; tr. to Co. D, 57th Regt. P. V., May 28, '65; disch. by G. O. June 3, '65.
Lott, Leander, tr. to V. R. C. Jan. 1, '65.
Lillie, Merritt, Mar. 18, '64; tr. to Co. D, 57th Regt. P. V., May 28, '65; disch. by G. O. June 17, '65.
Lemon, Jason, Mar. 18, '64; tr. to Co. D, 57th Regt. P. V., May 28, '65.
Markham, William O., disch. on surg. cert. Oct. 6, '62; re. in 5th N. Y. Cav.
Millard, Stephen, Mar. 28, '64; disch. by G. O. May 17, '65.
Marshall, Chas. H., disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 20, '63.
Marshall, Benjamin C., tr. to Co. I, 10th Regt. V. R. C., Sept. 30, '64; disch. by G. O. June, '65.
Mackey, Joseph, tr. to V. R. C. Sept. 30, '64.
McShere, Barney, mus. out with company May 28, '65.
McLeod, John, disch. on surg. cert. Nov. 21, '62.
McSherer, Joseph, tr. to Co. F, 19th Regt. V. R. C., Sept. 30, '64; disch. by G. O., July 13, '65.
Oliver, Matthias C., mus. out with company May 28, '65.
Overfield, John B., Mar. 18, '64; tr. to Co. H, 57th Regt. P. V., May 28, 1865.
Peet, Wm. H., mus. out with company May 29, '65.
Palmer, Theron, disch. by G. O. May 17, '65.
Perkins, Chas., tr. to V. R. C. Nov. 15, '63.
Peasley, James A., tr. to V. R. C. Aug. 20, '63; disch. by G. O. June 29, 1865.
Peasley, Christopher C., tr. to V. R. C. Nov. 15, '63.
Palmer, Jacob, tr. to 57th Regt. P. V; date unknown.
Pickett, A. N., Mar. 18, '64; tr. to Co. H, 57th Regt. P. V., May 28, '65.
Ransom, Wm., tr. to Randolph Battery, R. I. Art., Feb. 17, '63.
Ralston, John, disch. on surg. cert.
Rice, Geo. W., disch. on surg. cert. May 23, '63; re. in Co. I, 102d P. V.; disch. June 28, '65, by S. O.
Rifenbury, John C., disch. on surg. cert. Mar. 16, '63.
Stade, Frederick W., mus. out with company.
Stockholm, John J., mus. out with company.
Spencer, Benjamin N., disch. by S. O. Mar 1, '65.
Snow, Alpheus, disch. by G. O. May 15, '65.
Sodan, John H., tr. to V. R. C. Aug. 20, '63.
Sinsebaugh, Egbert, tr. to V. R. C. June 15, '64.

Stare, Geo., tr. to 53d Co., V. R. C., June 15, '64; disch. by G. O. Nov. 25, '65.
Stillwell, John, died Nov. 2, '64, of wds. rec. at Poplar Grove Ch., Va., Oct. 2, '64.
Spencer, Francis A., Dec. 31, '63; pr. to hos. steward, U. S. A., July 6, '64.
Sterling, Chas. D., Mar. 18, '64; died Feb. 15, '64.
Taylor, Wm. A., pr. to hos. steward, U. S. A., July 6, '64; tr. to Co. H, 57th Regt. P. V., May 25, '65.
Tarbox, David H., disch. on surg. cert. April 6, '64.
Thornton, Wm. G., disch. on surg. cert. Mar. 10, '64.
Tarbox, Wm. W., tr. to Co. G, 3d Regt. V. R. C., Nov. 1, '63; disch. by G. O. July 22, '65.
Treible, Peter A., died at Washington, D. C., Nov. 23, '62.
Treible, Moses, died at Waterloo, Va., Nov. 10, '62.
Uptegrove, Levi, killed at Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, '63.
Vanarsdale, Wm. S., disch. by G. O. May 15, '65.
Vaness, Chas. H., disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 20, '63.
Wiles, Warren, absent, sick, at mus. out.
Wiles, Martin, absent, sick, at mus. out.
Warner, Sidney, disch. on surg. cert.
Wiles, John, Mar. 28, '64; tr. to Co. H, 57th Regt. P. V., May 28, '65.
Winans, Silas, Mar. 18, '64; tr. to Co. H, 57th Regt. P. V., May 28, '65.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-THIRD REGIMENT.—This regiment was recruited in the county of Luzerne with the exception of about two companies, which were furnished by the counties of Susquehanna, Wyoming and Lycoming. The men from Susquehanna County were principally in Companies B and H, the latter company being entirely recruited from this county, although during its term of service a number of drafted men were assigned to it. There were in Company B about seventy-five men from the county, most of them being from the southeastern part. The companies from Luzerne County rendezvoused at a camp about three miles from Wilkes-Barre, and on the 18th of October, 1862, a regimental organization was effected by the choice of the following field-officers: Edmund L. Dana, colonel; George E. Hoyt, lieutenant-colonel; and John D. Musser, major. Colonel Dana had seen service in the Mexican War and at the time was a major-general of militia. The regiment, therefore, had the good fortune to enter the service under the command of an officer familiar with military drill and discipline. On the 7th of November the regiment broke camp and proceeded to Harrisburg, where, after receiving guns and equipments, it was ordered to Washington, and upon its arrival was placed in the defences of the city. Here it remained during the winter, and on the 17th of February, 1863, it was ordered to join the Army of the Potomac, and proceeded to Belle Plain. Here it was assigned to the Second Brigade, Third Division of the First Corps, and became associated with the One Hundred and Forty-ninth and One Hundred and Fiftieth Pennsylvania Regiments. The preparations for the spring campaign being completed, on the 27th of April the regiment broke camp and, with the First Corps, moved to Pollock's Mills, below Fredericksburg. On the 29th the regiment was under a brisk cannonade from the south bank of the Rappahannock, and on the morning of May 2d it started for Chancellorsville and, after a long and fatiguing march, reached the battle-field at midnight. The First Corps went into position on the extreme right of the army. At five o'clock on the morning of the 3d the enemy attacked in heavy force, but to the left of the position occupied by the regiment, and although momentarily expecting to be called on to repel the enemy, the regiment and corps were not seriously engaged during the Chancellorsville fights. On the 6th the regiment re-crossed the river and, after a tedious march, reached Falmouth on the 8th, where it went into camp. Here it rested for a month and then started on the Gettysburg campaign, and on the night of June 30 bivouacked four miles from Gettysburg. On the 1st of July it was early in motion and soon the sound of artillery greeted their ears, as Buford's cavalry struck the rebel advance. At a little before noon the brigade went into position on a ridge beyond the Theological Seminary under a heavy fire, the One Hundred and Forty-third forming on the line of railroad. It was early in this action that the gallant and lamented Reynolds was killed and Colonels Stone and Wister wounded, leaving the command of the brigade to Colonel Dana, of the One Hundred and Forty-third. Bates, in his account of the battle and the part taken by the One Hundred and Forty-third, says: "A terrific fire of infantry and artillery was brought to bear upon the position, but it was manfully held, though the dead and wounded on every hand told at what a fearful cost. Repeated charges were made with even fresh troops, but each was repulsed with fearful slaughter." Later in the day, by a flank movement, the brigade was forced to fall back to a position near the Seminary. When the order for this movement was given the same authority states: "The color-bearer of the regiment and many of the men could with difficulty be made to face to the rear, seeming determined to die rather than yield the ground. In executing this movement the color-bearer, Sergeant B. H. Crippin, of Company E, was the last to move and was killed in the act, still clinging to his standard. The flag was rescued and brought safely off." On the afternoon of the 2d, during the fierce attack of the rebels on the Third Corps, Colonel Dana's brigade was ordered to its support under a heavy fire of shot and shell from the enemy's batteries. It took a position in the open field on the left centre of the Third Corps, where it threw up works and rested for the night. At daylight of the 3d the enemy's artillery opened, and at one o'clock P.M. every rebel gun was concentrated upon the Union front and a perfect tempest of solid shot and shell was rained upon it preparatory to the last grand infantry charge, which was completely repulsed and the battle of Gettysburg was won. Referring to Bates, we find: "The regiment entered this fight with four hundred and sixty-five men, rank and file. Of these, the killed, and missing in action, supposed to be killed, was forty-seven; and the wounded and prisoners were two hundred and five, an aggregate loss of two hundred and fifty-two, more than half of its entire strength." It participated in the movements following the retreat of Lee and on the 19th of October, at Haymarket, it had a sharp encounter with the enemy, in which his advance was handsomely repulsed.

During the fall campaign more than three hundred recruits were received in the regiment, bringing its aggregate strength up to nearly five hundred and fifty. Late in December the regiment went into winter-quarters at Culpeper, after eight months of active and severe campaigning.

In the reorganization of the army for the campaign of 1864 the One Hundred and Forty-third became part of the First Brigade, First Division, Fifth Corps. On the 4th of May the regiment broke camp for the Wilderness campaign, and on the 5th was engaged in a fierce battle with the enemy. Colonel Dana had his horse shot under him, was wounded and taken prisoner; and Lieutenant Michael Keenan, of Company H, was mortally wounded. It was hotly engaged on the 6th, and for several successive days it was in the thickest of the fight, repeatedly charging the enemy and as often being compelled to withstand their fierce assaults. With its face ever to the foe, it finally came with Grant to the siege of Petersburg, and in the advance on the 18th of June it again met the enemy and won new laurels. During the operations of the army before Petersburg and its successful raids for the destruction of the Weldon Railroad, it bore a conspicuous part. It was the middle of December before the regiment went into winter-quarters. In the preliminary movements of the final campaign, in the spring of 1865, it participated; and at Hatcher's Run the One Hundred and Forty-third was engaged and suffered severely. It returned to its former camp, and on the 9th of February it was detached from the corps, and, in company with three other regiments of the brigade, all greatly reduced by hard fighting, but of the most trusted troops, were ordered North for special service. It was sent to Hart's Island, in New York Harbor, and there, and on other special duty, it was engaged until June 20, 1865, when it was finally discharged.

Company H.—As before stated, Company H of this regiment was recruited entirely from this county, and mainly through the efforts of John C. Morris, an influential citizen of Middletown, whose efforts were ably seconded by Michael Keenan, also a resident of that township. The men were from Middletown, Apolacon, Choconut, Forest Lake, Rush, Jessup and Friendsville Borough. So rapidly did the men enlist that, just three weeks from the time Mr. Morris commenced to recruit for the company, it was en route for Harrisburg. It met at Friendsville on the last days of August, 1862, and organized by electing John C. Morris, captain; Michael Keenan, first lieutenant; and B. F. Babcock, second lieutenant. It left for Harrisburg on the 3d of September, and on the 6th was mustered into the United States service. Before becoming a part of the One Hundred and Forty-third Regiment it was sent with the militia to participate in the movements preceding and subsequent to the battle of Antietam, after which it joined its fortunes with the One Hundred and Forty-third, and shared its hardships and its glory.

Captain Morris was born in Otsego County, N. Y., February 11, 1822, and was from good old Revolutionary stock. He came to Middletown in 1858 and was one of the foremost citizens of that township, as well as the county. Engaged in the peaceful pursuits of agriculture, it was only at the urgent and necessitous call of his country that he decided to sever his delightful family connections and, in company with his neighbors and friends, go to the front in defence of the flag and his country's honor. Refusing merited promotion, that he might remain with his "boys," he was finally compelled, by disease brought on by exposure in camp and on field, to resign, and on the 16th of April, 1854, he was honorably discharged from the service on surgeon's certificate of disability, but he continued to exercise a fatherly interest in the "boys" of his company until the close of the war. Captain Morris was an influential member of the State Board of Agriculture, and at the time of his death was serving his third term as president of the State Agricultural Society. In 1878 he was elected a member of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, and served in that body in the sessions of 1879–80. His death, in 1872, was doubtless the result of disabilities incurred in the army, and thus, at the age of sixty, he passed away, another invaluable sacrifice to home and country.

Of the other commissioned officers of the company from this county, we have already alluded to the death of the gallant Keenan, and Captain W. T. White died some four years ago in one of the Western States. First Lieutenant E. L. Rhinevault is an honored resident of the county, and Asa Warner, its efficient orderly, still lives to recount the honorable service of his company. The capture and escape of Sergeant Frank E. Foster is an interesting episode, and the promotion of W. A. Southwell to captain in the Twenty-ninth, and M. S. Towne to first lieutenant in the Forty-fifth United States Colored Troops, evidenced the material of which Company H was made.

Company B.—The men from this county who enlisted in Company B, as already intimated, were from the eastern part of the county—mostly from Clifford, Dundaff and that immediate vicinity. Its first captain was Joseph H. Sornberger, who did not belong to this county, and resigned early in 1863. He was succeeded in the command by William G. Graham, a native of Clifford, who was also discharged in October, 1863. He was succeeded in command of the company by Jacob M. Lingfelter, of Clifford, who commanded the "boys" until they were mustered out, June 12, 1865. Of the other commissioned officers we have but meagre history. Paul R. Barriger, who enlisted in August, 1862, was discharged in July, 1864, as second lieutenant of the company. He is an honored resident of Great Bend township, and well known in the county. That the record of Company B, One Hundred and Forty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, is an honorable one no one will doubt after glancing over its record, which follows:

COMPANY B, ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-THIRD REGIMENT.

Musteted into service August 26, 1862, unless otherwise stated; mustered out June 12, 1865.

Capt. William G. Graham, pr. from 1st lt. Feb. 4, '63; disch. Oct. 26,'63.
Capt. Jacob M. Lingfelter, pr. from 1st sergt. to 2d lt. July 1, '63; to 1st lt. Feb. 9, '64; to capt. Feb. 29, '64; mus. out with Co. June 12, '65.
2d Lt. Paul R. Barrager, pr. from sergt. to 1st sergt. Aug. 15, '63; to 2d lt. Feb. 15, '64; disch. July 29, '64.
2d Lt. Martin Chandler, pr. from cor. to sergt. Oct. 6, '63; to 1st sergt. June 3, '64; to 2d lt. Sept. 25, '64; mus. out with Co. June 12, '65.
1st Sergt. John H. Lingfelter, pro. to sergt. Feb. '64; to 1st sergt. Sept. 25, '64; mus. out with Co.

Sergeants.

De Witt C. Graham, pr. to cor. Jan. 15, '63; to sergt. July 16, 1864; mus. out with Co.
Avery Harris, pr. to cor. Aug. 15, '64; to sergt. Oct. 16, '64; mus. out with Co.
Henry F. Bennett, pr. to cor. Aug. 15, '63; to sergt. Dec. 31, '64; mus. out with Co.
N. W. Butterfield, pr. from cor. Feb. '64; tr. to V. R. C. March, '65.
Haddick Sullender, pr. from cor. Jan. 15, '63; died May 2, '64.
Owen Philips, pr. to cor. Jan. 15, '63; to sergt. July 1, '63; died of wds. rec. at Wilderness, Va., May 9, '64.

Corporals.

William H. Cole, pr. to cor. Aug. 15, '63; ab. sick at mus. out.
Anthony Clarkson, pr. to cor.; mus. out with Co.
David R. Anthony, pr. to cor. Nov. 10, '63; mus. out with Co.
William T. Chandler, pr. to cor. Dec. 15, '64; mus. out with Co.
William Sweet, pr. to cor. April 15, '65; mus. out with Co.
Leonard C. Wilbur, pr. to cor. April 15, '65; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Henry Ulrich, died July 12th of wds. rec. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63.

Musician.

H. C. Yarrington, pr. to principal muc. March 1, '65.

Privates.

Abers, Alonzo, ab. sick at mus. out.
Albright, Dexter, mus. out with Co.
Adams, Seth H., pris. from May 6, '64, to Feb. 26, '65; disch. on surg. cert. June 13, '65.
Albright, Alonzo, disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 29, '63.
Anderson, Thomas, Aug. 20, '63; died May 26. '63.
Baker, Martin E., Aug. 20, '63; disch. on surg. cert. June 7, '65.
Baker, Almond, Feb. 29, '64; mus. out with Co.
Burrett, Payson, April 1, '65; mus. out with Co.
Brown, George W., March 2, '64; died April 5, '64.
Carpenter, Elijah, March 7, '65; mus. out with Co.
Carpenter, Freeman, March 7, '65; mus. out with Co.
Chandler, Frederick B., not with Co. at mus. out.
Clarkson, William, not with Co. at mus. out.
Carpenter, Harding, March 7, '65; died in New York March 26, '65.
Darrow, Orlando, Feb. 29, '64; mus. out with Co.
Dowd, William, March 7, '65; mus. out with Co.
Dopp, George M., tr. to Battery B, 43d Regt. P. V., Jan. 9, '64.
Farnham, Kind L, died Jan 17, '64.
Felts, William L., March 2, '64; died of wds. rec. at Wilderness, Va., May 6, '64.
Gardner, Eliphalet S., not with Co. at mus. out.
Hardy, Ira, Jan. 28, '64; sub.; disch. by special order.
Hunter, John H., mus. out with Co.
Hunter, Thadd. W., March 2, '64; mus. out with Co.; vet.
Hull, George, March 2, '64; ab. sick at mus. out; vet.
Hull, Frank E., March 7, '65; mus. out with Co.
Hartley, James P., March 7, '65; mus. out with Co.
Holford, Ferdinand J., tr. to Battery B, 43d Regt. P. V., Dec. 28, '63.
Ingham, Stephen T., Aug. 11, '62; mus. out with Co.
Johnson, Leroy, Feb 29, '64; not with Co. at mus. out.
Lindsley, Edgar, wd. at Gettysburg; mus. out with Co.
Lingfelter, Samuel F., March 2, '64; mus. out with Co.; vet.
Lake, Charles, disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 29, '63.
Low, Henry P., tr. to V. R. C. Oct. 1, '63.
Lathrop, C. H., tr. to V. R. C. Nov., '64; disch. by G. O. July 27, '65.
Lingfelter, Charles F., March 2, '64; died Sept. 19, '64; bur. in Cypress Hill Cem., L. I.
Mahoney, John, disch. on surg. cert. March 9, '65.
McKivett, William not with Co. at mus. out.
Miller, Levi B., capt'd; died Aug. 15, '64, at Andersonville, Ga.
Payne, George L., March 2, '64; mus. out with Co.
Pattent, George, March 31, '64; tr. to V. R. C. Jan. 1, '65.
Pattent, Peter, March 2, '64; tr. to V. R. C. Jan. 9, '65; disch. by G. O July 21, '65.
Payne, Ichabod, March 2, '64; died July 21, '64; bur. at Point Lookout, Md.
Philbine, Thomas, March 15, '64; died of wds. rec. at Wilderness, Va., May 6, '64.
Rankins, Isaac, disch. on surg. cert. April 25, '65.
Smith, John R., Jr., mus. out with Co.
Smith, Jacob H., mus. out with Co.
Shultz, Christopher E., mus. out with Co.
Simpson, George, mus. out with Co.
Smith, Charles H., mus. out with Co.
Sutliff, Solomon, tr. to Battery B, 43d Regt. P. V., Jan. 9, '64.
Smith, John R., tr. to V. R. C. Jan. 29, '64.
Seely, William, not with Co. at mus. out.
Truesdell, John, mus. out with Co. June 25, '65.
Whipple, Truman. March 2, '64; mus. out with Co.
Williams, Frank, died May 13, '63.

COMPANY H, ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-THIRD REGIMENT.

Mustered into service Sept. 6, 1862, unless otherwise stated; mustered out June 12, 1865.

Capt. John C. Morris, Sept. 18, '62; disch. on surg. cert. April 16, '64.
Capt. Benjamin F. Babcock, Sept. 27, '62; pr. from 2d to 1st lt.; to capt. June 24, '64; res. Sept. 7, '64.
Capt. Warren T. White, pr. from sergt. to 1st sergt. May 1, '63; to 1st lt. June 23, '64; to capt. Sept. 25, '64; mus. out with company June 12. '65.
First Lieut. Michael Keenan, Sept. 8, '62; com. capt. April 19, '64; not mus.; died at Washington, D. C., June 1st, of wds. received at Wilderness, Va., May 6, '64.
First Lieut. E. L. Rhinewault, pr. from priv. to sergt. May 1, '63; to 1st sergt. July 1, '64; to 1st lt. Sept. 25, '64; mus. out with company.
First Sergt. Asa Warner, pr. to cor. Dec. '63; to 1st sergt. Sept. 25, '64; mus. out with company.

Sergeants.

Frank E. Foster, capt'd at Wilderness, Va., May 5, '64; com. 2d lt. Sept. 8, '64; not mus.; disch. by G. O. May 20, '65.
Francis P. Ryan, pr. from cor. June 1, '63; wd. at Spottsylvania C. H., Va., May 10, '64; tr. to V. R. C. Feb. 21, '65; disch. on surg. cert. April 17, '65.
Calvin L. Leet, pr. from cor. Nov. 25, '63; mus. out with company.
Orange A. Baldwin, pr. from cor. July 1, '64; disch. Sept. 7, '65, exp. of term.
Daniel Hawes, disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 5, '63.
Alanson W. Bissell, died at Windmill Point, Va., June 1, '63. (See "Bissell" Post, G. A. R.)

Corporals.

Myron Bradshaw, pr. to cor. July 1, '64; mus. out with company.
Miles D. Baldwin, pr. to cor. Sept. 25, '64; mus. out with company.
George B. Strange, pr. to cor. Oct. 6, '64; mus. out with company.
Frank Angell, pr. to cor. Jan. 16, '65; mus. out with company.
Robert Booth, pr. to cor. Jan. 21, '65; mus. out with company.
David H. Deuel, pr. to cor. Jan. 25, '65; mus. out with company.
Mark B. Perigo, pr. to cor. May 22, '65; mus. out with company.
Calvin L. Lincoln, pr. to cor.; disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 16, '65.
Oscar Caswell, pr. to cor.; disch. by S. O. May 21, '65.

Wm. A. Southwell, pr. to cor.; disch. by S. O. Oct. 6, '64; pr. to capt. in 29th U. S. C. T.
Joshua P. Miller, pr. to cor.; tr. to V. R. C. June 31, '65.
James Dean, pr. to cor.; tr. to V. R. C. Dec. 5, '64; disch Sept. 6, '65.
Amos James Geary, pr. to cor.; died at Washington, D. C, Jan. 7, '63.
Silas Light, pr. to cor.; capt'd at Wilderness, Va., May 5, '64; died at Andersonville, Ga., Aug. 25, '64.
Van Ness Small, killed at Wilderness, Va., May 5, '64.
Archie S. Horton, mus. out with company.
John W. White, ab., sick, at mus. out.
Geo. B. Smith, not with company at mus. out.

Privates.

Allen, Daniel, died at Windmill Point, Va., May 5, '65.
Brink, David W., mus. out with company.
Baxter, Geo. W., wd. at Petersburg, Va., June, '64; disch, date unknown.
Beebe, Amos C., mus. out with company.
Beebe, David P., disch. on surg. cert. Aug. 11, '63.
Beebe, Lewis, Sept. 17, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Aug. 11, '63.
Baxter, Samuel S., disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 14, '63.
Burbeck, John, died at Windmill Point, Va., April 23, '63.
Burch, Lorenzo, Dec. 4, '62; substitute; died April 3, '63.
Barnum, Henry C., died at Baltimore, Md., July 18, '63, of wds. received at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63.
Burbeck, Robert, died March, '64.
Cook, Hiram, Sept. 17, '62; mus. out with company.
Cunningham, D. J., mus. out with company.
Casterline, Thos. E., Mar. 19, '64; mus. out with company.
Carroll, John, disch. on surg. cert. Oct. 3, '64.
Camp, Charles, tr. to V. R. C. April 14, '64.
Canfield, David A., Dec. 4, '62; substitute; tr. to V. R. C. May 9, '63.
Crocket, Geo. W., died at Ft. Schuyler, N. Y., Aug. 24, '63, of wds. received at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63.
Dunn, Wm. P., mus. out with company.
Degnan, Peter, tr. to V. R. C. Jan. 2, '65.
Deuel, Wm. H., tr. to V. R. C. Feb. 16, '64.
Eldred, Luther, disch. on surg cert. Feb. 8, '64.
Estus, Wm. H., Mar. 19, '64; died at City Point, Va., Aug. 3, '64.
Fitzgerald, Jas. E., disch. on surg. cert. June 6, '63.
Gillen, Jas. S, Aug. 24, '63; mus. out with company.
Glidden, John W., died at Jefferson, Md., July 5, '63.
Gilroy, James, not with company at mus out.
Hickey, Michael, capt'd at Wilderness, Va., May 5, '64; disch. S. O. June 13, '65.
Hoadley, August P., tr. to V. R. C., date unknown.
Heath, Hial, Sept. 17, '62; died at Alexandria, Va., July 9th, of wds. received at Wilderness, May 6, '64.
Jenner, Walter, Sept. 17, '63; mus. out with company.
Jenner, Henry, disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 17, '63.
Jones, Theron H., died at Windmill Point, Va., April 26, '63.
Jarvis, Rufus H., Sept. 19, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. H, 7th Ind. Vols., Oct. 25, '63.
Lane, Dennis, Jr., mus. out with company.
Lester, Ezra P., mus. out with company.
Lynch, Thomas, disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 10, '65.
Larrabee, Truman G., Sept. 3, '63; drafted; capt'd at Wilderness, Va., May 5, '64; died at Florence, S. C., Nov. 15, '64.
Lepper, William F., died at Fredericksburg, Va., May 15th, of wds. received at Wilderness, Va., May 6, '64.
Mooney, John, pris. from May 5, '64, to Mar. 10, '65; disch. by G. O. June 29, '65.
Millin, Patrick, disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 14, '65.
Moore, Jacob, tr. to V. R. C. April 4, '64; disch. by G. O. July 5, '65.
Mott, Alonzo, killed at Petersburg, Va., June 18, '64; bur. in Poplar Grove Cem.
McRoy, John, Sept. 17, '62; mus. out with company.
McCreary, Ed. P., pr. to sergt. Co. I Oct. 1, '63; to 1st lt. Co. B Feb. 28, '64; disch. May 5, '64.
McVinen, Andrew, not with company at mus. out.
Porter, Henry M., died at Culpeper C. H., Va., Jan. 8, '64.
Porter, Henry A., died April 21, '65.
Porter, William A., Dec. 4, '62; drafted; died at Culpeper C. H., Va., Jan. 7, '64.
Ross, Leonard B., mus. out with company.
Riley, Terence, disch. on surg cert. July 18, '63.
Ring, Richard, Sept. 17, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Mar. 4, '64.
Ragan, Jeremiah, Jr., disch. on surg. cert. Nov. 16, '63.
Rochford, James, not with company at mus. out.
Sheldon, Geo W., mus. out with company.
Strange, James, disch. on surg. cert. Aug. 24, '63.
Small, Charles, Sept 17, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 22, '63.
Scribner, Frederick M., disch. on surg. cert. April 4, '64.
Southwell, Wm. B., tr. to V. R. C. May 10, '63.
Slauson, Edward B., tr. to V. R. C. Oct. 10, '64.
Smith, Daniel, not with company at mus. out.
Turrell, Leman, disch. on surg. cert. July 19, '63.
Towne, Myron S., pr. to com. sergt. April 20, '64; to 1st lt. U. S. C. T.; to Brig. Q. M.; mus. out Nov. 5, '65.
West, Hobart R., disch. by G. O. June 3, '65.
Warner, Stanley B., disch. on surg. cert. Oct. 9, '64.
Webster, Charles E., tr. to V. R. C. Dec. 19, '63.
West, Charles A., died at Washington, D. C., Jan. 16, '63.
Woodworth, Douglass, Dec. 4, '62; substitute; died at Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 15, '64.

COMPANY I.

Private Leonard Gow, Mar. 20, '65; mus. out with company June 12, '65.

COMPANY K.

Cor. William N. Williams, Sept. 4, '62; died July 6, '63, of wds. received at Gettysburg, Pa.

Privates.

Steel, Balser, Sept. 1, '62; mus. out with company June 12, '65.
Bell, Samuel R., Mar. 7, '65; mus. out with company June 12, '65.
Palmer, Geo. W., not on muster-out roll.

SEVENTEENTH CAVALRY.—Under the call of the President in July, 1862, Pennsylvania was required to furnish three regiments of cavalry. The Seventeenth was one of the three thus called for, and was recruited in various sections of the State, no county furnishing more than one company.

It was, therefore, a representative regiment, and four of the companies composing it were from the "Northern tier," viz.: One each from the counties of Susquehanna, Bradford, Wayne and Luzerne. During September, and the early part of October, the companies rendezvoused at Camp Simmons, near Harrisburg; and on the 18th of the latter month a regimental organization was effected, by the selection of J. H. Kellogg, colonel; J. B. McAllister, lieutenant-colonel; and D. B. Hartranft, Coe Durland and R. R. Reinhold, majors. Colonel Kellogg was a regular officer, being a captain in the First United States Cavalry; and a few of the other officers and men had seen service in the Mexican War. But while most of the regiment were unskilled in the duties of a soldier, they were, to a marked extent, good horsemen. The regiment was ordered to Washington on the 25th of November, and was soon afterwards ordered to the front.

On the 22d of December its maiden engagement was had with Hampton's Legion, at Occoquan Creek, which was here driven and pursued for some distance. The regiment was actively engaged in scouting and picket-duty, and early in 1863 was assigned to the Second Brigade of the First Cavalry Division of the Army of the Potomac, being associated with the Sixth New York, Sixth United States and Eighth Pennsylvania Regiments, the brigade being under the command of Colonel—afterwards General—Thomas C. Devin.

In the Chancellorsville campaign the Seventeenth was one of the three cavalry regiments that moved with Hooker, the main cavalry force being dispatched to cut the enemy's communications and harass his rear. It was during the progress of this battle that the Seventeenth was placed in one of the most trying positions of its whole service. When Stonewall Jackson struck the Eleventh Corps on the evening of the 2d of May, and drove it in disorder back upon the Union lines, General Pleasanton, with the Seventeenth and the Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry, happened to be in the line of the rebel assault. In his report of that battle, the general says:

"This remaining regiment (the Seventeenth) was composed of raw men, new troops. I had them formed in single line, with sabres drawn, with orders to charge in case the enemy came to the guns. . . . And thus was the mad onset of Jackson's army checked by artillery supported by a single line of raw cavalry. It was a trying position for the regiment, but the firm front presented saved the day, and enabled Hooker to re-form his chattered columns, and once more present an unbroken line." General Pleasanton, in a general order issued after the battle, pays this high compliment to the Seventeenth: "The coolness displayed by the Seventeenth Cavalry in rallying fugitives and supporting the batteries which repulsed the enemy's attack under Jackson on the evening of the 2d, has excited the highest admiration."

During the month of June it was actively employed with the cavalry of the enemy, and crossed sabres with them at Beverly and Kelly's Fords, and at Middleburg and Upperville. In the campaign that inscribed on its banner "Gettysburg" the Seventeenth bore a conspicuous part. General Buford was in command of the cavalry division of which the Seventeenth was a part.

As they approached Gettysburg, the people hailed their presence with songs and other evidences of rejoicing. They were among the first troops that arrived on that memorable battle-field, and in the action of the 1st of July, General Pleasanton says, in his report:

"Buford, with his four thousand cavalry, attacked Hill, and for four hours splendidly resisted his advance, until Reynolds and Howard were able to hurry to the field and give their assistance. To the intrepidity, courage and fidelity of General Buford and his brave division, the country and the army owe the field of Gettysburg." In the pursuit of Lee, after the battle of Gettysburg, the Seventeenth bore a conspicuous part, and met the enemy in several sharp and close engagements; and at Morton's Ford, Stevensburg, Brandy Station, Oak Hill and the concluding engagements of that year on the Rapidan, it bore its share of the toils and privations, and sustained its share of the losses, and late in the season went into winter-quarters on the memorable plains of Culpeper.

In the movements of the army in 1864 the Seventeenth early took the field. In May it had several severe encounters with the enemy in the vicinity of the Chancellorsville battle-field, and was at the front in the movements of the cavalry under Sheridan towards Richmond. At Trevilian Station, on the 11th and 12th of June, the Seventeenth was hotly engaged, and suffered severe loss. In the operations of Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley, the Seventeenth bore an honorable part. At Front Royal, at Shepherdstown, at Kearneysville it met the enemy and bravely contested every foot of ground. While at Martinsburg, a detachment of the Seventeenth escorted General Sheridan on his famous ride to Winchester, and in all the cavalry movements of the year, it manfully bore its part, and during the winter of 1864–65 it remained in the Shenandoah Valley. In the final campaign of 1815 the cavalry, under Sheridan, was an important factor. At Stony Creek, on the 1st of April, the Seventeenth was severely engaged, and suffered a grievous loss in killed and wounded. But the enemy never lost sight of its glittering sabres till the rebel army surrendered to Grant, at Appomattox, when the regiment returned to the vicinity of Washington, and on the 16th of June was mustered out. A detachment of the regiment, which became a part of the Second Provisional Cavalry, was not mustered out until the 7th of August following.

Of the services of the Seventeenth, General Devin, in his farewell order, remarks:

"In five successive campaigns, and in over threescore engagements, you have nobly sustained your part. Of the many gallant regiments from your State, none has a brighter record, none has more freely shed its blood on every battle-field, from Gettysburg to Appomattox."

Company B.—While the Seventeenth was a representative regiment of the commonwealth, Company B was no less a representative of Susquehanna County. There were but few townships in the county but what had one or more members in Company "B." The company was mainly recruited by the efforts of D. E. Whitney, of Gibson, and M. T. Whitney, of Thomson. Upon its organization they were elected captain and first lieutenant respectively, and William A. Larue, of Jessup, second lieutenant.

On the 18th of September, 1862, the company met at New Milford, and the citizens of that patriotic town gave them a generous reception, and the bountiful dinner they set before them was in marked contrast with the scanty "rations" that the members of the company soon encountered.

The company reached Harrisburg on the evening of the 19th, and on the 21st were duly mustered into the United States service. Of its subsequent history and service we have attemped to give a short epitome. The surviving members of the company are among the best citizens of our county to-day. Of its officers, space admits of but brief mention. Captain D. E.

Whitney was discharged by special order in December 1862. M. T. Whitney, afterwards well known as a popular commissioner of the county, resigned in January, 1863. (See personal sketches.) Warren F. Simrell was promoted to captain of Company D. After the war, he was elected prothonotary of the county. (See "Simrell" Post, G. A. R.) Lieutenant William A. Larue remained with his company, sharing its perils and its glory, until January, 1865, when, becoming unfit for further service in the field, he was honorably discharged. Lieutenant W. N. Chamberlin was promoted from the ranks and for quite a time served on the staff of General Devin. He was breveted major for meritorious services, and in 1865 was appointed to a clerkship in the United States Treasury, which position he still occupies. Lieutenant Asa D. Corse was elected, upon the organization of the company supernumerary second lieutenant, but finding that office abolished upon reaching Harrisburg, he entered the ranks. Of his service and future promotion, see personal sketch. We would like to say of Company "B" of the Seventeenth, that its members were the best soldiers that Susquehanna County furnished to the war, but the record of its achievements must be placed side by side with the blood-stained record of the true and noble men who preceded and followed them.

COMPANY B, SEVENTEENTH CAVALRY.

Mustered into service September 21, 1862, unless otherwise stated; mustered out June 16, 1865.

Capt. David E. Whitney, Oct, 20, '62; disch. by S. O. Dec. 29, '62.
1st Lieut. Merrick T. Whitney, Sept. 23, '62; res. Jan. 2, '63.
1st Lieut. Warren F. Simrell, pr. from 1st sergt. Dec. 15, '62, to capt. Co. D, July 22, '64; disch. by G. O. June 20, '65 (see "Simrell" Post, G. A. R.).
1st Lieut. W. N. Chamberlain, pr. from q.m.-sergt. to 2d lt. Jan. 11, '63; to 1st lt. July 4, '64; bvt. capt. and major March 13, '65; mus. out with Co. G, 2d Regt. Pro. Cav., Aug. 7, '65.
2d Lt. Warren A. Larue, Oct. 20, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 13, '65.
2d Lt. Asa D. Corse, Sept. 27, '62; pr. from 1st sergt. July 23, '64; mus. out with Co. B, 2d Regt. Pro. Cav., Aug. 7, '65 (see personal sketch).
1st Sergt. Jerome I. Stanton, pr. from q.m.-sergt. April 1, '65, to sergt.-major June 10, '65; mus. out with regt. June 16, '65.
1st Sergt. Matthew McPherson, killed at Five Forks, Va., April 1, '65 (see "McPherson" Post, G. A. R.)
Q.m.-Sergt. James E. Curtis, pr. to cor. Aug. 17, '63; to sergt. Jan. 1, '65; to q.m.-sergt. April 1, '65; mus. out with Co. June 16, '65.
Com.-Sergt. Dennis Shay, mus. out with Co. June 16, '65.

Sergeants.

Edwin A. French, pr. to sergt. Jan. '63; mus. out with Co. June 16, '65.
George H. French, pr. to cor. Dec. 18, '63; to sergt. July 6, '64; mus. out with Co.
Edward E. Thayer, pr. to cor. July 1, '64; to sergt. Nov. 1, '64; mus. out with Co.
Martin V. Bisbee, pr. to cor. July 1, '64; to sergt. April 1, '65; mus. out with Co.
Wm. H. Brookins, pr. from cor. Jan. '63; wd. at Cold Harbor, Va., May 31, '64; tr. to V. R. C.; disch. on surg. cert. May 30, '65.
Russell V. Whitney, disch. on surg. cert. March 13, '63.
Richard C. DuBois, pr. to adjt. 158th Regt. P. V. Nov. 30, '62; mus. out with that regt., Aug. 12, '65.
Erastus Bennet, died at Washington, D. C.; bur. at Arlington.

Corporals.

Jerry Sivers, pr. to cor. Sept. 6, '64; mus. out with Co.
William G. Seamans, pr. to cor. Nov. 1, '64; mus. out with Co.
George F. Rezane, pr. to cor. April 1, '65; mus. out with Co.
Elisha N. Lord. pr. to cor. Dec. 18, '63; tr. to Co. F, 10th Regt. V. R. C.; disch. by G. O. June 26, '65.
Freeman P. Whitney, pr. to cor. Sept. 6, '64; capt'd Oct. 29, '64; disch. by G. O June 13, '65.
Stanley Stone, pr. to cor. Nov. 1, '64; capt'd Dec. 26, '64; disch. by G. O. May 30, '65.
Timothy C. Simpson, disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 12, '63.
Harry T. Castle, Nov. 17, '63; pr. to cor. Jan. 1, '65; mus. out with Co. A, 2d Regt. Provisional Cavalry, Aug. 7, '65.
Harvey S. Rice, killed at Trevilian Station, Va., June 12, '64.
William H. Brown, died of wds. rec. in action Aug. 13, '64.
A. Judson Perigo, died at Alexandria, Va., Nov. 20, '63.

Bugler.

Benjamin W. Barrett, mus. out with Co.

Blacksmiths.

Thomas J. Tallman, mus. out with Co.
Danford H. Newton, mus. out with Co.
Joseph S. Halstead, disch. on surg. cert.

Saddlers.

Leroy H. Aldrich, mus. out with Co.
Michael J. Mulvey, disch. on surg. cert. July 30, '63.

Privates.

Austin, Albert, died June 21st of wds. rec. at Cold Harbor, Va., May 31, '64; bur. at Arlington.
Abbott, Charles, Apr. 2, '64; not on mus. out roll.
Barrett, Luther L., mus. out with Co.
Brown, Henry, mus. out with Co.
Bowen, William B., mus. out with Co.
Blanding, Herbert, mus. out with Co.
Barnard, William E., mus. out with Co.
Brooks, Livingston J., killed at Cold Harbor, Va., May 31, '64.
Bagley, John W., died at Fairfax Seminary, Va., June 19, '63; bur. at Alexandria.
Babcock, Andrew J., capt'd; died at Richmond, Va., Nov. 18, '63.
Brady, John, Oct. 27, '64; not on mus. out roll.
Black, David, Mar. 24, '64; not on mus. out roll.
Carlin, Peter M., mus. out with Co.
Carlin, Asa F., mus. out with Co.
Corey, Enos W., mus. out with Co.
Corwin, Eli E., disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 27, '63.
Darrow, Jonathan M., mus. out with Co.
Decker, George, mus. out with Co.
DeWitt, Isaac M., wd. at Todd's Tavern, Va., May 8, '64; disch by G. O. June 17, '64.
Disbro, Jesse C., disch. on surg. cert. Aug. 18, '63.
Dana, John C., mus. out with Co. A, 2d Regt. Pro. Cav., Aug. 7, '65.
Estabrook, Sylvenus H., disch. on G. O. May 23, '65.
Griswold, Daniel L., mus. out with Co.
Galloway, Theodore, disch. by S. O. Feb. 10, '63.
Gregg, Alvin M., disch. on surg. cert. July 6, '64.
Gibb, George, Mar. 23, '64; mus. out with Co. B, 2d Regt. Pro. Cav., Aug. 7, '65.
Greek, William, died at York, Pa., May 18, '63; bur. at Prospect Hill Cem.
Hart, Isaac, capt'd Aug. 13, '64; disch. by G. O. July 18, '65.
Howell, John S., disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 14, '63.
Hinkley, Marquis, disch. on surg. cert. Aug. 19, '63.
Hart, William, Mar. 29, '64; mus. out with Co. B, 2d Regt. Pro. Cav., Aug. 7, '65.
Halstead, S. C., Mar. 16, '64; mus. out with Co. B, 2d Regt. Pro. Cav., Aug. 7, '65.
Haggerty, Charles H., Mar. 25, '64; not with Co. at mus. out.
Harrison, Thomas, Mar. 24, '64; not on mus. out roll.
Hamilton, Henry H., disch on surg. cert. July 23, '63.
Haley, James, Mar. 24, '64; not on mus. out roll.
Ireland, Elisha, died in Susquehanna, Pa., Mar. 25, '65.
Jenkins, Stephen, mus. out with Co.
Johnson Thomas, Mar. 26, '64; not on mus. roll.
Lake, William H., mus. out with Co.
Lee, William, mus. out with Co.
Leight, Charles A., Aug. 19, '64; mus. out with Co.
Lamb, George W., ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Lord, Drew H., disch. by G. O. June 20, '65.
Lathrop, Zara, tr. to U. S. army Nov. 10, '62.

Lord, Jerome, pr. to 1st lt., 27th Regt. U. S. C. T., Aug. 8, '65; mus. out Sept. 21, '65.
Labar, John, Mar. 29, '64; killed at Trevilian Station, Va., June 12, '64.
Lyon, Harmon D., died at Washington, D. C., May 10, '63.
Logan, Edward C., Feb. 26, '64; not with Co. at mus. out.
Murphy, Frank H., mus. out with Co.
Mack, Henry, mus. out with Co.
Moffit, Mortimore, disch. by G. O. June 3, '65.
Mitchell, Stanley N., pr. to sergt.-major Aug. 1, '64; to 2d lt. Co. D. Dec. 28, '64; disch. May 15, '65.
McCarroll, Samuel L., wd. at Opequan, Va., Sept. 19, '64; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
McKeeby, Theodore, disch. by G. O. Sept 7, '65.
McKeeby, James B., disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 5, '63.
McKeeby, William B., disch. on surg. cert. June 26, '63.
McDonald, Allen W., Mar. 24, '64; disch. on surg. cert. Sept. 9, '64.
McConnell, S. W., tr. to U. S. army Nov. 10, '62.
McKeeby, Samuel, mus. out with Co. B, 2d Regt. Pro. Cav., Aug. 7, '65.
Nash, William H., killed at Trevilian Station, Va., June 12, '64.
Oakley, Edward G., disch. by G. O. May 25, '65.
Palmer, William H., mus. out with Co.
Payne, George L., mus. out with Co.
Rodgers, Levi S., disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 15, '63.
Rogers, Francis, tr. to U. S. army Nov. 10, '62.
Round, Amasa N., killed at Deep Bottom, Va., July 28, '64.
Ross, John, Mar. 14, '64; died Apr. 18, '64; bur. in Military Asylum Cem., D. C.
Smith, David, mus out with Co.
Stoddard, Horace S., mus. out with Co.
Sterling, Jabez S., mus. out with Co.
Shay, Aaron W., disch. by G. O. June 28, '65.
Scott, James H., disch. July 15, '65.
Smith, George B., disch. on surg. cert. Mar. 6, '63.
Stoddard, Henry H., disch. on surg. cert Jan. 22, '64.
Steinback, Lewis, disch. by G. O. May 23, '65.
Smith, James N, pr. to hos. steward Apr. 9, '63; disch on surg. cert., date unknown.
Stewart, Stanley, accidentally killed at Winchester, Va., Nov. 29, '64.
Struble, George, Mar. 29, '64; not with Co. at mus. out.
Sweaney, William, Nov. 23, '64; not on mus. out roll.
Tyler, Henry W., mus. out with Co.
Tennant, Walter, Mar. 24, '64; mus. out with Co. B, 2d Regt. Prov. Cav., Aug. 7, '65; vet.
Tennant, Dallas P., killed at White House, Va., June 21, '64; bur. in Yorktown.
Tripp, Joseph O., Mar. 13, '64; died at Washington, D. C., Sept. 17, '64; bur. at Arlington.
Williams, Henry G., pr. to 2d lt., 1st Regt. U. S. C. Troops, July 14, '65; mus. out Sept. 29, '65.
Wayman, Harvey B., disch. by G. O. Apr. 24, '65.
Wheaton, Myron, pr. to hos. steward, date unknown.
Whitney, Harland S., died at Hope Landing, Va., Apr. 14, '63.
Wells, Hezekiah S., capt'd; died at Richmond, Va., Oct. 14, '64.

The following were also members of the Seventeenth Cavalry (for letter of company see column of "Remarks"):

Sergt. George W. Moore (2d), Oct. 2, '62; Co. K; pr. to cor. May 1, '64; to sergt. Apr. 1, '65; mus. out with Co.
Saddler George P. Goodrich, Sept. 21, '62; Co. K; killed at Barryville, Va., Sept. 24, '64.

Privates.

Bancome, Orsel C., Co. K.
Brands, John C., Co. H.
Carpenter, Shepherd, Oct. 2, '62; Co. K; mus. out with Co.
Case, George, Sept. 22, '62; Co. M; mus. out with Co.
Dougherty, George F., Oct. 3, '62; Co. D; mus. out with Co.
Knapp, Henry, Oct. 2, '62; Co. K; wd. and capt'd at Trevilian Station, Va., June 12, '64.
Merrell, George, Co. K.
Nice, Oliver E., Co. K.
Norris, John, Co. H.
Norris, John G., Oct. 19, '62; Co. H; capt'd at Brandy Station, Va., Oct. 11, '63; mus. out with Co. H, 2d Regt. Prov. Cav., Aug. 7, '65.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FIRST REGIMENT—The service of this regiment extended over a period of but nine months, but those nine months were fraught with such momentous issues and events, that the grandest chapter of the war was written during its term of service. The disastrous battle of Bull Run had been fought, and the draft that followed had impressed the men of the loyal North that a gigantic rebellion was in progress, and that its loyal sons must meet the emergency. Under these circumstances, the One Hundred and Fifty-first Regiment was organized at Camp Curtin in September, 1862. It was ordered to Washington on the 26th of November, and its organization then comprised the following field officers: Harrison Allen, colonel; George F. McFarland, lieutenant-colonel; and John W. Young, major. Susquehanna County furnished two full companies to this regiment,—Companies "A" and "C,"—and in its organization the regiment selected the captain of Company "C" for its major. Early in December the regiment was sent to Union Mills, in a section of Virginia infested by Mosby's guerrillas, and whose inhabitants were intensely disloyal. Here it remained until the middle of February, 1863, when it was ordered to Belle Plain, and was assigned to the First Brigade, Third Division of the First Corps. Its arrival here was attended with much exposure and privation, and a number died, among them Lieutenant Hollenback, of Company "A." Preliminary to the Chancellorsville campaign, the regiment accompanied the Third Division to Port Conway, the march occupying two days, during which it rained almost incessantly. For its behavior on this march the regiment was thus highly complimented by General Doubleday: "The general commanding desires to express his appreciation of the good order and compactness which marked the march of the One Hundred and Fifty-first. . . . It also attracted the attention of Major-General Reynolds and staff, who wished this compliment tendered." In the Chancellorsville campaign it moved with the First Corps to Franklin's Crossing, where it was twice subjected to a vigorous shelling. On the 2d of May it made a forced march to the battle-field, and occupied the line on the right of the army, from which the Eleventh Corps had been driven by Stonewall Jackson. On the 3d and 4th it remained at the front, and after the army recrossed the river it went into camp near White Oak Church.

On the 12th of June it started for Gettysburg, being a part of the right wing of the army, which was composed of the First and Eleventh Corps, under command of General Reynolds. In three days these troops made a forced march of one hundred and five miles, and Lee suddenly found himself confronted, in the Shenandoah Valley, by Reynolds' forces. Pushing on into Pennsylvania, it reached the vicinity of Gettysburg on that memorable 1st of July, and in the forenoon of that day moved to the front and was hotly engaged. About noon the regiment, with the brigade, was placed in support of Cooper's battery. At half-past two the regiment was detached from the brigade and posted in reserve along a fence at the south end of Seminary Grove. In the fierce fighting that followed, the Union lines were forced back by the overwhelming numbers of the enemy, and a serious gap between the brigades of Gens. Biddle and Meredith exposed the whole left wing. Into this gap, by command of Gen. Rowley, the One Hundred and Fifty-First was thrown to stay the onrushing tide. The fighting was now terrific, and the losses of the enemy in front of the position where the regiment stood, as acknowledged in his official report, was most grievous. Col. McFarland, in his official report of the part here taken by the regiment, says: "I know not how men could have fought more desperately, exhibited more coolness, or contested the field with more determined courage." Later in the day Colonel McFarland was shot down, and some of the companies were left without a commissioned officer. In the severe fighting on the 2d, and in the crowning charge of the enemy on the third day, the One Hundred and Fifty-First again covered itself with glory. The heroism displayed by the One Hundred and Fifty-First in this battle is unsurpassed. It went into the fight with four hundred and eighty-seven officers and men. Of these, two officers and sixty-six men were killed, twelve officers and one hundred and eighty-seven men wounded, and one hundred were missing—more than seventy-five per cent. of its aggregate numbers. General Doubleday, in his official report, pays this regiment the following high compliment: "I can never forget the services rendered me by this regiment, directed by the gallantry and genius of McFarland. I believe they saved the First Corps, and were among the chief instruments to save the Army of the Potomac, and the country from unimaginable disaster." The regiment participated in the movements of the army in the pursuit of Lee, but its term of service being nearly expired, it was relieved from duty on the 19th, and proceeding to Harrisburg, it was, on the 27th of July, mustered out of service.

Company A.—As already intimated, Companies "A" and "C" of this regiment were from Susquehanna County. After the enrollment and the order for the draft in 1862, it was learned that nine months' enlistments would be received, and credited; and by request of George L. Stone, Col. Gere went to Harrisburg and obtained special permission from Governor Curtin to recruit a company. Enlistments were rapid, and before the close of September the ranks were full, and the men met at the court house, and organized by electing George L. Stone captain, Wm. H. Frink, first and U. F. Hollenback second lieutenants. Of its subsequent honorable career in connection with the One Hundred and Fifty-First, we have already spoken. Capt. Stone was wounded at Gettysburg, and after the war was postmaster of Montrose, and is at present a resident of New Milford township. Lieutenant Hollenback died in service, and Lieutenants Frink and Tucker—the latter being promoted upon the death of Lieutenant Hollenback—were mustered out with the company.

Company C.—The circumstances attending the enlistment of this company were similar to those of Company A. Upon the organization of the regiment, Captain John W. Young was made major, and Lieutenant George W. Crandall was promoted to captain. He had been first lieutenant of Company H, of the Fourth Pennsylvania Reserves, but was compelled to resign on account of ill health. He was again prostrated by sickness shortly after the Chancellorsville battle, and was absent, sick, when the company was mustered out. He died August 24, 1863, a few weeks after the company came home. Major Young was mustered out with the regiment, and after spending a number of years in the West, returned to Susquehanna County, and is now residing at Montrose. Lieutenant Gardner resigned early in 1863, and Lieutenants Jamison and Lusk were mustered out with the company, both of whom are well-known residents of Montrose. The "rank and file" of these two companies are among Susquehanna County's most respected citizens.

COMPANY A, ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FIRST REGIMENT.

Mustered into service October 17, 1862, unless otherwise stated; mustered out July 29, 1863.

Capt. George. L. Stone, Nov. 8, '62; wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; mus. out with Co.
1st Lt. William H. Frink, Oct. 18, '62; mus. out with Co.
2d Lt. Urias F. Hollenback, Oct. 24, '62; died at Windmill Point, Va., Apr. 24, '63.
2d Lt. Amos Tucker, pr. to sergt.-major Nov. 11, '62; to 2d lt. Apr. 24, '63; mus. out with Co.
1st Sergt. Jerome Wade, mus. out with Co.

Sergeants.

William Perigo, wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
William Ira, mus. out with Co.
Edward S. Jackson, mus. out with Co.
James W. Adams, mus. out with Co.

Corporals.

Earl Love, pr. to cor. June 15, '63; wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Charles D. Rogers, mus. out with Co.
Byron R. Wade, mus. out with Co.
Charles H. Stone, wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Eseck P. Bailey, pr. to cor. Dec. 1, '62; mus. out with Co.; re. in U. S. Navy for four years; disch. June, '65, for wds. recd. at Fort Fisher.
Sidney Van Auken, pr. to cor. Oct., '62; mus. out with Co.
John H. Smith, Oct. 30, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Mar. 24, '63.
John B. Webster, tr. to 18th Regt. U. S. A. Nov. 7, '62.
David D. Moxley, pr. to q.m.-sergt. Nov. 11, '62.
Hugh McCready, killed at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63.
Thomas D. Allen, killed at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63.
Amos T. De Witt, mus. out with Co.

Musicians.

Phinney R. Stockwell, mus out with Co.
Geo. Legier, mus. out with Co.

Privates.

Brush, Edmund M., mus. out with Co.
Buck, Melvin J., wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; ab. at mus. out.
Brown, Peter, mus. out with Co.

Bogart, Henry V., mus. out with Co.
Bump, Aaron P., ab. sick at mus. out; re. in Co. C, 203d P. V.
Brotzman, George, wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; ab. sick at mus. out; re. in Co. H, 4th Reserves.
Barbor, Joseph R., mus. out with Co.
Brink, Levi L., mus. out with Co.
Bartlett, Wm. E., Oct. 30, '62; mus. out with Co.
Brown, Henry W., killed at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63.
Cole, Alanson, ab. sick at mus. out.
Culver, Wm. H., mus. out with Co.
Carter, Oliver, mus. out with Co.
Crofut, Thompson D., mus. out with Co.
Cummings, F. G., Oct. 30, '62; died at Windmill Point, Va., Dec. 18, '62.
Doolittle, Wallace W., mus. out with Co.
Drake, George W., mus. out with Co.
Devine, Theodore, mus. out with Co.
Drummond, John, tr. to 18th Regt., U. S. A., Nov. 7, '62; kil. in battle.
Dennis, John L., Oct. 30, '62; died at Belle Plain, Va., Apr. 12, '63.
Eastman, Eli, ab. at mus. out.
Ellworth, Freeman J., mus. out with Co.
Everett, Lemuel S., Oct. 30, '62; mus. out with Co.
Foster, Wallace J., wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; mus. out with Co.
Ford, Ransom W., mus. out with Co.
Fish, Charles F., killed at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63.
Galloway, Dennis M., mus. out with Co.
Galloway, Sidney N., mus. out with Co.
Griggs, Jas. N., mus. out with Co.
Galloway, Aaron B., not with Co. at mus. out.
Houghton, Jerome, mus. out with Co.
Howard, Oliver J., mus out with Co.
Howe, Cyrus C., mus. out with Co.; re. in Co. K, 52d P. V.
Hinckley, Wm. C., mus. out with Co.
Harris, James, tr. to 18th Regt., U. S. A., Nov. 7, '62.
Johnson, Cassius J., mus. out with Co.
Jacobus, John S., mus. out with Co.
Kent, Franklin M., wd. at Gettysburg July 1, '63; mus. out with Co.
Kent, Ezra A, wd. at Gettysburg July 1, '63; ab. at mus. out.
Larrabee, Monroe J., mus. out with Co.; re. in N. Y. Regt. (See personal sketch.)
Lowe, John C., tr. to 18th Regt., U. S. A., Nov. 7, '62.
Ledyard, George, not on mus. out roll.
Lowe, Benjamin, tr. to 18th U. S. Inf. Nov. 7, '62.
Langdon, Wm. W., died at White Oak Ch., Va., June 11, '63.
Melhuish, Isaac, wd. at Gettysburg July 1, '63; ab. at mus. out.
Mack, Geo. C., mus. out with Co.
Mericle, Albert, died at Georgetown, D. C., Dec. 10, '62.
McMicken, Nelson, wd., with loss of leg, at Gettysburg July 1, '63; ab. at mus. out; died of his wds.
Newkirk, Evelin, tr. to 18th Regt., U. S. A., Nov. 7, '62.
Parks, Orlando, wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; mus. out with Co.
Perrigo, Edward S., mus. out with Co.
Post, Isaac J., pr. to q.m. 172d Regt. P. V. Nov. 22, '62.
Potter, Abram G., died at Windmill Point, Va., May 10, '63.
Rowe, Peter, mus. out with Co.
Rifenbury, Philip, mus. out with Co.; re. in Co. D, 203d P. V.
Rosengrantz, S. S., mus. out with Co.
Sweet, Henry, mus. out with Co.
Shipman, Fredk. E., ab. sick at mus. out.
Sherwood, Joel, wd. at Gettysburg July 1, '63; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Sheeyn, Terry, ab. sick at mus. out.
Stephens, Daniel H., mus. out with Co.
Sherwood, Benj., wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; mus. out with Co.
Squires, Silas, wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Stockwell, Chas. R., mus. out with Co.
Shove, Seth, killed at Gettysburg July 1, '63.
Shoemaker, Andrew, killed at Gettysburg July 1, '63.
Sines, Charles E., died at Union Mills, Va., Dec. 23, '62.
Towner, William, mus. out with Co.
Titman, Elias, mus. out with Co.
Taylor, Gardner, wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Tooker, Daniel, wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Titman, Lemuel, tr. to 18th Regt., U. S. A., Nov. 7, '62.
Tewksbury, J. W., mus. out with Co.
Watrous, Addison, mus. out with Co.
Ward, Wm. H., wd. at Gettysburg July 1, '63; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Wright, Alanson, mus. out with Co.
Willman, Theron, disch. on surg. cert. Mar. 26, '63.

COMPANY C, ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FIRST REGIMENT.

Mustered into service October 20, 1862, unless otherwise stated; mustered out July 27, 1863.

Capt. John W. Young, Nov. 8, '62; pr. to major Nov. 18, '62; mus. out with regt. July 27, '63.
Capt. Geo. W. Crandall, Oct. 21, '62; pr. from 1st lt. Nov. 26, '62; ab. sick at mus. out; subsequently died.
1st Lt. Joseph Jamison, Nov. 10, '62; pr. from 2d lt. Nov. 26, '62; ab. sick at mus. out.
2d Lt. Wm. D. Lusk, pr. from sergt. Feb. 3, '63; mus. out with Co. July 27, '63.
2d Lt. Jonathan F. Gardner, pr. from sergt. Nov. 26, '62; res. Jan. 3, '63.
1st Sergt. Benjamin C. Vance, pr. from sergt. May 12, '63; mus. out with Co. July 27, '63; re. in 2d N. Y. Cav.

Sergeants.

Stephen A. Smith, pr. from. cor. May 12, '63; mus. out with Co.
Joseph W. Pruner, Nov. 9, '62; pr. from priv. May 12, '63; mus. out with Co.
Isaac Morgan, Jr., pr. from cor. Dec. 6, '62; mus. out with Co.
Samuel Truesdell, mus. out with Co.
Charles W. Holmes, died at Windmill Point, Va., May 11, '63.

Corporals.

Gilbert R. Whilbeck, mus. out with Co.
John Quinn, mus. out with Co.
William H. Stark, ab. sick at mus. out.
Theron L. Smith, pr. to cor. April 12, '63; mus. out with Co.
Francis Decker, pr. to cor. April 12, '63; mus. out with Co.
Russell Darrow, pr. to cor. Jan. 1, '63; mus. out with Co.
Richard Davis, pr. to cor May 12, '63; mus. out with Co.
David Krum, disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 9, '63.
Benj. F. Chamberlain, disch. on surg. cert. April, '63.
Lyman Beebe, died at Falmouth, Va., June 4, '63.

Musicians.

Wentz P. Snidiker, mus. out with Co.
Henry Mericle, mus. out with Co.

Privates.

Adams, Alva M., mus. out with Co.
Allen, Sherwood, mus. out with Co.
Brewer, Moses, mus. out with Co.
Baldwin, George H., ab. sick at mus. out.
Bivins, Henry J., mus. out with Co.
Barnes, Franklin S., wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; mus. out with Co.
Burns, John, mus. out with Co.
Brownell, Eben, Nov. 9, '62; ab. sick at mus. out.
Barker, William, Nov. 9, '62; mus. out with Co.
Banker, Israel, Oct. 30, '62; ab. sick at mus. out.
Burch, Henry C, tr. to 18th Regt. U. S. A., Nov. 10, '62.
Bookstaver, M. B., tr. to 18th Regt. U. S. A., Nov. 10, '62.
Bray, Patrick, tr. to 18th Regt. U. S. A., Nov. 10, '62.
Burch, Philo, not with Co. at mus. out.
Card, Henry, mus. out with Co.
Coyle, Henry, Nov. 9, '62; ab. sick at mus. out.
Crissle, Private, Nov. 9, '62; died at Harrisburg, Pa., Nov. 28, '62.
Darrow, Charles, mus. out with Co.; re. in Batt. E, 2d Pa. Heavy Art.
Disbrow, Ambrose E., mus. out with Co.
Dickey, Nelson, mus. out with Co.
Dutcher, George E., mus. out with Co.; re. in Battery A, 1st Penna. Art.
Davis, Morris, Oct. 30, '62; mus. out with Co.
Disenberg, Deidrich, Nov. 1, '62; wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Dowd, Mortimer H., died at Union Mills, Va., Dec. 29, '62.
Darrow, J. H., not on mus. out roll.
Evans, Thomas, Oct. 30, '62; mus. out with Co.
Felton, Charles, mus. out with Co.
Faulkner, John, Nov. 9, '62; ab. sick at mus. out.
Gunn, Theodore O., wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Godard, Frank, disch. on surg. cert. April 1, '63.

Griggs, Albert R., killed at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, '63.
Geary, Charles, Oct. 30, '62 ; not with Co. at mus. out.
Hall, George, mus. out with Co.
Howard, Alva, mus. out with Co.
Hayward, Peter, mus. out with Co.
Hull, James S., mus. out with Co.
Howell, John, Jr., Nov. 1, '62 ; disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 5, '63.
Hughes, Lafayette, died at Washington, D. C., Dec. 1, '62.
Jameson, George, Oct. 30, '62 ; mus. out with Co.
Keach, James, ab. sick at mus. out.
Knapp, Silas B., ab. sick at mus. out.
Loomis, John C., wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; mus. out with Co.
Lockwood, William, died at Union Mills, Va., Dec. 21, '62.
Mervin, Daniel C., mus. out with Co.
Manzer, Lawrence, mus. out with Co.
Michael, William, mus. out with Co.
Maynard, Jarvis, Oct. 30, '62 ; mus. out with Co.
Millard, Ransom, Nov. 9, '62 ; died at Washington, D. C., Dec. 3, '62.
Mitchell, Frank, Oct. 30, '62 ; not with Co. at mus. out.
Osterhout, George, died at Washington, D. C., June 4, '63.
Payne, Nehemiah, mus. out with Co.
Pickering, Henry J., mus. out with Co.
Percy, E. R. M., ab. sick at mus. out.
Robbins, Ira, died at Alexandria, Va., March 1, '63.
Stanton, Perry, mus. out with Co.
Snow, John W., Oct. 30, '62; ab. sick at mus. out.
Stockholm, Geo. P., mus. out with Co.; re. in 1st N. Y. Mounted Rifles; disch. June 17, '65.
Smith, John, tr. to 18th Regt. U. S. A., Nov. 10, '62.
Smith, Philander, died at Union Mills, Va., Dec. 25, '62.
Trumbull, William C., wd., with loss of arm, at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63 ; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Taylor, Charles, mus. out with Co.
Taylor, Freeman, ab. sick at mus. out.
Tyler, Andrew O., wd. at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Taylor, Edwin, Nov. 1, '62; mus. out with Co.
Thomas, James B., Nov. 1, '62 ; ab. sick at mus. out.
Tupper, Henry, killed at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63.
Wilson, George M., mus. out with Co.
Warner, Geo. D., died at Windmill Point, Va., May 13, '63.

MISCELLANEOUS.—We wish we had time and space to make proper mention of the glorious records made by Susquehanna County "boys" during the war, in the various organizations in which they served. We can only group them together, when possible, showing where they "touched elbows" during those fearful days of our country's peril, and where they followed the flag which their courage and heroism saved from dishonor. It made but little difference where they served; it was how they served that makes their record of interest to them, and those who follow after.

Besides the organizations we have already noted, that were exclusively, or nearly so, from this county, there were more than four hundred men enlisted from the county, in the various Pennsylvania regiments, of which they were less than a company, as follows:

COMPANY M, FOURTH CAVALRY.

Mustered into service September, 1861, unless otherwise stated; mustered out July 1, 1865.

Com. Sergt. Manger Dart, Oct. 31, '61 ; pr. from priv. March 1, '65 ; mus. out with Co. July 1, '65 ; vet.

Sergeants.

John H. Marcy, Oct. 30, '61 ; mus. out Nov. 11, '64, exp. of term.
George W. Conrad, Oct. 31, '61; pr. from Oct. 12, '63, to Nov. 21, '64; disch. to date Nov. 21, '64.

Corporals.

John W. Lake, Oct. 31, '61; pr. to cor. March 1, '65 ; mus. out with Co. July 1, '65 ; vet.
Laurice J. Adams, Oct. 31, '61 ; pr. to cor. March 1, '65 ; mus. out with Co. July 1, '65 ; vet.
Michael B. Conrad, Oct. 31, '61 ; pr. to cor. March 1, '65 ; mus. out with Co. July 1, '65 ; vet.
James Barton, Oct. 30, '61; capt'd ; died at Andersonville, Ga., Aug. 1, '64.
Elisha Guard, Oct. 12, '61 ; capt'd ; died at Andersonville, Ga., Aug. 17, '64.
Blacksmith Thomas Kelly, Oct. 31, '61 ; mus. out with Co. July 1, '65 ; vet.
Farrier Charles O. Ellis, Oct. 31, '61 ; ab. wd. at mus. out ; vet.

Privates.

Adams, Edwin F., not on mus. out roll.
Berry, George R., Oct. 31, '61 ; mus. out Oct. 29, '64, exp. of term.
Conrad, William S., not on mus. out roll.
Conrad, Lodowick H., Oct. 31, '61 ; mus. out with Co. July 1, '65 ; vet.
Dart, Clark R., Oct. 13, '61 ; capt'd ; died at Andersonville, Ga., Sept. 28, '64.
Felton, G. M., not on mus. out roll.
Felton, Alexander T., Aug. 19, '62 ; mus. out with Co. July 1, '65.
Guard, Daniel, Oct. 31, '61 ; mus. out with Co. July 1, '65 ; vet.
Harding, Elias J., Oct. 30, '61 ; mus. out Nov. 3, '64, exp. of term.
Maples, B. B., not on mus. out roll.
Maxon, Charles, Oct. 31, '61 ; mis. in action at St. Mary's Ch., Va., June 24, '64 ; vet.
Maxon, David, March 30, '64 ; mus. out with Co. July 1, '65.
Morse, E. J., March 30, '64 ; disch. by G. O. May 9, '65.
Pattent, George, May 31, '64 ; mus. out with Co. July 1, '65.
Potter, George, Jan. 4, '64 ; not with Co. at mus. out.
Price, David, not on mus. out roll.
Phillips, George, Oct. 31, '61 ; died at Harrisburg May 4, '64 ; vet.
Taylor, John F., not on mus. out roll.

COMPANY D.

Sergeants.

Jacob Robertson, Aug. 20, '61 ; re. Jan. 1, '64 ; wd. Feb. 6, '65 ; disch. July 13, '65 ; vet.
George Cornell, Aug. 27, '61 ; disch. on surg. cert. '62.

Privates.

Lester, Orrin E., Sept. 16, '61 ; mus. out Sept. 15, '64, exp. of term.
Lester, Harlan W., Sept. 16, '61 ; mus. out Sept. 15, '64, exp. of term.
Miller, William, Aug. 27, '61 ; re. Jan. 1, '64 ; wd. July 24, '64 ; disch. July 13, '65 ; vet.
Russell, Frederick, Sept. 16, '61 ; capt'd Oct. 12, '63 ; died at Andersonville, Ga., April 27, '64.
Stokes, William A., Feb. 16, '64 ; died at Washington, D. C., July 5, '64, of wds. rec. June 11, '64.
Mullen, Patrick, Feb. 23, '64; unassigned; not on mus. out roll.

COMPANY C.

Priv. Glidden, D. W., Aug. 29, '64 ; capt'd March 31, '65 ; disch by G. O. June 27, '65.

COMPANY E, NINTH CAVALRY.

Mustered into service October 17, 1861, unless otherwise stated ; mustered out July 18, 1865.

Regt. q.m. Eugene S. Handrick, Dec. 9, '61 ; pr. from priv. to regtl. q.m. sergt. ; to 2d lt. Co. A ; to 1st lt. Feb. 6, '63 ; to q.m. May 22, '63 ; mus. out with regt. July 18, '65 ; vet.
Vet. Surg. Charles W. Sherman, Dec. 9, '61 ; pr. from priv. Co. E Jan. 23, '65 ; mus. out with regt. July 18, '65 ; vet.

Sergeants.

Asa W. Hickok, Oct. 29, '61 ; pr. to sergt. Jan. 1, '64 ; mus. out with Co. ; vet.
Joel Myers, Dec. 9, '61 ; pr. to sergt. Jan. 1, '64 ; mus. out with Co. ; vet.
Daniel D. Tompkins, Dec. 9, '61; pr. to sergt. Jan. 1, '64 ; mus. out with Co. ; vet.
Sylvester S. Ransom, pr. to sergt. May 20, '65 ; mus. out with Co. ; vet.
Charles A. Hungerford, Aug. 25, '62 ; disch. by G. O. May, 29, '65.
Charles A. Lyman, killed at Lafayette, Ga., Sept. 13, '63.

Corporals.

Charles S. Fargo, Oct. 29, '61 ; pr. to cor. Oct. 4, '64 ; mus. out with Co. ; vet.

Albert H. Phillips, disch. '62.
Nathan L. Howe, killed near Raleigh, N. C., April 12, '65.
Bugler Elisha M. Fargo, disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 19, '62.

Farriers.

Orrin Blakeslee, Oct. 29, '61; pr. to far. Jan. 1, '64; mus. out with Co.; vet.
Isaac Strickland, died at Knoxville, Tenn., March 12, '64.
Blacksmith Edwin L. Taylor, Oct. 29, '61; disch. Dec. 24, '64, exp. of term.

Privates.

Black, Israel, disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 16, '62.
Bullock, John, Jr., disch. on surg. cert. March 17, '62.
Ball, Edward J., Dec. 9, '61; tr. to Marine Corps, date unknown.
Baker, Amos, disch. Sept. 24, '64, exp. of term.
Clary, James.
Cummings, James W., not with Co. at mus. out.
Dowd, Harrison, not on mus. out roll.
Dewers, David L., Dec. 9, '61; disch. Sept. 14, '64, exp. of term.
De Witt, Andrew W., Oct. 29, '61; disch. Dec. 24, '64, exp. of term.
Emery, D. W.
Griswold, Charles A., Oct. 29, '61; disch. Dec. 24, '64, exp. of term.
Griswold, Charles.
Handrick, R. T.
Hungerford, Ira, Aug. 25, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Sept. 24, '64.
Hall, Charles H., Nov. 29, '61; capt'd at Glasgow, Ky., July 10, '62; tr. to V. R. C. July 2, '63.
Huntsman, D. H., Dec. 9, '61; disch. on surg. cert. in '61.
Jackson, Walter A., Oct. 29, '61; disch. Dec. 24, '64, exp. of term.
Kelsey, Nelson, Oct. 29, '61; ab. in hos. at mus. out; vet.
Lyman, G. C., Aug. 24, '64; disch. by G. O. July 21, '65.
Lyman, Thomas W., Aug. 24, '64; wd. at Griswoldville, Ga., Nov. 22, '64; disch. by G. O. June 9, '65.
Lyman, Charles, not on mus. out roll.
Moore, Calvin, not on mus. out roll.
McStraw, John, Nov. 9, '61; not on mus. out roll.
Palmer, George A., disch., date unknown.
Palmer, Orlo W., disch. Dec. 24, '64, exp. of term.
Stephens, H. C., pr. to chf. bugler of regt.; disch. on surg. cert. Nov. 14, '62.
Scott, R. P., disch. on surg. cert. Oct. 29, '62.
Sheldon, George A., disch. Dec. 24, '64, exp. of term.
Sherman, N. G., disch. Dec. 24, '64, exp. of term.
Taylor, E. L.
Bugler Henry Brandt, Oct. 29, '61; belonged to Co. H; died at Clarksville, Tenn., May 13, '62.

COMPANY A, ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTH REGIMENT.

Mustered into service February, 1862, unless otherwise stated; mustered out July 13, 1865.

Sergt. Charles W. Conrad, Mar. 1, '62; wd. at Gettysburg July 1, '63; tr. to V. R. C. Mar. 1, '64.

Privates.

Brewster, Chas. W., Mar. 1, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 24, '62.
Conrad, Rufus, Feb. 24, '62; disch. on surg. cert. May 29, '62; re. in Co. H, 187th P. V.
Conrad, Gerald F., Jan. 21, '61; died at Culpeper C. H., Va., Jan. 2, '64.
Conrad, J. Osker, Feb. 24, '62; killed at Petersburg, Va., June 20, '64; vet.
Case, Orson, Sept. 20, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 27, '63.
Clarkson, John S., Mar. 2, '62; capt'd at Weldon R. R., Va., Aug. 19, '64; disch. on surg. cert. June 2, '65; vet.
Hardy, Ira, Mar. 1, '62; wd. at Antietam, Md., Sept. 17, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Dec. 18, '63; re. in Co. B, 143d.
Hardy, David N., Feb. 11, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 11, '63.
Hinkley, Peter B., Mar. 1, '62; died at Clouds' Mills, Va., May 8, '62.
Hinkley, Elias, Sept. 9, '63; tr. to V. R. C. June 25, '64.
Kunkle, George, Feb. 18, '62; capt'd at Bull Run and Weldon R. R.; died at Camp Parole, Md., April 19, '65.
Lancaster, George W., May 6, '64; disch. by G. O. June 6, '65.
Phillips, Russell, Mar. 1, '62; killed at Gettysburg, Pa., July 1, '63.
Tiffany, Allison, Sept. 8, '62; disch. on surg. cert. April 14, '65.
Wilmarth, Frederick A., Mar. 1, '62; disch. Mar. 2, '65, exp. of term.
Waterman, Ira V., Sept. 14, '62; tr. to V. R. C. June 24, '64; disch. by G. O. July 6, '65.

COMPANY C.

Privates.

Taylor, Kendle, Mar. 9, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 19, '65.
Woodward, A. B., Mar. 1, '62; disch. by G. O. July 1, '65.

COMPANY F.

Jones, Thomas J., priv., Mar. 8, '62; disch. Feb. 2, '65, exp. of term.

BATTERY M, SECOND HEAVY ARTILLERY.

Mustered into service August, 1862, unless otherwise stated; mustered out Jan. 29, 1866.

1st Lt. Urbane S. Cook, Aug. 26, '62; died at Fort Delaware, Del., Oct. 17, '62.
2d Lt. James Buckly, Aug. 13, '62; pr. from 1st sergt. Jan. 1, '65; disch. July 30, '65, exp. of term.
Sergt.-Maj. John M. Roper, Aug. 19, '62; pr. from corp. Dec. 3, '64, to sergt.; to sergt. maj. of regt. May 3, '65; disch. by G. O. June 29, '65.
Sergt. Charles S. Page, Aug. 12, '62; tr. to Signal Corps Dec. 5, '63.

Privates.

Bryant, John N., Aug. 8, '62; died at Fort Saratoga, D. C., Aug. 13, '63.
Bryant, Chauncy E., Aug. 21, '62; disch. by G. O. June 20, '65.
Cargill, James, Aug. 21, '62; disch. by G. O. June 20, '65.
Dimmick, Byron, Aug. 19, '62; disch. by G. O. June 20, '65.
Fesenden, Simon E., Aug. 21, '62; disch. by G. O. June 20, '65.
Hall, George W., Aug. 21, '62; disch. by G. O. June 14, '65.
Stone, George H., Aug. 12, '62; tr. to Sig. Corps Dec. 5, '63.
Shew, Ezra H., Aug. 21, '62; disch. by G. O. June 20, '65.
Sterling, Charles, Sept. 19, '64; disch. by G. O. June 20, '65.
Sterling, Daniel S, Sept. 19, '62; disch. by G. O. June 20, '65.
Tyler, Duane L., Aug. 16, '62; disch. by G. O. June 20, '65.
Titus, Henry P., Aug. 21, '62; disch. by G. O. May 15, '65.
Washburn, H. V., Aug. 19, '62; disch. by G. O. June 19, '65.
Washburn, Michael, Aug. 21, '62; disch. by G. O. June 12, '65.
Williams, Solomon, Sept. 19, '64; not on mus. out roll.

The following were also members of the Second Heavy Artillery.

Privates.

Van Antwerp, Nicholas, Aug. 25, '64; Battery A; not accounted for.
Williams, Hiram G., Aug. 29, '64; Battery A; disch. by G. O. June 23, '65.
Ives, Wm. F., Aug. 31, '64; Battery B; disch. by G. O. June 21, '65.
Darrow, Charles, Aug. 30, '64; Battery E; pris. 2 mos.; disch. by G. O. June 24, '65.
Parmeter, Dennis, Aug. 31, '64; Battery E; disch. by G. O. June 24, '65.
Parmeter, David, Aug. 31, '64; Battery E; disch. by G. O. June 24, '65.
Barton, Geo. E., Aug. 26, '64; Battery F; disch. by G. O. June 17, '65.
Deans, Henry W., Aug. 21, '64; Battery F; disch. by G. O. June 26, '65.
Doloway, John W., Aug. 26, '64; Battery F; disch. by G. O. June 26, '65.
Edwards, Harmon C., Aug. 27, '64; Battery F; disch. by G. O. June 26, '65.
Foster, Jas. W., Aug. 18, '64; Battery F; disch. by G. O. June 26, '65.
Hurlburt, Charles H., Aug. 30, '64; Battery F; disch. by G. O. June 26, '65.
Reynolds, Wm. H., Aug. 26, '64; Battery F; disch. by G. O. June 26, '65.
Tingley, Mason, Aug. 29, '64; Battery F; disch. by G. O. June 26, '65.
Westfall, Aaron T., Aug. 26, '64; Battery F; disch. by G. O. June 26, '65.
Corp. Phineas R. Phillips, Sept. 28, '62; Battery H; pr. to corp. Dec. 10, '64; disch. by G. O. June 23, '64.

The following enlisted in the Third Heavy Artillery.

Privates.

Bonner, David L., Mar. 28, '64; Battery L, mus. out with battery Nov. 9, '65.
Conrad, Martin, Mar. 28, '64; Battery A; not on mus.-out roll.
Carpenter, Russel, April 1, '64; Battery L; not with company at mus. out.
Curtis, Alpheus H., Mar. 31, '64; Battery L; mus. out with battery Nov. 9, '65.
Dimmick, Theron B., April 1, '64; Battery L; mus. out with battery Nov. 9, '65.

Dimmick, Lucien H., Nov. 12, '64; Battery D; mus. out with battery Nov. 9, '65; vet.
Dimmick, Walter, Sept. 3, '65; disch. by G. O. Nov. 9, '65.
Follett, Albert C., Mar. 29, '64; absent, sick, at muster out.
Hine, N. F., Mar. 29, '64; Battery L; previously served six months in Co. D, 188th P. V.; mus. out. with battery.
Pooler, Ira A., April 7, '63; Battery I; tr. to 188th Regt. P. V. April 1, '64; killed at Cold Harbor.
Rounds, Israel, Sept. 3, '64; disch. June 9, '65.
Resseguie, H. T., Mar. 28, '64; not on muster-out roll.
Rogers, Wm., Nov. 8, '62; Battery C; disch. by G. O. June 7, '65.
Smyth, Willard, June 27, '64; Battery L; disch. by S. O. June 8, '65.
Smith, Lucian H., Mar. 31, '64; Battery L; mus. out with battery Nov. 9, '65.
Smith, Joseph, Nov. 10, '62; Battery C; not on muster-out roll.
Wilmarth, Willard W., Mar. 25, '64; Battery A; disch. by G. O. May 25, '65.

FIFTY-SECOND REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

Elbert N. Barney, principal muc., Oct. 24, '61; Co. F; pr. to principal muc. July 4, '64; mus. out with regt. July 12, '65; vet.

Corporals.

Charles S. Hallstead, Feb. 16, '65; Co. F; pr. to cor. July 1, '65; mus. out with company July 12, '65.
Lindley, Rufus P., Oct. 24, '61; Co. F; re. at exp. of term; disch. by G.O. June 12, '65; vet.

Privates.

Bailey, Minor K., Feb. 14 '65; Co. K; mus. out with Co. July 12, '65.
Corwin, Joshua H., Mar. 3, '65; Co. C; mus. out with company.
Doloway, O. M., Mar. 3, '65; Co. A; mus. out with company July 15,'65.
Esterbrook, Henry, Feb. 16, '65; Co. F; disch. by G. O. June 14, '65.
Gavit, Prentiss A., Sept. 16, '61; Co. A; died Nov. 17, '61.
Hallstead, Richard, Oct. 31, '63; Co. F; drafted; captd. July 3, '64; returned May 15, '65; mus. out with company July 12, '65.
Hawley, Leslie E., Sept. 30, '63; Co. F; drafted; captd. July 3, '64; ab. at mus. out.
Harris, Elliott, Mar. 25, '64; Co. H; drafted; mus. out with company July 12, '65.
Howe, Cyrus C., Mar. 27, '64; Co. K; mus. out with company July 12, 1865.
Howe, Ephraim P., Feb. 14, '65; Co. K; mus. out with company July 12, '65.
Mitchell, A., not on mus.-out roll.
Morgan, Wm. B., Mar. 24, '64; Co. B; enlisted for three years; died at Morris Island, S. C., Dec. 26, '64.
Overfield, Paul J., Oct. 11, '61; Co. B; must. out Nov. 5, '64; exp. of term. (See "Overfield" Camp, Sons of Veterans.)
Richardson, Lyman E., Feb. 16, '65; Co. F; mus. out with company.
Spencer, James R., Feb. 16, '65; Co. F; ab., sick, at mus. out.
Stearns, Chas. A., Feb. 15, '65; Co. C; mus. out with company July 12, 1865.
Tiffany, Edward, Feb. 15, '65; Co. C; mus. out with company July 12, 1865.
Thatcher, Edwin, Feb. 16, '65; Co. F; mus. out with company July 12, 1865.
Williams, John, Nov. 20, '63; Co. C; drafted; mus. out with company.
Watrous, Orlando, Feb. 16, '65; Co. F; mus. out with company July 12, 1865.
Whitney, Henry, Feb. 17, '65; Co. F; mus. out with company.
Way, Thos., Co. F; not on mus.-out roll.
Walker, Ackley, Mar. 27, '64; Co. K; en. for three years; mus. out with company.

COMPANY G, ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT.

Mustered into service April 7, 1864, unless otherwise stated; mustered out August 3, 1865.

Privates.

Adams, Amos H., disch. by G. O. May 15, '65.
Benjamin, Asa, died at Petersburg, Va.
Benjamin, James O., mus. out with Co.
Brundage, Homer N., May 17, '64; mus. out with Co.
Clark, Andrew J., mus. out with Co.
Clark, Wm. M., mus. out with Co.
Conrad, James M., disch. on surg. cert. July 11, 1865.
Conrad, John, mus. out with Co.
Dimmick, Ami D., May 17, '64; mus. out with Co.
Decker, Ellias C., disch. on surg. cert. Nov. 26, '64.
Ely, John, died at Washington, D. C., Aug. 28, '64.
Farnam, James, disch. on surg. cert. June 17, '65.
Felton, Everett H., died at Washington Oct. 5, '64.
Fisk, Henry, May 17, '64; mus. out with Co.
Hallstead, Andrew, mus. out with Co.
Hayden, Francis F., mus. out with Co.
Hayden, Chas. J., mus. out with Co.
Hayden, Harvey, mus. out with Co.
Howard, John, died Feb. 15, '65.
McConnell, James, May 17, '64; mus. out with Co.
McDonald, Byron, mus. out with Co.
Millard, Cyrus D., mus. out with Co.
Payne, Francis W., mus. out with Co.; vet.
Rose, Alonzo A., not with Co. at mus. out.
Rosengrant, Perry, mus. out. with Co.
Tewksbury, Henry, mus. out with Co.
Thorn, William, mus. out with Co.
Tiffany, Orrin C., killed at Petersburg, Va., June 18, '64.
Vergason, Ansel, died at Reading, Pa., May 7, '64.
Wright, Lester, died at Brooklyn, Pa., Nov. 24, '64.
White, John W., disch. on surg. cert. July 29, '65.
Yarrington, Geo. E., mus. out with Co.

COMPANY H.

Sergt. Eldridge D. Davis, May 7, '64; pr. from cor. June 1, '65; mus. out. with Co. Aug. 3, '65; vet.
Cor. John C. Allen, May 7, '64; mus. out with Co.; vet.

Privates.

Baldwin, Geo. H., May 7, '64; mus. out with the Co. Aug. 3, '65; vet.
Baldwin, James T., May 7, '64; mus. out with Co.; vet.
Baldwin, Jonathan M., May 7, '64; mus. out with Co.
Conrad, Henry W., Aug. 17, '64; disch. by G. O. July 15, '65.
Conrad, Rufus C., May 7, '64; mus. out with Co.
Dunn, Geo. M., May 7, '64; mus. out with Co.
Gardner, Barney A., May 7, '64; mus. out with Co.
Miller, Loren B., May 7, '64; mus. out with Co.
Rynearson, Cornelius, May 7, '64; mus. out with Co.
Stevens, Henry, May 7, '64; mus. out with Co.
Tiffany, Curtis W., May 7, '64; died at Petersburg, Va., July 29, '64.
Titus, Robert C., May 7, '64; mus. out with Co.
Whitney, Orange P., May 7, '64; missing in action at Petersburg, Va., Aug. 21, '64.
Whitney, Ebenezer B., May 7, '64; mus. out with Co.
Whitney, Willard M., May 7, '64; pr. to cor. June 1, '65; mus. out with Co.
Whiting, Henry S., May 7, '64; died July 5, '64, at Philadelphia, Pa.

COMPANY A.

Privates.

Bell, Wm. J., May 4, '64; mus. out with Co. Aug. 3, '65.
Rought, Daniel, March 31, '64; mus. out with Co.

COMPANY K.

Privates.

Titman, Jacob, April 8, '64; mus out with Co. Aug. 3, '65.
Vergason, Newell J., May 4, '64; mus. out with Co.

COMPANY C, TWO HUNDRED AND THIRD REGIMENT.

Mustered into service August, 1864; mustered out June, 1865.

First Sergt. Silas G. Lewis, Aug. 29, '64; enlisted Aug. 11, '62, in Co. B, 132d P. V., for 9 months; mus. out with Co.; re. in Co. C, 203d P. V.; wd. at Ft. Fisher, N. C., Jan. 15, '65; ab. in hos. at mus. out.

Corporals.

Daniel Younker, Aug. 31, '64; mus. out with Co. June 22, '65.
Andrew Jackson, Aug. 31, '64; ab. in hos. at mus. out; previously served 9 months in Co. H, 177th.
Samuel McClain, Sept. 2, '64; mus. out with Co.; previously served 9 months in Co. H, 177th.
Charles H. Marshall, Aug. 31, '64; wd. at Ft. Fisher, N. C., Jan. 15, '65; disch. by G. O. May 13, '65; previously served 7 months in Co, H, 141st P. V.

Privates.

Aney, Henry C., Aug. 30, '64; mus. out with Co.
Avery, Jerome, Aug. 30, '64; mus. out with Co.

Baker, Lunis L., Aug. 31, '64; died at Philadelphia Sept. 25, '64.
Bump, Dennis L., Aug. 31, '64; ab., sick, at mus. out.
Bump, Aaron P., Aug. 31, '64; mus. out with Co.
Belcher, James S., Aug. 31, '64; mus. out with Co.
Baldwin, Jeremiah, Aug. 31, '64; disch. Aug. 31, '67, to date June 22, '65.
Canfield, Northrop, Aug. 30, '64; killed at Ft. Fisher, N. C.
Crawford, Charles F., Aug. 31, '64; mus. out with Co.
Crawford, Alpheus B., Aug. 30, '64; wd. at Ft. Fisher, N. C., Jan. 15, '65; ab. at mus. out.
Carter, Benjamin, Aug. 31, '64; disch. by G. O. June 29, '65.
Culver, Samuel O., Aug. 30, '64; mus. out with Co.
Coss, Andrew L., Aug. 31, '64; mus. out with Co.
Carpenter, Milo, Aug. 31, '64; mus. out with Co.
Corse, Luther S., Aug. 31, '64; mus. out with Co.
Conrad, Martin, Sept. 3, '64; not on mus.-out roll.
Dailey, Christian, Aug. 30, '64; wd. at Ft. Fisher, N. C., Jan. 15, '65; mus. out with Co.
Dunmore, Porter S., not on mus.-out roll.
Dougherty, James, Sept. 6, '64; not on mus.-out roll.
Fuller, Charles, Sept. 31, '64; mus. out with Co.
Fuller, Josiah O., Sept. 31, '64; mus. out with Co.
Fletcher, Geo. W., Feb. 14, '65; not on mus.-out roll.
Green, John W., Sept. 2, '64; mus. out with Co.
Hobbs, Nelson, Feb. 18, '65; died at Wilmington, N. C., April 12, '65.
Huff, Nelson J., Sept. 1, '65; disch. on G. O. June 11, '65.
Hillis, James, not on mus.-out roll.
Jacoby, Benj. F., Sept. 3, '64; mus. out with Co.
Lafrance, Dana S., Aug. 30, '64; previously served 9 months in Co. H, 177th; mus. out with Co.
Laughly, Wm. H., Aug. 30, '64; mus. out with Co.
Lewis, Pardon, Aug. 30, '64; disch. by G. O. June 2, '65.
Marcy, Cyrus, Aug. 31, '64; mus. out with Co.
Meeker, Joseph A., Aug. 30, '64; mus. out with Co.
Manning, John, Sept. 5, '64; not on mus.-out roll.
McCracken, Wesley, Feb. 30, '64; mus. out with Co.
McDonald, Frederick H., Feb. 29, '64; mus. out with Co.
Newton, Zenas O., Aug. 31, '64; not on mus.-out roll.
Oakley, Byron, Aug. 30, '64; mus. out with Co.
Potter, Geo. W., Aug. 31, '64; mus. out with Co.
Page, Calvin L., Aug. 31, '64; wd. at Ft. Fisher, N. C., Jan. 15, '65; mus. out with Co.
Payne, Jesse, Sept. 5, '64; mus. out with Co.
Roberts, Geo. A., Aug. 31, '64; wd. at Ft. Fisher, N. C., Jan. 15, '65; disch. on surg. cert. May 4, '65.
Riley, Patrick W., Aug. 31, '64; wd. at Ft. Fisher, N. C.; disch. by G. O. July 2, '65.
Sisson, Benjamin, Aug. 31, '64; wd. at Ft. Fisher, N. C., Jan. 15, '65; mus. out with Co.
Stevens, Hiram, Aug. 31, '64; mus. out with Co.
Taylor, Benjamin L., Aug. 31, '64; wd. at Ft. Fisher, N. C., Jan. 15, '65; disch. by G. O. July 3, '65.
Titman, D. C., Sept. 2, '64; wd. at Ft. Fisher, N. C., Jan. 15, '65; ab. in hos. at mus. out.
Thomas, Asa, Sept. 3, '64; died at Wilmington, N. C., April 12, '65; bur. in Nat. Cem.
Taylor, Henry C., Feb. 14, '65; not on mus.-out roll.
Williams, Abram V., Aug. 31, '64; disch. by G. O. June 13, '65.
Washburn, Alonzo, Aug. 31, '64; died in Susquehanna County Sept. 12, '64.
Wilber, James, Aug. 30, '64; mus. out with Co.; previously served in 137th N. Y.

COMPANY D.

Privates.

Belcher, John W., Aug. 31, '64; mus. out with Co. June 22, '65.
Maines, Geo. A., Aug. 31, '64; mus. out with Co.
Rifenberry, Philip H., Aug. 31, '64; ab. on detached serv. at mus. out.
Rifenberry, James L., Aug. 31, '64; mus. out with Co.
Van Scoten, Andrew, Aug. 31, '64; mus. out with Co.
Washburn, Ebenezer, Aug. 31, '64; mus. out with Co.

COMPANY E.

Cor. A. E. Brush, Sept. 6, '64; pr. to cor. Nov. 1, '64; mus. out with Co. June 22, '65.

Privates.

Brush, Albert G., Sept. 5, '64; mus. out with Co.
Bunnell, James M., Sept. 6, '64; died at New York City Feb. 4, '65, of wds. received at Ft. Fisher.
Hewitt, William, Sept. 5, '64; mus. out with Co.
Leavitt, Hiram N. Sept. 5, '64; mus. out with Co.
Smith, Jonas, Sept. 5, '64; killed at Ft. Fisher Jan. 15, '65.
Teel, Robert G., Sept. 5, '64; disch. by G. O. June 10, '65.
Tennant, Lewis W., Sept. 5, '64; disch. by G. O. July 6, '65.
Very, Miles T., Sept. 5, '64; mus. out with Co.
Very, Luther L., Sept. 5, '64; mus. out with Co.
Witter, Geo. G., Sept. 3, '64; mus out with Co.
Williams, Warner H., Sept. 5, '64; died at Moorehead City, N. C., Feb. 20, '65.

COMPANY F.

Private, Tower, Perrington R., Sept. 7, '64; mus. out with Co. June 22, '65.

COMPANY K.

Privates.

Blodgett, Frederick, not on mus.-out roll.
Hillis, James, Sept. 5, '64; mis. in action Oct. 5, '64.

COMPANY I, ONE HUNDRED AND FOURTH REGIMENT.

Mustered in September 26, 1861, unless otherwise stated; mustered out September, 1864; the men transferred to Companies C and H, were discharged August 25, 1865, unless otherwise noted.

Privates.

Armstrong, Thos., Oct. 30, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Bryant, Charles, Oct. 21, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Barriger, Wm., Oct. 21, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Bennett, R. W. F., Oct. 21, '63; drafted; tr. to Co C Sept. 24, '64.
Brown, Wm., Jan. 5, '64; drafted; tr. to the U. S. Navy June 25, '64.
Boyer, Israel, died at Hilton Head, S. C., June 20, '64.
Betz, Peter, drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Coleman, Charles H., Oct. 21, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Carter, Wm., Jan. 8, '62; not with Co. at mus. out.
Denny, Geo., Oct. 21, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Devine, Michael, drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64, not with Co. at mus. out.
Decker, Geo. W., Jan. 6, '64; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64; died July 3, '65, of wds. rec. in action.
Fleming, Geo., not on mus.-out roll.
Gleason, Jas. J., Oct. 21, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64; disch. by G. O. June 17, '65.
Gorman, Isaac, drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64; pr. to cor.
Harvey, Wm., drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64; disch. by G. O. June 17, '65.
Hartman, Franklin, drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Hillpot, Jonas F., July 28, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Lynn, John, drafted; tr. to U. S. Navy June 25, '64.
Murphy, Thos. J., Oct. 21, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Minnig, Edward, Sept. 23, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
O'Dell, Thaddeus, Oct. 21, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Person, David, Sept. 24, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Resseguie, John, Oct. 21, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64; disch. by G. O. June 30, '65.
Smith, Jas. C., July 24, '63; drafted; tr. to U. S. Navy June 25, '64.
Smith, Chas. I., Sept. 25, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Sprague, Harrison, not on muster roll.
Strickler, Jonathan, drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Snyder, Jacob, drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Stockhouse, Wm. E., Oct. 19, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Schooley, Peter, Oct. 19, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Sackett, Charles, Oct. 19, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64; disch. by G. O. June 12, '65.
Shirk, Wm., Sept. 25, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Schoonover, Daniel, Jan. 6, '64; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Stone, Oscar, Mar. 3, '65; mus. out Aug. 25, '65.
Tanner, Cyrus, Oct. 21, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Tanner, Mordecai C., Oct. 21, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.
Walker, Francis M., Oct. 21, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. C Sept. 24, '64.

COMPANY K.

Private Mason C. Richardson, Oct. 21, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. H Sept. 24, '64.
Private Carman Sprague, Oct. 21, '63; drafted; tr. to Co. H Sept. 24, '64.

COMPANY C.

Private Thos. Murphy, Oct. 21, '63; drafted; mus. out with Co. Aug. 25, '65.

EIGHTY-NINTH REGIMENT NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS.—The Eighty-n inth Regiment New York State Veteran Volunteers was raised by the Hon. Daniel S. Dickinson, and were mostly from Broome, Delaware and Chenango Counties, N. Y. Companies G and K had quite a number from Susquehanna County, Pa. They were mustered into the United States service on the 18th day of October, 1861, at Elmira, for three years, or during the war. The regiment was called the Dickinson Guards. The field and staff were Colonel H. S. Fairchilds, from Rochester; Lieutenant-Colonel J. C. Robie, of Binghamton; and Major Wm. Everetts, of Binghamton. About Nov. 18th the regiment was ordered to Washington and remained there about thirty days on the Bladensburg turnpike. While there they were presented with a beautiful State flag by the daughter of the Hon. Daniel S. Dickinson. The presentation address was made by Vice-President Hannibal Hamlin. The regiment was assigned to the Ninth Corps, and went on the Burnside expedition to Hatteras. The regiment sailed on the ship "Arecan." The vessel drawing nineteen feet of water, and there being only twelve feet of water on the Hatteras bar, they were forced to remain at anchor outside the bar twenty-eight days in a terrible storm. The twenty-eighth day, after throwing out the ballast, the ship was towed over the bar. The regiment was rendered unfit for duty on account of the rough passage. They remained on Hatteras about six weeks, and from there went to Roanoke Island. Their first battle was on the 19th of April, 1862, General Reno being in command, and was a grand victory, causing the evacuationof Norfolk. The regiment remained with Burnside, and was with him at Fredericksburg, and from there went to Washington, and there joined McClellan's army. Were the first troops in Frederick Valley, where they met with a grand reception from the citizens for driving the rebels from their beautiful city. The regiment was in the battle of South Mountain and received the last grand charge made by the rebels on the left, and were under the command of the gallant Reno until he was killed. The regiment was on the extreme left of the line at Antietam and crossed on the stone dam below the bridge. Under a galling fire they captured two guns and charged into the town of Sharpsburg; but Stonewell Jackson coming up, they were forced to cut their way through the rebel lines, losing very heavily. The regiment followed Burnside to Fredericksburg and were the first to cross the river in boats, and with one hundred men, captured double this number of prisoners, and held the centre of the town, in front of the Lacey House, until the bridge was laid. For their bravery they received a vote of thanks from Congress. They were in the battle the next day and lost nearly one-half of their number. The regiment did duty at Fredericksburg through the winter and then went south to Charleston, remaining there about seven months, taking part in the siege of Charleston. About the 15th of April, 1864, they were ordered to join Butler's army and were with him at the first battle of Petersburg, Bermuda Hundred and Drury's Bluff, taking an active part in all engagements; also at Suffolk, and captured sixty-three on the Nansemond River. Captured a fort, one hundred and sixty-five prisoners and six pieces, four of which were captured from Getty's battery at the battle of Bull Run. They were in the battle of Suffolk the 20th day of May. At Suffolk they crossed the river and charged into A. P. Hill's headquarters, capturing his baggage and some of his staff. They were with Grant at Cold Harbor, being the last to leave the trenches; from there they went by boat to Petersburg and were in the advance on Petersburg on the 15th of June; the first into the fort said to be captured by colored troops under Smith; were continually under fire and fighting from the 15th until the 20th; were in the battles of Chapin's Farm, Mine Run and Weldon Railroad, and all engagements until the war closed. Lieutenant-Colonel Robie resigned at Roanoke, and Captain England was made lieutenant-colonel. Major Everetts was injured at Camden by falling from a battery, injuring his spine and unfitting him from duty; he was transferred to the Invalid Corps. In 1863 Lieutenant Frank Tremain was promoted to major, and was killed at Petersburg. The regiment was fitted up three times, having on the rolls about fifteen hundred names, and when mustered out at the close of the war only about three hundred answered to their names. They were called "Burnside's Pets," "Battlecats," and "the regiment that never ran from the enemy."

EIGHTY-NINTH REGIMENT NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS.

Major, Frank W. Tremain [1]
Lieutenant Co. G, John B. Russell.[2]
Orderly Sergeant, Co. K, George Pheros.
Corporal, Jeremiah Donovan.

Privates.

Atwell, Paul, Co. K
Atwell, Elijah, Co. K
Atwell, Charles, Co. K
Bisbee, Noah,[3] Co. K
Carrier, Joseph W., Co. H
Carrier, Scott, Co. H
Crocker, John W., Co. H
Crocker, Stephen G., Co. H
Donley, Thomas, Co. D
Foot, Andrew,[4] Co. K
Fitzgibbons, Patrick,[5] Co. D
Gates, E. F., Co. H
Hall, R. H.,[6] Co. G
Haynes, Hobart,[7] Co. G
Haynes, Warren, Co. G
Hayes, James,[8] Co. K
Hurlburt, Geo. H., Co. K
Howard, Alson,[9] Co. K
Kenyon, Herbert, Co. G
King, Percy,[10] Co. K
Knapp, Job, Co. K
Knight, Christopher,[11] Co. K
Lacey, S. W., Co. K
Lacey, W. C., Co. K
Lawson, Charles,[12] Co. K
Merret, Emory,[13] Co. A
McKune, G. E.,[14] Co. K
Meeker, Nelson,[15] Co. K
Miller, Hebron, Co. K
Newton, George,[16] Co. H

[1] Killed before Petersburg, Va., April 2, 1865. (See "Tremain" Post, G. A. R.) [2] Wounded before Petersburg. [3] Wounded, with loss of leg. [4] Killed before Petersburg, Va. [5] Killed at Antietam, Md. [6] Wounded at Fredericksburg, Va., in right thigh Dec. 13, 1862, and again in same place June 18, 1864, before Petersburg, Va. [7] Wounded at Chapin's Farm. [8] Wounded before Petersburg, Va. [9] Died in prison. [10] Prisoner. [11] Killed at South Mountain, Md. [12] Wounded before Petersburg and taken prisoner. [13] Died in service. [14] Wounded in front of Petersburg, Va. [15] Discharged for disablity. [16] Prisoner in Salisbury, N. C.

Pheros, Lafayette, Co. K
Robinson, Leander, Co. K
Rood, Silas C.,[1] Co. K
Reed, Ichabod S., Co. K
Russell, Plinney A.,[2] Co. G
Ryne, John, Co. K
Spafford, Lorenzo D., Co. K
Taylor, James C.,[3] Co. K
Tiel, Elmer,[4] Co. G
Tobey, John L., Co. G
Watrous, Edgar,[5] Co. D
Winters, D. C., Co. K.

SIXTEENTH NEW YORK INDEPENDENT BATTERY.—This battery was recruited by Captain Milo W. Lock at Binghamton, Broome County, N. Y., in the fall of 1861, commencing in September, and went into barrack and was there under instruction until March 10, 1862, when it was ordered to Washington, D. C., where it operated in the defence of that city until July, when it was assigned to Burnside's Ninth Corps, which it joined at Fredericksburg, Va. When the army left there it was returned to the defence of Washington, at Alexandria, Va., and was in the defence of the city until April 5, 1863, when it was transferred to the army under General Peck, at Suffolk, Va., where it first participated in active operations. From there it went in June with the demonstrations against Richmond, by the way of Bottom's Bridge, Va. Upon its return it was assigned to duty at Fort Yorktown, Va. There becoming greatly depleted by sickness, it was relieved from duty, and sent to Portsmouth, Va., to recruit, where it remained until November 15, 1863, when it was sent to join General Heckman's command at Newport News, Va., where it veteranized in December, 1863. The men not re-enlisting were assigned to Battery H, Third New York Artillery, until the return of the veterans and many recruits, when it was reorganized under Captain R. H. Lee, and assigned to the Second Division, Eighteenth Corps, with which it operated before Petersburg, Va., being actively engaged in its many encounters with the enemy, especially at the taking of Fort Harrison, Chapin's Farm and Newmarket Heights, when, at the organization of the force for the Fort Fisher expedition, it was transferred to the Second Division, Tenth Corps, and participated in both the first and second expeditions and final reduction of the fort, January 16, 1865, as well as all the subsequent movements of General A. H. Terry against and capture of Wilmington, N. C. The advance and co-operation with Sherman's army through North Carolina to Raleigh, N. C., when the battery went into camp, and remained till June 25, 1865, when it started on the return home by rail and boat to Elmira, N. Y., where, on the 8th of July, it was mustered out, having served nearly four years. When first enlisted it was known as the Dickinson Light Artillery, in honor of Daniel S. Dickinson. This battery sustained an honorable reputation, and although its losses in action were not severe, it suffered heavily by disease, having on its rolls at different times more than three hundred and thirty men.

[1] Died in hospital. [2] Wounded before Petersburg, Va., with loss of leg. [3] Died of wounds received at Antietam, Md. [4] Wounded before Petersburg, Va. [5] Died in hospital.

SIXTEENTH INDEPENDENT NEW YORK BATTERY ("DICKINSON" LIGHT ARTILLERY).

1st Lt. Thomas Moses. 2d Lt. G. W. Powers.
1st Sergt Sylvester L. French.

Corporals.

Benoni Lewis
William Moses

Privates.

Bryant, Geo. S.
Bryant, R. O.
Bryant, C. D.
Bostwick, Clark [6]
Canfield, Benson [7]
Dunmore, Curtis R.
Estabrook, E. W.
Gaige, Isaac B.
German, Wm.
Garregan, Wm.
Henderson, R. N.
Layton, John
Miller, James A.
Minkler, Chester P.
Mooney, Michael
Martin, Frederick
Taylor, William
Van Wagner, Alfred

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS.

John Brackney, Adjt. of Regt.
Allard, Oliver H.
Brown, Zachary, Co. A
Comfort, John R., Co. I
Casterline, Chas. R., Co. I
Clapper, John, Co. I
Duren, Cyrus, Co. I
Fuller, John L.
Foster, Willis S., Co. G
Fox, Alberti O., Co. B
Gage, John
Hawkins, Chas., Co. B
Hinchman, John
Howard, Enos [8]
Hilborn, John, Co. L
Ingraham, Jonathan, Co. F
Knapp, Albert, Co. B
Lawler, Peter, Co. B
Lovelace, Joseph [9]
Meeker, Norman
Runkle, Frank
Roberts, Asahel L.
Reynolds, John P., Co. B
Spinnings, Daniel D.[10]
Spinnings, Theron [11]
Summerton, Thos., Co. B
Spoor, Wm., Co. B
Tarbox, James, Co. B
Thatcher, S. N.
Tarbox, Charles [12]
Tarbox, David [13]
Tarbox, Geo. (re-enlisted)
Tarbox, Samuel H.
Van Horn, Samuel, Co. I
Van Horn, Nathaniel, Co. I
Van Horn, John, Co. I
Van Horn, Hampton, Co. I
Whitney, Geo. W.
Whitney, John O.
Whitney, Roderick B. [14]
Webster, Alexander
Wilbur, Frederick
Wakeley, Nathaniel
Wood, Stephen

ONE HUNDRED AND NINTH REGIMENT NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS.

Barney, D. W., Co. K
Cortright, Dennis, Co. H
Cortright, Richard, Co. H
Cortright, John, Co. H
Clifford, John, Co. H
Dowd, James, Co. H
Finn, Patrick, Co. H
Fox, James H., Co. H
Fessenden, James B., Co. H [15]
Gifford, John M., Co. H [16]
Lentzen, Augustus H. [17]
Martin, Frederick H. [18]
O'Doud, James, Co. H
O'Shaughnessy, James, Co. H
Stone, Nelson, Co. H
Senterson, Augustus, Co. H
Williams, Edmond B., Co. K [19]
Walker, John T., Co. A [20]

FIFTIETH REGIMENT NEW YORK VOLUNTEER ENGINEERS.

Barnes, Frank, Co. I
Brown, Elmer, Co. I
Brooks, Henry L.
Brown, Orville,[21] Co. G
Carpenter, Daniel
Coon, S. S.
Dix, George, Co. I
Holland, William, Co. B
Lamont, G. K., Co. F
Moore, Joseph, Co. F
Morrison, James, Co. B
McKernan, James, 1st, Co. H
Pooler, George E.
Steenback, Nelson
Sackett, Edwin
Whitney, J. B., Co. F
Whitney, L. B., Co. F.

[6] Wounded at Chapin's Farm, Va. [7] Died in service. [8] Died in service. [9] Wounded at Savannah, Ga. [10] Wounded. [11] Wounded, with loss of leg. [12] Wounded at Lookout Mountain; re-enlisted. [13] Wounded at Gettysburg, Pa. [14] Died in hospital. [15] Re-enlisted in 34th N. Y. Light Artillery; injured at Petersburg, Va. [16] Wounded. [17] Killed at Petersburg. [18] Died in service. [19] Wounded. [20] Died April, 1864. [21] Died in the service.

FIFTH REGIMENT NEW YORK VOLUNTEER CAVALRY.

Charles A. Crandall,[1] Co. A	Jenner, Edward
Avis, Henry	Markham, Chas. C., died in hos.
Baxter, Daniel, Co. E	Mooney, John, Jr., Co. E
Birdsall, Perry, Co. E	Quick, Joseph, Co. D
Bliss, Edwin	Rhinevault, Sylvester P.,[3] Co. D
Birdsall, Chester, Co. E	Spafford, Abijah, Co. D
Barnum, Newell [2]	Williams, John E., Co. G
Hawes, Leroy, wounded.	Weston, Matthew, Co. D
	Weston, James K.,[4] Co. D

UNITED STATES SIGNAL CORPS.—The Signal Corps of the army comprised about two thousand five hundred men and officers, and was divided into detachments of from eight to twelve, and assigned to the different departments and army corps. The duties of the corps consisted principally in transmitting messages by a code of signals, using flags by day and torches at night. It was their duty to observe and make known the position and movements of the enemy, which information could only be gained from the highest points attainable, and often they constructed towers several hundred feet high. The service was valuable in guiding the movements of the army, and the signal stations were often targets for the enemy's sharp-shooters and cannoneers. The following served in the Signal Corps:

Sergeant.

Charles S. Page[5]

Privates.

Beach, Henry L.	Lane, Samuel F.[6]
Barney, George W.	Magee, H. A.
Case, Benjamin T.	Robbins, Francis E.
Cruser, Bela J.	Stone, George H.[7]
Colter, Patrick	Sterling, Alfred L.
Deans, Horace A.	Tiffany, John H.
Dutcher, Albert	Thayer, William E.
Gow, William	Wade, Byron R.

COMPANY B, ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT, DRAFTED MILITIA.

Mustered into service November, 1862; mustered out August, 1863.

Captains.

Arthur M. Phillips[8] Benjamin F. Gardner

First Lieutenant, William Miller.

Second Lieutenant, James C. Decker.

Sergeants.

William F. West (1st)	Martin L. Miller
Nathan D. English	Abram L. Wiedman
Douglass S. Miller	Edward C. Reynolds
George W. Keiser

Corporals.

Harlo Quick	Nathan W. Foster
George W. Brownell	Warren H. White
John Carpenter	Milo Felts
Benton Coleman	Isaiah Lesh
H. H. Reivenburg

Musicians.

Daniel S. Skinner	Pardon M. Green

Privates.

Allen, John C.	Price, William
Arnold, Gilbert M.	Payne, Alonzo A.
Berry, Charles R.	Payne, Charles M.
Bailey, Otis	Polson, James
Bell, Alonzo	Robinson, Benjamin C.
Barrett, James	Rivenberry, Benjamin F.
Cordner, William	Ritter, Reuben
Cameron, Thomas	Rought, Sylvester L.
Cameron, John	Rankin, William
Coleman, James	Rynearson, Israel
Coney, William F.	Rounds, Zenas
Conrad, Martin (re-enlisted).	Reese, John R.
Decker, Elias	Resseguie, Nelson
Davis, Eldridge	Ransom, Alonzo A.
Foley, Michael	Reimbold, Benjamin
Finch, Isaac B.	Reeves, Simeon
Golden, Martin J.	Smith, Washington G.
Green, George W.	Squires, Lewis B.
Gritman, Dewitt C.	Smith, Ebert
Goodrich, Samuel F.	Sweet, Jeremiah
Gardner, Harrison	Siley, John
Harding, Stucky M.	Smith, Nicholas
Hurlburt, David	Smith, Ziba B.
Jerrould, George	Smith, John A.
Kibler, Abraham	Smith, James C.
Kenyon, Burton D.	Smith, William
Lamphere, John	Sumnerell, Sterling F.[9]
Lohr, Charles T.	Stanford, Eugene L.
Lewis, William J.	Taylor, John
Moon, Samuel O.	Titus, Myron J.
Mapes, George W.	Truesdell, Charles M.
Melody, Charles	Van Campen, M. J.
Montgomery, W. A.	Williams, James
Mantzer, Horatio	Whipple, Henry
McNamara, Richard D.	Wademan, Samuel E.
Payne, Franklin W. (re.)	Wilkinson, Robert W.
Parsons, Sextus E.	Whitman, Julian E.
Pass, William	Whiting, George S.
Pell, Philander	Wiedman, George S.
Phillips, Noah	Youngs, Nicholas

COMPANY E, ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT, DRAFTED MILITIA.

Mustered into service November, 1862; mustered out August, 1863.

Captain, Lewis M. Bunnell.

First Lieutenant, Joseph D. Davis.

Second Lieutenant, William Cunningham.

Sergeants.

1st, Henry Keller	James Hendrickson
Horace J. Kelly	James C. Harding
Henry D. Bruster	Thomas D. Reese[10]
Joseph F. Stewart[11]

Corporals.

Charles D. Tingley	Leonard E. Stanford
William Keller	Gilford M. Wrighter
Samuel C. Avery	Elias E. Coffman
Forest F. Sweet	James Cleaveland
William Pickering	D. A. Sinsabaugh

Musicians.

James K Hamilton	Lewis Arnold

Privates.

Austin, Nelson C.	Ball, Thomas (re-enlisted)
Altimus, John D.	Barnes, Rufus
Adams, John F.[12]	Benson, Austin
Avery, Nathan P.[13]	Baragas, Theodore A.
Augdin, Daniel	Bradley, Luke

[1] Was under sixteen at enlistment; served to close of war. In 1872 enlisted in Seventh Regiment Cavalry; promoted to sergeant; was one of the few survivors of those with Custer at "Little Big Horn"; died in 1885 of disease contracted in service.

[2] Was General Sheridan's flag-bearer at Five Forks, Va.; mustered out in 1865; veteran.

[3] Killed at battle of Wilderness. [4] Killed in service.

[5] Transferred from One Hundred and Twelfth Pennsylvania Volunteers. [6] Transferred from First Pennsylvania Cavalry.

[7] Transferred from One Hundred and Twelfth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

[8] Died December 13, 1862.

[9] Died at Harrisburg December 9, 1862.

[10] Promoted to quartermaster-sergeant Dec. 3, 1862.

[11] Promoted to hospital steward Dec. 3, 1862.

[12] Died at Portsmouth, Va., Nov. 10, 1862.

[13] Died at Deep Creek, Va., June 2, 1863.

Burkheart, Geo. W.
Burkheart, H. A.
Baragan, Simeon (re-enlisted)
Brattlebaugh, J. M.[1]
Brant, Chas. D.
Coil, Henry
Carpenter, Cyrus B.
Carson, Robert
Chapman, Joseph
Cramer, Ritner
Corie, Wilson
Carson, James S.
Carrier, Myron
Clenson, John[2]
Dowd, William
Doyle, William O.
Davis, Ezekiel
Furgeson, John
Guild, Charles
Gillespie, William F.
Goodrich, Manzer J.
Hefflefinger, W. J.
Hendrickson, S. W.
Hadden, Bartholomew
Hathaway, R. M.
Halstead, Richard R. (re.)
Halstead, Chas. S. (re-enlisted)
Harding, Elijah C.
Hill, Pardon
Hobert, James (re-enlisted)
Hileman, David Y.
Halstead, John A.
Jamison, William
Johnson, William
Kelley, David
Kelley, Samuel
Kunkle, Emanuel E.
Loughery, Wilson
Leonard, Barney
Long, Madison
Lytle, David S.
Morton, John
Mock, Samuel
Maloy, Joseph
Mulvehill, Thomas
Mikesell, Solomon
McCarrell, David
McCullough, John
McLeod, Enos
McHenry, Levi W.
Neal, John
Osman, Andrew
Page, Walter R.
Robinson, Miles H.
Rhea, Joseph
Risinger, David
Stewart, Archibald A.
Spencer, William F.
Sloab, Stephen M.
Spearbeck, Theodore A.
Steel, Joseph H.
Snyder, George
Tennant, Lewis W.
Tennant, Walter (re-enlisted)
Tooley, John H.
Taylor, Charles M.
Tiffany, Alonzo (re-enlisted)
Tiffany, Amos N.
Tennant, Myron
Williams, Sherman
Wilber, Henry J.
Williams, Solomon (re-enlisted)
Williams, Ralph[3]
Yonkinburg, A.
Young, Albert[4]

COMPANY H, ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT, DRAFTED MILITIA.

Mustered into service November, 1862 ; mustered out August, 1863.

Captain, Edward W. Rogers.
Second Lieutenant, Samuel Smith.

Sergeants.

First, George E. Dodge
First, A. C. Parliman[5]
James McCauly
George H. France

Corporals.

Thomas J. Nicholson
Peter A. Conrad
George K. Cooley[6]
Thomas Foley

Musicians.

Emory B. Larribee
John L. Williams

Privates.

Adams, James E.[7]
Bagley, Edward P.
Bryant, Harvey
Bartle, John
Buel, Nathan Brink, Porter
Blakeslee, Lewis
Biglow, John
Cadden, Owen
Chamberlin, C. K.
Cole, Charles O.
Cromwell, John
Chamberlain, Lewis
Carey, Chesterfield
Conway, Henry
Colby, Lawrence[8]
Chamberlain, Levi
Cooley, George K.
Downs, James[9]
Downs, John
Dutcher, Stephen[10]
Edgecome, Lyman
Felton, Christian
Ford, George D.
France, Wesley L.
Filan, John
Hill, Minor R.[11]
Hathaway, Raynsford
Hurlburt, David
Jackson, Scriver
Knapp, Lebius
Lagier, Benjamin
Lane, Daniel W.
Lalley, John
Lathrop, William K.[12]
Lewis, Obadiah
McCannon, James
Many, Henry C.[13]
Munson, Edward
Mills, John E.
Mills, Dwight
Murphy, Matthew
McLane, Samuel
Nicholson, James
Nichols, Henry
Otis, Theodore[14]
Pettis, George
Pooler, George E.
Quick, Stephen
Rose, Henry C.
Sheldon, Daniel L.
Stage, Richard H. (re-enlisted)
Schryver, Jackson
Titman, Philip[15]
Wrighter, Marvin O.
Whitaker, Edwin
Warner, John T.
Warner, Amos

COMPANY B, TWENTY-EIGHTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA MILITIA.

Mustered in June 19–24, 1863 ; discharged July 27, 1863.

Captains.

William H. Jessup[16]
William E. Post

First Lieutenant, Benjamin S. Bentley
Second Lieutenant, Henry F. Atherton.

Sergeants.

Henry C Foster
Charles F. Watrous
Charles H. Webb
William H. Stebbins (re-enlisted)
William L. Cox

Corporals

George F. Bentley
Marcus Hunter
William E. Thayer
Lewis Langdon

Musician, Henry F. Kesler

Privates

Atherton, Jesse L.
Barnes, Nathaniel A.
Beach, Judson (re-enlisted)
Baldwin, Lyman M. (re-enlisted)
Bostwick, Mahlon
Barber, Isaac
Bors, Joseph D.
Chandler, Benjamin L.
Cruser, Bela J. (re-enlisted)
Chapman, Joseph L.
Du Bois, Joseph
Dunmore, Hamilton H.
Dodd, Thomas P.
Dutcher, Lewis
Dolloway, John W. (re-enlisted)
Dolloway, Silas
Fletcher, Joseph B.
Fisk, James M.
Fargo, Elbert R.
Faunt, Augustus W.
Frink, Charles A.
Fessenden, Charles
Fordham, De Witt C.
Foster, George
Gerretson, Andrew J.
Griffin, Isaac
Howard, Calvin L.
Hungerford, John R. (re.)
Handrick, Joseph P.
Lines, Orrin A.
Little, George P.
Lines, Henry C. (re-enlisted)
Mott, Edson
Mahoney, Daniel
Meeker, Henry C.
Mulford, Benjamin H.
Mack, Theodore F. (re-enlisted)
Moore, Linus W.
McKinney, James J.
Oakley, Joseph
Odell, William N.
Porter, Addison
Randall, John H.
Rogers, Edward J.
Reynolds, Philander (re.)
Rose, William S. (re-enlisted)
Reed, William T.
Rutherford, Samuel P.
Quick, Alvah
Sayre, Benjamin C.
Sprout, James M.
Smith, Charles H.
Smith, Edward R.
Sherman, Christopher
Scott, Irving
Southworth, Almond L. (re.)
Summers, Orner N.
Thayer, Leroy
Taylor, Jonathan D.
Torrey, Henry F.
Tingley, Edwin R.
Todd, Lewis S.
Todd, Alonzo L.
Underhill, S. S.

[1] Transferred to Company K Dec. 30, 1862.
[2] Died Mar. 6, 1863.
[3] Died at Suffolk, Va., Feb. 1, 1863.
[4] Died at Suffolk, Va., Jan. 21, 1863.
[5] Discharged on surgeon's certificate April 18, 1863.
[6] Died at Suffolk, Va., February 9, 1863.
[7] Re-enlisted in Ninth New York Heavy Artillery.
[8] Not with company at muster out.
[9] Re-enlisted in Company A, Fifty-third Regiment.
[10] Discharged on surgeon's certificate November 12, 1862.
[11] Discharged, date unknown.
[12] Absent, sick, at muster out.
[13] Discharged on surgeon's certificate January 7, 1863.
[14] Transferred to Company I, One Hundred and Sixty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, November 18, 1862.
[15] Discharged on surgeon's certificate March 5, 1863.
[16] Promoted to major of regiment.

Van Auken, Cortright
Williams, Joseph H.
Warren, Charles A.
Watrous, Benjamin S.
Williams, Augustus H.
Waterman, Russell

COMPANY D, THIRTY-FIFTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA MILITIA.

Mustered in July 2, 1863; mustered out August 7, 1863.

Captain, Calvin C. Halsey

First Lieutenant, Edwin L. Weeks

Second Lieutenant, Charles A. Ward

Sergeants.

Frederick D. Warner
John C. Lacey, Jr
David P. Maynard (Re.)
Miner K. Williams
Andrew F. Ely

Corporals.

Albert B. Alger
Charles Uptegrove
Alfred B. Tingley
George H. Leal
Robert S. Shoemaker
Gilbert R. Stiles
George D. Silvius
Wm. W. Cowles

Musician, Jas. Southworth

Privates.

Anderson, John (Re.)
Ainey, Albert J
Avery, Horace G.
Baldwin, Alexander B.
Bennett, Wm. H. H. (Re.)
Bailey, Ebenezer T.
Bailey, Elisha
Barager, Jonathan (Re.)
Barrager, Simeon (Re.)
Barnes, Myron (Re.)
Blackington, Merrit
Blakeslee, Riley W. (Re.)
Bullock, Lyman.
Ballard, Frederick O.
Chamberlain, Durand
Colvin, Geo. N.
Davis, Clark E.
Ely, Edgar C.
Ester, John N. (Re.)
Evans, Samuel.
Farnum, Wm. A.
Farnum, Zenas N. (Re.)
Fuller, Francis
Gillett, Ulric B.
Groo, John.
Hanyon, Adam (Re.)
Ingalls, Henry.
Kellogg, Henry N. (Re.)
Knapp, Chauncy L.
Loomis, Horatius N.
Lott, Edward C.
Lyman, Thomas W. (Re).
Lyman, Wilbur.
Mann, Findlay W.
Marcy, John J.
Martin, Edward A.
Mills, Albert.
Mills, Obey S.
Morgan, Wm. B.
Paine, Albert B.
Peck, Collins.
Place, Armstrong B.
Russell, Frank D.
Rosengrantz, Hiram.
Service, Robert
Stevens, Frank D.
Taylor, Davis J.
Taylor, Llewellyn (Re.)
Tiffany, Geo. B.
Thompson, Cyrus
Warner, Sidney.
Warner, Wm. W. (Re.)
Whipple, Chas. J.
Whitney, Duane.

COMPANY F, TWENTY-NINTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA MILITIA.

Mustered in June 20, 1863; discharged, Aug. 1, 1863.

Second Lieutenant, Horatio G. Hotchkiss

Musician, Ransaler McFarland.

Privates.

Anson, Enos
Adams, J. T.
Comfort, N. R.
Chase, J. A.
Drake, G. F.
Eastwood, Wm.
Mayo, Lyman.
Patrick, Orrin
Robinson, H. J.
Scott, L. W.
Shew, A. L.
Shutts, J. D.
Taylor, J. O.
Van Barrager, H. P.
Wakeman, B.
Westfall, Geo. W.

CAPTAIN RICHARD VAN VALKENBURG'S COMPANY.

Organized September 15, 1862; discharged September 24, 1862.

Captain, Richard Van Valkenburg

First Lieutenant, La Fayette Fitch

Second Lieutenant, William H. Jessup

Sergeants.

Alphonso H. Smith
Sheridan G. Pache
Henry C. Foster
Daniel Sayre

Corporals.

Orrin A. Lines (Re.)
Wm. E. Thayre
Edward J. Rogers

Musician, Henry F. Keeler

Privates.

Atherton, Jesse L.
Avery, Jerome (Re.)
Boyd, Wm. H.
Bard, Cyrus W.
Bentley, Benjamin S., Jr.
Brackney, John
Blakeslee, Benjamin F.
Beebe, Orson P.
Chandler, Francis B.
Conrad, Horace J.
Crandall, Charles M.
Cooley, Zenas L.
Carpenter, David B.
Dumore, Hamilton H.
Darrow, Augustus.
Doolittle, Lyman E.
Dunham, Lewis R.
Day, Charles C.
Ely, Edgar C.
Fordham, De Witt C.
Fordham, Gilbert F.
Faurott, Augustin W.
Fletcher, Joseph B.
Griffin, Bela
Grow, John
Granger, Edward
Harris, Isaac
Hungerford, Clark E. (Re.)
House, Wm. A.
Hunter, Marcus
Jessup, George A.
Johnson, Henry P.
Johnson, Cassius.
Little, George P.
Lyman, James H.
Langdon, Lewis
Loomis, Horatio P.
Lung. Jesse B.
Loomis, Norman P.
Mulford, Benjamin H.
Meacham, Leman F.
Millard, Seward E.
McCollum, J. B
Pierce, Wm. L.
Pierson, Henry N.
Phillips, Jonas
Post, Norman J.
Park, Solomon T.
Robinson, Miles H.
Stephens, Chandler (Re.)
Sherman, Christopher
Smith, Charles H.
Shipman, Frederick E.
Southworth, Henry M.
Smith, Justus
Sheldon, Nelson W.
Simpson, Wm. B. (Re.)
Smales, Wm.
Tyler, Henry C.
Tyrrell, Seth
Tiffany, Theron W. (Re.)
Thompson, Horace V.
Vought, Wm. H.
Webb, Chas. H.
Welsh, Daniel T.
Wheelock, Ziba
Wilson, Chas. D.
Young, James.

IDENTIFIED MISCELLANEOUS LIST.

The following list evidences the fact that Susquehanna County "boys" served in every arm of the service, both on sea and land, and that they "took the touch of elbows" with the patriotic sons of almost every loyal State.

Alexander, Wm., sur. U. S. Vols.
Ainey, Peter, priv., Co. K, 1st N. J. Vols.; wd. at Wilderness and captd.; died in Andersonville.
Ainey, Nicholas O., priv., Co. G, 13th Pa. Cav.; en. Sept. 4, '62; mus. out with Co. July 14, '65.
Allen, Abram, killed in battle.
Alpaugh, Wm., Co. G, 9th N. Y. Heavy Art.
Ambrose, David, Co. B, 2d Del. Inf.
Adams, Jas. E., Co. G, 9th N. Y. Heavy Art.
Adams, E. L., Co. G, 35th Pa. Militia.
Archer, Geo. W., Co. A, 11th N. Y. Cav.
Avery, Eli L., Co. L, 1st N. Y. Vet. Cav.
Archer, Thos. J, priv., Co. A, 16th Pa. Cav.; en. Oct. 28, '62; disch. with Co. Aug. 11, '65.
Adams, Chas. G., Co. H, 8th P. V.
Brush, Dr. P. E., surg. U. S. Vols.
Bushnell, Henry I., priv., Co. K, 83d P. V.; en. Sept. 1, '61; died of wds. rec. at Gaines' Mills, Va., June 27, '62.
Blakeslee, J. G., Co. G, 81st N. Y. Vols.; died in service.
Bolles, Jasper, 22d N. Y. Cav.; was a prisoner in Andersonville; died of starvation.
Beebe, E. L., Co. K, 185th N. Y. Vols.; wd. at Five Forks, Va.; disch. June 12, '65.
Brewster, Samuel T., 2d Mass. Cav.; died in service.
Burns, Andw. B., hos. stew. 134th P. V.; en. Sept. 10, '62; mus. out with regt. May 26, '63.
Barns, Henry, artificer, Co. K, 15th N. Y. Eng.

Bowell, Thos. S., Co. A, 16th Pa. Cav.; en. Oct. 28, '62; pr. to cor.; mus. out with Co. Aug. 11, '65.
Beaumont, Thos., Co. I, 177th P. D. M.
Brotzman, Wm., Co. L, 13th Pa. Cav.; en. Nov. 7, '62; killed Sept. 26, 1864.
Benninger, Adam, Co. F, 107th P. V.; en. Mar. 8, '62; wd.; ab. at mus. out.
Burchell, Horace, Co. D, 76th P. V.
Barrett, Hollis A., Battery E, 1st Pa. Art.
Barrett, Geo. W., Co. B, 16th N. Y. Heavy Art.
Barnes, Stephen, 9th N. J. Vols.
Bryant, David L, 1st N. Y. Mounted Rifles.
Birchard, Albert, en. Aug., '62; killed on picket-line in front of Petersburg, Va.
Bronson, George C., Co. G, 71st Cal. Vols.; wd. at Wilderness May 23, 1865.
Baxter, Silas, Scott Legion.
Bowell, Geo. E., Battery A, 1st N. J. Art.; en. Jan., '64; disch. June 17, 1865.
Bliss, James H., Co. I, 22d N.Y. Cav.; wd. and captd.; died in Andersonville.
Brock, Silah, 124th Regt. N. Y. Vols.
Bristol, Silas M., Co. G, 9th N. Y. Heavy Art.
Burns, Michael L., Co. B, 1st Bat. U. S. Inf.
Burns, James H., Co. B, 1st Bat. U. S. Inf.
Brush, F. E., Ullman's Pa. Batt.
Brown, C. L., priv., Co. D, 97th P. V.; en. Nov. 24, '64; disch. by G. O. June 28, '65.
Bailey, James, priv., Co. B, 12th Pa. Res.; en. Nov. 13, '61; died at Acquia Creek, Va., Dec. 1, '62.
Blakeslee, R. W., was in Co. D, 35th Pa. Mil.; re. in Co. I, 22d N. Y. Cav., Dec., '63; disch. at close of war.
Beach, Judson, was in Co. B, 28th Pa. Mil.; re. in U. S. Navy for two years.
Betts, Loomis, priv., Co. I, 97th P. V.; en. Mar. 1, '65; disch. by G. O. Aug. 7, '65.
Banker, Levi, Co. E, 63d N. Y. Vols.
Bunnell, F. H., Co. A, 21st Regt. Mich. Vols.
Baker, Chas. W., priv., Co. E, 5th Pa. Cav.; en. Mar. 23, '65; mus. out with Co. Aug. 7, '65.
Blakeslee, Edward M., priv., Co. E, 5th Pa. Cav.; en. Mar. 23, '65; not on must.-out roll.
Barber, Israel W., in Emergency.
Burrows, S. A., 27th N. Y. Vols.; served two years; re. in 2d N. Y. Cav.
Bryant, Edwin H., Co. F, 70th Regt. N. Y. Vols.
Bryant, Edward, Co. K, 70th Regt. N. Y. Vols.
Brink, Wm. R., Co. K, 11th Pa. Cav.; en. Aug. 31, '61; pr. to sergt.; wd. June 23, '64; com. 2d lt.; not mus.; mus. out with Co. Aug. 13, '65; vet.
Brink, Levi L., Co. H, 11th Pa., Cav.; en. Nov. 28, '63; pr. to sergt.; mus. out with Co. Aug. 13, '65; vet.
Brink, Chas. W., Co. K, 11th Pa. Cav.; en. Aug. 31, '61; disch. Sept. 1, '64; exp. of term.
Bryant, O., 16th N. Y. Ind. Batt.
Burleigh, John H., 9th U. S. Inf.
Carter, W. G. M., en. Sept. 1, '64, in U. S. Marine Corps.
Cogswell, Edward S., priv., Co. F, 53d P. V.; en. Feb. 15, '65; wd. at Five Forks, Va., with loss of arm; ab. at mus. out.
Capron, Albert, lt., 3d Regt. Ohio Cav.
Card, Dr. James C., asst. surg., 100th P. V.; en. April 5, '65; res. June 19, '65; died before reaching home.
Carpenter, Wm. T., priv., Co. F, 53d P. V., en. Mar. 8, '65; disch. by G. O., June 12, '65.
Cook, Thos. V., 39th Regt. N. J. Vols.
Conkling, A. B., 5th N. Y. Eng.
Conklin, Oliver T., Co. B, 90th N. Y. Vols.
Carr, Geo., 203d P. V.
Coss, Marshall A., Co. B, 194th N. Y. Vols.
Cunningham, Edward, killed at Franklin, Tenn.
Cortwright, Jacob, Co. G, 22d N. Y. Cav.
Cogswell, Wm., en. in July, '61; died of disease.
Cord, Chas. L., priv., Co. B, 12th Res.; tr. to 2d U. S. Cav. May 31, '64; pris. six months; disch. Feb. 27, '65.
Champlin, Geo., drowned at Phila. before mus. into service.
Cloon, Geo., 14th U. S. Inf.; wd. at Bull Run, with loss of leg.
Clawson, Watson, Co. H, 1st N. Y. Vet. Cav.
Coy, John, priv., Co. B, 48th P. V.; en. Jan. 17, '65; mus. out with Co. July 17, '65.
Cobb, Dr. John W., asst. surg., 134th Regt. P. V.; en. Aug. 25, '62; mus. out with regt. May 26, '63.
Campbell, J. J., Co. A, 5th U. S. Art.
Curtis, Ferand D., Co. I, 51st N. Y. Vols.; died in Salisbury prison Jan. 7, '65.
Compton, Miles, priv., Co. E, 5th Cav.; en. Mar. 25, '65; mus. out with Co. Aug. 7, '65.
Cassidy, Peter, priv., Co. G, 132d P. V.; en. Aug. 15, '62; mus. out with Co. May 24, '63.
Crocker, Hyde, Jr., first enlisted under 3 months' call, in April, '61; quota being full, in June enlisted in 1st N. J. Cav.; pr. to 2d lt. Feb., '63; capt'd June 9, '63; paroled Mar. 1, '65; pr. to 1st lt. Mar., '65; mus. out June, '65. Probably there were less than 30, among all the thousands capt'd, that passed so long a term in rebel prisons (21 months) as Lieut. Crocker; he was confined in Libby, Macon, Charleston and Columbia.
Doney, James H., lt., en. for "emergency" in '62 in Ulman's Batt.; re. in Batt. L, 5th U. S. Art.; pr. to sergt. Sept. 19, '64; pr. to lt. in 8th U. S. C. T.; disch. in fall of '66.
Dunn, Peter N., enlisted in U. S. navy.
Davis, George T., Co. B, 90th Regt. N. Y. Vols.
Davis, Nelson, Co. H, 12th Regt. N. J. Vols.
Downs, William B., Co. F, 2d N. Y. Cav.
Drake, A. J., Co. H, 12th Regt. N. J. Vols.
Drake, Daniel W., Co. E, 4th Regt. N. J. Vols.
Deans, Horace A., hos. steward; en. Aug. 15, '62, in Co. I, 132d P. V.; pr. to hos. steward; mus. out May 24, '63.
Drake, Charles, enlisted in U. S. navy.
Delavergne, Chas, 141st Regt. N. Y. Vols.
Derby, Samuel, 1st N. Y. Vet. Cav.
Dowd, F. O., Co. F, 155th N. Y. Vols.
Deuel, Myron, Co. C, 52d P. V.
Eckart, George, Co. C, 18th U. S. Inf.; killed at battle of Stone River.
English, Thomas, 21st Pa. Cav.; 2d enlistment.
Ernst, Charles, Co. B, 40th N. Y. Vols.
Eastwood, William, Co. D, 5th N. Y. Heavy Art.
Eldridge, Seymour, Co. B, 21st N. Y. Cav.
Fassett, Pearl C., Co. B, 141st Pa. Vols.
Frith, W. C., Co. F, 70th N. Y. Vols.; re. on U. S. ironclad "Dictator."
Frink, George S., priv., Co. D, 6th Cav.; en. Mar. 8, '65; tr. to Co. D, 2d Prov. Cav. June 17, '65.
Faurot, James, 6th N. Y. Art.; wd. severely at battle of Cedar Creek, Va., Oct. 19, '64.
Fisk, Squire B., priv., Co. B, 12th Pa. Res.; en. Nov. 21, '61; disch. on surg. cert. May 24, '62.
Fessenden, Asa D., 34th Regt. N. Y. Lgt. Art.
Faurot, Wesley, priv., 6th Pa. Cav.; en. Mar. 13, '65; tr. to Co. A, 2d Prov. Cav., June 17, '65.
Findon, John, fireman, U. S. ironclad "Dictator."
Fairchild, H. C., in emergency.
Fisk, J. M., in emergency.
Finnigan, Richard, Co. F, 70th N. Y. Vols.
Foster, Erastus P., Co. C, 67th P. V.
Flint, J. L., Co. H, 89th N. Y. Vols.
Green, Porter L., priv., Co. F, 53d P. V.; en. May 1, '65; died in Field Hos. May 28, '65.
Gamble, Dr. G. M., surg., U. S. Vols.
Gardner, E. L., died in serv.
Gates, Lewis, enlisted in U. S. navy.
Gay, Treadway K., U. S. Signal Corps.
Gardner, E. P., Co. B, 4th Pa. Reserves.
Gray, Rev. H. H., Co. H, 52d P. V.
Giffin, Robt., Co. C, 52d P. V.
Gavitt, James W., Co. B, 52d P. V.
Gavitt, Wm. H., chap. 52d P. V.
Green, Erastus, Co. A, 57th P. V.; enlisted Oct., '61; disch. Oct., '64, exp. of term.
Gelatt, Sizer, Co. C, 100th Regt. Pa. Vols.
Grow, Philander, priv., Co. B, 132d P. V.; enlisted Aug. 11, '62; died near Falmouth, Va., Dec. 17, '62.
Greely, Wm. R., fireman, U. S. ironclad "Dictator."
Galloway, Geo. W., 2d Regt. N. Y. M. R.
Gregg, Andrew W., Co. H, 16th Regt. N. Y. Heavy Art.

Gilbert, Edward, Co. H, 70th N. Y. Vols.
Gary, H. W., Co. C, 2d N. Y. Vet. Cav.
Horton, W. W., Co. I, 22d Regt. N. J. Cav.; capt'd and died in Salisbury prison.
Hobart, James, New York Regt.
Hobart, Henry H., 144th Regt. N. Y. Vols.
Howell, Geo. W., priv., Co. D, 58th P. V.; enlisted Nov. 12, '64; mus. out Nov. 11, '65.
Holmes, John, 90th Regt. N. Y. Vols.; died in service.
Holland, Daniel, Co. H, 15th Regt. N. Y. Eng.
Holland, Daniel, Jr., Co. B, 15th Regt. N. Y. Eng.
Hanyon, Peter B., priv., Co. B, 132d P. V.; enlisted Aug. 11, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 16, '63.
Hanyon, Benj. H., priv., Co. B, 132d P. V.; enlisted Aug. 11, '62; not with Co. at mus. out.
Hosford, Hiram, Co. I, 22d Regt. N. Y. Cav.
Hanyon, John R., sergt., Co. I, 22d Regt. N. Y. Cav.
Hassett, Thomas, Co. F, 70th N. Y. Vols.
Hyde, Austin, Co. I, 1st Pa. Art.
Hungerford, Geo. L., priv., enlisted Feb. 27, '65; tr. to Co. F, 2d Prov. Cav., June 17, '65.
Horton, Daniel T., priv., enlisted Julyy 15, '61, Co. A, 1st Pa. Cav.; capt'd Apr. 18, '63; mus. out Aug. 1, '64.
Hallstead, Theodore, Co. I, 3d Regt. N. Y. Cav.
Hoffman, Robert, Co. E, 120th Regt. N. Y. Vols.
Harding, Benj. E., priv., enlisted Mar. 6, '64, Co. I, 11th Pa. Cav.; mus. out with Co. Aug. 13, '65.
Hinkley, Frederick, priv., enlisted May 15, '61, Co. B, 12th P. R.; disch. on surg. cert. Oct. 15, '62.
Hinkley, Orrin, priv., enlisted May 15, '61, Co. B, 12th P. R.; disch. on surg. cert. Oct. 15, '62.
Hamlin, Isaac, priv., enlisted Mar. 1, '62, Co. H, 12th P. R.; wd. before Richmond, Va., in '62; tr. to 190th P. V. May 31, '64; disch. June 28, '65, by S. O.; vet.
Harris, C. E., Co. K, 1st Regt. N. Y. Vet. Cav.
Hunter, Mark, in emergency.
Hanyon, Adam, in emergency.
Hartman, John, priv., enlisted Mar. 25, '65, Co. E, 5th Regt. Pa. Cav.; mus. out with Co. Aug. 7, '65.
Halloran, Michael, Co. H, 70th N. Y. V.
Hamlin, Charles, Co. M, 1st N. Y. Vet. Cav.
Hunter, Geo. R., 106th P. V.
Hunter, George M., 52d P. V.
Hubbard, L. N., Co. B, 30th Militia.
Isbell, Byron L., U. S. Navy.
Jessup, Rev. Samuel, chap. 6th Pa. Res.; mus. in June 22, '61; res. July 30, '62.
Jessup, Huntting C., 1st lt. Co. A, 101st U. S. C. T.; com. Apr., '65; disch. Jan., '66.
Jones, T. J., Co. F, 207th Regt. P. V.
Jurish, Charles, priv., en. Sept. 28, '64, Co. C, 97th Regt. P. V.; disch. by G. O. June 29, '65.
Jolliff, John, Co. F, 70th N. Y. V.; killed at Gettysburg, Pa.
Kinne, L. A., Ind. Regt.; died in serv.
Kipfer, John, Co. M, 6th Regt. N. Y. Cav.
Kimball, Chas. L., Co. I, 15th Regt. N. Y. Eng.
Kernan, John, 27th Regt. N. Y. V.
Knapp, O. U., Co. E, 124th Regt. N. Y. V.; killed at Gettysburg.
Kane, Mathew, Co. K, 1st Excelsior N. Y. Regt.
Kennedy, A. B., Co. K, 11th Pa. Cav.; en. Feb. 1, '62; pr. to sergt.; disch. Feb. 1, '65, exp. term.
Kelley, Esick, N. Y. Cav.
Kunkle, J. S., Co. K, 4th N. J. Cav.
Lambert, Chas. A., Batt. H, 1st Art.; en. Aug. 5, '61; mus. out with Batt. June 27, '65; vet.
Lewis, Benjamin, Co. C, 152d P. V.
Lowe, Victor P., died in serv.
Lewis, Wm. T., 52d P. V.
Lowe, Daniel C., Co. B, 152d P. V.
Lowe, Leander C., Co. B, 152d P. V.
Lathrop, Edwin, Co. F, 106th P. V.
Lathrop, Anson, Co. B, 52d P. V.
Lindsey, Zina A., Co. M, 1st N. Y. Vet. Cav.
Luce, Israel C., Co. H, 44th N. Y. V.; mus. out with Co. Oct., '64.
Lathrop, Francis J., priv., Co. B, 12th Pa. Res.; en. May 15, '61; disch. on surg. cert. May 21, '62.
Laughlin, Michael, Pa. Heavy Art.
Lonergan, James, U. S. Navy; on steamship "Crusader."
Lamont, G. K., Co. F, 50th Regt. N. Y. Eng.
Lyman, Marvin B., sergt.; en. Oct. 2, '62, Co. A, 16th Regt. Pa. Cav.; tr. to Co. C, date unknown; disch. by G. O. July 26, '65.
Lane, Samuel F., sergt.; en. July 25, '61, Co. A, 1st Pa. Cav.; tr. to U. S. Sig. Corps Mar. 1, '64.
Lane, Newton A., sergt.; en. July 25, '61, Co. A, 1st Pa. Cav.; disch. on surg. cert. Mar., '64.
Lambert, Ezra A., priv.; en. Aug. 11, '62, Co. B, 132d Regt. P. V.; mus. out with Co. May 24, '63.
Leet, Dr. N. Y., surg., U. S. V.
Le Roy, L. L., 14th N. Y. Heavy Art.
Lonergan, James, Co. B, 44th N. Y. V.
Lott, Peter; en. spring, '63, in U. S. Reg. Art. for three years; disch. at exp. of term.
Lathrop, M. E., Co. K, 97th P. V.
Mowers, Henry, Batt. A, 1st N. J. Art.; en. Jan. '64; died in Aug. '64.
Mathews, Thomas, Co. F, 155th Regt. N. Y. V.; disch. for wds. recd. in action.
Mayo, Charles, 21st Regt. N. Y. V.
Mayo, Orrin, 135th Regt. N. Y. V.; tr. to 6th Regt. N. Y. Heavy Art.; died in hos.
Mayo, Nelson P., 144th Regt. N. Y. Vols.
Meyers, Hermon, 144th Regt. N. Y. Vols.; died in hos.
McIntosh, Nelson, 185th Regt. N. Y. Vols.
Marsh, Silas, U. S. Navy.
Maynard, Henry, Co. K, 1st Regt. N. J. Vols.
McRoy, Calvin, 13th U. S. Inf.
McRoy, William, Co. I, 3d Regt. N. Y. Cav.
Mahoney, Daniel, en. for emergency.
McMan, Thomas, 14th U. S. Inf.
Michael, Joseph, 14th Regt. Conn. Vols.; re. in Battery A, 1st Pa. Lgt. Art.
Michael, David S., priv., Co. G, 77th P. V.; en. Nov. 15, '61; mus. out Dec. 6, '64, exp. of term.
Martin, Chas. W., priv, Co. B, 132d P. V.; en. Aug. 11, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 6, '63; re.
McCauly, Levi G., capt., Co. C, 7th Pa. Res.; en. June 13, '61; pr. to 1st lt. Jan. 1, '62; to capt. July 20, '63; wd., with loss of arm, June 30, '62; tr. to V. R. C. Dec. 8, '63.
McCauley, James N., priv., Co. C, 7th Pa. Res.; en. July 8, '61; disch. July 8, '63; re. in 27th Regt. N. Y. Vols.
McCauley, William, sergt., Co. H, 29th Regt. N. J. Vols.
McCauley, John, Jr., Co. C, 15th Regt. N. J. Vols.
Merret, John, Co. C, 27th Regt. N. Y. Vols.
Malpass, Job, priv., Co. E, 53d P. V.; en. Sept. 21, '64; disch. by G. O. May 31, '65.
Murphy, Robert, Co. G, N. Y. Heavy Art.
Morris, E. U. B., Co. D, 41st Regt. Pa. Militia.
McKernan, James (2d), 15th Regt. N. Y. Vols.
Moore, George, sergt., en. May 15, '61; Co. B, 12th Pa. Res.; mus. out with Co. June 11, '64.
Meeker, Charles A., sergt., en. May 15, '61; Co. B, 12th Pa. Res.; died Oct. 30, '62, of wds. received in action.
McKinney, Edward N., Co. C, 22d Regt. Ill. Vols.; en. June 11, '61; wd. and taken pris. at Chickamauga '63; pris. 3 months; disch. '64, exp. of term; re. in Co. K, 179th N. Y. V.; disch. June 8, '65; vet.
Meeker, C. F., en. May 1, '61; Co. H, 25th N. Y. Vols.; mus. out July 10, '63.
McFarlane, Jesse, Co. K, 1st Regt. N. Y. Vet. Cav.
Meacham, Charles, died in hos. at Washington, D. C., three weeks after enlistment.
Miller, Daniel T., 4th N. Y. Heavy Art.
Marks, Henry K., Co. F, 70th N. Y. Vols.
Munson, S. B., Co. B, 58th Pa. Vols.
McMicken, Hamilton, Co. E, 31st Mo. Cav.; killed at Vicksburg.
Miller, R. C., Co. G, 109th P. V.
Miller, S. F., Co. C, 14th U. S. Inf.
Myers, George, N. J. Vols.; killed.
Magee, Daniel, 57th Pa. Vols.
Newell, Edward F., priv., en. Jan. 30, '62, Co. C, 12th Pa. Res.; tr. to 190th P. V. May 31, '64; vet.
Norris, William H., U. S. navy, mortar boat "Norfolk," S. A. squad.; pr to ward-room steward.
Nash, William, fireman on U. S. ironclad "Dictator."

Norton, Oliver W., priv., en. Sept. 1, '61, Co. K, 83d Pa. Vols.; wd. at Gaines' Mills, Va., June 27, '62; pr. to lt. U. S. C. T. Nov. 10, '63.
Otis, Leander, U. S. navy.
O'Doud, Thomas, Co. F, 55th Regt. N. Y. Vols.
O'Day, Francis, U. S. navy.
Ottenger, Charles, fireman, U. S. ironclad "Dictator."
Osborn, Harry, Co. K, 156th Pa. Vols.
Perrington, Judson J., U. S. navy.
Penny, H., en. Jan., '64, Batt. A, 1st N. J. Art.; mus. out with battery.
Pickering, Henry D., Co. F, 14th Regt. N. Y. Heavy Art.
Payne, William A., Co. M, 1st Regt. Mich. Eng.; served 2 yrs.; disch. Sept. 21, '65.
Patrick, Daniel C., 9th Regt. N. Y. Vols.; in 1st N. Y. Vet. Cav.; pris. in Andersonville.
Patrick, John H., Co. B, 25th N. Y. Cav.
Patrick, Orrin, was in 29th Pa. Mil.; re. in 1st N. Y. Vet. Cav.; killed at Piedmont, W. Va.
Pryun, James L., Matthews' Pa. Batt.; killed.
Perry, Edwin O., U. S. navy mortar boat "Norfolk," S. A. squadron; pr. to ship carpenter.
Potter, Marvin, priv., en. Nov. 7, '61, Co. B, 12th Pa. Res.; died of wds. rec. at White Oak Swamp June 30, '61.
Penny, William, Co. E, 3d Regt. N. Y. Cav.
Purtle, Thomas, 14th Regt. U. S. Inf.
Parke, Charles B., Nevins' Pa. Battery.
Penny, Thomas E., Batt. A, 1st N. J. Art.
Phelps, Otis, priv., en Oct. 2, '62, in Co. A, 16th Pa. Cav.; tr. to Co. C; died Nov. 5, '63.
Pierson, H. J., Co. D, 144th Regt. N. Y. Vols.
Parker, S. T., in emergency.
Parker, W. R., in emergency.
Phinney, John B., Co. L, 1st Ohio Cav.; died in Libby Prison.
Penny, William, 57th Pa. Vols.
Quick, Frederick H., priv., en. Mar. 1, '65, in 6th Pa. Cav.; tr. to Co. F, 2d Prov. Cav., June 17, '65.
Roper, Charles, enlisted in a western regiment.
Rendel, Charles, unattached Co.
Roe, Peter D., Co. H, 38th Regt. N. Y. V.
Reidy, Maurice, 9th Regt. N. Y. Heavy Art.
Reed, Charles M., U. S. Marine Corps, enlisted Oct. 22, '61; pr. to sergt.; disch. Nov. 11, '65, exp. of term.
Rose, George W., Co. H, 143d Regt. N. Y. V.
Ross, Leander, 34th Regt. N. Y. Light Art.
Raynard, James, colored regiment.
Rogers, Wm., Co. C, 3d Pa. Heavy Artillery, enlisted Aug., '62; disch. June, '65.
Rathbone, John N., Co. C, 38th Mo.; died at Galena, Ill.
Robinson, Barrett, 203d P. V.
Shannon, Joseph, Co. B, 152d P. V.
Spearbeck, Andrew, Co. M, 1st N. Y. Cav.
Smith, David, 176th Regt. P. V.
Snow, Clinton, 61st Regt. P. V.
Snow, Abel, Co. M, 1st Regt. N. Y. Cav.
Shew, Aaron L., was in 29th Pa. Militia; re-enlisted in 1st N. Y. Vet. Cav.
Strickland, H. H., U. S. Navy mortar-boat "Norfolk;" pr. to yeoman.
Shay, Allen, Co. F, 12th Regt. N. J. V.
Swan, Orange S., Co. C, 2d N. Y. Vet. Cav.
Shelp, Henry (2d), Co. F, 12th Regt. N. J. V.; wd. at battle of Wilderness.
Shelp, John, Co. F, 12th Regt. N. J. V.; killed at battle of Wilderness.
Safford, Jedediah, 1st Conn. Heavy Art.
Searle, Roger S., priv., enlisted May 15, '61, Co. B, 12th Pa. Res.; tr. to Co. H, 4th Pa. Res., July 21, '61; pr. to sergt.-maj.; disch. by S. O. May 6, '62.
Southworth, Almon L., Co. H, Harris N. Y. Light Cav.; capt'd Oct 5, '64, at Fisher's Hill, Va., stripped of clothes and given rebel rags, escaped, was arrested as a spy by Union troops, ordered court-martialed, but identified by officers of his regiment.
Stockwell, Porter, 63d Regt. N. Y. V.; re-enlisted.
Smith, Franklin E., priv., enlisted July 7, '64, in Co. C, 93d Regt. P. V.; disch. by S. O. June 20, '65.
Smullen, Patrick, Co. A, 15th Regt. N. Y. Eng.
Smith, Charles H., was in 28th Pa. Militia; re-enlisted in U. S. Marine Corps.
Sherwood, Lyman M., U. S. Marine Corps.
Shoemaker, J. F., U. S. Marine Corps.
Shappee, Garry, Co. E, 10th Regt. N. Y. Cav.
Shoemaker, Burton, priv., enlisted Aug. 11, '62, Co. B, 132d Regt. P. V.; disch. on surg. cert. Jan. 6, '63.
Simmons, Emory I., Co. E, 16th Regt. N. Y. V.
Sherman, George, Co. B, 114th Regt. N. Y. V.
Springer, Frederick, Co. D, 9th Regt. N. J. Inf.
Sweet, George, 48th Regt. N. Y. V.
Stark, Harmon, priv., enlisted Aug. 11, '62, Co. B, 132d Regt. P. V.; wd. at Antietam, Md., Sept. 17, '62; mus. out May 24, '63.
Severson, Edward C., Co. C, 6th Pa. Cav.; re. in Batt. H, 1st Pa. Light Art.
Shaeff, Manning, fireman U. S. ironclad "Dictator."
Shaeff, Washington, fireman U. S. ironclad "Dictator."
Smith, James, Co. D, Wilson's Zouaves.
Sexton, William, priv., enlisted Aug. 26, '64, Co. D, 88th Regt. P. V.; wd April 1, '65; ab. at mus. out.
Shrimpton, Joseph H., Co. C, 6th P. I. C.
Slater, Samuel, Co. A, 143d Regt. Pa. V.
Smales, David, priv., enlisted March 23, '65, Co. E, 5th Regt. Pa. Cav.; mus. out with Co. Aug. 7, '65.
Stillwell, S. L., Co. K, 185th N. Y. V.
Southworth, Turner J., Co. H, 61st N. Y. V.; enlisted in '61; died at Washington, D. C., May 28, '62 (see Southworth Post, G. A. R.)
Stockholm, A. E., enlisted Aug. 19, '61, Co. E, 44th N. Y. V.; capt'd May 8, '64, and re-capt'd by Sheridan's Cav. five days afterwards; re. in same regt.; tr. to 140th N. Y.; the last year served in Md. bat. of sharpshooters of 5th Corps; disch. June 19, '65; vet.
Stark, Nathan, Co. A, 193d N. Y. V.
Sexton, Henry, Co. F, 70th N. Y. V.
Smith, Richard, Co. C, 97th Pa. V.
Thomas, Frederick E., priv., enlisted March 7, '62, Co. B, 58th Regt. P. V. died April 19, '63, of wds. received in action.
Taylor, Robert A., priv., enlisted Feb. 27, '65, in 6th Pa. Cav.; tr. to Co. C, 2d Prov. Cav., June 16, '65.
Thomas, Leroy M., priv., enlisted Sept. 5, '64, in Co. H, 198th Regt. P.V.; wd. at Lewis Farm, Va., Mar. 29, '65; mus. out with Co. June 4, '65.
Taylor, E. G., fireman U. S. ironclad "Dictator."
Tingley, Dr. H. A., asst. surg. in hos.; afterwards with Batt. H, 1st Pa. Light Art.
Trowbridge, Charles E., Co. H, 2d Regt. Wis. V.; capt'd at first Bull Run; died in Richmond, Va.
Tewksbury, Benjamin P., Co. E, 3d Regt. N. Y. Cav.
Taylor, J. D., priv., enlisted Feb. 25, '65, in 6th Pa. Cav.; tr. to Co. C, 2d Prov. Cav., June 17, '65.
Teel, John, Co. K, 1st Regt. N. Y. Vet. Cav.
Tyler, Ebenezer D., priv., enlisted Sept. 1, '61, Co. K, 83d Regt. P. V.; wd. at Gaines' Mills, Va., June 27, '62; disch. on surg. cert. Sept. 1, '62.
Tewksbury, Dr. A. D., asst. surg. 155th Regt. P. V.; mus. July 24, '64; mus. out June 2, '65.
Tewksbury, Emmet, U. S. Marine Corps; enlisted Sept. 1, '64; disch. Feb. 24, '69.
Tiffany, Willis W., priv., enlisted March 3, '65, Co. G, 100th Regt. P. V.; mus. out with Co. July 24, '65.
Tiffany, Cyrus A., priv., enlisted Feb. 18, '64; not with Co. at mus. out.
Tripp, Sands N., Batt. A, 1st N. J. Art.
Tewksbury, Ira, Co. E, 3d Regt. N. Y. Cav.; killed in action.
Tarbox, Robert, Co. I, 22d Regt. N. Y. Cav.
Tuck, Francis, Co. F, 17th Regt. Mass. Eng.
Taylor, James, priv., en. Nov. 21, '61, in Co. B, 12th Regt. Pa. Res; disch. on surg. cert. Oct. 27, '62.
Truesdell, Harrison, capt., en. April, '61, in Co. B, 11th Regt. Pa. 3 mos. Vols.; the regt. re-enlisted and was the first 3 yrs. regt; Gov. Curtin allowed it to retain its old No.; pro. to cor.; from cor. to sergt. Nov. 1, '62; to 1st sergt. March 1, '63; to 1st lt. Nov. 1, '64; to capt. May 15, '65; wd. July 1, '63, and June 22, '64; disch. by G. O. June 22, '65; vet.
Truesdell, Rollin B., en. April, '61, in 27th Regt. N. Y. V; disch. in June, '63.
Taylor, John G., in emergency.
Thompson, Thomas N., Co. F, 9th Pa. Cav.
Thornton, Joshua D., Co. A, 188th P. V.
Underhill, William, killed at Petersburg, Va.
Van Scoten, George, saddler; en. Dec. 5, '62, Co. I, 18th Pa. Cav.; died June 21, '63.

Van Houten, Thomas, Co. F, 12th Regt. N. J. Eng.
Vance, Lorenzo, 61st Regt. N. Y. V.; wd., with loss of arm.
Vail, Horace A., sergt., en. Sept. 2, '61, in Co. C, 1st Dist. Col. V.; disch. Sept. 2, '64.
Van Barrager, H. S., Co. H, 1st Regt. N. Y. V. Cav.
Watson, Dallas, 76th Regt. P. V.
Wilmarth, Vester, 67th Regt. P. V.
Wilmarth, Wesley S., sergt. Co. H, 51st N. Y. V.; en. in '61; wd. at Antietam, Md.; on detached service in Ky.; served as pro. mar. until close of war.
Williams, John M., priv.; en. June 11, '61, Co. C, 41st Regt. P. V.
Walker, Abram J., Co. C, 27th Regt. N. Y. V.; re. in 1st N. Y. V. Cav.
Walker, Ianthus W., Co. B, 64th Regt. N. Y. V.
Webb, John H., Co. E, 3d Regt. N. Y. Cav.
Walker, Rinaldo, Co. F, 12th Regt. N. Y. V.; en. Feb. 22, '64; died of disease Jan. 12, '63.
Warner, Jacob, Co. F, 12th Regt. N. J. V.
White, Henry, en. July, '61; died of disease.
Woodward, Charles, en. in the Pa. Res.; wd.; served during war.
Williams, Rodney, 34th Regt. N. Y. Lgt. Art.
Whalen, James, 6th N. Y. Cav.; killed in action.
Weller, James M., Co. K, 1st Excelsior N. Y.
Wright, Stephen, Co. F, 24th Regt. Pa. Militia.
Waldie, John S., Co. I, 3d N. Y. V.: tr. to 72d Regt. N. Y. V.; died of wds. rec. at battle of Williamsburg, May 20, '62.
Waterman, Edward P., 4th N. J. Ind. Batt.
Waterman, Andrew A., 4th N. J. Ind. Batt.
Warner, Matthew, fireman U. S. ironclad "Dictator."
Wallace, Samuel, asst. eng. U. S. steamship "Katahdin."
Wood, Thomas P., 1st Regt. N. J. Cav.
White, George, Co. F, 144th Regt. N. Y. V.
Wright, Orlando, priv.; en. May 15, '61, Co. B, 12th Pa. Res.; disch. on surg. cert. Feb. 9, '63.
Williams, Alamander, U. S. N.
Ward, James H., priv. Co. A, 16th Pa. Cav.; en. Sept. 6, '62; tr. to Co. C Oct. 2, '62; pr. to cor. Jan. 1, '65; to sergt. June 14, '65; mus. out with Co. Aug. 11, '65.
Whitney, Chester W., enlisted in Western regt.
Williams, George, Co. F, 70th N. Y. V.
Warner, Charles A., graduated at West Point in '62; com. 2d lt. 4th U. S. Art. June 17, '62; served from '62 to '66; bv. 1st lt. at Gettysburg for meritorious service; remained an officer of reg. army nine years.
Warner, Edward R., graduate of West Point; served during the Rebellion; was lt.-col. of a N. Y. regt.; is now a capt. in reg. army.
Wade, G. B. R., in the emergency.
Woodruff, Seldon A., Co. B, 3d Pa. Res.; en. July 6, '61; tr. to 54th P. V.; vet.
Walker, Darius, en. in a Western regt.; died in service.
Warner, Loman D., 50th P. V.
Yeomans, F. C., en. Aug. 15, '62, in Co. G, 132d P. V.; mus. out with Co, May 24, '63; re. in Pa. regt.; served 11 months afterwards in construction corps.
Youngs, H., 162d N. Y. V.; died at New Orleans.

UNIDENTIFIED LIST.—The following also enlisted from the county, but we are unable to place them with the organization in which they served:

Avery, Thomas
Abbott, R. N.
Abbott, J. F.
Ames, G. S.
Adams, George
Atwood, Timothy
Ackert, George
Ainey, A. L.
Adams, Malanthon
Adams, S. A.
Allen, J.
Avery, H. W.
Aldrich, W. F.
Angel, S. R.
Beeman, Joseph G.
Boughton, Benjamin F.
Brotzman, Samuel
Berringer, Chauncy
Bullock, Willard
Bullock, Benjamin
Bagley, J. H.
Benjamin, Lyman
Berthweck, Charles
Brown, Henry
Bailey, J. A.
Baldwin, Myron
Baldwin, Isaac
Babson, John W.
Bidwell, George
Barber, J.
Burdick, William
Birch, Philander
Bloom, W.
Burdick, Peter
Bolles, Fred.
Baker, Chauncy
Barber, Rensalear
Blessing, Harlow
Buchanan, Benjamin
Barnes, ——
Beauregard, ——
Beckwith, Elias
Belknap, Josiah
Backus, George
Burchell, Urbane
Betts, Julius
Betts, Marion
Bake, Orrin
Bailey, Otis
Barber, Marvin
Bell, Jasper
Bonerman, Augustus
Baynard, Edward
Bailey, Joshua
Barnum, Randolph
Bruyn, S. T.
Buel, Daniel
Burchell, Frank
Bronson, Myron
Button, D.
Burch, Wilson
Brink, D. L.
Benedict, Horace
Benedict, ——
Brigham, O. S.
Bristol, Sterling
Clifford, Lorenzo
Cool, George R.
Corey, Henry
Carter, Malory
Conrad, Alexander
Crandall, Ransome
Carter, William
Codington, Thomas
Cromwell, James
Conboy, John
Crandall, Joseph
Crissell, Isaac
Crissell, Joseph
Crissell, Jourden
Crissell, William H.
Conklin, O. T.
Clark, George
Crissell, Henry
Conklin, Jacob
Cline, John
Carlisle, William
Coville, Joseph A.
Camel, John
Conklin, Oliver C.
Conklin, Charles
Coffin, Merrit
Carpenter, Z.
Cory, Alva
Cory, Warren
Carpenter, Warren
Carpenter, Russell
Curtis, Jerome
Cole, L. B.
Crofut, Charles
Case, Orson, Jr.
Case, Jerome
Crandall, Joshua
Cameron, John, Jr.
Coney, William F.
Carter, Abel A.
Caswell, William
Cole, Samuel
Cornwall, William
Creestle, Hosea
Cummings, Frank
Curtis, Ferrand D.
Carter, Reuben
Champion, Henry
Collar, Ira
Coleman, Harvey
Carter, James
Carrier, Eldred
Conrad, Horace J.
Clark, Henry
Clearwater, R. M.
Cowley, John
Cafferny, James
Cooper, John L.
Cook, Frank
Cook, George
Duel, Samuel
Dinnany, John
Dinnany, Michael
Dickerson, A. J.
Davis, R. R.
Davis, George
Deyoe, Newton W.
Deyoe, Leroy
Deyoe, Lucius
Driscoll, Thomas
Daniels, Azainus L.
Dart, Augustus
Dart, L. M.
Dart, Norton
Dimmick, E.
Dart, Frank D.
Denney, Wheaton
Depue, John
Dade, Emanuel
Decker, Nelson
Devine, Ammi
Darrow, Timothy
Elliott, McKendry
Ely, Marvin
Edsel, Harvey
Eldridge, Luther
Ellis, George E.
Edson, Daniel
Ellis, Stephen
English, Daniel
Foster, Archibald
Foster, E. A.
Finney, John
Flannigan, Hugh Fancher, Samuel
Fairbrother, Ed.
Ferry, Andrew J.
Fitzgerald, William
Foot, Myron
Foster, Edgar M.
Foster, Luman
Foster, Victor
Furgerson, Andrew
Fitzgerald, Michael Frazier, Curtis
Fowler, John
Fitzgibbons, ——
Fusdick, Gilbert C.
Gard, Samuel
Giles, Lyman E.
Goss, Zachariah
Giles, George I.
Guernsey, George A.
Griffisk, John
Giles, Judson A.
Gavitt, Charles
Goodrich, Nathaniel
Goble, Jessup
Goble, William H.
Gregg, Andrew W.
Gray, William H.
Gardner, E. S.
Gardner, William
Golden, Martin J.

Gates, Uriah
Gray, William
Gage, David
Gary, John
Greely, Robert
Hill, Elgeroy
Hine, Isaac
Hine, Luther
Hyde, Anson B.
Hall, Samuel
Hollister, Preston T.
Holbrook, Frederick
Hull, John
Hawley, E.
Higley, Timothy
Hawley, Jackson
Hawley, Leroy
Hamlin, William
Hamlin, Seth
Handrick, H. W.
Hill, Samuel
Howard, Oliver
Hodgkiss, Wm.
Hallstead, J. T.
Hall, Geo. E.
Hall, M. L.
Holmes, John
Hughes, George
Hosmer, George
Hallstead, Joseph
Hawley, Benjamin
Hall, Lucas
Houghtalin, P.
Hallstead, Elisha (2d)
Hedsall, Henry
Hinkley, A. D.
Harris, Elijah
Howard, Augustus
Holman, Melvin
Huff, Jackson,
Hickey, Edward
Hall, Richmond
Harris, John H.
Hart, Elbert
Hallstead, Joseph S.
Hibbard, Edward Hawkins, Benjamin
Hill, Fowler
Henry, Uziel
Handrick, J. P.
Hawley, ——
Hunter, W. J.
Hulce, George
Hubbard, Samuel
Hyno, Dutcher
Heary, John
Harlan, P.
Ireland, Reuben
Jacoby, E. F.
Jacoby, Charles
Jackson, Geo. (Col.)
June, John
Jenkins, Nelson
Jacobs, Robert
Jackson, George
Knolles, Marshall
Ketcham, W. F.
Kane, Roger Kane, Lawrence
Kane, Michael
Keeler, Samuel
Keegan, Thomas
Kitchen, Frank
Kerney, John
Kishbaugh, L.
Kishbaugh, Jerome
Knapp, Sylvester
Kenyon, Jerauld
Kenyon, Henry
Keeler, Horace M.
Keeler, Oscar
Keeney, Mortimer T.
Keeney, Fred. M.
Kittle, Frederick
Kittle, Charles
Kent, Henry
Kelly, Jacob
Kendred, Orlando
Low, John
Low, Henry
Lillie, Jared
Lyon, George
Lacey, M. L. (Lieu.)
Lindsley, P. F.
Leonard, Martin
Lake, S. A.
Losaw, Daniel
Low, Edward (col'd)
Lewis, Streeter
Lockard, John
Larrabee, Benjamin H.
Larrabee, L. D.
Lord, James
Lord, J. J.
Lord, E. N.
Lenox, George
Lathrumb, Albert
Leonard, Ed. C.
Le Roy, Delevan
Logan, John
Lawrence, Charles
Malone, Patrick
Ming, Nelson
Monahan, Frank
Monahan, Peter
McCarty, Dennis
Morgan, Enoch
Miles, R.
Maryott, Joseph
Marshall, Legrand
McCreary, Gregory
Munroe, James O.
Murphy, Wm.
Mayo, Charles
Melody, Henry
Mason, Joshua (col'd)
Morehead, Legrand
Miller, John
Myers, I.
Miller, Zeb. A.
McIntire, Charles
Malony, John
Merrill, Ansel
Merrill, James
Manzer, Charles
Manzer, Henry
McNamara, D. K.
Millard, Freeman
Millard, Joseph V.
Miller, Adolph
Mott, H. N.
Morris, Isaac N.
Mott, Chauncy
McKinstry, A. H.
Malay, Edward
Milmore, Henry
Manzer, Edmund
McMillen, Frazier
Marshall, Wm.
Magee, Theodore
Mitchell, Alba
Mitchell, David (Cap.)
Magee, Henry
Mackey, Geo. S.
Mackey, Joseph
McNerney, Thos.
Mudge, Alamanzer
Neba, Lewis
Newton, Z. O.
Northrup, Benson
Noble, Chas. H.
Nichols, Frank
Oaks, Nelson
Oaks, Daniel
Odell, F. G.
Odell, Gersham
Odell, Albert
Oakley, Hiram
O'Donald, Thomas
O'Brien, Patrick
Oakley, James.
Osborn, Wm.
Penny, Chas.
Park, Asa (Lieut.)
Parmer, Geo.
Price, Edgar
Price, Arthur
Pease, Charles
Pickering, Frank
Plummer, Joseph
Price, Allison
Preston, Geo.
Perkins, Lewis
Pender, E. A.
Parmeter, John
Parks, David
Phillips, Lyman.
Palmer, Homer
Perrine, Abel R.
Phillips, David W.
Peck, J. L.
Rolph, Chas.
Reynolds, Chas.
Reynolds, Oscar
Rooney, Martin
Richards, S. L. (Capt.)
Roberts, Chas.
Robinson, John
Randall, Henry
Ramsdell, Henry
Ransom, John
Ransom, ——
Richmond, Ed.
Rockwell, Lymen
Ridge, Robert
Reader, J. W.
Risley, Benj. F.
Ransom, Alonzo A.
Ransom, Orville
Reese, John
Robinson, Francis M.
Rynearson, John.
Robinson, James
Robinson, Warren E.
Rogers, Isaac
Rosencrantz, Ziba
Robbins, Leander S.
Rogers, I. B.
Shoemaker, Wm.
Smith, Davis C.
Smith, Terrance
Show, John
Stilwell, Julian W
Stilwell, Paul O.
Sumne, Henry
Smith, Dan. W.
Stark, Fred.
Stage, Eliab
Slocum, Lloyd
Slocum, Merritt.
Stark, Geo.
Seaime, John
Skinner, Simeon
Stoddard, Hiram
Southworth, ——
St. Clair, Charles
Schweckendish, Aug.
Shaw, George
Stewart, C. R.
Slater, Charles
Steenback, Paul
Steenback, J.
Strickland, Alvin
Strickland, Joseph
Slocum, Fred.
Smith, Parmenus, (2d)
Sprague, Norman
Stephens, Lafayette
Sackett, Charles H.
Simmons, J. B.
Smith, Silas A.
Stoors, Russell
Starks, John
Sexton, Charles
Stevenson, Henry
Steer, Washington
Stevens, Henry
Slawson, Henry
Taylor, William
Transue, Davis
Tripp, Alson
Thomas, Evan L.
Tierney, Joseph
Travis, John I.
Tafe, Frank
Tafe, George
Trowbridge, Melvin
Taylor, Robert
Turner, Isaac
Taylor, William
Tiffany, Judson
Tarbox, James
Townsend, Sidney
Thayer, Edmon
Tanner, Riley
Titus, Eugene
Tower, Warner
Tupper, Henry
Travis, John I.
Truesdell, Joel
Tompkins, Daniel D.
Towner, Calvin
Towner, Daniel
Towner, Henry
Trout, Jacob
Taylor, George
Travis, Landis
Thompson, ——
Tingley, A. J.
Townsend, H. E.
Thomas, E. R.
Underwood, Marcus De L.
Underhill, William
Underhill, Levi
Voss, David
Vannetten, Dewitt
Vannay, Charles
Vanorsdale, Isaac
Vannetten, William
Vanway, John
Vanauken, Jacob
Vandermark, Josiah
Vandermark, Silas
Virgil, William

Vangorder, A. C.
Wilbur, Joseph
Winans, Ira
Wright, Chauncy
Wilcox, Daniel
Warner, A. S.
Weed, Alvinzy
Woodruff, L. H.
Wilbur, Luther
Weaver, Edgar
Witter, Wm. A.
Watson, Edward
Woodruff, L. H., Jr.
Wilmot, Wm. H.
Wilbur, Emory
Warner, Ed.
Warner, Charles
Williams, J. J.
Wilmarth, J.
West, Benjamin
Washburn, Delos
Washburn, Velosco
Watson, Perry
Withey, Orrin
Waterman, Willard
Watters, John
West, Samuel E.
West, William F.
Webster, Ira
Wellman, Adin S.
Wheat, Charles W.
Williams, Edson
Williams, Dwight
Washburn, Lan.
West, John
Williams, H. L.
Williams, George
Williams, Guerdon
Welch, Thomas
Welch, Alonzo
Washburn, Floyd
West, John
Wilson, E. O.
Washburn, Charles
Young, David
Young, William
York, Benjamin

WOMAN'S WORK FOR THE UNITED STATES SANITARY COMMISSION.—The women of Susquehanna County showed their patriotism and Christian spirit during the "War of the Rebellion" by organizing Soldiers' Aid Societies in the different townships, where they assembled and made haversacks, shirts, picked lint and did other work for the comfort of the soldiers in the field.

It is not our purpose to give a detailed account of all these societies. Miss Blackman has written at length upon the subject and we shall only give a brief synopsis of the work.

Montrose Society was permanently organized about January 1, 1863, with Mrs. Mary L. Wooten, president; Mrs. F. B. Chandler, vice-president; Mrs. M. C. Tyler, Mrs. Joel D. Lyons, Mrs. I. Vadakin, Mrs. Hugh McCollum, Mrs. Wm. L. Post, Mrs. Erastus Rogers, Mrs. N. Mitchell and Mrs. Gilbert Warner on financial and executive committees; Miss Hetty D. Biddle, treasurer; Miss Ellen Searle, secretary; and Miss Emily C. Blackman, corresponding secretary. May 5, 1863, Miss Sarah M. Walker accepted the appointment as associate manager of the W. P. B. of the Soldiers' Aid Society for Susquehanna County. This position virtually made her president of the Susquehanna County organizations and vice-president of the Pennsylvania Branch of the United States organization. Miss Walker immediately became the directing spirit of the whole movement, and it was not long before forty societies were organized in the county. The following is from the secretary's report, October 18, 1864:

"The Ladies' Aid Societies of Susquehanna County in council, and friends of the soldiers, met at the court-house at 2 o'clock P. M., on the 18th inst. Hon. Wm. J. Turrell was elected president of the council, and, on taking the chair, addressed the meeting with a few well-timed remarks. The following were elected vice-presidents: Hon. C. F. Read, B. R. Lyons, M. C. Stewart, Miss Sarah M. Walker, Mrs. L. Hewen, Mrs. Wade, Mrs. Cooley, Mrs. Stanford, Mrs. Thomas, and Mrs. M. C. Stewart. Secretaries, Dr. C. C. Halsey, Thomas Nicholson and G. A. Jessup.

"Miss Sarah M. Walker associate manager for Susquehanna County, from her list, called on the different societies to report. Reports were made (some at length, and some briefly and verbally) by the following, viz.: Montrose, Elk Lake, Springville, Lawsville Centre, West Herrick, Auburn, West Auburn, Jackson, Glenwood, Rush (Eddy), Clifford, Dimock, Bridgewater, West Harford, Liberty, Fairdale and Franklin.

"Hon. C. F. Read reported, as chairman of the county committee to the sanitary fair, that over $3000 had been sent to the Central Fair at Philadelphia from this county, and Miss Walker added the testimony of one prominent in the Sanitary Commission, that the direct supplies thereto from this county had not been lessened by this great contribution to the fair, as had been the case in many other counties. Mrs. D. Parish, of Philadelphia, made a brief address. Mrs. Holstein, of the same place, who has for the most of two years labored for the Sanitary Commission, and has recently come from the front, made a very interesting report, and many important suggestions. Said the organization here was more complete than in any other county she knew of. She had seen no rooms equal to those of the Soldiers' Aid Society in this place.

"Dr. Halsey, secretary of the council, at a later date, reported:

"A few societies were unable to report by reason of the loose manner in which their accounts had been kept. Deaths, sickness and removals are the reasons, in some cases, of imperfect reports. A large number sent in complete returns containing lists of all articles forwarded, with estimated cash value, while some sent complete lists, with cash value of only a part, or the cash value of all that had been done, with only a partial list of articles. Some have only a list of articles, and others only the cash value.

"Montrose, Harford, Uniondale, Franklin, Sisters of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, Rush, Forest Lake, Friendsville and Forest Lake, West Harford, Lawsville Centre, Dimock (two societies), Friendsville, West Auburn, Clifford, Springville, Auburn, East Bridgewater and Little Meadows Aid Societies have sent to the Sanitary Commission 1247 shirts, 174 sheets, 588 pairs drawers, 720 pillows, 755 pillow-cases, 212 armslings, 291 dressing gowns, 247 pairs slippers, 342 pairs socks, 1913 towels and handkerchiefs, 126 quilts and blankets, 295 bottles of wine, 71 gallons of wine, 1 keg of wine, 1 cask of wine, 28 gallons syrup, 507 cans of fruit, 2709 pounds of dried fruit of all kinds, 13½ bushels dried fruit, 273 packages dried fruit, 31½ firkins of pickles, 100 pounds of butter, 5 tubs of butter, 1 firkin of butter, 50 pounds maple sugar, 1125 cakes maple sugar, 173½ dozen eggs, 1 keg eggs, 16 coats, 64 hop pillows, 2 pairs shoes, 3½ bushels apples, 10 quarts vinegar, 12 cans honey, 14 cans sundries, 11 bushels potatoes, 110 needle-books, etc., 61 pads, 1 sack dried corn, 8 quarts dried corn, 12 pounds horse-radish, 17 pounds corn starch, 32 pounds cheese, 6 pairs mittens, 4 pairs pants, 110 lemons, 300 and more packages of unenumerated articles."

The above from the secretary's reports shows that the ladies of Susquehanna County were deeply interested in providing for the wants of the "boys in blue," and much might be truthfully written of the individual sacrifices of these noble women; but it is not within the scope of this work to give a detailed account of them; and this brief synopsis will be closed with a biographical sketch of Miss Sarah M. Walker, whose unselfish devotion will never be forgotten.

SARAH M. WALKER was born at Moorehall, Chester County, Pa., not far from the ever-memorable Valley Forge, October 19, 1799. She was educated at Westtown Boarding-School, in Chester County. This school was early established by the Friends, and is still maintained by them. In 1820 her father, Enoch Walker, moved with his family into Susquehanna County, and located at Lake Side, near Friendsville, where he could enjoy the society and religious privileges of the Friends who lived in that vicinity; for he was a Friend, and had been sent as a missionary by that society as early as 1796 to the Oneida Indians In 1822 Mr. Walker and family removed to Woodbourne, in Dimock township, where George Walker, the only remaining member of the family, still resides, aged nearly ninety years. Miss Sarah Walker was a young woman twenty-one years of age when she came to this county. Educated in the schools of the Friends, and imbibing the spirit of her grandmother. she became a typical member of the Orthodox Friends' Society. She was well educated, yet she was not a decidedly literary person. Her domestic nature made her home life a blessing to her father's family, and especially to her brother, after they two alone remained of the family on the old homestead; and he is not unmindful of her many good qualities, but always makes mention of her as his "dear sister." But her kind heart, which contained so much goodness for her friends, was not confined in its operations to the home circle. Her benevolence was far-reaching, and extended to suffering and needy humanity everywhere. These benevolent qualities were brought out in a remarkable degree in connection with the Women's Work for the United States Sanitary Commission in Susquehanna County. In this work she traveled about the county, and was largely instrumental in organizing forty Soldiers' Aid Societies in the county. Inspiring and cheering by her hopeful disposition and calm determination everywhere, she was the leading spirit in the work, in fact as well as in name. As president of the Susquehanna branch of the society, she made visits to Philadelphia and had a large correspondence. She discharged the duties of her office with such energy and executive ability as to make Susquehanna the banner county in the State in the soldiers' aid work. Although opposed to war from religious conviction, she labored for the suffering soldiers with the same zeal that she would for suffering humanity anywhere. One of her well-known traits was to find good in everybody. This characteristic was so pronounced that it had a restraining effect upon others, who refrained from speaking evil of any one in her presence. Says one of her: "Not a Governor of our State within the past forty years but she has importuned, personally or by letter, to interpose the pardoning power in behalf of some poor, and as she charitably believed, penitent convict in prison, with whose case she (either here or during her annual visits to Philadelphia) had been made acquainted." "At the close of the Rebellion her heart and influence were largely given in aid of the 'Freedmen of the South,' especially in their education and enlightenment." By birth, education and choice Miss Walker was a Friend. A friend and sister she was in heart and deed to all who bore the image of her Master, without regard to their creed or mode of worship. In her last sickness she said to her friend, Miss Blackman: "There is not a cloud between me and the face of my Saviour."

Thus she died in full confidence of the One in whom she had trusted, March 22, 1874, aged seventy-four years, and was buried, pursuant to her request, beside her father at Friendsville.

CHAPTER XIX.

GRAND ARMY POSTS, SOLDIERS' MONUMENT AND WOMAN'S RELIEF CORPS.

BY CAPT. H. F. BEARDSLEY.

THE preservation of the Union was accomplished at a fearful cost of blood and treasure. A million of men confronted each other in deadly conflict, and the land shook with the tread of armed hosts. But after Appomattox what a grand transformation scene was witnessed.

> This was the end. The Blue and Gray
> Faded from sight, as melts away
> The frost, upon an April day.

After the Union Army had disbanded, upon the suspension of hostilities, and had returned to the quiet pursuits of private life, this organization was founded. The purpose of its founders and the broad foundation-stone upon which it was builded was to bind together in a bond of union those who responded to the call of the nation in the dark days of rebellion. The watchwords emblazoned on the escutcheon of the order are FRATERNITY, CHARITY and LOYALTY, and these words, which form the basis of its constitution, have so little of a military character that they could have been used equally well by any body of civilians who desired to unite themselves together for the purpose of carrying out any philanthropic measure. Any foreign orders of a semi-military character would have certainly had the word glory on their escutcheon, but the founders of this order wisely left the word out.

James M. Walker.

Is there a Union soldier whose heart does not beat a quicker march when his eye meets that splended ensign whose crimson folds now wave in triumph over an undivided country, that stretches from ocean to ocean and from the lakes to the gulf, embracing nearly a continent, and can say to himself, I at least bore an humble part in preventing the erasure of one single star from the azure field that represents the Union as it was, as it now is and as it will be, we trust, as long as human government may last?

The objects to be accomplished by this organization are as follows: To preserve and strengthen those kind and fraternal feelings which bind together the soldiers, sailors and marines who united to suppress the late rebellion, and to perpetuate the memory and history of the dead. To assist such former comrades in arms as need help and protection, and to extend needful aid to the widows and orphans of those who have fallen. To maintain true allegiance to the United States of America, based upon a paramount respect for, and fidelity to, the National Constitution and laws; to discountenance whatever tends to weaken loyalty, incites to insurrection, treason or rebellion, or in any manner impairs the efficiency and permanency of our free institutions; and to encourage the spread of universal liberty, equal rights and justice to all men.

ELIGIBILITY TO MEMBERSHIP.—Soldiers and sailors of the United States Army, Navy or Marine Corps, who served between April 12, 1861 and April 9, 1865, in the war for the suppression of the Rebellion, and those having been honorably discharged therefrom after such service, and of such State regiments as were called into active service and subject to the orders of United States General Officers, between the dates mentioned, shall be eligible to membership who has at any time borne arms against the United States.

Thus briefly have we noted the objects, aims and purposes of the Grand Army of the Republic; an army which to-day numbers on its rolls nearly three hundred and fifty thousand men, but whose ranks, alas! are being sadly decimated each year—not by the sword, but by the reaper, Death! The amount expended in charity since its organization, is nearly or quite a million and a half of dollars—the sum expended the last year (1886) being over two hundred thousand dollars.

In this Grand Army, the veterans from Susquehanna County early enlisted; and in 1867–68 there were six or seven posts organized. But for various reasons, unnecessary to enumerate, the order did not flourish, and in a few years, nearly all the posts in the county disbanded. In 1879 the Grand Army of the Republic was re-organized throughout the country, and soon afterwards new posts were organized in the county, and the order continued to flourish, while to-day we have fifteen G. A. R. Posts in the county.

GRAND ARMY POSTS.—The following abbreviations are used: P. C., Post Commander; S. V. C., Senior Vice Commander; J. V. C., Junior Vice Commander; Adjt., Adjutant; Q. M., Quartermaster; C., Chaplain; S., Surgeon; O. D., Officer Day; O. G., Officer Guard; S. M., Sergeant Major; Q. M. S., Quartermaster Sergeant.

Moody Post, No. 53.—Moody Post, of Susquehanna, was instituted April 1, 1867, and is the oldest post in the county, and the only one of the earlier posts that did not disband. It has had an honorable, though varied career, having had its hall and most of its property destroyed by fire on two occasions. Owing to the destruction of its records, we are unable to give a list of its charter members or of its first officers, though among the number were R. H. Day, David Mason, J. R. McCauley, W. C. Frith, Wm. Eastwood, Selah Brock, A. Williams and Wm. Dougherty—the four first named being among its first officers. A list of its Past P. C.'s is also lacking, but the post has been commanded by R. H. Day, John C. Foot, H. P. Moody, R. H. Hall, Wm. H. Telford and Clark Evans. Its present officers are: D. T. Sprague, P. C.; W. H. French, S. V. C.; A. G. Brush, J. V. C.; Wm. Allpaugh, Adjt.; L. Finckenoir, Q. M.; H. A. Tingley, S.; Wm. H. Telford, C.; A. Westfall, O. D.; H. Persons, O. G.; W. C. Frith, S. M.; J. A. Sutliff, Q. M. S. Its present membership is sixty-five.

We regret that we are unable to give but little of the personal history of Dr. H. P. Moody, after whom the post is named, for he was an honored citizen of Susquehanna, and held in high esteem by his comrades of the Grand Army. In the summer of 1861, he was instrumental in recruiting company "F" of the Fifty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers in Luzerne County, and October 12 was commissioned its captain. On the 1st of June, 1862, at the battle of Fair Oaks, he was wounded, from the effects of which he was compelled to resign in September following. After the war he removed to Susquehanna for the practice of his profession, and was afterwards appointed postmaster of that place. He died August 3, 1869, from the effects of the wounds he received at Fair Oaks, at the early age of thirty-four, and is buried in the cemetery at Susquehanna.

Captain Lyons Post, No. 85.—Captain Lyons Post, of Glenwood, was instituted on the 29th day of September, 1877, and the post was mustered and the officers installed by Comrade James Smith, assisted by a delegation from Moody Post, No. 53. The following were mustered as charter members: A. A. Clearwater, C. W. Conrad, Leander Lott, George Simpson, B. E. Miles, Martin Conrad, Israel Rynearson, John Cameron, Moses Brewer, Noah Phillips, Wm. J. Bell, Henry P. Titus, D. N. Hardy, W. W. Hardy, P. J. Bonner, Jas. M. Conrad, Geo. W. Mapes, W. C. Kirk, Cornelius Rynearson, C. M. Hunter. The officers at that time installed were: A. A. Clearwater, P. C.; C. W. Conrad, S. V. C.; Leander Lott, J. V. C.; B. E. Miles, Adjt.; George Simpson, Q. M.; James M. Conrad, C.; D. N. Hardy, S.; W. W. Hardy, O. D.; N. C. Kirk, O. G.; C. M. Hunter, S. M.; John Cameron, Q. M. S.

Soon after its organization the post decided to rebuild and fit up the hall over the tannery store, at Glenwood, which they converted into a very fine and commodious meeting-room. They afterwards added a kitchen and dining-room, thus making it one of the first post halls in the county. The post has expended, in fitting up and furnishing its rooms, between seven and eight hundred dollars. But it has not used all its funds in a nice hall and fine surroundings. It has nobly responded to the calls of charity, and during the ten years of its existence has expended nearly three hundred dollars for the relief of deserving and needy comrades. The whole number borne upon the rolls of the post is one hundred and twenty-one, of which number six have died, twenty-one have been dropped or suspended, and fifty-three have been transferred to other posts, leaving a membership in good standing of forty-one. Past Post Commanders are: A. A. Clearwater, C. W. Conrad, Byron McDonald and W. W. Hardy. The present officers of the post are: D. N. Hardy, P. C.; H. P. Titus, S. V. C.; Elias Hinkley, J. V. C.; W. O. Miller, Adjt.; C. D. Millard, Q. M.; Theron Hinkley, C.; Dr. F. B. Davison, S.; Byron McDonald, O. D.; Noah Phillips, O. G.; W. W. Hardy, S. M.; J. G. Wescott, Q. M. S.

In May, previous to the organization of the post, Captain J. R. Lyons, of Montrose, a representative soldier and worthy citizen, died, and the post unanimously decided to perpetuate and keep green his memory by giving his name to the post.

Jerome Richards Lyons, son of Nathan H. and Elizabeth L. Lyons, was born in 1828, at Milford, Pike County, Pa. In early youth he came to Montrose, where he grew to manhood, and for the greater part of his life resided in his native State. An architect by profession, few surpassed him in skill in his chosen calling. He was living in St. Louis, Mo., when the life of the nation was imperiled by the inauguration of civil war. He resigned his position and returned to his former home to enlist in his native State, and go with brothers and friends to fight for the preservation of the Union. In September, 1861, he had a recruiting station on the Fair Ground during the county fair, at which time a number rallied around the "Old Flag," and enlisted for the war. November 1, with a squad of men from Susquehanna County, he went to Tunkhannock and joined a squad from Wyoming County. A company was organized, electing Peter Sides, of Philadelphia, captain; Jerome R. Lyons, of Montrose, first-lieutenant; Edson J. Rice, of Factoryville, second-lieutenant. Going immediately into active service Lieutenant Lyons remained with his company until late in the winter of that year, when he came home on recruiting service, and in the spring returned with recruits enough to bring his company to the maximum. (For service of Company see Military Chapter Company A Fifty-seventh Regiment).

Lieutenant Lyons was promoted to captain Company A September 15, 1862. He was wounded three times, and was discharged for physical disability for wounds received in action, October 6, 1864. In 1869 he was elected to the office of register and recorder, and clerk of the Orphans' Court, of this county. After the expiration of his term of office he turned his attention to farming, but broken in health and suffering from wounds and sickness he died at the early age of forty-nine years, May 5, 1877. His last work was designing and superintending the erection of the Soldiers' Monument, at Montrose, in the inscription and building of which he took a leading and prominent part; and that monument will not only perpetuate the memory of the soldiers who fell in defence of their country from Susquehanna County, but will be a monument as well of his indomitable perseverance and skill.

Lieutenant Titman Post, No. 93. Lieutenant Titman Post, of Auburn Four Corners, was instituted November 23, 1878. On the night of its organization the following charter members were mustered: Calvin S. Gay, D. C. Titman, C. L. Lowe, O. M. Parks, J. C. Rifenbury, James P. Gay, E. L. Adams, Davis D. Layton, Frank Angel, Levi Warner, John B. Overfield, Leander Lott, M. H. Van Scoten. We are unable to give the names of its first officers, its past post commanders or its present officers, with the exception of its post commander, who is D. C. Titman. The total number borne on its rolls is sixty-seven, and its present membership is forty-five. The Post was named in honor of Lieutenant H. C. Titman, a gallant young officer of Company G Fifty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. (See history of regiment in military chapter).

Lieutenant H. C. Titman was born in 1835, at Blairstown, N. J. He was the eldest son of S. Matilda Van Scoten, late of Auburn, Pa. After casting his maiden vote for John C. Fremont, he migrated with his parents to Auburn, this county. His business was that of a contractor, and when the Rebellion broke out it found him in Kent County, Delaware. He returned to his adopted State, where he helped recruit and organize Company G, Fifty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. Upon the organization of the regiment he was detailed upon recruiting service at Philadelphia, and did not rejoin his company until after the battle of Antietam. He remained with his company sharing the hardships of the campaigns of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, when he was promoted to quartermaster-sergeant. This position he filled acceptably until the eve of the battle of Gettysburg, when he asked to be relieved and returned to his company for duty. He participated in that never to be forgotten battle with his company and regiment. By orders of Colonel Hofman he was promoted to second and first lieutenant of his company for conspicuous bravery in battle. In the fall of 1863 he again was detailed upon recruiting service, but rejoined his company before the campaign had opened. The comrades of his company, in March, 1864, presented him with a sword and belt, thus showing their respects for his comradeship; but he had scarcely drawn it from its sheath in the Wilderness, May 5, 1864, when he was killed while trying to rally his men, his body and sword falling into the enemy's hands.

Lieutenant Rogers Post, No. 143.—Lieutenant Rogers Post, of Brooklyn, was instituted June 28, 1879, with the following charter members: T. E. Shadduck, Moses Caldwell, G. T. Price, O. M. Doloway, J. D. Richards, C. C. Nichols, M. Smith, John H. Tiffany, Perry Sweet, J. S. Sterling, Wm. Chase, L. B. Squires, J. W. Adams.

The first election resulted in the choice of the following officers, who were duly installed on the night of organization: P. C., Moses Caldwell; S. V. C., T. E. Shadduck; J. V. C., O. M. Doloway; Chaplain, Rev. Getchel; Surgeon, John H. Tiffany; O. D., Josiah Smith; O. G., Perry Sweet; Q. M., G. T. Price; Adjutant, Wm. Chase; S. Major, J. Richards; Q. M. S., L. Squire. The post meets in Odd Fellows' Hall, and has a present membership of thirty-five. The present officers of the post are: P. C., J. W. Adams; S. V. C., J. H. Tiffany; J. V. C., R. P. Lindley; Adjutant, T. E. Shadduck; Q. M., O. M. Doloway; C., M. Caldwell; O. D., J. M. Whitman; O. G., Benj. T. Case; S. M., Perry Sweet; Q. M. S., George Mack.

The post was named in honor of Lieutenant Edwin Rogers, son of Lebbeus Rogers, of Brooklyn, where he was born on the 20th of July, 1835. When war was inaugurated by the firing upon Sumter, he was one of the first from the township of Brooklyn to volunteer for the war. In June, 1861, he became a member of Company H, Fourth Pennsylvania Reserves, and upon its organization he was made first lieutenant. But his health broke down from the exposure and hardships of the field, and he was obliged to resign in October of that year. He never recovered his health, and died before the close of the war, in January, 1865.

Captain Abel T. Sweet was born on the farm where he now resides, in Harford, July 21, 1835. He learned in boyhood to do manual labor, and understood all the departments of farm-work. To this practical knowledge he added the usual home district-school education, and one term at the Harford Academy. After attaining his majority he had taken a trip West, and spent some time in the lumber-woods of Pennsylvania, when, in the spring of 1861, just as he was preparing to raft lumber down the West Branch of the Susquehanna, he read an account of the bombardment of Fort Sumter by the rebels, and at once resolved to go to the defence of his country's flag. After one day at home, he enlisted at Montrose, in Company H, Captain E. B. Gates, Fourth Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, under General McCall, and was the first boy from Harford to enlist for the war. He was elected fourth sergeant of the company and accompanied it to Camp Washington, thence to Camp Curtin, where the men were sworn in, thence to Baltimore and the camp at Tenallytown. On November 6th he was promoted to first lieutenant, at Camp Pierpont, and the company became a part of the Army of the Potomac. The line of march was to Manassas, thence to Alexandria and to Fredericksburg, and thence to the Peninsula before Richmond, where the memorable Seven Days' Fight took place, General George B. McClellan commanding. Lieutenant Sweet's company lost heavily, and Captain Gates lost a leg at the battle of Charles City Cross-Roads, one of the Seven Days' Fights. After the battle the company went into camp at Harrison's Landing. Lieutenant Sweet commanded the company from this time. He was taken sick and was off duty for four weeks, during which time his company fought at the battle of Second Bull Run. On October 8, 1862, he was promoted to the captaincy of the company, and commanded it at the battles of Fredericksburg, Cloyd Mountain, Staunton, and five companies at Lynchburg and at the skirmish of Lexington. Captain Sweet continued in the service until July, 1864, when he was honorably discharged and returned home. For some time afterward he took charge of a gang of men for the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, superintending a coal-breaker. In 1867 he purchased the homestead of his father and has since resided on it, engaged in general farming. He is a member of Rogers Post, G. A. R., Brooklyn, a Republican, and takes an active part in township, county and national politics. Captain Sweet was a brave soldier, is an honorable citizen and possesses a genial, social nature. His patriotism kindles afresh when speaking of the incidents of the war, and his nerve is still strung to answer the call for troops to defend the Union. In February, 1863, Captain Sweet visited his home on furlough, and on March 1st following married Julia A. Carpenter, of Harford, a daughter of Tyler (1802–82) and Mary Graham (1803–73) Carpenter, and granddaughter of Cyril and Mary (Tyler) Carpenter, both belonging to the earliest families, who settled in Harford. This Mary Tyler was a daughter of Job Tyler, a sister of Deacon Joab Tyler and granddaughter of John Tyler, who was born in Attleborough Mass., in 1746, and settled in Harford in 1794, after some of his children died. Mary Graham was a daughter of John and Isabell (McFarlin) Graham, natives of Scotland, who emigrated to New York State in 1803, and settled in Harford, near the Lower Lake, in 1812. The children of Tyler Carpenter are Catharine S., wife of Edwin Thatcher, of Ravenna, Mich.; John G., deceased; William T., engineer, of Columbia County, N. Y.; Simeon M., of Canaan, Wayne Co.; Mary I.; Jane A., wife of Linus W. Moore, of Harford; Julia A., the twin sister of Jane; Miles D., engineer at Olyphant, Pa.; and Alexander M., an engineer at the same place.

The children of Captain and Julia A. Sweet are Arta T., a teacher, educated at Harford and Keystone Academies; Mary L., George Graham and Sarah Winona Sweet. Captain Sweet is the son of Arta (1802–78) and Sally Osmun (1807–66) Sweet, the latter the daughter of Embly and Catharine (Teeple) Osmun, natives of New Jersey, who died in New Milford. Arta Sweet was the son of Elias and Abigail Foster Sweet, who resided in the west part of Harford, where Jackson Tingley is located. This Elias Sweet came to Harford from Attleborough, Mass, in the fall of 1797, and was the son of Amos Sweet, who settled here with his wife and five children in the fall of 1795, from the same place. Arta Sweet first settled the homestead, a part of the Drinker estate, a woodland tract, and built the present residence, where he spent his life and reared his family. He was one of the founders of the Harford Agricultural Society, an early advocate of temperance and a member of the Old Washington Temperance Society of Harford. He was a Universalist in religious belief, a useful member of society, and served his township in various official capacities. His children are Eliza Ann, wife of Ansel Page, of Jackson; Sarah Jane, resides in Washington, D. C.; Foster F., of Atlantic County, N. J., served nine months in the late Rebellion; George M., enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment, Company F, Captain Beardsley; was wounded at the battle of Gettysburg and died shortly afterwards; Captain Abel T.; Hannah A., wife of George Warner, of Lackawanna County; Hilan B., merchant at Scranton; and Eva C., wife of D. Payson Brewster, of Harford.

A. T. Sweet

Elias Sweet had children,—Captain Elias; Joseph; Alfred; Hannah, wife of Saxa Seymour, was a merchant at Harford; Eliza, a Mrs. Capron, of Ohio; Arta; and Abigail, wife of Ira Belcher, of Gibson.

Tremain Post, No. 81.—Tremain Post, of Lanesboro', was instituted on the 16th day of June, 1880, pursuant to special orders from department headquarters, directed to R. H. Hall, of Susquehanna, who was designated to muster the post and install its officers. The following were mustered as charter members: G. E. McKune, J. F. Stewart, J. D. Shutts, Noah Bisbee, J. A. Hard, Dr. C. H. Yelvington, E. P. Bagley, D. C. Patrick, S. W. Foster, C. J. Duren, Frank Plunkett, R. N. Henderson. The following were chosen as officers and were duly installed: P. C., G. E. McKune; S. V. C., Noah Bisbee; J. V. C., J. F. Stewart; C., R. N. Henderson; Q. M., J. D. Shutts; S., Dr. C. H. Yelvington; O. D., J. A. Hard; O. G., S. W. Foster; A., J. O. Taylor; S. M., F. Plunkett; Q. M. S., C. J. Duren.

After the post was duly organized, Comrade Wm. H. Telford, on behalf of Moody Post, No. 53, presented a marble gavel block, and on behalf of Captain Lyons Post, No. 85, a gavel to the newly-organized post. The total number borne upon its rolls is sixty-two, and its present membership is forty-one. The post meets in Grand Army Hall, and owns furniture and post property to the value of three hundred dollars. Its Past P. C.'s are G. E. McKune and Jas. O. Taylor, and its present officers are: P. C., G. H. Hurlburt; S. V. C., W. C. Lacey; J. V. C., F. James; S., Dr. C. H. Yelvington; C., H. D. Wood; A., J. D. Shutts; Q. M., J. F. Stewart; O. D., J. O. Taylor; O. G., Paul Atwell; S. M., G. E. Pooles; Q. M. S., G. E. McKune.

The post was named in honor of Major Tremain, who enlisted as a private in the Eighty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteers, but at the time of his death he was in command of his regiment as its major.

Major Frank W. Tremain, for whom the G. A. R. Post at Lanesboro', Susquehanna County, Pa., was named, was the oldest child of William and Harriet Blanchard Tremain, and was born at Durham, Greene County, N. Y., in 1843. At an early age he removed with his father's family to Lanesboro', where he resided at the breaking out of the Rebellion, being then eighteen years old. Obtaining his parents' consent, he commenced a vigorous canvass for recruits and succeeded in getting several who went with him to Binghamton and joined the Eighty-ninth New York Volunteers, called the Dickinson Guards (named for the Hon. Daniel S. Dickinson). He was promoted from time to time for faithful and meritorious service, and escaped injury to the time of his death, April 2, 1865, in the last moments of the army before Petersburg, while he was in command of the regiment charging Fort Gregg.

T. J. Southworth Post, No. 222.—Southworth Post, of Franklin Forks, was instituted October 28, 1881, by Comrade A. A. Clearwater, assisted by a delegation from Capt. Lyons Post, No. 85, who mustered the following as charter members: B. J. Lasure, E. C. Yeomans, D. T. Salsbury, G. W. Rice, John Snow, R. S. Luce, I. C. Disbro, A. L. Southworth, M. V. Bisby, Morris Reidy, Jeremiah Hays. The following were also charter members and were elected the first officers of the post, being duly installed on the night of its organization, as follows: P. C., J. J. Stockholm; S. V. C., B. C. Vance; J. V. C., T. L. Smith; Adjt., J. H. Munger; Q. M., S. B. Knapp; C., A. E. Stockholm; Surg., E. P. Munger; O. D., A. M. Snow; O. G., J. W. Palmer; S. M., H. B. Wilbur; Q. M. S., Geo. C. Hill.

The total number borne upon its rolls is forty-six, and its present membership is thirty-five. In 1882 their Post Hall and all their property, except the records, were destroyed by fire. The present officers of the post are: P. C., S. B. Knapp; S. V. C., Geo. P. Stockholm; J. V. C., J. W. Palmer; Adjt., J. H. Munger; Q. M., W. L. Beebe; C., A. E. Stockholm; S., H. H. Dougherty; O. D., A. M. Snow; O. G., G. W. Rice; S. M., E. L. Beebe; Q. M. S., John Harsh. Its Past P. C.'s are J. J. Stockholm, B. C. Vance, T. L. Smith and E. L. Beebe.

The post was named in honor of Turner J. Southworth, son of Arthur and Maria Southworth, who was residing in Liberty township when the Rebellion burst upon the country. Early in the fall of 1861 he enlisted in Company H, Sixty-first Regiment New York Volunteers, and soon proceeded to the front. In the spring of 1862 he was with McClellan in the disastrous Peninsula campaign. He contracted disease amid the miasma of the Chickahominy swamps and was sent to Carver Hospital, at Washington, D. C., where, on the 28th of May, 1862, he died of typhoid fever. His body was embalmed and brought home, and tenderly and tearfully laid to rest in the cemetery at Lawsville—one of the first martyrs of the deadly strife to find a resting-place among his kindred.

Simrell Post, No. 233.—Simrell Post, of Great Bend, was instituted December 9, 1881, with the following charter members: Thos. Summerton, R. Y. Hazard, Francis S. Ericson, A. B. Conklin, L. W. Chichester, S. B. Munson, Chas. Hamlin, George Wolcott, George Bagart, O. A. Lines, F. B. Decker, Chas. M. Reinhart, Robert Thomas, W. A. Gates, Stephen Armstrong, Jeremiah Haney, Christopher Guiles, Henry Talmage.

We are unable to give the names of its first or its present officers; but its Past P. C.'s have been R. Y. Hazard, O. A. Lines and Thomas Summerton, and its present P. C. is H. H. Williams. The total number borne on its rolls is sixty-five and its present membership is forty-one. The post was named in honor of Captain Warren F. Simrell, one of the three months' volunteers under the first call of President Lincoln, who afterwards served with distinction in Companies B and D of the Seventeenth Pennsylvania Cavalry.

Captain Warren F. Simrell was born in 1841 in Scott, Luzerne County, Pa., and was one of the fourteen children of William and Sarah Simrell. At the age of sixteen he began to teach school, and followed that occupation until the beginning of the war, when he enlisted for three months, and at the expiration of that time came home sick. As soon as pronounced well he again enlisted in Company B, Seventeenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and, upon the organization of the company, was made first sergeant; soon afterward, first lieutenant, and subsequently promoted to captain of Company D, which command he held until the close of the war, being honorably discharged June 20, 1865. At the battle of Chancellorsville he was wounded by a piece of shell, which eventually caused his death. After his return from the army he was book and time-keeper in the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad shops at Hallstead, deputy postmaster in Great Bend borough, and subsequently engaged in the insurance business. In 1869 he was elected prothonotary of Susquehanna County and removed to Montrose and assumed the duties of his office. But death drew its sable curtain betwixt him and the brilliant future that seemed to await him, and, on the 21st of January, 1870, the office which he had filled but a few weeks became vacant by his death; and thus upon our country's altar was laid another noble sacrifice. His wife was Mary Cummings, who bore him two children,—Nellie and Warren F. Simrell.

Levi Moss Post, No. 313.—Levi Moss Post, of New Milford, was instituted several years since, but its exact date we have been unable to obtain, and we have no data at hand as to its charter members, or its past or present officers. The last official report places its membership at thirty-eight. The post was named in honor of Levi Moss, an honored citizen of New Milford previous to the war, and who, with his brothers, was engaged in the tanning business at that place. When Captain Beardsley's company left New Milford, on the 22d of August, 1862, Mr. Moss, who had been revolving in his mind the terrible problem that the war presented, suddenly resolved to lend his aid in its solution, and joined the company as it was starting for the front. He was made a corporal, and, true to the purpose that led him to leave family and friends, he was ever present when duty called. The "official" record of his service is comprised in this sad and significant sentence,—"Mustered into service August 25, 1862; missing in action at Wilderness, Va., May 6, 1864."

A. J. Roper Post, No. 452.—A. J. Roper Post, of South Gibson, was instituted July 26, 1884, and was known as "C. M. Holmes" Post until April, 1887, when a change was made and the present name adopted. The charter members of the post are Wm. Rogers, G. R. Resseguie, D. S. Michael, G. G. Willer, George H. Burman, George M. Felton, Hiram Stevens, George E. Bowell, James Griggs, Theodore Fuller, Frank Pickering, James Keech, A. C. Follet, George Yarrington, Peter Patten, Lawrence Manzer, Wm. Michael, James S. Hall, David Nicholas, Isaac Morgan, Thomas Kelly, John D. Pickering, Wm. Thorn, M. B. Davis, George Berry.

Its first officers were elected and installed as follows: P. C., Dr. Wm. Rogers; S. V. C., G. R. Resseguie; J. V. C., Isaac Morgan; Adjt., D. S. Michael; O. D., James Keech; Q. M., A. C. Follet; Chaplain, Theodore Fuller; O. G., Wm. Thorn; S. M., Freeman Whitney; Q. M. S., Lawrence Manzer. The whole number on its rolls is forty-seven, and its present membership thirty-five. The value of post property is nearly two hundred dollars. The officers for 1887 are: P. C., Dr. Wm. Rogers; S. V. C., Rufus Barnes; J. V. C., George Burman; Adjt., D. S. Michael; Q. M., James Keech; C., Gilbert Witter; S., Frank Pickering; O. D., H. D. Pickering; O. G., George Bowell; S. M., Solomon Williams; Q. M. S., Lawrence Manzer; Past Post Commander, Theodore Fuller.

Sergeant Augustus J. Roper, after whom G. A. R. Post No. 452 is named, was born in Gibson in 1839, the son of Wm. Roper, a well-to-do farmer, who resided near Union Hill. "Gus," as he was familiarly called, enlisted in Company F, One Hundred and Forty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the organization of that company, and was one of its first corporals. He was with his company up to the battle of Chancellorsville, where he was severely wounded, getting a bullet through the leg, which kept him from the field until March, 1864. He was with his regiment in its campaign from the Wilderness to Petersburg. On September 11, 1864, while on duty as sergeant of the advanced picket, he became exposed to the quick eye of one of the rebel sharp-shooters, and was shot through the head, killing him instantly. His body was embalmed and brought home, and now lies in the Union Hill Cemetery; and a grassy mound attests the resting-place of as brave a soldier as fought under the folds of the flag.

Four Brothers Post, No. 453.—During the encampment of the Veteran Organization of Susquehanna County at Montrose, September 4, 1884, Four Brothers Post was instituted by Colonel Thomas J. Stewart, adjutant-general Department of Pennsylvania, G. A. R., assisted by Q. M. General H. G. Williams, also of the department staff. Twenty-nine charter members were mustered, the ceremonies being held in Odd Fellows' Hall, which was filled to overflowing by members of the Grand Army. After "muster," preceded by the band, they all marched to the camp at the fair-grounds, where the following-named officers were publicly installed by Colonel Stewart: P. C., H. F. Beardsley; S. V. G., L. M. Baldwin; J. V. C., F. G. Warner; Adj't, H. C. Jessup; Q. M., W. A. Taylor; C., S. F. Lane; S., C. H. Smith; O. D., S. B. Loomis; O. G., Hugh Mitchell.

Following are the names of the remaining charter members: D. W. Searle, C. N. Warner, W. F. L. Hartig, John Quinn, Chandler Stephens, N. J. Huff, T. F. Mack, E. F. Baldwin, Joseph Jameson, Isaac Z. Babcock, Jacob Titman, Otis McCracken, James P. Taylor, Hamilton Youngs, William Johnson, C.

M. Read, G. Z. Dimock, Hyde Crocker, Jr., Isaac Hamlin, P. J. Hart.

After the "installation," by invitation of the newly-made post, the members of the encampment sat down to "bean soup" and other army "rations," seasoned with stories, speeches and songs, and all the necessary adjuncts of an old-fashioned "camp-fire." The post meets in Grand Army Hall (old court-house), and it is the purpose of its members in the near future to rebuild and remodel it. The total number borne upon its rolls is eighty, and, with two deaths, and three transfers, its present membership is seventy-five.

The present officers of the post are: P. C., H. F. Beardsley; S. V. C., L. M. Baldwin; J. V. C., W. F., L. Hartig; Adj't, H. C. Jessup; Q. M., James P. Taylor; C., S. F. Lane; S., Dr. C. C. Halsey; O. D. C. S. Page; O. G., James K. Brady; S. M., A. H. Berlin; Q. M. S., William L. Cox. The post was named "Four Brothers" in honor of four as brave and manly "boys" as ever wielded a sabre or sighted a musket. Perhaps its appropriateness cannot be more clearly shown than by quoting from a published article written by Captain Beardsley, at whose suggestion this name was adopted by the post. "What's in a name?"—The inquiry that heads this article will naturally be made by those unacquainted with the circumstances that renders the name adopted by this post of more than local significance. Early in the War of the Rebellion, four noble sons and patriotic brothers enlisted in defence of the flag. Their names were Jerome R., Clark C., Luke L. and Benjamin R. Lyons. Before Grant's victorious flag waved over Appomattox, the three last named were lying side by side on the hillside, in our village cemetery, stricken down by war's cruel hand, and to-day their bones lie mouldering beneath the shadow of a broken shaft, emblematic of life's sudden ending.

"How significant the lines

"'Brave boys were they; gone at their country's call;
And yet, and yet we cannot forget that many brave boys must fall!'

"The other brother, Captain Jerome R. Lyons, barely escaped with life from the perils of many battles, and returned to his home bearing the scars of rebel bullets, and with constitution shattered and health destroyed. He died in 1877, universally lamented by his comrades and all who knew him. The beautiful soldiers' monument that graces our square is alike a monument to him and his architectural skill and ability, for he designed and superintended its erection. The 'Four Brothers' sleep their last sleep in our village cemetery, and is it not most fitting that their memory should be revived and perpetuated, and our post honored, by adopting a name whose significance calls to mind a circumstance perhaps without parallel in the whole country?"

The spirit of patriotism that with, it seemed, one accord, impelled these four brothers to go forth in defence of their country and flag, was the same as impelled their great-grandfather, David Lyons, to help tumble the tea overboard into Boston harbor. We have already given a brief sketch of Captain Jerome R. Lyons in connection with the post that bears his name. Lieutenant B. R. Lyons enlisted with Captain Dimock in Company D, Fiftieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was second lieutenant of the company. General Stevens, in a letter to Lieutenant Lyons, written shortly after he had received the wound that resulted in his death, says: "You have acquitted yourself nobly during your whole service at the South, commencing with your energetic conduct on the 'Winfield Scott,' and ending with your leading the forlorn hope at Secessionville. I have announced you as one of my aids-de-camp, and you will continue as such, however long your wound may disable you." He died July 6, 1862, nine days after the above letter was written.

Luke L. Lyons was also a member of Company D, and its first sergeant. At the expiration of his first three years' term of service he re-enlisted. At Spottsylvania he was severely wounded, and died on the 20th of May, 1864. Company D had no truer or braver soldier. Lieutenant Clark M. Lyons was adjutant of the Fifty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers—the same regiment in which his brother, Captain J. R. Lyons, served. He was wounded, while charging with his regiment the enemy's works at Petersburg, on the 18th day of June, 1864, and died two days afterwards. He, too, was a veteran volunteer, having re-enlisted—it seeming to be the determination of these four brothers to see the end of rebellion unless "killed or disabled."

Truly "Four Brothers" Post has honored itself in thus seeking to honor them, and perpetuate and keep green their memories.

CAPTAIN H. F. BEARDSLEY was born in the township of New Milford July 18, 1836. He is the eldest son of Jared and Polly (Peck) Beardsley, who were both natives of Connecticut, and to whom clung many of the characteristics of the "Nutmeg" State. He has one sister, Lucy E., the wife of Rev. R. J. Kellogg, residing in Connecticut, and one brother, William L., who resides in Kansas. His father was an intelligent, energetic farmer, zealously wedded to agricultural pursuits, but not to the neglect of mental recreation or intellectual culture,

Captain Beardsley's boyhood was spent on the home farm until after his father's death in 1852, when, desirous of obtaining an education, he entered Wyoming Seminary, at Kingston, Pa., then under the able management of Dr. Reuben Nelson, where he remained two years, and, besides adding to his store of knowledge, he gained many life-long friends. While at the seminary he developed a taste for literary pursuits, and at the close of his school-life there, he shared the honors, with a schoolmate, of being selected to write the anniversary colloquy. He was then engaged in clerical duties and teaching school most of the time, until 1862, his last term being at Brooklyn, Pa. Inclining to the law as a profession, he had, in 1861, made arrangements to prosecute its study with McCollum & Searle, but the war came, and Coke and Blackstone were thrown aside for Hardee and Casey. Early in August, 1862, having received authority from Governor Curtin, assisted by A. A. Hempstead and E. B. Brainard, he recruited a company, and, upon its organization at New Milford on the 22d of August, was elected to command it. (Military Chapter, Company F, One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment). On the forced march which the regiment made from Arlington Heights to Poolsville, Captain Beardsley became disabled and was obliged to be left behind when the army moved. He came near being captured while at Poolsville, but managed to escape in the "role" of a Quaker cattle buyer, aided by his Quaker host. His valise, however, fell into the hands of the rebels, and in it were his commission and private papers. Partially recovered, he joined his regiment just in time to participate in the battle of Fredericksburg, December 13th. When the spring campaign of 1863 opened and the regiment started for Chancellorsville, Captain Beardsley was in command of his company, though weak and unfitted for the hardships and fatigue of the march. Through the terrible ordeal of those three days, culminating in the fearful carnage of that Sunday morning, he remained with his company, but after the battle he was unable to resume command, and, being unfit for duty, was granted a sick leave. He was never afterwards able to resume duty in the field. As to Captain Beardsley's subsequent service we quote from Chaplain Craft's "History of the One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment," page 222, as follows:

In June, after the battle of Chancellorsville, the captain had been granted a twenty-day sick leave and went home. He, however, accompanied the militia, who left Montrose in response to Governor Curtin's call for aid in repelling Lee's invasion, tendered his services to the adjutant-general of the State, was assigned to duty at Camp Curtin, remaining on duty until the expiration of his sick-leave. Unable to reach his regiment he reported to General Couch, commanding the department of the Susquehanna, who ordered him to Reading, where a camp of instruction had been established, and shortly after he was appointed acting assistant adjutant general on General Sigel's staff, then commanding the district of Lehigh, where he remained until March 9, 1864, receiving an acknowledgement from his chief in general orders for faithful and able services, and leaving him in temporary command until the arrival of his successor.

Captain Beardsley continued to hold the same place on the staff of General Ferry, who succeeded Sigel in the department. On the 18th of March he was ordered to Chambersburg, and was assigned to duty as acting assistant adjutant general to General Couch. He remained on the staff of General Couch until June 9, 1864, when a special order was received from the War Department, honorably discharging him from the service.

This order from the War Department was in accordance with previous instructions, transmitted to General Couch as follows: "If at the expiration of sixty days Captain Beardsley is still unfit for field duty, he will be discharged the service." For nearly a year after this Captain Beardsley remained at home endeavoring to regain his health, when being tendered a place in the quartermaster's department at Harrisburg by Major Reichenbach, with whom he had served while with General Sigel at Reading, he accepted and remained there nearly a year, or until the affairs of the department were closed up. In 1865, during his residence in Harrisburg, he married Sarah Elizabeth, daughter of Hon. R. T. Ashley, of Brooklyn, Penna., whose acquaintance he had made while a student at Wyoming. The captain remarked to the writer that, although his alma mater had never conferred any "degrees" upon him, yet he should ever hold it in grateful remembrance.

Returning to Susquehanna County, he engaged in various business enterprises, among others, that of editing and publishing a newspaper until 1875, when he was elected register and recorder of Susquehanna County, and upon the expiration of his term was re-elected and filled the office for six years. In 1878 he was elected a councilman for the borough of Montrose, and for two years served as president of that body, being re-elected in 1886. He commanded the veterans' organization of the county for three years, and has been commander of "Four Brothers" Post, Grand Army of the Republic, since its organization in 1884. He is now aid-de-camp on the staff of the commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic and has also served on the staff of the department commander. He has always been active in every public enterprise, and notably in his efforts to pay off the debt of nearly seven hundred dollars, on the soldiers' monument, and it was at his suggestion that the "Monument Celebration" was held. We quote an extract from the published report of that celebration. "There was but one aim—one ambition pervading all who labored for the celebration—success and the payment of the Debt. And while many contributed to the result—some more, others less, we think we do injustice to none, and but echo the sentiment of all who are capable of judging the facts when we say that the full and perfect success of the celebration is due to the indefatigable zeal and almost ceaseless labors of Captain H. F. Beardsley, from the very inception of the undertaking to its triumphant close."

Captain Beardsley is a ready writer commanding a flowing and poetic style; free-hearted and generous to a fault, he has hosts of friends throughout the county; patriotic and public-spirited, he gives freely of his time and energies to the public, even to the neglect of his own private affairs; an ardent Republican he serves his party with the same zeal that prompts all of his public acts, having served as chairman of the Republican County Committee for eight years. He has one child, a son of eleven years, and he enjoys his pleasant home which is located on North Main Street, Montrose.

Bissell Post, No. 466.—Bissell Post, of Rush, was instituted under charter dated November 26, 1884, by Comrade J. H. Munger, assisted by a detail from "Southworth" and "Four Brothers" Posts. The following charter members were mustered: L. L. Very, P. D. Roe, A. W. Hickok, M. T. Very, Canfield Stone, M. B. Perrigo, E. P. Howe, Samuel Smith, H. W. Terry, David H. Tarbox, Samuel McKuby, Wm. S. Gibbs. The officers were then elected and installed, as follows: P. C., L. L. Very; S. V. C., Samuel Smith; J. V. C., O. W. Baxter; A., E. P. Howe; Q. M., Peter D. Roe; C., M. B. Perrigo; S., C. H. Warner; O. D., Wm. S. Gibbs; O. G., Asa Hickok; S. M., M. T. Very; Q. M. S., H. W. Terry.

The total number borne on rolls is thirty-five, and the present membership is thirty-three. The post meets at Odd Fellows' Hall, at Rush.

Sergeant Alanson W. Bissell, in whose honor this post was named, was a member of Company "H," One Hundred and Forty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. He was born May 21, 1839, in Forest Lake township, Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania. His parents, William and Parthema H. Bissell, moved to Jessup township in 1840. His father was a practicing physician for many years. Alanson was brought up on the farm, attending the district school, and afterwards the "Normal School" at Montrose. In the winter of 1861-62 he taught the district school adjoining his own neighborhood. Although surrounded by parents in the decline of life and two loving sisters, when his country called he left them all behind and enlisted August 17, 1862, for three years, in Captain J. C. Morris' company, then forming at Friendsville, this county.

The company became attached to the One Hundred and Forty-third Regiment, which near the close of the year arrived at Washington, where it spent the winter, and joined the Army of the Potomac in February, 1863, and was attached to the First Corps. At this time the rebels opened their batteries on the Union lines at Fredericksburg. While the shot and shell were flying and bursting around, young Bissell could be heard singing that old war song, "The Battle Cry of Freedom." The corps moved from Fredericksburg early in the morning of May 2d, for a forced march to Chancellorsville. The day proved to be exceedingly hot, the men were heavily laden, and before noon many began to fall out, overcome by the heat. Young Bissell, from sun-stroke, was among the number, and was finally sent to Windmill Point Hospital, where he died of typhoid fever on the 1st day of June, 1863. His remains were brought home by Dr. C. C. Halsey, of Montrose, and interred in the cemetery at Birchardville, Susquehanna County, June 12, 1863. Such is a brief account of the life of this noble young patriot, the memory of which Post 466, G. A. R., has sought to honor with his name.

Owen Phillips Post, No. 486.—Owen Phillips Post, of Clifford, was instituted under charter dated July 24, 1885. It was mustered with twenty-one charter members, and on the night of its organization the following were elected its first officers, and duly installed: P. C., A. Harris; S. V. C., D. B. Mott; J. V. C., Henry J. White; Adjutant, C. M. Hunter; Q. M., George Simpson; C., G. R. Sanders; S., Dr. J. C. Harding; O. D., T. W. Hunter; O. G., Uriah Ridgeway. The names of the other charter members are J. H. Hunter, N. C. Halstead, Wm. Barker, George M. Dopp, R. W. Barney, D. S. Miller, B. B. Mapes, J. C. Decker, S. A. Halstead, Milo Carpenter, M. V. Kennedy, M. Arnold. The post meets in Grangers' Hall at Clifford Corners, and the total number borne on its roll is thirty-one. Its Past P. C.'s are A. Harris and D. B. Mott. A partial list of its present officers is given: P. C., Silas Halstead; S. V. C., H. J. White; Adjutant, George Simpson; Q. M., D. B. Mott; O. D., J. C. Decker. The post was named in honor of Sergeant Owen Phillips, a brief account of whose service and death is here given: He was the son of Nelson and Sally Ann Phillips, of Clifford. The booming of the rebel guns, firing on Sumter, soon re-echoed throughout the land in the President's proclamation calling for volunteers, and young Phillips responded to the call, and served his time with the three months' troops. In August, 1862, he again enlisted as a private in Company B., One Hundred and Forty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. At the battle of Gettysburg the regiment was most fiercely engaged and suffered severely in killed and wounded. In a desperate charge of the enemy, the regiment was forced to retire, and the color-bearer, Sergeant Crippin, was killed. (See military chapter, One Hundred and Forty-third Regiment.) It was Private Phillips who rescued the flag and bore it safely from the field. For this brave and heroic act he was promoted to color-sergeant. But in the battle of the Wilderness he, too, became the target for rebel bullets, being mortally wounded—"And one more was numbered with the Union dead."

Frank Hall Post, No. 505.—Frank Hall Post, of Thomson, was instituted some time in the latter part of 1885, or early in 1886. We are unable to give any particulars as to its organization or its past or present officers. Its present Post Commander is C. T. Belcher. The post was named in honor of one of Susquehanna County's brave and true soldiers. We regret that we have not full data of his home-life, together with more than the "official" record of his long and honorable service. Urbane Frank Hall—only known to his comrades as "Frank"—enlisted in Company F, One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment, and was mustered into service August 25, 1862. He was promoted to corporal, and during all the hardships and perils in which his company and regiment participated, during its nearly three years of service, he was ever present where duty called. Social in his habits, genial in his manner, he won the love of his comrades and the confidence of his superior officers. Spared through the perils of the battle-field and dangers of the camp, he was one of the faithful and honored few who were mustered out with the company May 28, 1865. Returning to his home, he sought the pursuits of private life, but after enjoying for a number of years the privileges and benefits of the government he helped to save, death came and robbed the community of an honored citizen and his fellow-soldiers of a loved comrade. Peace to his ashes.

Mathew McPherson Post, No. 509.—Mathew McPherson Post, of Uniondale, was instituted under a charter dated February 5, 1886, and the following officers were elected at its first meeting and duly installed by Comrade Clark, assisted by Comrade B. C. Stoddard, of Susquehanna: P. C., William Anderson; S. V. C., F. K. James; J. V. C., Urbane Barrager; Adjt., J. F. Bass; Q. M., Charles Tucker; C., T. B. Dimmick; O. D., Shepherd Carpenter; O. G., J. G. Brando. The remaining charter members were A. J. Hartson, Emmett Gibson, Jerome Curtis, Andrew G. Gregg, Alfred W. Larrabee. The total number borne on the roll is twenty-five. Its present officers are: P. C., William Anderson; S. V. C., Charles Tucker; J. V. C., C. H. Coleman; Adjt., Alfred W. Larrabee; Q. M., T. B. Dimmick; O. D., Emmett Gibson; O. G., A. J. Hartson; S., Jerome Curtis; C., Elijah Carpenter. The post was named in honor of First Sergeant Mathew McPherson, who was a member of Company B, Seventeenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, a brief sketch of whom follows.

MATHEW MCPHERSON, after whom Post 509, G. A. R., is named, was the son of William McPherson, of Scotch descent, was born and bred in the township of Gibson, this county. Being the oldest of the family, Mathew, from childhood, had the main care of the farm, as his father worked for the Delaware and Hudson Canal Co., at Honesdale. Thus inured to toil in summers, and attending the district school in winter, he grew to a sturdy manhood, and was among the first of the "Northern Mud-Sills" to don the blue and take the part of a private soldier. He had stood by the old flag all through the campaign of the "Army of the Potomac" to fall in the flush of early manhood and victory in the last bloody skirmish of the war at Five Forks. Thus has the post honored the "Rank and File" by adopting the name of one of its noblest representatives.

Myron French Post, No. 512.—Myron French Post, of Jackson, was instituted March 26, 1886, by Comrade Clark Evans, assisted by Colonel George Osborne and comrades from "Moody" Post. It was organized by the selection of the following officers, who were duly installed: C. C. Bookstaver, P. C.; O. G. Larrabee, S. V. C.; James E. Curtis, J. V. C.; Charles Estabrook, O. D.; P. K. Benson, Q.-M.; W. W. Larrabee, O. G.; E.A. Leonard, Adjt.; Rev. H. G. Blair, Chap.; H. M. Benson, Q.-M. Sergt.; Elon Dix, Sergt.-Maj. The remaining charter members were Sidney Estabrook, Austin Benson, F. D. Brown, Delos Washburn, D. L. Bryant, George Brink, Fred. Slocum, M.Washburn, Alonzo Barrett, Thomas Ball, Thomas Payne, Whitmore Easterbrook.

The present officers are the same as those first elected, with the following exceptions: J. V. C., Alonzo Barrett; C., H. M. Benson; Q.-M. S., Thomas Tallman.

Its meeting-place is Roberts Hall, which the post has nicely fitted up and placed therein some fine scenery. Its present membership is thirty-five. The post was named in honor of a valiant soldier, whose portrait, with a sketch of his life, follows:

SERGEANT MYRON FRENCH.—His great-grandparents were Nathaniel (1721–1801) and Elizabeth (1722–77) French. His grandparents were Joel and Polly French, the former born 1768, died 1872, was a native of Vermont and the youngest of eleven children. His brother William, born in 1753, was killed by Tories at Westminster Court-House, Vermont, March 13, 1775. It had long been handed down by tradition that this was the first blood spilled in the Revolutionary War, and research instituted in connection with the centennial anniversary of the battles of Concord and Lexington established it as a historical fact. Nathaniel, son of Joel French, was born at Dummerston, Vermont, March 5, 1812, and was the youngest of five brothers. At the age of fifteen his father died, and a year later his mother, and thus he was left at an early age to care for himself. When he was twenty years of age he came, in company with Charles French, to Jackson and purchased a farm in what was long known as the "Vermont settlement." Here he vigorously set to work to make a clearing for his future home, and after toiling here for several months, he sought employment in the lumber-woods near Great Bend, where he remained until the close of the year 1833. He then procured a team from his employer, Wright Chamberlin, Esq., and returned to Vermont. Here, on the 6th day of January following, he married Betsey Chase (1814–62), a native of Dummerston, Vermont, daughter of James A. Chase and granddaughter of James Chase, who landed at Boston from a whaling voyage at the breaking out of the war for independence, and immediately enlisted in the Continental army, where he served to the close of the war, after which he settled in Vermont. After their marriage the young couple started for their wilderness home, then a home only in name; but with untiring industry and unflagging perseverance, with hearts buoyed up with faith in a kind Providence, they endured hardships, overcame obstacles until that forest-home was transformed from one of privations and discomforts to one where peace and plenty dwelt as the reward of honest toil. Their children were Martin N., 1835, married, in 1855, Diana Thornton, of Java, New York, is a farmer, residing at Wethersfield, New York; Edwin A., 1837, was a sergeant in Company B, Seventeenth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry, and during Sheridan's campaign in the Shenandoah Valley was in charge of the ambulance train, married Ann Whitney, of Thomson, now residing at New Milford; Newell A., 1838, married Jennie Cady, of New York, now residing at Kalkaska, Michigan; Merritt C. was a member of Battery F, First Pennsylvania Light Artillery, married A. Worden, of Jackson, now residing in Nebraska; Myron (1841–63); Sylvester L., 1842, enlisted in 1861 in Sixteenth New York Independent Battery as private, was promoted to first sergeant, and served three years and eight months (see military chapter for history of battery), married, in 1866, Mary L. Washburn, of Jackson, has been in the employ of the Erie Railroad Company for the last thirteen years, has been foreman of the carpenter shop, resides at Susquehanna; Sabrie M., 1847, married, 1868, N. A. Houghton, residing at Binghamton, New York; Chloe C. 1848, married, 1868, H. Fowler, residing in New York City; Almeron N., 1850, married, 1871, Alice Barrett, of Jackson, farmer, and residing on the old homestead.

Myron French was born in Jackson, March 15, 1841. His early boyhood was spent at home, where he attended the district school, but when old enough to assist on the farm he only attended during the winter term. But with a taste for study and a desire for knowledge, he so improved his time that he excelled in his studies many whose educational advantages were far superior to his own. When eighteen years old he worked for his board and attended select school. Studious in his habits, yet he was fond of athletic sports, and out of school was a leader among his companions. Trained in the moral atmosphere of a Christian home, he early made a public profession of religion and joined the Free-Will Baptist Church in Jackson. When the War of Rebellion broke out, it found young French working on a farm for Deacon Norris, of Jackson. It would seem but natural that the first impulse of a descendant from Revolutionary sires would be to resent the insult to the old flag; but with an intelligent understanding of the course of events, he felt that a crisis had come that demanded something more than sentiment, and upon due consideration he decided that the path of duty led him to the defence of his country. Accordingly, on the 6th day of July, 1861, he enlisted in Battery "F." First Regiment Pennsylvania Light Artillery, for three years, and, in company with other Jackson boys, proceeded to Harrisburg. (See history of Battery "F") In his new avocation as a citizen soldier he soon displayed those qualities of head and heart that gained him the confidence of his superior officers and the esteem of his comrades. He was quick to comprehend the duties of his new calling, and was soon promoted from the ranks. At the battle of Cedar Mountain he commanded one gun of the battery, also at Rappahannock Bridge, Second Bull Run, Chantilly and Antietam, and this was before he received a "warrant" as sergeant. At the second Bull Run the enemy charged upon the battery in overwhelming numbers, capturing it with the exception of Sergeant French's gun, which he gallantly snatched from their grasp. At Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, and in every important movement of the Army of the Potomac, he was at the post of duty with his battery.

Myron French

At Gettysburg, on the afternoon of the 2d of July, the battery was posted on Cemetery Hill and became the centre of attack of that famous charge of the Louisiana "Tigers." Here, during that desperate hand-to-hand conflict, and while in the act of reloading his gun that was belching out iron hail full in the face of the maddened foe, he fell, pierced by a rifle ball. Thus on the altar of his country he gave his life, and the soil of his native State was watered that day with the life-blood of no purer or devoted patriot than Myron French. A comrade writes of him, after the battle: "Sergeant French was the soul of honor, and had he lived, would have had a page in the history of this war. His memory will ever live in the hearts of his friends in this battery, and may those he has left behind, only follow in his footsteps and they will be as well remembered on earth, and be as sure of grace in heaven." His remains were brought from Gettysburg and laid by the side of his mother in the quiet cemetery at Jackson, and the brightest blossoms of spring-time each year find resting-place upon his grave.

After the organization of a post of the Grand Army of the Republic at Jackson, it was named the Myron French Post, and the published announcement of a camp-fire by the post chanced to catch the eye of Captain L. E. C. Moore, of Philadelphia (he was a corporal in Battery F, afterwards captain Battery G), who wrote a letter to the Post, of which the following is an extract: "In the above charge Myron French, my sergeant, was killed. I forward you with this letter the spurs he wore that day, and which are just as they were taken from his feet with the soil of Gettysburg still clinging to them. I was not aware that a post of the Grand Army of the Republic had been named after him, or I would have sent them before. I have always prized them highly for their owner's sake, whom I esteemed and respected, and only surrender them where I hope they will be prized by many instead of one."

COLORED VOLUNTEERS.—While there were several colored soldiers from the county who enlisted in various organizations, there were twenty-five who enlisted from the borough of Montrose. Eleven of this number enlisted in Company C, Fifty-fourth Massachusetts Colored Regiment, and six were in Company C, Sixth United States Colored Troops, while the others were in other organizations. In the following list they are placed in the order above indicated:

Hamilton, Youngs.[1]
Baker, George.
Ennis, Stephen.
Green, Peter.
Johnson, William.
Johnson, Henry.
Johnson, Samuel.
Nailor, Benjamin.
Nelson, Daniel.
Price, George.
Smith, Charles.
Briscow, John.
Gilmore, William.[2]
Nelson, David.
Nelson, Josiah.[3]
Parker, Henry.
Youngs, Isaac.
Allen, Charles.
Gains, Lawson L.
Harris, John.
Hopkins, Isaac.
Smith, James.
Thompson, John.
Thompson, James.
Wilson, Josiah.

THE SOLDIERS' MONUMENT.—The history of the Soldiers' Monument should be written in three chapters, the first commencing with its inception and ending with the "laying of the corner-stone," July 4, 1876; the second the erection of the monument, its unveiling and dedication July 4, 1877; the third, the efforts of the Monument Association to cancel the debt of six hundred and seventy-five dollars, which was due and unpaid when the monument was dedicated, and the final consummation of their hopes, aided by the citizens of the county, which culminated in the grand celebration of July 3, 1880. In the year 1866 the project of erecting a monument to the citizen soldiers of Susquehanna County, who fell in defence of the "old flag" in the War of the Rebellion, was inaugurated. The funds to accomplish this laudable and patriotic purpose were to be raised by voluntary contribution, and had the projectors of the enterprise, at that time, called upon the citizens of the county to contribute to this object what their patriotism prompted or their means warranted, its inception and completion would have been separated only by months instead of years. But the terrible struggle was just over and the loyal hearts of the country beat with love toward its brave defenders—ready to do honor to the survivors and anxious to evince gratitude and sorrow for the dead. Predicating the success of the enterprise upon the idea that all would desire to contribute their mite, the projectors limited the subscription to one dollar. For two or three months the prospect looked brilliant—then the project lagged—then, seemingly, died out. Several hundred dollars had been raised, but it was apparent to the most enthusiastic advocate of the limited subscription scheme that the funds necessary to erect a monument could never be secured in that manner. The funds collected were deposited in bank, and there the matter rested until the Centennial year, 1876, when new life was infused into the project, and a determined effort made to secure the necessary funds to erect the monument. A subscription was started, bearing this legend, "No subscription to be paid until work is commenced on monument." Upon circulating the above named subscription, eight hundred and forty-two dollars were subscribed. The amount deposited with W. H. Cooper, treasurer, (limited subscriptions) together with interest on same, amounted, June 1st, 1876, to the sum of $1056.95. The available funds for monument purposes, counting subscriptions all good, was, therefore, on June 1, 1876, $1898.95.

[1] Corporal Company C, Fifty-fourth Massachusetts.
[2] Wounded in front of Petersburg.
[3] Wounded at Deep Bottom.

While the Monument Association was fully aware that said sum was inadequate to build such a monument as would be a credit to the patriotism of the county and reflect honor on its fallen heroes, yet they decided to push the monument to completion, trusting to the generosity of the citizens of the county to supply the deficiency. That the association never faltered in their purpose the completed monument, in all its symmetrical beauty, stands ready to testify.

But we anticipate: On the 1st of June, 1876, at a meeting of the Monument Association, it was decided to at once commence work on the monument, and that every effort be made to so far advance the work as to be enabled to lay the corner-stone on the coming 4th day of July—the Centennial anniversary of the nation's birth. Captain J. R. Lyons was then secretary of the association, and he engaged in the work with the utmost enthusiasm. Being an architect of acknowledged ability, he submitted drafts and plans for the monument that received the unanimous approval of the association, and he was authorized to proceed with its erection and superintend the same. It was also decided that, as a Susquehanna County soldier's monument, it should be one in fact as well as name, and that the material composing it should, if possible, be quarried from her own hills. Upon inspection, it was decided that the quarry near the fair grounds, and within the borough limits, was available, and from that source every stone that entered into that beautiful monument was taken. This does not refer to the statue of a soldier that surmounts it—that is of granite.

The grand celebration, by the citizens of the county at Montrose that centennial year will long be remembered, but one of its most interesting features was the "Laying of the Corner-Stone" of the Soldiers' Monument.

Hon. Wm. J. Turrell, president of the Monument Association, made a brief address having principal reference to the efforts that had been made to erect the monument, and alluding to the fact that its foundations were built from our native granite.

He then placed beneath the stone the sealed copper box, containing lists of soldiers, copies of General Jessup's oration, Captain Lyons's address, E. L. Blakeslee's, Esq., and Captain Beardsley's poems, order of exercises, sketch of Monumental Association, with list of its officers and members and copies of Republican and Democrat. The announcement that the stone was in position, where it will rest perhaps for centuries, was signalized by the firing of cannon and unfurling of flags. The address by Captain J. R. Lyons was highly appropriate, and a few extracts are here given:

* * * * * * * * *

"To these soldiers' orphans, to you this monument will represent the courage and devotion of your fathers; to you 'twill be a shrine, a Mecca; to it you will come for inspiration, for help in life's battles. Their courage and sacrifice will rest upon you like a benediction, enthusing your hearts with courage for the duties before you, with love for the country they died to preserve, and for the dear old flag under which they fell. You will point with pride to this monument and from it you will take the patent of your nobility. In the days to come to you will be left the legacy they died to transmit to you as 'twas given them by their fathers. To you will be left the duty of protecting this nation, of making its laws, building it up and advancing its interests and the great duty of its proper government, to see to it that no blemish shall ever tarnish its fame, that the starry banner is kept pure and stainless, "not a star erased nor a stripe effaced," but that you the rather shall add to its glory and cover its union with glittering stars. then to you this monument will be an honor for duty done, and for yourselves you will glory therein.

* * * * * * * * *

"We rallied from these hill-sides over three thousand strong, of whom more than four hundred this monument will represent. Their spirits stand beside us to-day; we can almost feel the touch of their elbows as they take their position in line, amd we can almost hear their 'steady boys, steady there,' as though ready for another charge. They whisper in our ears of the soldier iife, of the pleasant days in camp, and hint of the battles fought and the deeds of valor done and glory in the credit and honor this day gives them, and say that we too cannot help but take a little of the credit and honor to ourselves, for were we not a part of the battle? Yet, 'twas their death that gave us the victory."

The address was followed by a poem by Captain H. F. Beardsley, from which a few extracts are here given:

'Comrades, friends, your brief attention let me claim
Erewhile my muse, with unskilled fingers plucks
From out the flow'ry paths of Poesy and Song
A bright-hued garland.
Fame decks her temple with traditioned Bays,
And they whose names have place within her walls
Live on forever! Aye, live on while they Who sleep 'neath marble pile or shining bronze
Sleep on—forgotten.
Turn back the leaves of Time and each page mark
Whereon the record shows the world has paid,
Or rendered homage to the deeds of men.
What find we there? That those names brightest shine
Whose lives were laid a willing sacrifice
Upon their country's altar; or who lived
And died the benefactors of mankind.
And did the world its gratitnde forget?
Entomb their mem'ries with their lifeless clay?
No! No! Enshrined within a Nation's heart
They live; and not content with this they rear
The granite shaft and time-defying bronze,
That generations yet unborn may see—
And seeing, be inspired to emulate.

We meet to-day to lay foundation stone,
On which to rear a monumental shaft
That shall attest the love and gratitude
We bear our soldier dead.

* * * * * * * * *

This stone laid to-day will tell its own story;
'Twill stand a memorial in ages to come
Of patriot dead! reflecting the glory
Of patriot sire and patriot son.

(The orphans from the Orphan School at Harford, one hundred and eighty in number, were in attendance, and took part in the Centennial Celebration.)

Let these orphans—sad tokens of War's blackened trace—
Look aloft to the flag that is floating before us;
'Twas their fathers' brave hand kept those stars in their place,
Through their father's brave deeds it is now floating o'er us.

* * * * * * * * *

Like the Mussulman's Mecca this stone shall e'er be,
And these children assembled around it to-day
Shall pilgrimage make for here they shall see
Not alone storied pile, so massive and gray,
But their fathers' dear name;
For, like Temple of Fame,
This shaft shall arise
'Neath Freedom's blue skies,
And its cap-stone proclaim to the world far and near—
'In memory of Patriots—we ever hold dear.'"

With the corner-stone thus successfully and auspiciously laid, the work on the monument was pushed rapidly to completion, and in the spring of 1877 it was so near completed that it was found to be practicable to make arrangements for its unveiling and dedication. Accordingly preparations were commenced on a scale commensurate with the importance of the occasion, and an elaborate programme, under the auspices and management of the "Veteran Organization" of the county, was arranged for unveiling and dedicating the monument on the 4th of July. The event was one long to be remembered in the history of the county. At the time appointed, four soldiers' orphans loosed the flag that enveloped it, and amid the booming of cannon, the waving of flags and the shouts of the people, the monument stood forth in all its symmetrical beauty. Hon. Galusha A. Grow delivered the oration, which was one of his masterly efforts. But with the monument completed and dedicated, the association found itself in debt to the amount of one thousand three hundred and fifty dollars. Learning this fact, Mr. Grow, before leaving town handed to Captain Beardsley, the secretary of the association, his check for six hundred and seventy-five dollars, one-half of the indebtedness.

Many expedients were resorted to to cancel the remainder of the debt, but until 1880 only sufficient was realized to pay the interest. On the 4th of July, 1886, a celebration was held at Montrose for the purpose of paying off this debt. It was a grand success. Hon. Schuyler Colfax delivered the oration, and the hopes of the originators and managers of the enterprise were more than realized by the payment of the entire indebtedness. The monument cost the sum of four thousand dollars.

SONS OF VETERANS.—This organization is composed of the sons of deceased or honorably discharged soldiers not less than eighteen years of age. The following camps have been organized in Susquehanna County: D. C. Bronson, Camp of Great Bend; John A. Lyons, Camp No. 136, of Susquehanna, was instituted October 13, 1886; Captain H. F. Beardsley, Camp No. 168, of Montrose; C. H. Manzer Camp, of South Gibson, No. 171; Overfield Camp, of Auburn.

PAUL JAMES OVERFIELD was the eldest son of William and Anna Bunnell Overfield; was born February 6, 1842, in Auburn, Susquehanna County, Pa. At the opening of the Rebellion, when the President called for three months' volunteers, Paul, aged nineteen, was one of the first to go from Auburn. The quota being filled for three months' men ere reaching Harrisburg, he went no farther, but returned home. The following September he enlisted in Company B Fifty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, for three years, or during the war. He sought no promotion, but served valiantly in many battles. In the engagement at Fair Oaks he, with cousins, Captain Robert Bannatyne and F. C. Bunnell, M. C., with others, were surrounded three different times, and fought out by their bayonets. But thirteen escaped of their company, and each received a medal for bravery. Being felled to the ground by a spent ball, Captain Jayne reported—"He got up furious and fought like a tiger." He was in camp at Morris Island, S. C., over a year, with the guard of the blockade. He was honorably discharged, and reached home November 7, 1864, after three years and two months' service. Married to Miss Sarah Roe, December 30, 1872, he located on a farm and became the father to six children. He died November 3, 1881, and was laid with his forefathers in Overfield Cemetery, with military honors.

M. L. Benson Camp No. 186, of Jackson, was instituted April 15, 1887.

D. N. Hardy Camp No. 189, of Glenwood, was instituted April 29, 1887. D. N. Hardy, for whom the post is named, was born April 3, 1845, and enlisted at the age of seventeen in Company A One Hundred and Seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers. He was wounded at Antietam and honorably discharged. He is now farming near Glenwood.

WOMANS' RELIEF CORPS (AUXILIARY TO G. A. R).—The Woman's Relief Corps has become an almost indispensable aid and auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic. Its organization supplied a long-felt want, and it has won recognition from the order on its merits alone in the noble work of charity and the alleviation of suffering and want. As in those dark days of our country's peril, when its noble defenders lay stricken and dying in hospital and on battle-field, they came like ministering angels, with healing on their wings, so again they come and proffer their services to the wearers of the blue, and verily become sisters of mercy and charity.

Although it is auxiliary to the Grand Army, yet it is a separate and distinct organization, governed by its own rules and regulations, and controlled by its own code of laws. While the mothers, the wives and daughters of members of the Grand Army constitute a large part of the organization, yet good character and loyalty to country and flag are the only tests to eligibility. The objects of the order are purely philanthropic—to aid and assist the deserving old soldier or sailor and their families, and to lend a wiiling hand to carry out all worthy and laudable undertakings of the Grand Army. That there are not more posts of the Grand Army of the of the Republic in the county with relief corps is doubtless owing to the fact that most of the posts are situated in small hamlets, and the members widely scattered.

Moody Corps, No. 12, of Susquehanna, was organized September 2, 1884, with the following officers: Mrs. Fannie Boyden, P.; Mrs. Mary French, V. P.; Mrs. Rose Pettis, Jr. V. P.; Carrie Frith, Sec.; Mrs. Caroline Findon, T.; Mrs. Lucy Page, C.; Mrs. Jennie Burleigh, Con.; Mrs. Cornelia Merritt, G. The present officers are Mrs. Burleigh, P.; Mrs. French, S. V. P.; Mrs. Mattie Murphy, Jr. V. P.; Mrs. Lottie Munger, Sec.; Mrs. Libbie Anderson, T.; Mrs. Boyden, C.; Miss Bella Councilman, Con.; Mrs. Maggie Hesketh, G. In addition to the first-named officers the following were also charter members: Mary L. French, Caroline Falkenbury, Marian Whitney, Ella Sutliff, Ida Sutliff, Augusta Smith, Lydia Fessenden, Minnie Hurlbert, Allie T. Evans, Eliza Newham, Helen Malpass, Annie Miller, Clarence M. Florence, Blanche Dodge, Helen Hall, Ida Fessenden, Eva Falkenbury, Carrie Cook, Eliza Johnson, Margaret Findon, Elizabeth Alpaugh, Margaret Blackburn, Mary Benedict, Eva McCauley. The corps meets in Grand Army Hall, and has a present membership of sixty-seven.

Levi Moss Corps, of New Milford, was organized October 9, 1885, by Mrs. Anna Wittenmyer, with nineteen charter members. The names of officers are as follows: Pres., Docia S. Hager; S. V., Addie Gillett; J. V., Sarah Moffat; Sec., Cornelia McMillan; Treas., Sarah Tewksbury; Chap., Anna Brooks; Con., Lydia C. Tucker; Guard, Estella Hamilton. The present number is the same as when organized. The names of present officers are: Pres., Docia S. Hager; S. V., Jane Middaugh; J. V., Emma Lindsey; Sec., Addie Gillett; Treas., Sarah Tewksbury; Chap., Anna Brooks; Con., Mary Harrison; Guard, Ella Kenyan. The meetings of the corps were held in the post-room until the following spring. In addition to the first list of officers named, the following were also charter members: Margaret Hoff, Elizabeth Smith, Sarah Moss, May Southworth, Caroline Morse, Mary Risley, Ella Warner, Amanda Gillespie, Emily Miller, Jane Middaugh, Sarah Stone.

PIONEER SETTLEMENT.—In 1787 Susquehanna County was covered with a dense growth of timber, without a clearing or a break in the primeval forests, save a few acres along the Susquehanna that had been cultivated by the Indians, and land that had been flowed in two or three places by beavers, thereby killing the timber, so that wild grass sprang up in these places when the dams washed away. Aside from this, the county lay outstretched in savage slumber, with the accumulated mold of centuries upon her surface, ready for the hand of civilization to develop its latent resources. The power of the Indians in this section was broken forever after Sullivan's victory over the Six Nations. The War of the Revolution had closed and the colonists led on by the restless heroes of the war, were beginning to work their way westward in search of cheaper lands, where they hoped to build up homes for themselves and their children. The first two permanent settlements were made in the same year, 1787, one in the northern part of the county along the banks of the Susquehanna, and the other in Brooklyn township. The settlement at Great Bend was naturally enough made along the river by pioneers who followed the stream from New York State. No wonder that Ozias Strong, Benajah Strong, Daniel Buck, Comstock, Gates, Merriman, Parmeter and others were attracted to this lovely valley. The Indians, who were good judges of locations had made this the principal seat of their occupancy of Susquehanna County, and from this point they had trails leading in various directions. Great Bend or Willingboro' became the most prominent pioneer settlement. Brooklyn or Hopbottom settlement was made by a colony sent there by John Nicholson, a land speculator, who owned large tracts of land in that vicinity. William Coonrod or Conrad, a Hessian, a large number of whose descendants reside in the county, and Adam Miller, a Protestant Irishman, were the pioneers here. Some years later most of Nicholson's settlers sold their improvements to the Yankees, who began to invade this region under Connecticut claim. In 1789 Jedediah Adams came with a surveying party from Great Bend up the Salt Lick, and liked the country so well that he hastily constructed a rude cabin near the present site of the Eagle Hotel, and became the first settler of New Milford. Robert Corbett, Benjamin Hayden and others came a few years later. Nathaniel Holdrige is said to have made a commencement in Herrick in 1789, but he soon moved to Great Bend. The Kent settlement, which was made about 1790 by the Kent brothers, Abel, John and Carlton, was the first permanent settlement in the township. Asahel Gregory, Jonas and Sylvenus Campbell and Daniel Church, the Hale brothers, Walter Lyon and J. C. Awalt were there prior to 1800. Harford was settled in 1790 by a portion of the Nine Partners from Attleboro', Mass. Subsequently others came from that locality and found homes in Harford, and it became a Massachusetts settlement. The Tiffanys, Tylers, Thachers, Tituses, Tingleys, Carpenters, Folletts and Hardings were among the pioneers. Gibson was settled as early as 1793 by Captain Joseph Potter, who began on the farm now owned by his grandson, Joshua M. Potter. Joshua Jay, a hunter and trapper, first began in Burrows' Hollow about 1790. He erected a log house, grist-mill and blacksmith-shop. The Five Partners began at Kentuck in 1809. The Belchers, Bennetts and Galloways, Chamberlins, Holmeses and Washburnes were early settlers. Samuel Carey was the first settler in South Gibson, where Samuel Resseguie afterwards had a log cabin in the wilderness near the Tunkhannock River. Rush was settled by Connecticut Yankees under Connecticut title, and they were determined not to yield to Pennsylvania, and, under lead of Joab Pickett, gave the Pennsylvania land-holders some trouble.

The first settlement in Rush was in 1794; Dimock, 1796; Lenox, 1796; Auburn, 1797; Franklin, 1799; Bridgewater, Montrose, Middletown, Jessup, Forest Lake, Clifford, Lathrop and Springville, in 1799; Apolacon, 1800; Choconut, 1806; Silver Lake and Jackson, 1809; Ararat, 1810; Thomson, 1818.

It will be seen from the above brief review that all of the townships except Choconut, Silver Lake, Jackson and Ararat had small settlements within their bounds at the close of the eighteenth century, or within thirteen years after the first settlement was made. These settlements were isolated in the dark forest.

The traveler in 1800 would have found the pioneer's lone cabin standing in a small clearing, usually near a spring of water, five or ten miles from any neighbor, on some Indian trail or pathway through the woods, indicated by blazed trees. The "bridle-paths," as they were sometimes called were enlarged as the settlements grew in population and wealth, until they constituted the pioneer roads of the county.

COUNTY CENTENNIAL.—July 1, 1887, the Montrose Democrat called the attention of the people of Susquehanna County to the fact that it was one hundred years ago since the first white man settled in Susquehanna County, and suggested that a centennial celebration should be held at Hallstead, the place where the first permanent settlement was made. The Susquehanna Transcript, New Milford Advertiser, Independent Republican, Sentinel and Great Bend Plaindealer all took up the subject and favored the celebration. Accordingly, a meeting of the citizens of Great Bend and Hallstead was held at the office of Burgess C. M. Simmons, in Hallstead, at which an executive committee, consisting of Jas. T. Du Bois, W. D. Lusk, C. M. Simmons, S. S. Wright, Samuel Loomis, G. W. Dixon, O. A. Lines, V. Reckhow and T. D. Estabrook, were appointed a committee to draft a circular to send to leading citizens in the county, and call a meeting at Montrose. The following is an account of said meeting, as reported by the Democrat under date of August 12, 1887:

"On Monday afternoon last, Judge McCollum closed court at an early hour, to permit the use of the court-room for the purpose of a meeting to consider the matter of a county centennial. Twenty-one towns and boroughs were represented in the meeting. Mr. George A. Post was chosen to preside, with W. J. Pike as secretary. Mr. Post, on taking the chair, spoke earnestly in favor of a celebration.

"The first thing to be ascertained was the sense of the meeting upon the main question, 'Shall we celebrate?' To bring the matter up for discussion, Hon. M. J. Larrabee moved that a celebration of the hundredth anniversary be held. The chair called upon several gentlemen to express themselves upon the subject, and all spoke favorably. Among those who expressed themselves as decidedly in favor of the proposition were Hon. J. T. Du Bois, Hon. J. B. McCollum, Hon. J. W. Chapman, A. B. Smith, Sr. I. M. Gray, W. P. Crandall, O. H. Perry, A. O. Warren, J. G. Snow, Abner Griffis, S. S. Wright, T. D. Estabrook and others. It was unanimously decided to hold the celebration. The committee is as follows:

"H. F. Beardsley, chairman, Montrose; J. T. Du Bois, C. M. Simmons, Hallstead; T. D. Estabrook, Great Bend; M. J. Larrabee, Susquehanna; C. M. Shelp, New Milford; L. D. Benson, Jackson; W. P. Crandall, Hopbottom; J. E. Carmalt, Choconut; W. H. Sherwood, Rush; I. P. Baker, Dimock; C. J. Lathrop, Brooklyn; Horace Sweet, Harford; Dr. E. R. Gardner, Clifford; J. D. Miller, Thomson.

"Miss E. C. Blackman and Mrs. Henry D. Warner expressed themselves in sympathy with the movement.

"On motion of Hon. J. T. Du Bois, an executive committee of ladies was appointed to act in conjunction with the main executive committee. The following ladies were named as such committee, with power to add to their number:

"Mrs. Henry D. Warner, Mrs. S. B. Chase, Mrs. John Boyden, Mrs. L. A. Smith, Mrs. J. H. Cook, Mrs. M. J. Larabee, Mrs. Bronson, Mrs. E. Griffis, Miss E. C. Blackman.

"The board of managers of the county centennial had a short meeting in Montrose on Saturday last, at which an informal discussion of the programme was had. It was proposed that there should be a grand parade, with representatives from every township and borough in the county, with the trades, professions, societies and businesses represented. It is the present intention to have present a delegation of the Tuscarora Indians, who had a settlement in Willingboro' in the early days, and who were the original settlers. All kinds of sports will be provided, including boat-races, base-ball matches, sack-races, and grand displays of fireworks will occur each evening."

Hon. J. B. McCollum is to deliver the historical address, and Hon. Galusha A. Grow and others are to be present and make addresses. A log cabin has been erected on the spot said to have been occupied by the first settler, and a well-sweep has been placed over the old well that he dug. The centennial will be held in October.

CHAPTER XX.

THE BOROUGH OF MONTROSE.

A VILLAGE plot was surveyed in 1812, being one hundred and twelve by one hundred and thirty-nine perches, by Isaac Chapman and Isaac Post. They plotted the village, laid out and named Beech, Turnpike and Maple Streets, Strawberry and Gooseberry Alleys, Cedar and Alden Lanes and the Public Avenue. March 29, 1824, the Legislature enacted that the town of Montrose, in the county of Susquehanna, shall be, and the same is hereby erected into a borough, which shall be called "the borough of Montrose," "beginning at the west corner of the Montrose plot, agreeably to map on record in the recorder's office of Susquehanna County, in deed-book No. 1, page 288; thence south thirty-five degrees west forty perches to a post; thence south fifty-five degrees east one hundred and sixty perches to a post; thence north thirty-five degrees east forty perches to the south corner of said town; thence by the last-mentioned course to a post and stones, twenty perches beyond the east corner of said town plot; thence south thirty-five degrees west to the place of beginning." The same act created "the Burgess and Town Council of the Borough of Montrose," a body corporate. The officers were to be a burgess and nine Councilmen, with power to make by-laws, appoint street commissioners, a clerk, a treasurer, etc., William Jessup and Almon H. Read to superintend the first election. In a supplementary act, passed March 9, 1825, the Council were empowered to appoint a collector, and the burgess was empowered to recover fines and forfeitures. In 1853 Montrose was extended on the southerly side fifty-four perches, on the easterly side thirty perches and on the westerly side twenty perches. The act of 17th of April, 1861, validated acts of borough officers who may have been irregularly elected, and authorized the Town Council to levy as high as one per cent. tax, giving them power to compel owners of lots to build sidewalks in front of their lots, etc. April 11, 1864, the Town Council extended the borough until it comprised one mile square, with the lines running north and south and east and west. The centre is a little south of the foundry. Benjamin T. Case was the first burgess, elected in 1824.

From 1824 to 1833 the minutes of the Town Council meetings are not to be found. In 1833 A. H. Read was chosen president of the Council and F. M. Williams clerk. C. Fraser, D. Curtis, A. H. Read, M. S. Wilson, D. Post, A. Baldwin, Asa Dimock, Jr., and William Jessup appear as Councilmen, J. W. Raynsford, burgess. Sidewalks were agitating the minds of the "city fathers" at that time. They paid one dollar per rod to individuals that built sidewalks in front of their property, and four and one-half dollars for one-fourth of a crosswalk. A. H. Read, Charles Avery, William Jessup and David Post built sidewalks under that arrangement. Thirty dollars was appropriated to open the road from the Baptist meeting-house to the Chenango road. In 1835 William Jessup was president of the Council and Henry J. Webb town clerk; shortly after B. R. Lyon was made clerk. The Council were Henry Drinker, C. L. Ward, Rodolphus Bennett, S. A. Brownson, Davis Dimock, Jr., Daniel Bailey, S. S. Mulford, M. C. Tyler; J. W. Raynsford burgess, Cormack Cushman high constable.

In 1836 James C. Biddle was burgess, and Henry J. Webb, George Fuller and Franklin Lusk were on the Council. William Foster and B. G. Grover are the new men on the Council in 1837; P. Fraser and William J. Turrell clerks. Many of the progressive men of the town have been members of the Town Council during all these years. We cannot mention all of them, but besides those already mentioned, some of whom served many years, are Messrs. A. L. Post, William L. Post, Charles Beardsley, Leonard Searle, S. F. Keeler, G. V Bentley, F. B. Chandler, N. Mitchell, William Turrell, B. S. Bentley, George Frink, W. H. Boyd, Daniel Searle, S. B. Hinds, J. T. Birchard, I. L. Post, Jonas Mack, Avery Frink, B. R. Lyons, E. W. Hawley, F. B. Streeter, D. E. Patrick, Benjamin Sayre, Seth Mitchell, D. D. Warner, Philander Lines, Ezra Patrick, Jr., Horace Brewster, R. J. Niven, B. T. Case, Hiram Finch, George Little, Jeremiah Etheridge, J. B. Salisbury, H. F. Turrell, S. H. Mulford, W. J. Mulford, C. F. Read, E. W. Rose, G. Boyd, S. H. Sayre, J. T. Richards, W. H. Jessup. Wm. J. Turrell was clerk a long time; Azur Lathrop, C. M. Gere, W. W. Smith, G. R. Lathrop, Elijah Mott, A. Chamberlain, E. C. Fordham, F. A. Case, C. W. Mott, C. Neale, F. Frazier, J. S. Tarbell, C. L. Brown, W. M. Post, L. C. Keeler, Amos Nichols, Daniel Sayre, T. A. Lyon, A. H. Smith, C. C. Halsey, J. B. McCollum, W. A. Crossmon and many others have served on the Council in later years. After the organization of the county Joshua W. Raynsford was appointed justice of the peace. He was commissioned by Governor Snyder March 28, 1812, to hold during good behavior. This commission, like all similar ones, terminated in 1840, when the office became elective. Zenas Bliss was given a similar commission for Bridgewater in 1813, David Post for Bridgewater and Springville in 1815, and Samuel A. Brown for Bridgewater and Springville in 1817.

J. W. Raynsford did most of the business. "During his magistracy of twenty-eight years he had thirty-six thousand six hundred and eighty suits before him, which are registered in twenty-four folio volumes; he took acknowledgments of one thousand deeds, and united one hundred and four couples in marriage." Charles Avery was elected in 1840 for five years, and by re-elections held the office until he died, in 1876, covering a period of thirty-six years. During that time he made eleven thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight docket entries. William A. Crossmon held the office from 1876 to 1880, and had nine hundred and fifty-nine suits. John S. Courtright has held the office since 1880. There are two justices in the borough. Sabin Hatch served from 1840 to 1845; Albert Chamberlin, from 1845 to 1860; Franklin Frazier, 1860 to 1865; A. O. Warner, from 1865 to 1870; G. B. Eldred, from March, 1870, to December, 1870; J. F. Shoemaker, from December, 1870, to March, 1874; A. W. Bertholf, from March, 1874, to May, 1879; F. I. Lott, till 1880; W. W. Simrell, till 1881; G. G. Watrous, since that time till now (1887).

A post-office was established at Montrose, March 1, 1808, with Isaac Post first postmaster. He held the office twenty years, and was succeeded by his son, William L. Post, March 3, 1828. Their successors have been Charles Fitz Read, July 11, 1838; W. L. Post, July 13, 1841; Rasselas Searle, November 3, 1842; Henry J. Webb, 1845; Benjamin Case, 1849; Dudson R. Lathrop, 1852; Amory N. Bullard, 1853; Henry J. Webb, 1858; Dudson R. Lathrop, 1861; Daniel Brewster, 1866; H. J. Webb, 1867; Geo. L. Stone, 1869; Edward C. Fordham, 1873; John R. Raynsford, 1885. The present post-office, telephone exchange and express building occupies the same site that Post's Hotel occupied, where the first post-office was kept.

Montrose is located on hills whose general slope is southward, although the main ridge slopes in all directions. The high point at the fair-ground is some eighteen hundred feet above tide water. The main business houses are located on both sides of the Public Avenue, as they call the short street that extends from the court-house on the north to the old Milford and Owego road or Church Street on the south. This street is about one hundred feet wide and about forty rods long. From the court-house down the road, the first building on the left is the Tarbell House; opposite on the right is the old-fashioned residence of Mrs. Webb. Following down the street we find a number of lawyers' offices on both sides of the avenue; the Democrat office, the post-office, national bank and several stores farther down. At the foot of the avenue is the street extending nearly east and west, which contains the finest brick stores in the place. The vine-clad Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church are on this street going east, while the Baptist Church is on the same street going west, hence the name Church Street, although it is but a portion of the old Milford and Owego turnpike, as the Public Avenue is but a portion of the old Chenango turnpike. The extension of the Public Avenue southward is known as South Main Street, and it contains a number of stores; farther south there are some fine residences with ample grounds and shade trees. The Montrose House is on Church Street, and there are two streets parallel to Public Avenue, extending from Church Street northward. The Methodist Church is at the head of the street that extends from the court-house eastward. The public park originally contained ten acres, and extended from the Tarbell House to W. J. Mulford's, and from Jessup's residence to Dr. Vail's, but a row of public buildings has been erected nearly through the centre, following North Main Street. These are the court-house, engine-house, school-house, old court-house, Universalist Church and jail, extending up the hill northward. The narrow park on the east side of these buildings is called Monument Park, from the fact that a very fine granite monument has been erected therein to the memory of the soldiers of the late war. Judge Jessup's residence is on the east side of this park, and Judge McCollum's is on the street that extends eastward past the park towards the Methodist Episcopal Church, sometimes called Maple Street. The Independent Republican's stone office is on this street also. Proceeding up the hill from the north side of the park on Upper Main Street, there are some fine residences, with large and well-planned grounds and shaded walks. There is almost always a breeze blowing on these hills, and in summer it is very cool, healthful and pleasant. The village, being located on hills, is seen from quite a distance, and when the foliage is on the trees, it has the appearance of a village in the forest. The town extends a mile or more north and south, and is built upon the original road as it winds among the hills. It is built after the New England style; most of the residences have large yards attached, and the village is nowise crowded in appearance. The negroes live on the western slope, in Pleasant Valley, as they call it. Taken altogether, it is a rambling old town, which derives its principal importance from the fact that it is the county-seat, and an old turnpike road and mail centre, and a trading point for the surrounding farmers for several miles distant. It has a conservative population, mostly composed of the descendants of the pioneer settlers, either of the second or third generation, who have in some instances inherited a little property and a family name of which they are proud. Lawyers seem to abound here. The newspapers are unusually well-conducted for so small a town and have a large circulation; while the churches and schools are well maintained. The old pioneer names appear to the third generation among her merchants, as Mulford, Lyons, Sayre, Fordham, Turrell; while the old family names of Post, Jessup, Lathrop, McCollum, Searle, Baldwin, Bullard, Brewster, Deans, Tyler, Foster, Raynsford, Read and many others of old settlers still have representatives here in business or in the professions. A more complete Yankee town could not be found in New England than this. The town lacks railroad facilities to keep it abreast of modern stir and progress, and many men that would be otherwise engaged, if business demanded it, are often found congregated together, joking and telling stories and otherwise passing the time. This is political headquarters also; here the plans for the fall campaign are laid, and here the ambitious men of the county congregate for the purpose of selecting candidates for office. Although somewhat staid and slow, Montrose business-men have Yankee shrewdness and look-out for the main chance in making bargains. Her politicians are ambitious and aspiring, and her lawyers are ever on the alert, not only at home but abroad. Some of the brightest minds in Lackawanna County bar are from Montrose. The happiest people here are the negroes. A number of them can be seen on the streets, ready to dance on the side-walk or sing, almost any time. John Stout is the most jovial old character there is remaining of the former slaves. The younger class are not as industrious as their fathers were, and if they have enough to eat for one day, good-by care and sorrow—let us be happy to-day, with no thought of to-morrow. Montrose has staying qualities inherited from its Puritan ancestors that will doubtless maintain the dignity of the village, and continue to make it a good, healthful home of men of brawn, muscle and intelligence, sufficient to manage her own affairs; besides sending out young men and women into more enterprising towns to take leading places there.

Isaac Post was born Aug. 12, 1784, in Suffolk County, L. I.[1] His father's and grandfather's names were Isaac. There was one other son, David. The father died when Isaac was less than four years old. The young wife settled the business of her husband as best she could and found that she had but little left. In 1793–94 Mrs. Post married Capt. Bartlet Hinds. Prior to her marriage she had carried on farming with the assistance of some slaves that belonged to the estate. In 1799 Judge Haven, of Shelter Island, offered large inducements to Captain Hinds if he would remove to Pennsylvania and take charge of the settlement on his lands, amounting to twelve thousand acres included in the Susquehanna Purchase under Connecticut title. In February, 1800, Bartlet Hinds, Isaac Post, Daniel Brewster, Eldad Brewster, Daniel Foster, John Reynolds, Robert Day, Ichabod Halsey and Frederick Loper, with horses and two sleighs, left Long Island for Pennsylvania. They found a log hut at the Delaware (probably Carpenter's Point), where they stopped overnight. The next day they found Blooming Grove, which consisted of one half-buried log hut. They proceeded thence by way of Shohola, where one of the party horsewhipped the landlord for stealing from the horses the bog hay which had been fed to them. They stopped at all the log houses along the road, coming by way of Deacon Purdy's, Schenck's at Cherry Ridge, Asa Stanton's at Canaan and Hosea Tiffany's at Nine Partners. At the latter place both settlers and new-comers had a social drink of cider all around. That night they got as far as 'Squire Tracy's at Hopbottom. He had lately arrived from Norwich, Conn. The next day they came down to Joseph Chapman's. From there it was six miles through the woods to Stephen Wilson's cabin, which they reached at four P.M. March 11, 1800. Leaving young Isaac, who was then sixteen years old, at Mr. Wilson's, the rest of the company proceeded three miles farther to the log cabin previously built by John Reynolds and Daniel Foster, who were now with the company. There they intended to build a saw-mill. The cabin which had been built the fall before was built like a shed, with bark covering, being open in front, where they kept a log fire. Captain Hinds and Mr. Foster went down the Wyalusing for provisions. They were gone nearly two weeks. There came a freshet, and the ice went out of the river before they started back. They made some trades and got some flour, a barrel of pork and a keg of whiskey. They took their things to the forks of the creek, and that was the end of any road; as the snow was mostly gone, they had to get a yoke of oxen and make a drag, which was a crotched tree something in the shape of a cart tongue, the only kind of vehicle that could be got through the woods, over logs and through the creeks. Captain Hinds, who had traded one of the horses away, managed one load, and Daniel Foster and Ichabod Halsey managed the oxen and dray. They had to cross the creek about a dozen times, and carry the flour across by hand, walking on a tree which they felled across the stream when they could find no log crossing. Where the water was not too deep, it was taken across on the back of the horse. The oxen came near getting drowned in the deep water, but that was not the worst that befell our heroes. The most unfortunate circumstance happened as they were ascending a steep hill; here, somehow, that keg of whiskey got loose and rolled off. Foster saw the prize going and tried to catch it. The hill was steep. The keg rolled on, Foster still in pursuit, but pursuit was vain. The keg "stove," and the disconsolate trio gathered around the wreck and took a parting drink, which was all they could save of the liquid treasure. The disappointment felt at the cabin for this loss was in part made good by the merriment which they had at Foster's pursuit. The persons who had preceded them, and were living along the creek, were Metcalf, Joab Pickett, Abner Griffis, Ebenezer Whipple, Samuel Lewis and Ozem Cook. The last named lived about one mile above the cabin. Mr. Hinds looked about the country and decided to make his home near Stephen Wilson's, at the headwaters of the Wyalusing Creek. Bartlet Hinds, Robert Day, Samuel Coggswell and Isaac Post secured lodging in the log hovel which Stephen Wilson had erected for his brother's oxen, and obtained bread of Mrs. Wilson. Having their bodily wants thus supplied, these four hardy pioneers commenced chopping down the forests and making a clearing. This was the rough beginning whence sprang the village of Montrose. They erected a log cabin just back of Wm. M. Post's residence in 1800, which was the first house within the borough limits of Montrose. Isaac Post built, in 1806, a frame house where the post-office now stands, which became the first tavern, store and post-office in the place. About 1810 David Post built the house which constitutes a large part of the present residence of Wm. M. Post. That same year Jabez Frink had a log house opposite the present Baptist Church, and carried on blacksmithing for Isaac Post.

[1] This narrative is authentic as preserved in the manuscript of one of the pioneers, and is given very nearly in the language of the writer, as illustrative of pioneer hardships and customs.

The place was known as Hinds' settlement for a number of years, until Captain Hinds and Dr. Rose agreed to name each other's place of residence. The former named Silver Lake, and the latter Montrose, after a town in Scotland.

Bartlet Hinds and his step-sons were the founders of the village. Together with Dr. Rose, they extended such hospitality and good cheer to the commissioners appointed to locate the county-seat, that they won the prize away from Brooklyn and other aspiring towns. Bartlet Hinds was born April 4, 1755, at Middleborough, Mass., and became a baptized member of his father's church in that place. He was the first Baptist in the county. He served in the Revolutionary army as private, first lieutenant and was breveted captain. He was shot through the left lung at the taking of Burgoyne, and was one of the leaders of the forlorn hope at the taking of Stony Point. He belonged to the order of "Cincinnati," and was the first justice of the peace at Montrose. He was one of the first of those who had settled under Connecticut authority to yield to Pennsylvania and obtain his title from her authority. He married the widow, Agnes Post, for his second wife, by whom he had one son, Bartlet Hinds, Jr., who died young. Conrad Hinds, his son by his first wife, lived in Bridgewater nearly sixty years. He was a deacon of the Bridgewater Baptist Church in 1829. He was an earnest Bible Christian and lived a quiet, contemplative life on his farm, but was always active and ready to advance the cause he loved so well.

Isaac Post made considerable of a clearing before his family knew what he was doing; possibly his love for his step-sister, Susanna Hinds, may have increased his activity in preparing a home for himself, for after he had a home prepared he married her, and became, in many respects, the most prominent man in the vicinity. He assisted in the first chopping and clearing where Montrose now stands, and the frame-house that he erected on the site of the present post-office building was the first store and tavern in the place. He was the first postmaster, and was connected with carrying the early mails. He was treasurer of the first subscribers to the Milford and Owego turnpike, and let the contracts for building that road. He was the first treasurer of the county, major of militia and brigade inspector. He was a prominent Republican, as the Democrats were then called, and was a member of the State Legislature in 1828–29, and associate judge from 1837 to 1843. He was a prominent Baptist and built the Baptist Church in 1829; also, the academy in 1818. His children were William L., for many years a merchant at Montrose, but finally an employe of the Treasury Department at Washington, where he died;

ISAAC POST.

Rev. Albert L., born March 25, 1809, died January 7, 1887; Isaac L., many years in business at Montrose, now a resident of and alderman in Scranton; Jane Post; Elizabeth, wife of Dr. G. Z. Dimock; and George L., deceased. Isaac Post died March 23, 1855.

David Post, brother of Isaac, also came here with his step-father, Bartlet Hinds, shortly after the first log-house had been erected, just back of where he built a frame house in 1814, which constitutes part of the residence of his son, W. M. Post. This was one of the largest and most comfortable residences in town, and was the home of the court judges, during court sessions, for many years. Mr. Post was kind, generous and social; a Republican of the early and later times, a supporter of free missions and of the anti-slavery movement. He was among the number baptized into the Bridgewater Baptist Church, by Elder Dimock, in 1810, and took an active interest in the affairs of that denomination. He was appointed justice of the peace in 1815, and served twenty-five years; he settled a great many difficulties during that time, preferring peaceable adjustment to litigation. He married Minerva, daughter of Samuel Scott, in January, 1809. Of their eleven children, the following six reached the age of manhood and womanhood: Norman I. Post, who was admitted to the bar, but preferred business, and became a merchant at Montrose; Fannie, wife of Dr. Thomas Jackson, of Binghamton, N. Y.; Mary, wife of Sidney T. Robinson, also of Binghamton; Phila A., wife of Ralph B. Little, Esq., of Montrose; David went to California, where he now resides; and William M. Post, Esq., who resides on the old homestead, being the last of his father's family remaining at Montrose.

Rufus Frink first commenced in Bridgewater in 1806, and subsequently built a frame house on the lot now owned and occupied by W. J. Mulford. Mr. Frink was a mason by trade. His son, Avery Frink, has been a contractor and house-builder for more than half a century. Mr. Frink's six daughters all married in the vicinity,—Mrs. Fritz, the eldest, lives at Springville, aged eighty; and Mrs. Ward lives at New Milford. Jabez Frink was the first blacksmith at Montrose; he finally removed to Rush, where he died. George Frink, a grandson of his, lives at Montrose now.

Isaac P. Foster came to Montrose and started his little tannery in 1811; he sold to Luther Catlin, and removed to Honesdale in 1829, where he became one of the prominent pioneers of that village.

Austin Howell, Mr. Foster's brother-in-law, came from Long Island to Montrose in 1812, and erected a tavern just south of the tannery, which was destroyed by fire in 1854. Mr. Howell was the second sheriff of the county. His wife was a sister of Hon. William Jessup. He removed to Jessup, where he died in 1866, aged seventy-eight years.

William Foster came in the spring of 1812, and worked in I. P. Foster's tannery; he subsequently carried on tanning and shoemaking. He was an ardent Abolitionist, being prominently associated with the Posts, Deacon Meacham and others in providing subsistence and employment for fugitive slaves. He was county treasurer from 1832 to 1834; he died 1874, aged seventy-six years. His wife, Mrs. Anna Sayre Foster, died in 1885, aged seventy-nine. Of his family, Charles S. Foster remained at Montrose, and carried on a tannery for a number of years. His children are Selden M., clerk for Boyd Carrie R., wife of W. J. Post; Mary F. and Julia.

Francis Fordham came from Long Island in 1812, and established the hatter's business. He returned and brought his bride, July 9, 1813. Mrs. Sarah Howell Fordham, like a true wife, assisted her husband, and many a farmer's boy wore evidence of her skill in the trimmings of his hat. Their children were Nancy, wife of George H. Williston; William, a cabinet-maker, who died at Corning, N. Y.; Harriet, wife of George Jones, of Pittston; Phebe, wife of Edmund Baldwin; Edward C. Fordham, a cabinet-maker, for twelve years postmaster of Montrose. He is a merchant now, and chairman of the Republican County Committee. Emma and G. F. Fordham, upholsterer, are the remaining children.

Rufus Bowman, a baker, came in 1813, and occupied the log house vacated by Dr. Fraser, who had come in 1812 from Great Bend, having been elected prothonotary, clerk of the courts, register and recorder. Mr. Bowman subsequently built on the site of W. S. Mulford's store; two of his daughters were teachers many years. George Claggett, a tailor, and Stephen Hinds came in 1813.

Benjamin Sayre established the mercantile business at Montrose in 1816; he first built where Searle's office now is, then across the road where Blakeslee has his residence. His wife was Priscilla Chapman, and their children were Anna M., wife of J. T. Richards; Catharine, wife of G. V. Bentley; Samuel H., Benjamin C. and Daniel. His sons have all been active business men at Montrose. Lydia is the wife of G. W. Comstock, of New York; Samuel H. married Frances M. Reed. Their children are Samuel H. and Mary Elizabeth.

Silvanus S. Mulford came to Montrose from Long Island in 1816, and first built where Judge Jessup formerly resided, next where Jerre Lyons lived, and finally where B. H. Mulford now lives. He was one of the early and successive merchants of the place; he married Fannie Jessup and their children were William J., a merchant, who married Mary H. Cook, and has two children,—William S., his successor in business, and Mary B. The other children, of the original family, were Samuel B., a lawyer; Sylvester H., a merchant; Silvanus S., a physician in New York; Elisha, an Episcopal clergyman; Benjamin H., a merchant; Fannie A., wife of C. J. Conell, of Chicago.

Asahel Avery came to Dimock from Salem, Conn., and located on what is now called the Cope farm in 1801. His family slept on branches of trees all winter. Owing to difficulties about the title to the property he removed to Great Bend, where he became the first justice of the peace after the organization of the county. He died soon after his appointment, and his widow built the house now occupied by some of her descendants in Montrose, in 1817, and removed there. The family consisted of one daughter—Clarissa, wife of Benjamin Lathrop — and four boys — Asahel, Charles, Chauncy and Hubbard, all carpenters, cabinet-makers or carriage-makers. Charles Avery moved into the house erected by his mother in 1820, and became a man of some prominence in the town. He was county treasurer in 1821, county commissioner in 1825, commissioners' clerk in the year 1833; that fall he was elected sheriff of the county for three years. He was appointed register and recorder January 6, 1839, and served that year. In 1840 he was elected justice of the peace, and by re-elections held the office continuously until his death, which occurred in 1876, when he was nearly eighty one years of age. His wife was Harriet Lord, and their children were Fayette, pattern-maker, who resides on the homestead; Mary, wife of Robert Simpson; Helen, wife of Theodore Smith; Gertrude, wife of Edwin McKenzie, of Montrose; Louisa and Clara.

Jerre Lyons came to Montrose in 1819 and built a store and residence where the bank now stands. He resided there until he purchased the Mulford place, where George H. Lyons now lives. Jerre Lyons' wife was Melinda Bennett. Of his children, J. Lorenzo lives in Florida, Theodore A. succeeded his father in business, George H. resides on the homestead. Of Theodore's children, Gilbert is telegraph operator, Harry is in the store, and Emma is at home.

Henry Drinker, son of Henry S. Drinker and grandson of Henry Drinker, resided here in the house now owned by B. de Schweinitz.

He owned two farms in the vicinity of the village, and took considerable interest in the Agricultural Society. He died February 5, 1868, and was buried here. Joseph Drinker, Sr., a cousin of the foregoing, lived in the house adjoining, now occupied by D. R. Lathrop. Annie Drinker, his daughter, was "Edith May," mentioned among the authors. James C. Biddle married Sallie Drinker, granddaughter of the founder of the estate, and came here as his agent, and was president of the Bank of Susquehanna County, of the Mutual Insurance Company, and was in other respects a prominent man. He died in the prime of life while at Philadelphia.

Moses C. Tyler, son of Moses Tyler, of Bridgewater, bought the place in Montrose and built the house now occupied by his widow, at the corner of Maple Street and Monument Park, when a young man. He was a merchant in the place about forty years, treasurer of the county from 1839 to 1843, and associate judge nearly five years from 1847. He had three wives—first, May French; second, a daughter of A. H. Read; third, Harriet Harris. Of his seven children, Henry C. Tyler, of Montrose, alone is living. He married Frances E. Wilcox, and resides on Upper Main Street. He is a general insurance agent and was county treasurer in 1875. Owen B., a lawyer, died in California; Clark died in St. Louis. Moses Tyler's widow is living on the homestead with her sister, Mrs. Cooper, both of whom are four-score years of age. Judge Tyler died in 1885, aged nearly eighty-three. William H. Cooper read law with William Jessup and was admitted to the bar in 1851. He went into the banking business with Post Brothers, and after their failure continued the business as W. H. Cooper & Co., until he was shot by Joe Drinker (an insane man) in 1884. He built a fine residence, now owned by Mr. C. R. Woodin. His father, Captain Huntting Cooper, came later and purchased the Isaac C. Post mansion. He had been an old sea captain and had taken long whaling voyages. He died here July 2, 1885, aged nearly ninety-three.

Seth and Nathan Mitchell came from Rocksbury to New Milford. Seth Mitchell cleared up two farms in New Milford township, and about thirty years previous to his death removed to Montrose. He was a member of the Baptist Church and died at the advanced age of ninety-three. He had eight children. Of these, Ellen is a medical missionary in India; Norman I. was a druggist and jeweler at Montrose (he was a deacon in the Baptist Church; he and his brother Henry, who was also a merchant here, are both dead); Lemuel is a farmer on Snake Creek; Almira is the wife of B. Grover; Ophelia is the wife of George R. Lathrop, of Montrose.

Henry J. Webb was born in Saybrook, Conn., in the year 1808, and was taken by his parents to Bridgewater when a child. His father, Stephen J. Webb, settled in North Bridgewater, near Williams' Pond, on a farm. Henry came to Montrose when a young man, and was clerk for William L. Post a number of years. He then engaged in mercantile business with George Williston. He was also partner with Azur Lathrop at one time. He was postmaster of Montrose for nine years, county treasurer one term, and treasurer and warden in the Episcopal Church, of which he was a consistent member. He was of a genial disposition and thoroughly honorable nnd honest in all the relations of life. He married Mary, a daughter of Arad Wakelee, of Springville. Their only son, Charles, is a freight agent at Mauch Chunk, on the Lehigh Valley Railroad. Henry J. Webb died in 1878, aged seventy. His widow resides on the corner opposite the court-house, in the old Charles Catlin house, which her husband purchased of Colonel Lusk.

The following persons were assessed at Montrose in the year 1828:

Charles Avery.	Asa Hartshorn.
Rufus Allen.	Richard Hinds.
Daniel Bailey.	Hyde & Ross.
George Bowman.	Sloan Hamilton.
James C. Biddle.	George Hardy.
John Buckingham.	Garner Isbell.
Elisha Bronson.	Thomas Jackson.
Samuel A. Bronson.	William Jessup.
Thomas Brooks.	Ebenezer Kingsbury.
Burr Baldwin.	Franklin Lusk.
Alexander H. Bolls.	Jerre Lyons.
Daniel Curtis.	Reuben B. Lock.
Keturah Churchill.	Mary Locke.

Ugenior Cushman.	Samuel Lynn.
George Clagget.	Barney Lyon.
Charles Chandler (second sheriff).	George Mauger.
Alanson Coy.	Sylvanus Mulford.
Putnam Catlin.	Eli Meeker.
Benjamin T. Case.	Rufus Merriam.
William Cope.	David Post.
Martin Curtis.	Preserved H. Porter.
Martin Catlin.	Hiram Plum.
George Cushman.	Isaac Post.
Mason Denison.	Nathan Raynor.
Ben. Adam Denison.	Joshua W. Raynsford.
William Drinker.	Daniel Ross.
William Dennis.	Almon H. Read.
Asa Dimock, Jr.	Southworth Russell.
Benjamin T. Dimock.	Solyman Shelly.
Jeremiah Etheridge.	Embly Shaffer.
Isaac P. Foster.	D. T. Simmons.
Rufus Frink.	John Stewart.
Mary Frink.	David Scott.
Herrick & Fordham.	Daniel Searles.
Edward Fuller.	John D. Stephens.
Edward W. Fuller.	Benjamin Sayre.
William Foster.	Frederick Stephens.
Abraham Fordham.	William Turrell.
Charles Fraser.	Stephen Vaughn.
Hiram Finch (treasurer).	Caleb Weeks.
Francis Fordham.	Mason S. Wilson.
Ebenezer Gritz.	Dimock Warner.
Nancy Groven.	Dioclesian Welsh.
Levi Gregory.	Adolphus Ward.
Joseph W. Guernsey.	Nelson Warner.
Abel Green.	Walker G. Woodhouse.
Aaron Green.	Jacob Wilsey.
Samuel Hodgdon.	Warner Hayden.

FIRE COMPANIES.—Montrose has not been behind her sister towns in the efficiency of her fire companies. The first company was organized in 1831, and was composed of the leading men of the borough. They had a hand-engine which they called the "Water Witch." It was not very effective, no matter how well served. Rough and Ready Fire Company, No. 1, was organized in 1847 with fifty-eight members. Isaac L. Post was the first secretary of the company. This company obtained a charter April 5, 1849, and has maintained its organization until the present time. It has had on its roll some of the best men in the place. Many of the boys lost their lives in the late war, and when Lee invaded Pennsylvania they volunteered as a company, as emergency men. Their annual suppers have been occasions of many happy reunions, bringing out the best talent of the company in response to toasts, in the relation of reminiscences pertaining to the many fires which the company has heroically combated, in commemorative poems, in music and song. The early records of this company have been destroyed by the fire-fiend, which they were organized to combat; but the remembrance of their services in times when the town has been in danger of destruction will not soon be forgotten.

Montrose Fire Company, No. 2, was organized in 1855, after the destructive fires of the preceding year. Some of the older and leading business men went into this company. It contains more mechanics at present, and is a very effective organization. G. G. Watrous is president now. The Hook and Ladder Company was organized largely through the efforts of Captain Beardsley. There have been other companies here, as Wide Awake, etc. The three above-named are the present effective organizations, all under the chief direction of Edward C. Fordham. [1] The town has no water-works, and the water supply in case of fires is derived from large cisterns located in different parts of the town, at street-crossings. Montrose has been visited by several destructive fires. Tuesday morning, at one o'clock, December 27, 1831, Benjamin T. Case, who happened to be coming home late on horseback from a journey in the country, discovered a fire in the register's office, and immediately gave the alarm, "Fire! fire!" but no one was alarmed. The angular old attorney had been out to see a friend in Forest Lake, and had partaken of his "good cheer" to that extent that he was not to be trifled with, and he began to pace up and down the town and notify them in language more profane than polite that if they did not get up their town would all burn up. He at last made a rally, and the "Water Witch" was put to the test. "The fire extended up the east side of the Public Avenue from Post's corner, including the register's office, Avery & Drinker's store, J. & B. R. Lyons' store, house and granary, and the building owned by Dr. Denison—the front room of which was occupied by the Volunteer office, and the remainder by the family of E. Kingsbury, Esq. The fire was extinguished by tearing down and removing the store of C. Cushman, and by bringing the engine to play on his dwelling-house—the site of Mulford's store." The second large fire occurred in May, 1851, and swept the western side of the avenue with the exception of one house on each end—Searle's and Webb's.

[1] A water company has recently been organized (1887) to pump water from Jones' Lake into a reservoir on the hill and thence distribute it through the town.

"The fire of November, 1854, was still more destructive; commencing in the harness-shop of A. Baldwin (where is now the drug-store of Burns & Nichols), two houses east of that were burned—James Eldridge's large building and Mason Wilson's store; then westward the stores of Bentley & Read, A. Turrell, and the dwelling of I. L. Post, then the only brick building in the place—and crossing the street, the residence of Judge I. Post, and all the buildings south on both sides of the street to the house of Mrs. Turrell and the storehouse of S. F. Keeler.

"A week later the old 'Farmer's Hotel'—once Howell's, Fuller's, and Hinds', etc.—was burned. Before the next fire, No. 2 Fire Company was organized, and, like the first, comprised many of the business men of the place. About two o'clock in the morning, March 19, 1863, the old foundry of S. H. Sayre & Brothers was totally destroyed by fire. The Republican of the same week stated that the establishment had added $100,000 per year, for three years, to the prosperity of our business population. Its destruction was a great loss to the community."

The most destructive fire that ever destroyed the buildings of Montrose occurred Friday night, September , 1886. The fire originated in the Crandall Toy Factory. The firemen were soon on the ground; the engines were placed at the cisterns, and as soon as possible streams of water were playing upon the factory. Valuable time was lost by the bursting of defective hose. It soon became apparent that the factory must go. The merchants on South Main Street, adjoining, began to remove their goods. Many of them were piled upon the opposite side of the street, only to be devoured by the flames later. The firemen and volunteers made herculean efforts, but all in vain. When the store of A. W. Cooley, on the east side of South Main, was seen to be on fire, it was feared that the water supply would be insufficient to stay the flames. Almost as quickly as can be told, the flames leaped from building to building, carrying destruction in their trail. With both sides of the street ablaze and the roaring mass hurling fire-brands high in the air in all directions, the scene baffled description. The fire was finally checked at the Brewster building on the south. E. C. Fordham's and W. B. Dean's wooden stores burned quickly, but it was hoped that M. S. Wilson's brick store would stay the flames. Soon, however, ominous clouds of smoke began to rise from this building. This was the supreme moment. It was now or never that the fire could be stayed. To climb the stairs and gain the roof of Sparks' store was the work of a moment, and this was done by Burgess Jessup and a band of intrepid spirits who were willing to brave any danger to save the town. The boys, though nearly suffocated with smoke, fought bravely until the fire was stayed at this point. The damages were estimated at ninety thousand dollars. Insurance, fifty thousand dollars. Some of the buildings destroyed were Crandall's factory, Boyd & Cooley's hardware and W. H. Boyd's building, C. N. Stoddard, E. C. and G. F. Fordham, W. M. Post building, I. N. Bullard, E. R. Stebbins, M. S. Wilson building, Bostwick & Corwin, groceries; D. P. Little, Mrs. Cushman and many others.

MERCHANTS.—The pioneer merchants of Montrose labored under a great many disadvantages. True, their business was not very extensive, but it required considerable financial engineering on the part of merchants to realize money sufficient to pay their bills in New York. They usually bought goods on six months' credit and trusted them out, taking whatever they could get for pay. There was very little money in circulation among the settlers; hence, early trade was largely a matter of barter. The first merchants kept whiskey, tobacco, nails, tea, calico and a few other articles such as the settlers wanted. They took in exchange maple-sugar, furs and peltry, home-made flannels, woolen socks, ashes and, later, grain and butter. The flannels, socks and maple-sugar could be sold or exchanged in New York for goods. In this manner the good house-wives of Montrose and vicinity early came to the support of their husbands, with their spinning-wheels, looms and knitting-needles, producing, at first, about the only fabrics upon which money could be realized. The grain taken by the merchants was largely manufactured into whiskey by the merchants themselves, such as had distilleries; and if they did not have a distillery, they sent the grain there, and the distiller returned a stipulated amount of whiskey in payment, which was sold to the grain producer. Mason Wilson says, "None of it was sent abroad to pay debts; it was all consumed at home." Mr. Wilson says there were about forty Revolutionary soldiers living in the county who received a maximum pension of ninety-six dollars per year for a private, and more for an officer, according to rank. This was before the day of bank-checks, and he acted as attorney for them sometimes, and would draw all their pensions at Philadelphia and distribute the moneys among them when he returned. This brought some cash into the settlement and facilitated exchange among the merchants and others. The pioneer merchants brought their goods from New York up the Hudson to Newburg on sloops, and carted them thence to Montrose, a distance of one hundred and ten miles, over rough roads and through the woods—although there was not a very extensive business done until after the beginning of the Newburg and Great Bend turnpike, in 1811–12, which helped transportation very much.

Isaac Post was the first merchant at Montrose. He sold goods from the corner of his inn, which stood where the post-office now stands, as early as 1808. A short time afterwards he erected a dwelling-house on the opposite corner, where W. H. Boyd is erecting a brick building, and kept a store in one part of his house for several years. In 1814 he erected a store-building on the opposite corner from the post-office, where Nichols & Watrous' store now is, where he did business until 1828, when he was succeeded by his son, Wm. L. Post. From 1825 to 1835 Mason S. Wilson was in partnership with the Posts, under the firm-name of Post & Wilson. The old wooden building was burned in 1831, and rebuilt and occupied by Mr. Post as long as he continued in business. This building was replaced by Nichols with a brick building in 1883. After dissolving with Mr. Post, Mr. Wilson opened a store where Turrell's stationery store now is, and occupied it until 1854, when it burned. He then built a brick building—where Bostwick & Corwin rebuilt in 1886—and continued business until 1865. The firms which succeeded Mr. Wilson in this place were Wilson, Griffis & Warner, Wilson & Gere, Saxon M. Wilson, son of Mason Wilson, and Griffis & Sayre.

Benjamin Sayre came to Montrose in 1816 and started a store in connection with S. S. Mulford, under the firm-name of Sayre & Mulford, where B. H. Mulford now resides. This partnership continued for a number of years, until Mr. Sayre moved across the road, where Dr. Blakeslee's residence and law-office is. He associated his son, S. H. Sayre, in the business with him, and erected a building which was used for a hotel (Washington), until he finally converted it into a store. This building was destroyed in the conflagration of 1851, and the present hardware-store of S. H. Sayre was erected by him on a part of the same site. Benjamin Sayre was an energetic man in his day and took an active interest in everything that tended to improve the struggling pioneer village. In 1825–30 he was actively engaged manufacturing a spinning-machine that would run from eight to ten spindles. He also bought wood ashes and made potash for New York market. The farmers would bring as high as five hundred bushels of ashes to his store in one day, and sell them for ten and twelve cents per bushel.

Silvanus S. Mulford came to Montrose from Long Island, and started business as a merchant, where B. H. Mulford now resides, in 1816, in connection with B. Sayre until 1818, then with N. Raynor a short time, then alone. After a number of years S. S. Mulford associated his son, William J. Mulford, with him in business, which partnership continued until about 1845, when S. S. Mulford retired, and S. H. Mulford took his place, which continued until the death of the latter, when William J. continued the business alone; until recently he has been succeeded by his son, William S. Mulford. The present commodious store was built in 1844. This business has been successfully conducted by three generations in the same family for seventy years. This house has always been solvent and solid.

Jerre Lyons came to Montrose from Massachusetts in 1819, and started a store where the National Bank now stands. Benjamin R. Lyons, his brother, was in partnership with him from 1824 till about 1835, when Judge Read entered into partnership with Jerre Lyons, and hardware was added to their business. After about four years Read went out, and Lyons continued the business alone; then he associated his son, Theodore A. Lyons, with him until 1868, when he retired.

T. A. Lyons, G. H. Drake and G. H. Lyons constituted the firm of Lyons, Drake & Co., which did business until Drake died, when G. L. Lyons became interested with his father, under firm-name of T. A. Lyon & Son, who are still doing business at the old stand. Benjamin R. Lyons, after dissolving partnership with his brother, in 1835, took Francis B. Chandler into partnership with him, and continued at Montrose until they were burned out, in 1884, when Mr. Lyons retired, having been engaged in the mercantile business at Montrose for sixty years. F. B. Chandler still continues in business, being the oldest merchant actively engaged in business at Montrose.

Anson Dart commenced the drug business, where the Episcopal Church now stands, some time prior to 1824. It is probable that Jerre Lyons had something to do with it when it was first started. Mr. Dart continued the business for a short time and sold it to Asa Hartshorn, who combined the jewelry with the drug business. George V. Bentley, who had clerked for Mr. Hartshorn since 1828, and learned the jeweler's trade, together with Norman Mitchell, purchased the business in November, 1833. Mitchell & Bentley continued the business where Abel Turrell's building now stands until 1842, when Bentley sold to Mitchell and bought where Read now is, and was alone for four or five years, when Judge Charles F. Read bought an interest in the concern. The firm of Bentley & Read did not limit themselves to the drug and jeweler's business, but went into general merchandising, and during the fifteen years they were in partnership they sold more goods than any other firm in Susquehanna County. Mr. Bentley retired in 1860, when the firm became Read, Watrous & Foster. In 1866 it became C. F. Read & Co., then Read, Griffis & Co. The business, after various changes, passed into the hands of H. P. Read, a son of C. F. Read, who now conducts it.

Francis Fordham came to Montrose from Southampton, L. I., in 1812. He was a hatter by trade, and started that business in a house that he built just below Boyd's Corner. He worked at his trade for a number of years. The first hat that he made in Montrose he sold to John Bump, of Forest Lake. A short time after he commenced merchandising he had two distilleries. He continued business with Nathan Raynor and Mr. Herrick until he failed. E. C. Fordham, one of his sons, has a grocery-store now.

William Turrell came to Montrose from Connecticut in 1816. He spent one year in Auburn township, and removed thence to Montrose, where he opened a saddlery and harness-shop in 1817, in the basement of the building, on the property where he lived the remainder of his life. In 1824 he built the residence now owned and occupied by his son. In 1835 he erected a two-story building across the street from his residence, where he continued his business until 1843, when he was succeeded by his son, Henry F. Turrell, who continued the saddlery business until 1868. Alfred Baldwin conducted the harness business a great many years. His brother Edmund was with him a part of the time. Since then William L. Cox has been the principal harness, maker. He has been in the business since 1848.

Azur Lathrop established a mercantile business at Montrose in the fall of 1840, under the firm-name of Avery & Lathrop. This firm did business eighteen months, and were succeeded by Lathrop & Webb, which continued two years, when Mr. Lathrop sold his interest and removed to Springville, where he engaged in the same business. He returned to Montrose, and the firm of Lathrop & Saulisbury was established. This firm did general merchandising until 1852, when Mr. Saulisbury retired from the firm, and the following year D. R. Lathrop & Co. succeeded to the business. In 1855 Azur Lathrop purchased George Fuller's interest in the business of D. R. Lathrop & Co.

In 1858-60 he built the brick block now occupied by M. S. Dessauer, and rented the first floor to De Witt & Riley, merchants, and W. H. Cooper & Co., private bankers. The second story is used for offices and the third is the Masonic Hall, Lodge No. 240. From 1861 to 1866 Lathrop, Tyler & De Witt were in partnership in the mercantile business, and from then till 1871 Mr. Lathrop was alone, when he sold the store building to M. S. Dessauer, the present proprietor.

J. Wittenberg & Bro. started the dry-goods business in a little building on the Searle corner, near Leonard Searle's, in September, 1854. This firm was changed to Guttenberg, Rosenbaum & Co., in 1856, and they rented of Alfred Baldwin in the brick block where A. B. Burns now is. In 1864 Mr. Rosenbaum, the active partner moved to Elmira and M. S. Dessauer took his place as active manager. He purchased the present elegant store of Azur Lathrop in 1871, and moved into it in the fall of that year. There were six partners, brothers-in-law, who were associated together in business. They established a store in New York and another in Towanda, Bradford County, in 1855-56, and in 1857 they removed from Towanda to Susquehanna Depot, where they established one of the finest dry-goods stores in Susquehanna County. February 1, 1877, these six partners met in Elmira, where one of their stores was established, each with an inventory of the property over which he had been active manager, and in one-half day they arranged an amicable dissolution of partnership, leaving each partner in ownership where he had been active manager. This arrangement continued M. S. Dessauer at Montrose, and Guttenberg, Eisman & Co. at Susquehanna. Moses Tyler had a store nearly where Searle's office now is for forty years, when he sold to——Hawley. After a few years Hawley sold to Chauncy Mott, who carried on business a number of years. Then H. C. Tyler had a store there for four years, when mercantile business was discontinued at that point and the building was sold to James E. Carmalt, who converted it into lawyers' offices. Daniel Brewster has a store adjoining I. N. Bullard's, where he keeps sleighs and agricultural implements for sale. W. W. Smith has a furniture store in connection with his undertaking shop.

Nathan Raynor, who was in partnership with Mulford a short time, was one of the pioneer merchants here. He was succeeded by Martin Curtis in 1824, who was succeeded by David Post & Son. The son, Norman I. Post, and Mr. Grover had the business finally. Their store was on what is known as the Gardner lot.

JEWELERS.—Asa Hartshorn was the first jeweler, and was succeeded in that business by his apprentice, George V. Bentley. Subsequently L. B. Isbell rented a window of F. B. Chandler and worked at the business seventeen years at Montrose. F. D. Melhuish learned his trade of him and eventually succeeded him in the business. He carries the largest stock of any jeweler in town. After Isbell left Chandler's, George Clarey did business there for about seven years. William True was a jeweler many years ago in George Fuller's store. Eugene H. True, his son, has occupied a portion of Chandler's store since 1876, and keeps a fine stock of goods. He has been twice elected to the State Legislature on the Republican ticket, and has represented the county creditably at Harrisburg.

DRUGGISTS.—About 1835 Jeremiah Etheridge purchased a lot and built a store on the west side of the Public Avenue, and started his son in business. This store was burned in 1851 and rebuilt. After his son died, Mr. Etheridge continued the business until he died, in 1866.

Amos Nichols and A. B. Burns next occupied this store. In 1871 they bought the brick building now occupied by A. B. Burns of Alfred Baldwin. In 1875 Mr. Burns purchased Mr. Nichols' interest, and now conducts the business alone. His drug-store is a model of neatness and good order. Mr. Burns has recently been appointed by the Governor a member of the Pharmaceutical Examining Board of the State of Pennsylvania.

The lot and brick store building owned by Abel Turrell, and known as the Central Drug-Store, has a history worthy of mention. A drug-store has been continuously kept upon this lot over sixty years, and during the last forty years it has been owned by Abel Turrell. In 1826 Asa Hartshorn commenced a drug-store on this ground. He also kept jewelry and conducted the business of silversmith and watch-repairer. In 1833 he sold the premises and business to his two apprentices, George V. Bentley and Norman Mitchell, firm-name Bentley & Mitchell. They dissolved in 1842, and Norman Mitchell took his younger brother, Henry A. Mitchell, as partner, firm-name N. Mitchell & Co. In April, 1848, they sold the lot, building and goods to Abel Turrell, who personally and successfully conducted the store, keeping drugs as the leading business, to which were added paints, fancy goods, jewelry and many other kinds of goods, until May, 1875, a term of twenty-seven years, when he sold the goods to M. A. Lyon, and rented to him the building and lot. He afterward took as partner his brother, Frederick K. Lyon, firm-name M. A. Lyon & Brother. In 1883 they sold the goods to S. J. Sparkes & Co., the present occupants by lease. In the great fire of November 10, 1854, the wooden building on this lot was destroyed. The present three-story brick building was erected the following year by Abel Turrell, the present owner.

F. H. Cooley has a drug-store on the west side of Public Avenue.

I. N. Bullard commenced merchandising in 1850, and has continued in the business without any partners until the present time. Like most of the Montrose merchants, he has passed through the fire. In 1854 he was burned out and rebuilt on the same spot. This building was destroyed in the conflagration of 1886. He now has a small store north of the Exchange Hotel, and keeps groceries, provisions and drugs.

Isaac P. Foster and J. W. Raynsford had a store here at an early day; likewise Woodhouse & Fordham.

E. P. Stamp commenced grocery business at Montrose in 1870. His place of business was burned in 1875, and he purchased a lot and built a store, which he traded to Augustus Faurot for the old Raynsford farm. Faurot sold it to Dr. Decker, the present owner (1887). Decker occupies the front part of the building. Simon Sayre occupied the back part of the store until he died. He was succeeded by John Burns, who is doing a good grocery business.

N. H. Lyons and Jerre Lyons were book-binders by trade, and started that business when they came to Montrose, in 1819. They had a larger business than one would think possible in this new country. They had the first book-store.

George Fuller appears to have been the second bookseller and stationer. He was followed in the same business by A. N. Bullard, who was succeeded by A. H. Smith. W. B. Deans bought of Mr. Smith in 1866, and now occupies part of L. M. Tyrrell's store, which was erected about two years ago on the B. R. Lyons lot.

F. H. Stevens had a stationery-store from 1876 to 1886, the time of his death. William H. Turrell has recently purchased the business of the estate.

C. D. Miner has been a merchant at Montrose for a number of years.

Byington Thatcher commenced grocery business in the basement of the Keystone Hotel in 1862, was burned out in 1866 and is now in Mawhiney's basement.

William H. Boyd and A. L. Webster formed a partnership in 1858, and engaged in the tin and sheet-iron business. J. H. Corwin bought Webster's interest in December, 1865, and J. R. Cooley became one of the firm of W. H. Boyd & Co. in 1876. In 1883 Mr. Corwin sold his interest to Boyd & Cooley, who have been conducting business at the rink since the fire of 1886. Mr. Corwin bought Griffis' interest in the firm of Griffis & Bostwick. They occupied Wilson's store, which was destroyed in 1886. Bostwick & Corwin purchased the lot and have just erected one of the finest brick buildings in the place. Mr. Boyd also has laid the foundation for a brick building on his corner.

D. P. Little has recently started a hardware-store in one of the new buildings that have been erected on the burnt district.

L. H. Griffis has the only bakery in the place.

MEAT-MARKETS.—The people of Montrose were early supplied with meat by butchers, who brought it in wagons and sold it from door to door. Alexander Allen butchered here as early as 1836–38. Zipron Cobb had a meat-market after that for a number of years. Edgar Harper had a meat-market in Post's basement. After that Emmett and John Kirby occupied the same place. Then Samuel Henstock and Nelson Hawley had markets. These have been succeeded by Philip Hahn, C. D. Hawley & Co., A. B. Hamlin, Wallace Hewitt, E. Tiffany and Myron Kasson, who sold to Hamlin again, who has the business in 1887. S. B. Rogers & Co. started in 1883.

Mason Saxon Wilson.—The subject of this sketch is well entitled to especial notice in this volume by reason of his long-continued career as a merchant at Montrose, his constancy in the support of its varied enterprises, charities and religious institutions, his correct habits, Christian example and high moral sentiment; and because he has continued to the great age of nearly four-score and nine years well preserved in mind and able to transact his own business. He has never sought political preferment; neither has he shrunk from responsibility and trust when placed upon him by his fellow-townsmen. For a half-century Mr. Wilson was engaged in mercantile pursuits here, and in the early times when there were no railroads or canals, or means of transportation of merchandise, he recites the long and tedious way in which his goods were conveyed from New York to this place; which, after being run up the Hudson in sloops to Newburg, were thence carted by way of the Newburg turnpike the entire distance of one hundred and ten miles, sometimes taking many days for the accomplishment of the journey. This state of things existed until the completion of parts of the Erie Railway, when goods were shipped from New York by that road to its terminus, and thence by the way of Port Jervis or Great Bend to Montrose. In the early days of business at Montrose, he says, there was little or no money paid in the sale of his merchandise, but a barter was constantly carried on between the farmer and the merchant, and in turn between the merchant and the jobber. He came to Bridgewater township with his parents in 1799, then an infant of nine months, who settled just outside and south of the borough of Montrose. His parents had come from Burlington, Otsego Co., New York, where he was born June 28, 1798, and located in this then wilderness place, having no nearer neighbors than five miles to the west at Fairdale, on Wyalusing Creek, and about the same distance to the east, in what is now Brooklyn township. The log house occupied by the family had been erected by his father, Stephen Wilson (1772–1848), who had visited the place in the fall of 1798 in company with Samuel Wilson, his brother, and Samuel Coggswell, brother of his wife, Anna Coggswell (1775–1865). Here his boyhood was spent until the age of sixteen, when he became a clerk in the store of Isaac Post at Montrose, and continued with him until he reached his majority. At the age of twenty-two a lingering illness compelled him to return to his home, where he remained for three years. Returning to Montrose, he became the partner of Mr. Post in 1825, and in 1828 with his eldest son, William Post, and continued his business relations with that firm until 1835, when he established mercantile business on his own account, which he continued until his retirement from active business, in 1865. In 1831 he united with the Baptist Church at Montrose, and has been a consistent member since, a period of fifty-five years, and he was treasurer of the church successively for a half-century, from 1831 to 1881. He was a director and one of the founders of the Susquehanna County Bank, treasurer for many years of the old Montrose Academy, and one of its board of trustees; and he was also chosen frequently as assessor. In politics he was originally a Whig, but upon the formation of the Republican party, adopted its principles. He married, August 25, 1825, Mary (1800–72), a daughter of Paul and Mary (Halsey) Sayre, of Southampton, L. I., who bore him children, Saxon M. Wilson, born in 1826, for many years a merchant succeeding his father, married first Laura Johnson, and has two children—Mary Cooper, wife of Lewis H. Sprout, and Mason B., who died, leaving a widow and two children, Mary and Robert; his second wife is Marietta Fuller; Fanny Mulford Wilson (1828–51); Mary Sayre Wilson, born in 1830, widow of the Hon. La Fayette Fitch; Eliza and Adelia died in infancy. For his second wife, in 1873 Mr. Wilson married Eliza Halsey Mitchell, who died July 4, 1885. Mr. Wilson's ancestors were residents of Vermont, and his paternal grandfather was a soldier in the Revolutionary War. His parents, Stephen and Anna Wilson, left Bridgewater township in 1819 and settled at Wysox, Bradford Co., and in 1823 removed thence to West Almond, Allegany Co., N. Y., where they remained for seven years, when they settled at Belfast, on the Genesee, where they died. Stephen Wilson was an assessor of Bridgewater township when his returns had to be made at Wilkes-Barre, and he was one of the commissioners of Susquehanna County in 1815. He was among the early members of the Baptist Church at Montrose. Stephen Wilson and Anna Coggswell were married in 1795, and their children are David (1796–1846), married and reared a family of children, moved to Bradford County and thence to Ohio, where he died; Almeda (1800–35) was the wife of John Bard, Jr., a farmer in Bridgewater township; Samuel Coggswell, born in 1803, was a publisher at Montrose with George Fuller, married and moved to Allegany Co., N. Y., where he published for some time the Angelica Reporter, was surrogate of that county, its first judge, and is now a retired lawyer at Belfast, in the same county; Anna, born in 1804, widow of Dudley B. Smith, at Fort Dodge, Iowa; Polly, born in 1806, is the widow of Miller Dean, of West Almond, N. Y.; Stephen, Jr., born in 1808, resides on the farm where his father died; Orpha, born in 1810, widow of John Jennings, of Lawrence, Michigan; Robert Stacy Wilson (1812–82), learned the printer's trade at Angelica with his brother, Samuel C., afterwards read law and practiced his profession there until 1836, when he moved to Ann Arbor, Michigan; there he was elected a justice of the peace, probate judge, and served as a member of the Michigan State Senate for one term. He was a delegate from that State to the convention which nominated James K. Polk for President. In 1850 he removed to Chicago, where he practiced his profession for three years, when he was elected judge of the Recorder's Court of the city, and held that office by re-election for ten years.

Benjamin Richards Lyons was born at Coleraine, Franklin County, Mass, Nov. 4, 1802. He spent his boyhood at school until the age of fifteen, when he accompanied his parents to Chesterfield, N. H., and was a clerk in a store at that place for nine years. In June, 1824, he came to Montrose and served as clerk for his brother Jerre, who had established mercantile business here in 1819. The following year he returned to Massachusetts, and in 1826 married Maria Augusta (1801–1846), daughter of Clark and Nancy (Lyons) Chandler. In 1831, with his wife, he returned to Montrose and became a partner with his brother in business. Their store was located on the site of the First National Bank building, and was burned that year. They erected a new store, which, in turn, was destroyed by fire in 1884, when the site was sold, and the present First National Bank building erected thereon. Mr. Lyons continued in mercantile business here until 1884, when he retired from active business life, having been almost continuously in mercantile business as clerk and merchant for a period of sixty-seven years. In 1849 he established a branch store at Lanesboro', this county, and was associated there in business with his brother Joel until 1860. In 1835 he established the tin and stove business, and in 1849, in company with others, a foundry for the manufacture of stoves and other castings. This latter interest he soon after sold to his partners. For several years he had associated with him, in Montrose, his brother-in-law, Mr. Francis B. Chandler. He was a director in the old Susquehanna Bank, and one of its organizers, when James C. Biddle was made its president. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and was one of the building committee in 1860 to erect the present church edifice. Mr. Lyons is, at the writing of this sketch, eighty-four years of age, and has outlived most of the associates of his earlier business years. He is a man well known in Montrose, who has given to the poor and to worthy institutions, demanding aid, largely commensurate with his means. His sympathies have ever been drawn towards those less fortunate than himself; and while of himself he has been successful in business, discreet and judicious in the management of affairs, the failures of others and the destruction of his property by fire have caused him great loss. In him the church has always found a liberal giver, and many of the citizens of Montrose will remember his unostentatious donations for their relief. Mr. Lyons is a man well informed on the current topics of the day, and many years ago surrounded himself with a valuable library of choice literary productions. His father, Dr. Jerre Lyons (1765–1825), married, in 1790, Mary Richards (1765–1808). He was a native of Roxbury, Mass., a university graduate, practiced his profession as a physician at Coleraine, Mass., and at Chesterfield, N. H., and died at the latter place. His children were Rev. Luke Lyons (1791–1845), a Congregational minister during his life, died in Illinois; Betsey (1793-1871) wife of Gilbert Minor, resided in Coleraine, and there died; Mary, died young; Nathan Holmes (1796–1877), came to Montrose in 1818 was, by trade, a book-binder, and died here; Jerre (1798–1875), came to Montrose in 1819, and remained in mercantile business until nearly the time of his death; Nancy (1800–1839), married a Mr. Tenney, of Gill, Mass.; Benjamin Richards, subject of this sketch; Barney (1805–1830), was in the store with his brother Jerre; and Rev. Lorenzo Lyons (1807–1886), educated at Union College, went to the Sandwich Islands as a missionary of the Congregational Church, where he remained until his death, a period of fifty-five years. The grandparents of Benjamin R. Lyons—David (1737–1803) and Abigail (Draper) (1740–1829) Lyons—were farmers at Coleraine. He was one of the men who assisted in pitching the British tea into Boston Harbor in 1773. One of his sons, Daniel, (1778–1850), settled at Great Bend, where he was a cabinet-maker, farmer, and for some time kept a hotel. He was a deacon in the Baptist Church there, and alone built the meeting-house. During his residence at Montrose he erected the stone building back of the court-house, now used by one of the fire companies. The other children of David Lyons were Jerre, Jesse, Seth, Abigail, Nancy, David, Aaron, Joel and Polly.

ABEL TURRELL, of Montrose, Pennsylvania, was born in what is now Forest Lake, Susquehanna County, Pa., October 16, 1812. His parents, Leman and Lucy Turrell, came from Litchfield Co., Conn., in 1810. He was reared on the home farm of his father, and in boyhood obtained a fair education by attendance at the district school, and by close attention to his studies at home, which he further completed at John Mann's Academy, and at the Montrose Academy. For two years, commencing in 1837, he was a teacher at Wilkes-Barre.

From May, 1839, to January, 1846, he was the editor and proprietor of a newspaper in Montrose: first the Montrose Volunteer, and afterwards the Montrose Democrat, by a change of name of the paper. From April, 1848, to May, 1875, he was successfully and continuously engaged in the drug business in Montrose. He then retired from active business with a competence. He was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Montrose, and a director several years. He married Adelia Catlin October 19, 1843, who was born in Bridgewater, Susquehanna Co., Pa., January 7, 1818. Her parents, Erastus and Polly (Wright) Catlin, were formerly from Litchfield County, Connecticut.

They have one child,—EDGAR ABEL TURRELL, who graduated at Yale College in 1867, and at the Columbia College Law School in 1869, and was thereupon admitted to the New York State bar. After studying and traveling in Europe for two years, he began the practice of law in New York City in 1872, at 170 Broadway, where he has since continued in the successful practice of his profession, in both the State and United States Courts. He is a member of the Bar Association, the Law Institute, the Manhattan Club, the Young Men's Democratic Club (of which he was secretary and vice-president several years), the Delta Kappa Epsilon Club, and various other organizations of the city. He received the degree of Master of Arts from Yale College in 1870.

Events in the family of LEMAN and LUCY TURRELL and near relatives:

Leman Turrell was born in New Milford, Litchfield County, Connecticut, July 5, 1776. In the spring of 1794, at the age of eighteen years, he came to Pennsylvania to survey land under the Connecticut title, for his uncle, Job Turrell, and returned in the fall. In 1797 he and Lucy Turrell (1776–1864) were married, and continued to reside in New Milford, Connecticut. In April, 1810, Leman Turrell, with his family, consisting of his wife and four children, left their native place in Connecticut, and removed to the western portion of Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania, now Forest Lake, and bought a tract of woodland on the line of the Milford and Owego turnpike, about two miles east of Friendsville. He subsequently added to his original purchase, until he acquired five hundred and twenty acres. He was an enterprising and thrifty farmer, and with the assistance of his sons, cleared a large portion of his land, and brought it into a state of cultivation, and erected good buildings thereon. His services as a surveyor were often sought by others, and upon the construction of the Milford and Owego turnpike, he contracted for and completed about one and a quarter miles of the same, through the forest, first removing the trees with their roots from the earth, and then making a wide and well-formed road, mainly taking stock for pay; and he was one of the managers during its continuance as a company road, supported by toll. In those days this turnpike was a portion of one of the main and most direct stage-routes from Ohio and the West to New York and the East, and fine four-horse stage-coaches and extensive droves of cattle passed over it, and it was as important as a railroad now.

The entire family of Leman and Lucy Turrell consisted of five sons and two daughters, whose ages are in the order named,—Britannia, 1798–1839; Stanley, 1800–79; Joel, 1801–73; Leman Miner, 1808–83; Abel, 1812; Lucy Ann, 1816–83; and James, 1818.

Britannia, wife of Adolphus Olmstead, whose daughter, Sarah Britannia, became the wife of the late President-Judge Farris B. Streeter, and now resides in Towanda, Pa., where her son, Harry Streeter, is engaged in the practice of law; and their son, Garrick Mallory Olmstead, lately deceased, was a graduate of Lafayette College, and a prominent lawyer in Jersey City. Stanley, Joel and Leman Miner were successful farmers in Forest Lake. The latter purchased eighteen hundred acres of land in Nebraska, and sold it to settlers; and he was an efficient and exemplary deacon in the Baptist Church at Birchardville. Joel succeeded his father as surveyor of land and roads, and by election he held the office of county surveyor. His son, Wilson J., was his successor in said office. Abel, a prosperous editor and merchant in Montrose. Lucy Ann, wife of Abner Griffis; their older son, Henry L. Griffis, a student of Lafayette College, and now professor of natural science in the high school at Binghamton, N. Y., and also a civil engineer. Lafayette College conferred on him the degree of Master of Arts in 1885. James resides in Longmont, Colorado; his son, Judson Wade Turrell, learned the drug business with his Uncle Abel, in Montrose, and removed to Longmont, Boulder County, Colorado, where he was elected member of the State Legislature at the last election; and he owns a fine drug-store in that town.

Abel Turrell

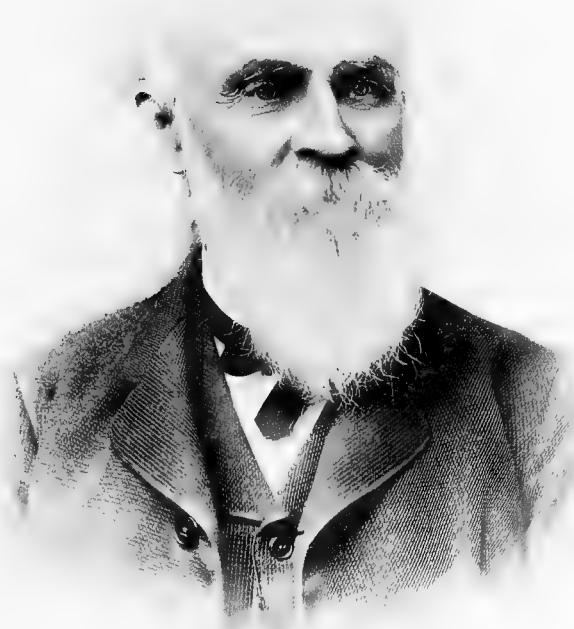
Leman and Lucy Turrell were persons of strict integrity, honesty and perseverance, and these qualities prevail in their children, and may be considered characteristic of the family.

William, father of Hon. Wm. J. Turrell (for biography, see Law Chapter), was a brother of Leman Turrell. Rachel, a sister of Leman, and wife of David Noble, had one son, a prominent member of Congress from Ohio many years. Leman, William and Beebe Turrell were sons of James Turrell, Jr.

Amy, a sister of Lucy Turrell (wife of Leman Turrell), became the wife of Alpheus Fuller, whose son, Jerome, was a prominent member of the New York State bar, a member of the State Legislature, a delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1866, a delegate to the National Convention of 1848, wherein he nominated Millard Fillmore for Vice-President. By the death of President Taylor, in 1850, Fillmore became the acting President. He then appointed Mr. Fuller Minister Plenipotentiary to Russia, which position he declined. He then appointed him chief justice of the Territory of Minnesota, which position he held until its admission as a State. Returning to Monroe County, N. Y., he was elected judge, holding his court in the city of Rochester, and he held that office by re-election until he was retired, at the age of seventy years, under an article of the Constitution which he had assisted in making.

Not for want of merit, but from a desire for brevity, the names of many equally worthy members of branches of the family are omitted.

AZUR LATHROP, second son of Judge Benjamin Lathrop, spent his boyhood on the farm of his father and obtained his education at the district school and at John Mann's Academy, St. Joseph. He was a teacher for three winter terms in this county and spent the winter of 1836–37 in the Senate chamber at Harrisburg as a reporter for the Pittsburgh Times and Harrisburg Reporter, of which latter General Simon Cameron was then one of the proprietors. After spending a year at home he took a tour of the West, and in the spring of 1840 returned, and in the fall of the same year settled at Montrose in the mercantile business (Avery & Lathrop). From 1844 to 1849 he was engaged in mercantile business at Springville and served as postmaster at that place under commission of President Polk for four years. Returning to Montrose, he continued in the same business as a successful merchant more or less of the time until 1872. In 1858–60 he built the brick block of three stories now occupied by Mr. M. S. Dessauer, a merchant—the second story containing various offices and the third story the hall of the F. and A. Masons. In 1862 he purchased the Franklin Tannery of New York parties, which he conducted for some six years and sold to Munger Brothers, the present proprietors; and from 1865 until 1868, under the firm-name of A. Lathrop & Co., he also owned and conducted a tannery at Laporte, Sullivan Co. Upon the failure of the Montrose Fork Company, in 1864, he became one of its proprietors and continued the business until the sale of the building to C. M. Crandall & Co., toy works, which were burned in the fall of 1886. In 1875 he established the planing-mill and lumber-yard at Montrose, still conducted by A. & G. R. Lathrop. After the murder of William H. Cooper, the banker, Mr. Lathrop was appointed by the court the trustee of his estate.



He is a large employer of laborers; a large farmer; a director and one of the largest stockholders of the First National National Bank of Montrose; was one of the principal movers in the Montrose Railway Company and a director for several years, and closely identified with the stage and express business of the place. For nearly a half-century Mr. Lathrop has been one of the main factors in the business interests of Montrose Borough and Susquehanna County, closely connected with its public matters and in the distribution of moneys among its people. Following the religious persuasion of his father, his family are members of the Episcopal Church, of which he has served as vestryman and warden for more than twenty years, and he has been a member of Montrose Lodge, No. 240, F. and A. M., since 1857. On January 9, 1849, he married Sarah E., daughter of John and Sarah Cornell, who died August 22, 1862, leaving two daughters—Ella Virginia, wife of John S. Courtright, Esq., a lawyer at Montrose, and Florence May—at home. For his second wife he married, September 9, 1865, Mrs. Rebecca (Gilbert) Burling, of New York, by whom he has one son, Gilbert Azur, a veterinary surgeon at Montrose.

The family of Lathrop, of Susquehanna County, are lineal descendants of Rev. John Lothropp, the pioneer of the family in this country, who was born in 1584, graduated at Queen's College, Cambridge, 1605, and was a minister of the Church of England at Egerton, Kent, from 1611 to 1623, when he became an Independent and was at once settled over the First Independent Church of London. He was a leader, which is proved by the fact that the authorities kept a watchful eye upon him, and arrested and imprisoned him; but, in 1634, being for a time released, he escaped to this country and settled first in Scituate and later in Barnstable, Mass., where he died in 1653. A full account of the family in New England may be found in a genealogical memoir of the Lo-Lathrops, compiled by the late Rev. E. B. Huntington, A.M., of Ridgefield, Conn.

Hon. Charles F. Read, only son of Hon. A. H. Read, was born October 6, 1816. The first fifteen years of his life were spent at home, and eight or nine years of that time he attended school at the old academy; July, 1831, he entered the Register printing-office for five years. In connection with his office duties he was required to carry a mail on horseback, together with three or four hundred newspapers, once a week, through Brooklyn, Harford, Gibson, New Milford, Great Bend, Corbettsville, Lawsville and Franklin, a distance of sixty miles. Faithfully serving out the term of his engagement, he won the good-will of his employer and received an advance in his wages above the contract. He purchased a half-interest in the Independent Volunteer for five hundred dollars. In 1838 he was made deputy United States marshal for Susquehanna County, taking the census of nearly the entire county. In 1841 he formed a partnership with Deacon Jerre Lyons in the mercantile busines. In 1845 he dissolved with Lyons and became a partner with G. V. Bentley for fifteen years. A. Watrous and H. C. Foster succeeded Bentley in 1860; with various partners he continued in the mercantile business twenty-nine years. In 1855 he was associated three or four years with H. H. Frazier in conducting the Independent Republican. In 1856 he was elected associate judge of Susquehanna County, a position which he held by re-election ten years. He was Presidential elector and voted for Lincoln and Johnson in 1864. In business he was careful and conscientious, avoiding speculation and holding usury in abhorrence. In 1840 he became a member of the Presbyterian Church, and continued an earnest and consistent member the remainder of his life. He died January 1, 1876.

Industries–Manufacturing.—Montrose, owing to its location on a hill at the fountain head of a stream, instead of being beside its majestic course, is not adapted to manufacturing; consequently her manufactories are not extensive. The first manufacturing that was done consisted of home-made flannels and woven fabrics of various kinds, such as full-cloth for men's wear, plaids for women's wear, and table-cloths and toweling from flax which was grown in the county. A large number of sheep were kept for their wool for this domestic manufacture. This industry, which was carried on in every household by the good house-wives of those early days, with their spinning-wheels and old-fashioned hand-looms, was of greater importance to the hardy pioneers than we can estimate now. The old merchants remember that the manufactured product of these old hand-looms not only clothed the families of the pioneers, but also furnished an article of commerce that could be exchanged in

New York for such other articles as the settlers needed. All honor to the women, while they were "rising up early in the morning while it was yet night, seeking wool and flax and working willingly with their hands, girding their loins with strength, laying their hands to the spindle and distaff, stretching out their hands to the needy and not fearing the snow for their households, for they were covered with scarlet and plaids and full cloth," [1]—their husbands, who were sitting among the elders of the land, were engaged in manufacturing the rye (which ought to have been ground into flour to make bread for the needy) into whiskey for home consumption.

Distilleries were operated contemporaneously with the early settlement of Montrose, and nearly all the old families were either interested in its manufacture or sale. Francis Fordham had a distillery on the farm now owned by John S. Tarbell, also another in town near Foster's tannery. Nathan Raynor, Mr. Herrick and Clark were interested with him. In 1824 Herrick, Fordham & Clark were in partnership, "continuing the stilling business on a pretty extensive scale." This establishment was closed in June, 1875, and soon after "[2] Clark & Tyler (Harvey) take pleasure in informing the public that the distillery they have been erecting near Jones' mill is now completed and in perfect readiness for business."

"In the second issue of the 'Centinel,' February, 1816, Daniel Curtis offers '350 gallons of good, rectified whiskey at $1.00 per gallon;' and the whole air of the advertisement presupposes the community ready to hail it as a benefaction.

"F. Fordham announces 'a hogshead of rum, to be sold cheaper than ever it was sold in the village.' But he was a respecter of money, if not of persons, since he asked '9 shillings only if N. Y. bills are offered, but 10 shillings if those of Philadelphia, and 11 shillings if bills from the interior.'

"Nathan Raynor 'will sell rum if requested.'

"In 1817, Isaac Post 'sells brandy, rum, gin, and whiskey;' but this was not probably a new business with him, since he became a 'taverner' ten years previous to this.

"Sayre & Mulford advertised, about the same time with Mr. Post, rum and brandy 'of the first quality;' and doubtlessly the endorsement would be considered good, could their liquors be tasted after the adulterated ones of the present day.

"In 1819, 'Nathan H. Lyons sells whiskey by the hogshead, tierce, barrel, gallon, or quart,' in a small red house on the corner since occupied by J. R. Dewitt & Co.

"In 1820, probably from the increased number of distilleries, whiskey is sold, for cash, at 44 cents per gallon, by I. D. Post.

"The Britannia Distillery is announced in 1821.

"In 1822 'Butterfield's best rectified whiskey' was by no means the result of his enterprise alone; I. P. Foster, Daniel Lathrop and S. S. Mulford were silent partners.

"In 1823, the Montrose Gazette complains of the scarcity of wheat, which is felt the more since 'too much rye goes to the distilleries.' One bushel of rye purchased five quarts of whiskey."

Daniel Searle, who run the stage lines for a number of years and had a large number of horses to feed, actually bought out one or two of the distilleries and discontinued them, because they were taking too much grain out of the country and raising the price of feed for his horses. The temperance agitation that followed Rev. Lyman Beecher's sermons caused conscientious men to view the distilling business in a different light from what they formerly did, and they gradually discontinued the business.

Tanneries.—Isaac P. Foster came from South Hampton, L. I., in 1811, and started a tannery. He carried on shoemaking in connection with tanning, and employed a number of hands. The tannery stood near where the Exchange Hotel now stands. They obtained their water supply from a well and a little stream of water that ran through the yard in the wet season. In 1827 Mr. Foster sold to Luther Catlin, whose son-in-law, Stephen Keeler, shortly after discontinued the business and turned the residence and shops into a hotel.

William Foster started a little upper-leather tannery at Montrose in 1838. The first tannery was a primitive affair; the vats had no covering save the clouds. He had buildings, however, in which he carried on shoemaking, together with tanning and currying. His buildings were destroyed by fire and he built larger, and associated his son, Charles S. Foster, in the business with him. This building was also destroyed by fire, when the present building was erected. After William Foster died, Charles S. associated his son, Selden M., in business with him. Their tannery contained thirty vats and consumed from seventy-five to one hundred cords of bark. They tanned about one thousand skins per year until 1883, when the business was discontinued.

[1] See Ecclesiasticus xxxi.

[2] Blackman's "History."

The Susquehanna County Agricultural Works were put into successful operation in 1856 by S. H. & D. Sayre. These works were partially destroyed by fire in 1861–62 and immediately rebuilt. In 1876 F. B. Jewett was chosen president, W. H. Cooper treasurer, and D. Sayre secretary. These officers, together with F. B. Chandler and S. H. Sayre, constituted the business directory. The foundry employed about thirty-five men, and made agricultural implements, steam-engines, grist-mills, plows, wheel-rakes, mowers, revolving rakes, cultivators, dog-powers, corn-shellers, wagon-boxes, agricultural furnaces, cauldron kettles, etc. The works occupy nearly two blocks; the general foundry and machinery department, in which are located the foundry, wood-working department, machine-shop, blacksmith-shop and finishing departments, is two hundred and sixty-six feet long, with an L one hundred and fifty feet in length, which is furnished with good machinery, and the power is furnished by two engines of forty-five horse-power. On the opposite corner, diagonally from the work-shops, are the storehouses, warerooms and offices, which occupy a building one hundred and fifty by forty feet in dimensions. At the western end of the shop is a grist-mill with three runs of stone, which was originally built by Isaac Post. The agricultural works were sold at sheriff's sale November 12, 1885, and purchased by H. L. Beach and J. Griffis for seven thousand dollars. February 1, 1886, H. L. Beach, F. J. Brown and W. S. Benjamin bought the works, and are conducting the business under the firm-name of Beach, Brown & Co. They have expended about three thousand dollars in improvements, replacing the two engines with a fifty-five horse-power Ball automatic cut-off engine, which does all the work with one-half the fuel formerly used. They grind from six hundred to seven hundred bushels of grain per day in the mill, and make all kinds of agricultural instruments in the shop, as was formerly done.

Toy Works.—C. M. Crandall Company, manufacturers of building blocks and toys, started their toy-factory at Montrose in the second story of the foundry building in 1867. It was started principally for the purpose of manufacturing Crandall's building-blocks, which were invented and patented by Crandall. This toy had an immense sale. This was the pioneer wooden toy-factory in the United States; previous to this wooden toys were imported from Germany. In 1875 the works were moved into a commodious building, about forty by seventy feet, and three stories high; besides this there were offices, lumber-sheds, etc. The buildings were back of Boyd & Cooley's and extended the whole length of the block. They employed about sixty-five hands and did a business of sixty thousand dollars per year. This building was burned in the great fire in August, 1886. The New York Tribune said that it was the most complete factory of the kind in the world. The business was conducted in the foundry again for a time, but has now been removed.

Fork-Factory.—George Lathrop and Asa Hawley started a factory for manufacturing agricultural implements, and operated it for a few years, when it was reorganized by Turner and others, and called The Fork Company. In 1866 Azur Lathrop took fifteen thousand dollars stock or one-half interest in it, and was finally obliged to take full charge of the concern. In 1875 he sold the building to C. M. Crandall and moved the fork-factory to South Montrose. This factory did a business of twenty thousand dollars per year, and employed from fifteen to twenty-five hands.

Francis Fordham was the first hatter in town. He started the business in 1812, just below Boyd's corner. He found good clay and burnt brick seventy years ago, where Boyd & Cooley are now burning brick for their new store. William Turrell started the first saddlery and harness-shop in 1817, in the basement of his residence.

Wagon and Sleigh-Making.—Charles Beardslee started the first wagon-shop at Montrose in 1832. He rented a building at first and built a shop the following year, back of the Montrose House, extending from Church Street to Strawberry Alley. Jonas Mack, who was an apprentice in the same shop with Mr. Beardslee in 1829, came with him, and in 1839 purchased the business, which he continued until 1856, when he traded the shop to Leonard Searle for a farm, and Mr. Searle sold it to E. H. Rogers, who conducted the business for a number of years and sold it to Isaac and James Melhuish, who run it a while and sold it to Blakeslee, who sold it to Jonas Mack, who has a shop near Lathrop's planing-mill. E. H. Rogers has the old shop. Mr. Rogers has worked at the business for nearly fifty years, and Mr. Mack has worked at it since 1829, excepting a few years while he was on the farm. These shops formerly employed from eight to eleven men, and did a large business in carriage, wagon and sleigh-making; but this work is now being concentrated in large factories, and the two veteran workmen above mentioned are all that remain in the business at Montrose. Jonas Mack built the best coaches for the stage proprietors that could be obtained anywhere in this section. Messrs. Beck & Warner are manufacturing tables quite extensively at present (1886).

Cabinet-Shops.—Jeremiah Ethridge came to Montrose from New London, Conn , and established the first cabinet-maker's shop in 1818, in the South neighborhood. He occupied a building in the rear of the present residence of Dr. Halsey. This he used as a shop for a few years ; then he built a residence at the corner of Cherry Street and Cedar Lane. He devoted his time exclusively to furniture business until 1835. James N. Eldridge came to Montrose about 1835 and established a furniture-shop on quite an extensive scale. He was burned out in 1854. W. W. Smith learned his trade of Eldridge and commenced business for himself in 1844. He set up the first engine in town, employed from eight to ten hands, and did a large business until competition from large factories destroyed the small furniture-shops. Smith & Stevens were partners first; then Fayette Avery came into the firm. Afterwards it was Smith & Fordham ; finally W. W. Smith, who is still the village undertaker. The first three years that he was in business he only took in seventy-five cents in money ; all the rest was barter, such as cattle, grain, apples, lumber,—anything the farmers could produce. Money was so scarce that he gave Norman J. Mitchell a mahogany bureau worth twenty-five dollars to pay fifteen dollars taxes. During the forty years and more that Mr. Smith has been undertaker he has buried over three thousand persons. He has buried from one hundred to one hundred and sixty annually. His services have extended for a number of miles around Montrose. Garner Isbell was also an early cabinet-maker and ingenious at all kinds of mechanical work. Ira Vadikan was the first man that had marble-works in town. In 1880 E. J. Mathews started a shop, which employs four men. T. C. Allen manages the business (in 1887).

Jabez Frink carried on blacksmithing for Isaac Post in a shop west of the William Foster place in 1810. His sons, Jabez Frink, Jr., and George Frink, followed the same trade for many years. Alanson Coy and Daniel Curtis were also early blacksmiths. Embly Shaffer and Rufus Allen worked at the trade later for a long time. Rufus Frink came to Bridgewater from Connecticut about 1806, and was the first mason in the place. He also worked at coopering and shoemaking. His only son, Avery Frink, has been a carpenter and builder for fifty-seven years. W. H. Boyd and Mr. Frink have been the principal builders and contractors in town. Zebulon Deans, Asahel Deans, Hiram Plum, Oliver Smith, Hyde Crocker, Levi Gregory, Daniel Gregory, Ackerly Bronson, Charles Avery and Hubbard Avery are among the number who have built the houses in Montrose. Zebulon Deans came in 1804, and his brother, Asahel, in 1806. They were the first carpenters at Montrose. Asahel Avery, who lived in Dimock in 1801, was a carpenter, and did work in Wilkes-Barre. Mr. Deans worked for him there.

George Claggett was probably the first tailor. Reuben B. Locke advertised as a tailor as early as 1817. He continued in the business a number of years and became so corpulent that he seldom rose from his chair. He sat behind his counter and cut garments without rising. He was a great reader, told good stories, laughed and grew fat, until he weighed some four or five hundred pounds. Philander Lines learned the trade of him and continued the business a number of years, until S. H. Morse, a tailor from New Milford, came to Montrose and entered into partnership with him. Mr. Lines removed to Great Bend, and Mr. Morse continued until age compelled him to stop in 1883. John Grover is an old tailor in town. W. H. Mawhiney learned the trade of Morse, purchased the old National Bank building and now has the finest tailor-shop in town. George Walker and Ralph Smith also work at the business. In 1887 F. D. Melhuish and R. B. Smith formed a partnership and have combined the jewelry, dry-goods and tailoring business in one store.

Mrs. S. S. Mulford was one of the first milliners. She kept the largest stock of goods and trimmed bonnets in connection with her husband's store. Mrs. Sayre also did some work in that line. In 1831 the Misses Sutton advertise as milliners over A. Baldwin's harness-shop. Mrs. Faurot worked at the millinery business a great many years. Mrs. S. E. Newton has the largest millinery store now (1887). Mrs. Backus, Mrs. Baker and a number of others work at the business. Miss Simpson was the finest dress-maker ever in the place up to the time when she came here. She worked at the business some thirty years and died here. Many women with ingenuity enough to construct a woman's outfit have worked at the business at Montrose.

WILLIAM H. BOYD.—Robert Boyd, his great-great-grandfather, emigrated from the north of Ireland early in the eighteenth century, and settled in Sadsbury township, in the western part of the great Chester Valley, in Chester County, Pa. Here he purchased land, upon which he resided until his death (1678–1743). His grave is one of the first in Octoraro churchyard. The sturdy Scotch-Irish Presbyterianism of his native land he brought with him from over the sea, and his descendants have always adhered to it.

He left to survive him one son, James Boyd (1715–99), who inherited his lands, consisting of four hundred acres. James Boyd had two sons—Matthew and George—and before his death he conveyed these lands to them by deed, in equal proportions. The descendants of George (1742–1818) yet occupy the land conveyed to him by his father (now the sixth generation).

Matthew Boyd was born in 1737. He had imbibed from his Scotch-Irish ancestry that hatred of oppression and love of liberty that led him, early in the great struggle for independence, to take an active part in opposition to British oppression; in fact, during the darkest days of the Revolution, a Scotch-Irish "Tory" was unheard of. The following document, now in possession of his grandson, evidences alike his generosity and his patriotism:

"PRINCETOWN, January 20, 1777.

"Received of Capt. Boyd, of the 6th Battalion, Chester County Militia, the sum of Fifteen Pounds, which he, the said Boyd, desires me to divide amongst the poor associates of said Battalion now in the service of their country, as equally as my judgement would direct. (Signed)

"J. FULLERTON, Major."

Another time-yellowed document, also in possession of William H. Boyd, is a commission granted by the "Supreme Executive Council of Penna. to Matthew Boyd, Esq.," as lieutenant-colonel, signed by the president and secretary of the Council and dated at Philadelphia, May 6, 1777.

In January, 1769, Matthew Boyd married Margaret Hamilton (1746–77), who belonged to an early and prominent family of Lancaster County, Pa. They had four children,—James, born 1769; Jane, 1771; Mary, 1773; and William Hamilton, 1776. The latter died in 1808, leaving a wife and three children. On the 17th day of May, 1782, Colonel Matthew Boyd was almost instantly killed by being thrown from his horse during a review of his battalion at Cochranville, Chester County, Pa. James Boyd was thirteen years old when his father died, and upon reaching his majority came into possession of the old homestead in Chester County, known as the "Valley Farm." He was married, in January, 1804, to Mary McMullin, who resided at Columbia, Lancaster County, Pa. They had seven children,—Nancy, Matthew (1806–37), William Hamilton, John P. (1810–35), Francis G. (married and now living in Iowa), Hannah and Josephus (1819–83; he was a printer by trade, and for several years edited and published the People's Advocate, at Montrose, Pa.). After his marriage James Boyd remained on the old homestead, cultivating its fertile acres, until 1822, when he sold the Chester County farm.

Wm H Boyd

Having read some flattering accounts of the lands in Susquehanna County, in the Village Record, published at West Chester, he decided to come and see for himself, and he made the journey on horseback, being absent from home three weeks. While in Susquehanna County he purchased of Joshua W. Raynsford the farm in South Bridgewater now owned by E. P. Stamp. The consideration was two thousand dollars. Early in April, 1823, James Boyd started with his family for their new home in Susquehanna County. A large, old-fashioned Pennsylvania wagon drawn by four horses, and a one-horse "Dearborn," were the means of transportation. The journey occupied nine days. Few goods were brought, except bedding and a few household necessities, and no agricultural implements except an old-style Scotch plow, which was soon found to be useless in the stony soil of this section. Surrounding his new home with such comforts as he could command, James Boyd continued to cultivate and improve his farm until his death, which occurred in 1835. He was a life-long Democrat and a great admirer of Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson, both of whom his vote assisted in electing. He served his country for a time as a soldier during the War of 1812–14, being stationed at Baltimore when the British were repulsed near that city, and General Ross killed. His wife, Mary, survived him ten years, and died in Montrose borough, to which place she removed after her husband's death.

William Hamilton Boyd was born December 8, 1808, at the old homestead in Chester County, and was named after his uncle, who had died that year. He was fourteen years old when his father removed from Chester to Susquehanna County. His boyhood was spent on his father's farm, and in the performance of such duties as fell to the lot of farmers' boys sixty or seventy years ago. The only educational facilities within reach were those furnished by the country schools, and a few months in summer, in his early years, and a few months in winter, after he was old enough to help on the farm, comprised his educational advantages.

When he was eighteen years of age he left home to learn the carpenter's trade, and served an apprenticeship of three years. After learning his trade he worked several years as a journeyman, most of the time in Bradford County, Pa., until 1838, when he went to the then Territory of Iowa, where he spent nearly two years working at his trade. While there he voted at the first election had in the Territory —the election being held at Davenport, in Scott County. In December, 1839, in company with a Connecticut man, he started for home, traveling on foot the first hundred miles over the almost uninhabited prairies of Illinois, some days hardly seeing a habitation, and on one occasion, having lost their way in a snow-storm, came near spending a December night on the bleak and desolate prairie. Arriving at Peru, on the Illinois River, they took stage via Chicago to Detroit, from which place they proceeded to Buffalo by boat over Lake Erie. At Buffalo Mr. Boyd separated from his traveling companion and took stage for Montrose. The trip occupied ten days.

In the spring of 1840 Mr. Boyd commenced his business career in Montrose as a contractor and builder, and for the ensuing eighteen years he devoted his entire time to that business. The first building erected by him was a dwelling-house for Mrs. Biddle, now owned by her daughters. Of the public buildings in the borough, the academy (now graded school building) was erected by him, also the Episcopal Church, which was the first building in the borough covered by a slate roof. In company with one Smith, he built the old jail (now used by the Fire Department) and was associated with Avery Frink in the erection of the court-house. After engaging in mercantile business he continued his occupation of builder, and besides dwellings and store-buildings, he erected the present Presbyterian Church, and in 1883 he was awarded the contract for building the addition to the court-house.

During his active career as a builder he has erected, besides the public buildings mentioned, forty new dwellings, eight stores and remodeled as many more. The title "veteran builder of Montrose" certainly belongs to him, and, what is better, he enjoys a reputation for thoroughness and conscientious work that stamps the creations of his mechanical skill with an appearance of substantial permanency.

In the fall of 1858 he entered into partnership with A. L. Webster in the tin and sheet-iron business, under the firm-name of Boyd & Webster, and a few months thereafter, by purchase of S. A. Woodruff, they added stoves, tinware and hardware to their stock in trade. This was the foundation of the large and prosperous business with which Mr. Boyd has been identified to the present time. Besides his original partner, Mr. Webster, who left the firm permanently in 1868, several gentlemen have been associated with him in the business. The present firm is Boyd & Cooley—the junior member, J. H. Cooley, having been connected with the business since 1876.

In the disastrous fire of August 27, 1886, the store of Boyd & Cooley, with a large portion of its contents, was destroyed. The building was owned by Mr. Boyd, and was built by him in 1858. He had just completed extensive improvements by adding another story to the building, with French roof, etc., when the fire came and reduced it all to ashes. Scarcely had the embers cooled before Mr. Boyd began to plan for rebuilding. His first step was to purchase an adjoining lot, and if his present plans reach fruition, the summer of 1887 will see a fine three-story brick building erected over the now blackened waste.

D. C. Goodhue

Few men at his age would undertake such an enterprise, but a pardonable pride in his old calling still clings to him, and the desire is but natural to leave to his fellow-townsmen an enduring specimen of the builder's skill, which, at the same time, will serve to remind the present and future generations of one so closely identified with the development and growth of Montrose. Mr. Boyd has been, for these many years, a large employer of labor, both skilled and unskilled; and there are many successful mechanics of to-day who "learned their trade" of him.

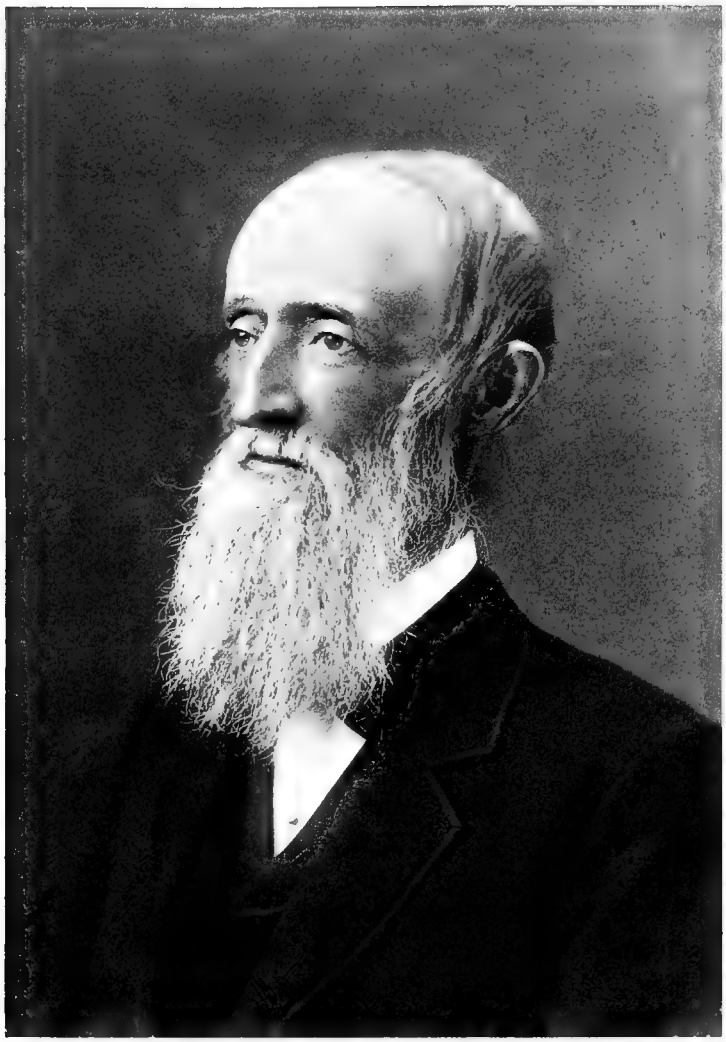
Mr. Boyd united with the Presbyterian Church of Montrose in 1843, and has ever been active in advancing its interests, both temporal and spiritual, having been one of its trustees, and president of the board. He is a member of Warren Lodge, No. 240, A. Y. M.; a charter member of Warren Chapter, No. 180, and a member of Great Bend Commandery, Knights Templar.

In politics, Mr. Boyd acted with the Democratic party up to the time of Buchanan's administration, casting his first Presidential vote for Andrew Jackson. Since 1860 he has been an active Republican. While never seeking office, his fellow-citizens have frequently thrust office upon him. He has served two or more terms as Councilman, been elected assessor several times, was one of the commissioners appointed by the Legislature to locate the Poor Asylum for Montrose and Bridgewater, and in 1851 was elected coroner of the county.

Mr. Boyd never married, but for many years he has occupied his pleasant and commodious home near the Methodist Church, where its home-comforts are shared by his two sisters, Nancy and Hannah Boyd, who reside with him.

De Witt C. Fordham.—Abraham Fordham (1784–1859), a native of Southampton, L. I., with his wife, Letitia (Atkins) Fordham (1796–1864), whom he married in New York City in 1814, settled at Montrose in 1818, with his family. He was a cooper by trade, but before his marriage had had a quite interesting experience on the high seas. During the War of 1812 he shipped on a whaling vessel from New London, Conn., for South America, and spent on the coast of Peru and on other parts of the coast nearly one year, when, with his comrades, they sailed on a seal expedition; they had completed their cargo of seals and caught a large number, which would net each a large income in the market, and were within ten days' sail of New York, when they were overtaken by a British man-of-war, their cargo taken from them, and they, penniless, landed on the coast near Norfolk, Va. Fordham, through the kindness of a gentleman who gave him ten dollars, found his way to New York, where he soon afterwards married, and soon sought this then new country for a home.

Upon arriving at Montrose, he started his cooper-shop on South Main Street, where a Mr. Morse, a tailor, now resides, and carried on his business there until his removal to Cherry Street, where he continued in business until near the close of his life. He was, during his latter years, a member of the Methodist Church, but his wife was a life-long member of the Presbyterian Church, her ancestors having been Scotch-Irish. His ancestors were English.



Their children were Abraham (1815–64), a cooper by trade, married and reared a family of children. He volunteered in the service of the United States in the fall of 1861 (Company D,) Dr. Dimock, captain, Fiftieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, went to South Carolina on that perilous voyage in the "Winfield Scott," and remained with his regiment until they were called back to Virginia to confront the foe. From there they went West, where, while on detached duty, he was taken prisoner, sent to Richmond, and subsequently to Andersonville prison, where he suffered and died. Five of his sons—Albert, William, Amos, John and George—also went to the war and served their country. A second son, William, born in 1816, read law with Arial Carr at Montrose, practiced his profession for many years, and resides at Kismet, Morgan County, Tenn. He handled supplies for the government during the war. Mary A., born 1818, died young. John Robert, born in 1821, learned the printer's trade of Rev. A. L. Post, was a teacher for several years, afterwards a merchant, and is at present a superintendent of the Dickson Manufacturing Company at Scranton. Jeremiah (1824–49), a saddle and harness-maker at Friendsville, Pa., died at Montrose. Fitz Henry, born in 1826, a cooper at Montrose. De Witt Clinton Fordham, born at Montrose October 2, 1827, subject of this sketch. Almira E., born in 1829, never married. James A., born in 1832, resides in Pittston, Pa.; volunteered and served until the close of the late Civil War; and Ann Eliza, born in 1825, died at the age of fourteen years.

De Witt C. Fordham learned the cooper's trade of his father, and upon reaching his majority, set up business for himself at the old place on Cherry Street, where he carried it on successfully until after the close of the war. His principal goods manufactured were firkins, tubs and churns for dairy use in Susquehanna County. He built the present shop in 1860. During the war, when the State called for emergency men at the time of the battle of Antietam, he responded and, under Captain R. J. Van Valkenburg, went to Harrisburg; but danger being averted, he returned home with the company. Upon the invasion of the State by the Confederate Army in 1863, on June 3d of that year he volunteered as an emergency man, and was enrolled in Company B, Captain W. E. Post, Twenty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; went with his company to Carlisle, Pa., followed Lee's army across the line of the State, and captured many prisoners, who were sent to Chambersburg. He was in service about three months and returned home. Before arriving home, however, Mr. Fordham was drafted, was ordered to Scranton, where, upon examination, he was rejected and allowed to return home.

He has, outside of his regular business, been engaged in buying produce and pork and shiping to New York, in loaning money, discounting paper and in dealing in real estate. He is the owner of two farms in Bridgewater township, on one of which he fitted up, five years ago, three trout-ponds, and stocked them with trout caught in the neighboring streams. These ponds, which are beautifully laid out, are fed by seven different springs, which are one of the sources of the Wyalusing Creek, and abound with fish at various stages of growth. He is a thorough-going business man, active and enterprising. He is unmarried.

Henry F. Turrell.—His father, William Turrell (1781–1853), was son of James Turrell, Jr., and grandson of James Turrell, of New Milford, Litchfield County, Conn., where he was born. In February, 1816, having been preceded by his brother Leman, he came to Montrose, and for a short time, with his wife and two children, resided with his brother-in-law, David Benedict, who had a home on the site of the residence, now owned and occupied by George P. Little, Esq. The same spring he removed to what is now Auburn township, where he lived in a log house for about one year; and in the spring of 1817 returned to Montrose, and settled where his son, Henry F., now resides, which was his home the remainder of his life. He built the present residence in 1824. He had learned the saddlery and harness business in New Milford, while a young man, and for several years was a merchant at Washington, near that place. In 1817 he opened a saddlery and harness-shop in the basement of the building where he resided, and continued the business there until 1835, when he erected a two-story frame building on the opposite side of the road, where he continued his business successfully, until he retired from active business in 1843. He was a man of sterling integrity, and one of the first to establish business in Montrose. Although not a member of any church, he was a man of correct habits, high moral sentiment, and possessed a desire to co-operate with his fellow-men in the development of the place, and in the establishment of educational and religious institutions, to which he contributed. His wife, whom he married in 1808, was Polly Silvia Benedict (1785–1873), a native of the same place as himself, who was a consistent member of the Baptist Church at Montrose, who reared her children under Christian influences. Their children are Urania, born in 1808, widow of the late Embley Shafer, of Montrose, a woman of great excellence and good influence, who has children, Mary Elizabeth, wife of Clinton Lewis, of Merryall, Bradford County; Amelia C., widow of the late Hon. E. B. Chase, for many years publisher of the Montrose Democrat, and who served in the State Legislature; Arline M., wife of Wm. J. Crane, of Pottsville; and Wm. T. Shafer, a journalist of Evanston, Wyoming Territory. The eldest son, Hon. William J. Turrell (1814–81), was a lawyer at Montrose; State Senator in 1863, '64, '65; Speaker of the Senate in 1865, whose sketch may be found in the Bar chapter of this volume. Sarah Maria (1818–53), never married, died at Port Jervis, on her way home from Connecticut; and Harry F. Turrell, who was born on the homestead at Montrose, March 12, 1822, where he has resided since. He attended the Montrose Academy while a boy, and at the age of fifteen began learning the saddlery and harness trade, at which he served faithfully until he reached his majority. He bought out the business, and succeeded his father in the same, in 1843, which he continued until 1868, when he retired from that business. The building and shop was destroyed by fire in 1854, rebuilt by him the following year, and that in turn destroyed by fire in the great conflagration of August, 1886. He has been little identified with politics, but served the people as chief burgess of Montrose for three terms. He is a member of the Baptist church of Montrose. He married, July 25, 1860, Elsie H., a daughter of Thomas (1805–85) and Jane (Hill) (1807–53), Hardenbergh, of Sullivan Co., N. Y. She was born at Fallsburgh, that county, in 1831. They have one child, Wm. H. Turrell, stationer at Montrose. Mrs. Turrell is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Montrose. Her grandfather, Herman Myer Hardenbergh, was a member of the State Legislature, and died at Albany, N. Y. Her great-grandfather, Girard Hardenberg, was a large land owner in Ulster County, N. Y., and his father, Johannes Hardenbergh, was the progenitor of the family on the Hudson. Jane Hill was a daughter of James Hill, who removed from the Hudson, and was one of the earliest settlers at Fallsburgh when it was a wilderness. The children of Thomas and Jane (Hill) Hardenbergh are Elsie H., who came as a teacher with Prof. Stoddard to Montrose, and there met her future husband; Catherine; James; Thomas Lockwood, deceased; Maria Louise, a teacher at Glens Falls; Hannah, Josephine, Isaiah and Jane Swift, deceased; and Elizabeth, wife of Aaron E. Wright, of New York.

H. F. Durrell

HOTELS.—Isaac Post, who had a house on the post-office corner, kept the first tavern at Montrose, about 1806. He soon had goods in one corner of his tavern and thus kept a kind of combination hotel and store. He was also appointed postmaster in 1808, and for the time his place was the centre of the business activity of the settlement. He was licensed in 1807. After Mr. Post moved across the road to Boyd's corner, in 1818 or earlier, Mr. Green was there, followed by John Buckingham, Leonard Searle and Patrick Hepburn, Preserved Hinds and Rosswell Morss. This for a number of years was the house of the place, especially when Leonard Searle had it. Austin Powell erected a hotel in 1812 just below the present Exchange hotel. Eli Gregory had it for a while. About 1817 Edward Fuller took the house and run it for ten years or more. His wife excelled as a cook. Stephen Hinds, who afterwards owned the house, kept boarders for a number of years. It was finally abandoned, and at last destroyed by fire. Benjamin Sayre kept the "Washington Hotel" for about ten years, from 1819. The "Keystone Hotel," kept by William K. Hatch, stood on the same site, and was destroyed by fire. The Montrose Democrat and E. L. Blakeslee's offices occupy the site of the Washington and Keystone Hotels.

Exchange Hotel.—After Luther Catlin purchased the I. P. Foster tannery, his son-in-law, S. F. Keeler, converted the old Foster and Raynsford shoe and leather store into a hotel, which he called the "Farmers' Hotel." After Keeler died his executors rented it to Mr. Hollenback and Daniel McCracken. It was finally sold to Dr. Gardner, who has rented it to M. J. Harrington, Ira Woodworth, E. Guy and L. M. Baldwin, who has it now, in 1887. For a number of years it has been known as the "Exchange Hotel." It will accommodate about forty guests.

Tarbell House.—In 1814 Daniel Curtis built a hotel on the corner opposite the court-house, and kept it as late as 1832. It was known as the "Franklin House." From newspaper notices it appears that he occasionally gave dances in his house. He was succeeded in the business by Adolphus Olmstead, who kept it until 1838, when he was succeeded by Gen. Davis D. Warner, who kept it for a time himself, and rented it to W. K. Hatch part of the time. January 1, 1856, Mr. Wanner sold the "Franklin House" to John S. Tarbell, a native of Vermont. When Mr. Tarbell bought the property the hotel would accommodate about forty guests. He raised the building and built it all anew, added another story and enlarged the cellar. The house is supplied with water from a well. The wind which blows so freely over the hills of Montrose is utilized in turning a wind-mill, which supplies the power that operates a force and suction pump, that carries the water to the height of one hundred and four feet from the bottom of the well into a two hundred and thirty-barrel tank, whence it is distributed to all parts of the house. The house is heated with steam and will accommodate one hundred and twenty guests. Its prominent location near the court-house renders it the political headquarters of both political parties. There is one of the largest barns in Northern Pennsylvania connected with the hotel. It is sixty-six by one hundred feet, with a private carriage shed attached, twenty-one by forty-two. Mr. Tarbell was born in a hotel and has owned the "Tarbell House" for thirty years. Recently J. W. Burgess, a hotel man of forty years' standing, and F. E. Cramer rented the hotel, and are rendering it alike agreeable for the wayfaring man and stranger who would stop but for a night, or the summer boarder, who would tarry among the hills of Susquehanna and breathe the pure mountain air of Montrose.

Montrose House.—Ezekiel Guy bought the R. B. Little property and rebuilt and enlarged the house for hotel purposes in 1883. It is heated by steam throughout, and can accommodate seventy guests. It is patronized by summer boarders, and is a well-kept house. The "Tarbell House," "Montrose House" and "Exchange Hotel" are the only licensed places in Montrose, which speaks volumes for the temperate habits and good order of her citizens.

JOHN S. TARBELL.—His ancestors were born in sunny France. His grandfather, Isaac Tarbell, came with his parents to America when a child, and settled in Boston previous to the Revolutionary War. Here he remained until his marriage, when he removed to Windsor County, Vermont, and engaged in the business of hotel-keeping. He removed, about 1820, to Jefferson County, N. Y., where he died. Their children were: Isaac, Jr., Eli, John S., Willard, Jonathan, Johanna and Sarah. Eli Tarbell was born in Windsor County, Vt., Sept. 25, 1790, where he spent the early part of his life. In 1815 he married Sibyl, daughter of Leonard Parker, who kept a hotel in Windsor County, Vt., where she was born March 7, 1798. Soon after his marriage Mr. Tarbell also commenced keeping a public-house in Vermont, but in 1820 he came to Smithville, Chenango County, N. Y., where, a few years afterward, he erected a hotel and resumed the business of a hotel-keeper. He afterwards erected a larger and more commodious hotel, converting the former one into a dwelling-house, and continued the business until his death, in 1845. His widow survived him, living to see a goodly group of great-grandchildren around her, as evidenced by a picture now in possession of her son, John S. Tarbell, representing four generations, and died at the ripe age of nearly eighty-three.

Their children were Sewell (1816–66); Laura, died young; John S., 1819; Mary, 1821, residing at the old homestead; Charles P., 1824, a resident of Smithville, on part of the old homestead; George L. (1827–71); Francis, 1829, a resident of Olympia, Washington Territory; and James H., 1835, a resident of same Territory.

John S. Tarbell was born in Windsor County, Vt., June 22, 1819. When one year old his parents removed to Smithville, Chenango County, N. Y. Here his boyhood and early manhood were spent. His educational advantages were confined to the public schools; for when old enough to help about his father's hotel, he evinced such an aptitude for the business that he became his father's invaluable assistant, and although he made more than one attempt to attend boarding-school, he was each time summoned home by his father to assist in some sudden emergency. In 1843 he married Mary E., only daughter of Isaac and Emeline Ketchem, who was born in Smithville, N. Y., April 10, 1824. For two or three years after his marriage he remained with his father in the hotel, and then engaged in the mercantile business at Smithville, which he successfully carried on until the close of the year 1854. Early in January, 1855, he came to Montrose, and on the 8th of that month he purchased the property since so well and favorably known to the traveling public as the "Tarbell House." It was then owned by Gen. D. D. Warner, and the building had been erected in 1814 by Daniel Curtis, when Montrose was a mere hamlet. Under the able management of Mr. Tarbell the house gained an enviable reputation and a host of patrons. In 1870, finding that his patronage was outgrowing his accommodations, he entirely remodeled, rebuilt and enlarged the building into the present spacious and commodious hotel, introducing modern improvements and conveniences, and converting it into a model travelers' home. The house is three stories in height, with a frontage of one hundred and two feet and a depth of seventy-eight feet, with an L adjoining. Standing nearly one thousand nine hundred feet above tide water, its cool verandahs without and its comforts within have attractions for the summer tourist seeking mountain air, fine scenery and home comforts, that cause many to tarry under its hospitable roof. In addition to the improvements noted, Mr. Tarbell, some years afterward, introduced water throughout his hotel, and also further conduced to the comfort of his guests by heating the hotel with steam. He continued to cater to the wants and the comfort of the traveling public until a few years since, when he retired from its active control, and at the present time the hotel is under the able management of Messrs. Burgess & Cramer.

John L. Parkell

Besides the hotel property, Mr. Tarbell owns four improved farms, two of which are under his own management. The home or hotel farm, lying partly within the borough limits, and from which his hotel is supplied with vegetables, fruits, hay, etc., is one of the most valuable in the county. He has also been largely interested in lumbering, owning a timber tract and operating several saw-mills. He was for a time interested in a line of stages, and is a stockholder and director of the Montrose Railway.

In all matters connected with the development and improvement of Montrose Mr. Tarbell has always been at the front with his influence and means. The fine block on the corner of Public Avenue and Church Street, a portion of which is occupied by the post-office, was erected by him in 1886. In 1879 his wife, a lady much respected by all who knew her, died after a short illness. Their children are Mary F., 1846, wife of John R. Raynsford, who is secretary of the Montrose Railway and present postmaster at Montrose, where he resides, being also largely engaged in the coal business and other enterprises; Eli K., 1850, now residing at Hurley, Wis., where he is engaged in the hotel business, and is also interested in mineral lands there; Emily A., 1851, married for her first husband Leonard Searle, Jr., who died in 1879. She married for her second husband Warren S. Danolds, and resides at Albion, N. Y. In 1883 Mr. Tarbell married for his second wife Mrs. Emily Birchard, a native of Binghamton, N. Y. The same year he purchased of Wm. H. Cooper his present pleasant home on North Main Street. In politics Mr. Tarbell has acted with the Whig and Republican parties, casting his first Presidential vote for General Harrison and his last for James G. Blaine. He is a prominent Mason, belonging to Warren Lodge and Chapter, is a member of Malta Commandery of Binghamton and a charter member of Great Bend Consistory, No. 32. Mr. Tarbell has fixed a landmark in the town of his adoption by the hotel that bears his name, and in which he takes a pardonable pride. For more than thirty years he was the popular proprietor of this well-known hostelry.

Standing over six feet in height, his cordial manner and genial ways render him easy of recognition, and no person in this section of the State is more widely known. He is a man of marked individuality, positive in his ways, firm in his convictions and loyal to his friends.

LIVERYMEN.—The first men that kept horses to let to the public were the hotel-keepers, Captain Sayres, Leonard Searle, John S. Tarbell, and probably a few others kept a few horses for such purposes. In 1851 David D. Hinds started the livery business at Montrose and carried it on for eight years. He kept about sixteen horses, followed by James Goodwin. He was succeeded in the business by Hugh Mitchell and J. R. Raynsford. James Goodwin purchased Raynsford's interest and Raynsford & Goodwin sold to Perigo & Hibbard, who have continued the business at the old place since. Their stable is at the rear of Dessauer's store, on Church Street. They keep twenty wagons and as many sleighs and about twelve horses. Walter Pratt keeps about ten horses and Smith & Co. about the same.

Albert Miller, in the Tarbell House basement, and ——Knoll, over the post-office, are the village barbers. In 1886 Mr. Miller put in the first public baths ever established in the town.

INSURANCE.—In 1824 Almon H. Read advertised as a fire insurance agent. Benjamin R. Lyons early acted as an insurance agent. F. B. Chandler also commenced nearly half a century ago and continues the business yet. Billings Stroud commenced insuring in Susquehanna County, and did the leading insurance business in the county until he sold out to Gilbert & Kasson. In 1839 the Susquehanna Mutual Insurance Company was organized, with James C. Biddle, president; Asa Dimock, vice-president; Isaac S. Kellum, treasurer; Davis Dimock, Jr., attorney; J. W. Raynsford, secretary; J. C. Biddle, M. S. Wilson and M. C. Tyler, Executive Committee. This company did business for about ten years. Henry C. Tyler has also been in the insurance business for about twenty years.

Francis B. Chandler was born in Colerain, Mass., in 1816. He came to Montrose in 1834 and went into partnership with his brother-in-law, B. R. Lyons, and continued with him until 1851, when they dissolved. Chandler continues the mercantile business yet, also the insurance, business, which he then took from Lyons. His first company was the Lycoming Mutual. He now has the Franklin and Pennsylvania. Mr. Chandler has been one of the active business men at Montrose for many years. His wife is a daughter of Judge Jessup.

John Stroud came to South Montrose from New London and bought a property of Rev. Joseph Wood in 1820. He walked to New York and back to get forty dollars to pay off the mortgage on his place. He was a hatter by trade and followed that business for some time. His daughter, Sallie, was the wife of William Smith, a wagon-maker and painter. Billings Stroud, his son, has been insurance agent since 1851. He commenced with the State Mutual, a company which Chandler turned over to him. Afterwards the Home became his principal company. He also became adjuster for the Home Insurance Company of North America and agent for many other fire, life and accident companies. Mr. Stroud has paid a great many thousands of dollars in losses to the people of Susquehanna County.

THE TELEGRAPH was first brought into Montrose by Ezra Cornell in 1852. He ran a single line from Binghamton to Montrose, thence to Carbondale, thence through Honesdale to New York by way of Narrowsburg. Charles Brown was the first telegraph operator here, in a stone building near where the engine-house now stands. Daniel Sayre was the next operator, and T. A. Lyon and son have been operators since 1873. This was one of the first telegraph lines in America. The telephone was extended from New Milford to Montrose in May, 1885. The exchange is at the post-office, and is managed by J. R. Raynsford, the postmaster, and his clerks.

PHOTOGRAPHY.—Soon after the renowned Frenchman, M. Daguerre, made his important discovery, by which the human face could be pictured on the silver plate, an artist appeared in Montrose and succeeded in capturing the "exact resemblance" of a number of our prominent citizens.

This was about the year 1842, and it is believed by some that Edwin Foot, from New Milford, was the first, while others are of the impression that O. P. Reeves, a traveling man, preceded Foot. As this is not material, both being here in the same or the following year, we will pass on to observe that all who can remember the daguerreotypes of that early day will know that we speak truthfully when we say that they were very imperfect. They could not well be otherwise, for they were taken by a small side-window, which had the effect of overdoing one side of the picture while the other side was left in the deep shadow of indefinite darkness.

These gentlemen were followed by Ambrose Hickox, who was afterwards a quite prominent artist in Binghamton. The work which he produced was a decided improvement upon that of his predecessors.

But Willis Gibbs, a traveling artist, was the first whose pictures gave our people a fair degree of satisfaction. During his stay of a number of weeks, in the basement of Searle's Hotel, he was liberally patronized, and a number of families were taken in groups. One of these groups was of three noted characters, who, if not distinguished for their useful lives, or classed as our highest and most worthy men, were well known as leaders in everything that was sensational. These were Lee Dudley, Bob Merrill and Zeke Card.

W. B. Deans, a native of this section, received his first instructions in the "art divine" with Mr. Gibbs, and afterwards took additional lessons with the Livermore Brothers, who occupied rooms over Mulford's store, and who left behind them some very pleasing evidences of their skill in the art. Mr. Deans followed the business during the following winter at Dimock and Springville, and the next summer at several points in New York State, after which he returned to Montrose and established himself in the Odd Fellows' building, where he remained, the only artist in the county, for four or five years, being familiarly known in his advertisements as "The fellow who paints by the aid of the sun,

And copies men's faces as though it were fun."

Notwithstanding the fact that he held the ground so exclusively during this period, there were soon after this some fifteen traveling artists within the county borders at one time, who moved their galleries from place to place on wheels.

After the great fire of 1854 the brick block (then called Phœnix Block) was built, and Mr. Deans removed to the first skylight gallery erected here, over the store of Bentley & Read. Soon after this ambrotypes were introduced, and daguerreotypes were, in a great measure, superseded by the new process.

In 1861, after a successful business of about fourteen years, Mr. Deans sold his business here to John B. Hazleton, and purchased a gallery in Scranton. But he did not choose to remain there, and after one year returned to Montrose and went into partnership with Mr. Hazleton.

Photographs had now come to the front, so that the old styles were but little in demand. The following year was the "year of the draft," when prices were high and money plenty, and it proved to be a very profitable season, for during that year the firm of Hazleton & Deans took a much larger number of pictures than were ever taken in Montrose in the same period of time, either before or since.

Impaired eye-sight made it imperative that Mr. Deans should relinquish the business; consequently, in the fall of 1865, he purchased a half-interest, with Alphonso H. Smith, in the book and stationery business. After one year he bought Mr. Smith's interest, and continued the general book and wall-paper trade, on the same spot, near the corner of Church and South Main Streets, until the fire of August 27, 1886, when, like a good many others at that time, he "stood not upon the order of going, but went at once."

A year or so after Mr. Deans retired from the picture business, J. B. Hazleton sold out to George N. Cobb (now a prominent Binghamton photographer); and a little later on, Cobb removed to a gallery which B. R. Lyons had fitted up over his store on the east side of Public Avenue.

The business soon changed hands again, and this time it came into the possession of our popular artist of to-day (1887), George W. Doolittle. Here he remained until January, 1883, when the Lyons store was burned. He then took up his quarters in a gallery in the M. S. Wilson building, where he continued the practice of his chosen profession until the fire of 1886, when he was again burned out, and this time his loss was a severe one, including his complete fixtures and a large number of valuable plates and negatives.

L. M. Tyrrell having erected a fine building on the ground formerly occupied by the Lyons store, Mr. Doolittle decided once more to locate there, and now he occupies one of the best-appointed galleries in Northern Pennsylvania; and his patrons are among the best people of Susquehanna and adjoining counties.

ARTISTS AND COPYISTS.—Stephen Wilson, a former resident of Montrose, but subsequently of Philadelphia, became a portrait-painter of considerable merit. Mrs. Mayo has painted the scenery about her home at Susquehanna in oil colors. Mrs. Theodore Smith, and her sister, Miss L. Avery, excel in water-colors. Mrs. Azur Lathrop also excels in pencilings and in water-colors, particularly in painting leaves and flowers. Her work is very accurately done. George H. Frazier has done some very good crayon work and portrait-painting. He is a young man, and his work promises well for the future. Mrs. A. H. Berlin, of Montrose, Mrs. Dr. Ainey, of New Milford, and many others throughout the county, have done some painting, particularly flowers. James Smiley, an artist from New York, has a summer residence at Montrose that is an art study in itself. His residence is near the fair-grounds, and commands an extensive view. The house is surrounded by a broad veranda, and is finished with native hardwoods inlaid in narrow strips of oak, cherry, birch, ash, etc., so as to produce a very pleasing effect. Mr. S. is a steel engraver and oil-painter, besides working at etching.

BANKS.—The Silver Lake Bank, at Montrose.—The books were opened for subscription June 6, 1814. The bank was fully organized with a board of directors January 4, 1817. It began to discount April 10, 1817. Suspended August 7, 1819, but resumed after a very short time, and continued in operation ten years longer, when the bill for its re-charter was lost. Dr. Rose was president, and Putnam Catlin cashier.

Northern Bank of Pennsylvania, at Dundaff.—Established probably early in 1825, and closed January, 1827.

Bank of Susquehanna County, at Montrose.—Established in 1837. James C. Biddle, president; Isaac Kellum, cashier.

October 9, 1837, the following board of directors were elected: William Jessup, I. Post, S. S. Mulford, William Ward, D. Post, F. Lusk, Jesse Lane, C. L. Ward, William L. Post, Daniel Searle, M. S. Wilson and Charles Avery. James C. Biddle died March 31, 1841, and W. L. Post was chosen president. Isaac Kellum, the cashier, speculated with the funds of the bank, and it suspended payment. Mr. Post interested Mr. Saint John, of New York, in the bank, and he sent his nephew, T. P. Saint John, to act as cashier. At the directors' meeting, after he was appointed, Mr. Wilson inquired if Mr. St. John had given bonds. Saint John answered: "Do you suppose I will give bonds for an old rotten concern until I find out what there is in it?" Mr. Wilson replied that "he supposed a man gave bonds for himself and not for the bank." Mr. Wilson was overruled, and Saint John gave no bonds. Wilson sold his stock for half-price, which was more than the stockholders that remained realized. Arrangements were made whereby the Morristown Bank was to redeem the Susquehanna County Bank notes and vice versa. Mr. Saint John managed matters, and discounted Western paper that proved to be worthless, and the bank failed in 1849. The stockholders lost heavily.

Isaac L. Post, Henry Drinker and William H. Cooper started a private banking-house at Montrose in November, 1855, with about fifteen thousand dollars capital. This continued as Post, Cooper & Co. until Post failed, in 1859, when William H. Cooper and Henry Drinker reorganized with about thirty thousand dollars, and did banking under name of William H. Cooper & Co. This was the only bank at Montrose for a number of years, and the people had great confidence in its management. It was not chartered, but was a private bank of deposit. Their deposits averaged eighty thousand dollars, that they carried annually. Cooper was shot at Montrose, June 14, 1884, and the bank went into the hands of an assignee, William H. Jessup, who was appointed June 18, 1884. Finding that it was badly insolvent, that there had been no balance-sheet taken for a number of years, he took an inventory, and found that the liabilities were about three hundred and sixty-five thousand dollars, and the assets four hundred thousand dollars, most of which were worthless securities. He found also that Cooper had been paying a greater per cent. than he was receiving. Mr. Jessup resigned after about six weeks, and Azur Lathrop was appointed to close up the matter. He disposed of the securities and realized about ninety thousand dollars for the depositors.

The First National Bank of Montrose.—The articles of association were adopted January 27, 1875, and the charter was obtained February 13, 1875. There were about seventy stockholders originally, with $100,000 cash capital. William J. Turrell was the first president; D. D. Searle, vice-president; N. S. Lenheim, cashier. The first board of directors consisted of eleven stockholders, as follows: Geo. V. Bentley, Abel Turrell, M. S. Dessauer, A. J. Gerritson, G. B. Eldred, E. A. Pratt, L. S. Lenheim, E. A. Clark, M. B. Wright, William J. Turrell and D. D. Searle.

In January, 1877, N. S. Lenheim, the cashier, was arrested for forgery in New York. This caused the bank officials to make an investigation. The books appeared to be all right. The bank examiner, who had been there a short time previous, complimented the officers on the manner in which they kept their books. A United States expert was employed, and he could discover nothing wrong. M. B. Wright, one of the directors, visited Mr. Lenheim in the Tombs, and he revealed to him what he had done. The principal wrong consisted in putting the bank indorsement on forged paper, and in selling the securities of the bank in New York, and pocketing the proceeds, instead of sending them to New York for collection for the benefit of the bank, as the books showed. The total loss to the bank, was about $105,000. The bank was re-organized with a capital of $50,000. The other $50,000 of capital stock, together with two assessments—one of twenty-five and another of fifteen per cent.—and about $12,000 realized from L. S. Lenheim's estate, were sufficient to pay all demands against the bank, which has continued to do business until the present time. William J. Turrell acted as president until his death, in August, 1881, and was succeeded by George V. Bentley, who resigned in 1885, and, January 13th of that year, Gabriel B. Eldred was elected to that position.

The following persons have been vice-presidents: D. D. Searle, 1875–77; George V. Bentley, 1877–81; F. B. Chandler, from August, 1881, to January, 1882; Jefferson Griffis, 1882–84; M. S. Dessauer, 1884–86; W. D. Lusk, 1886.

Cashiers: N. S. Lenheim, February 13, 1875, to January, 1877; Gabriel B. Eldred, January, 1877, to January 13, 1885; D. R. Lathrop, January 13, 1885.

Directors: George V. Bentley, 1875; Abel Turrell, 1875; M. S. Dessauer, 1875; A. J. Gerritson, 1875; G. B. Eldred, 1875; E. A. Pratt, 1875; L. S. Lenheim, 1875; E. A. Clark, 1875; M. B. Wright, 1875; W. J. Turrell, 1875; D. D. Searle, 1875; W. C. Tilden, 1877. In 1878 the number of directors was reduced to nine, and in 1879 the number was reduced to seven. Jefferson Griffis, 1879; D. C. Ainey, 1879; F. B. Chandler, 1880; D. Brewster, 1880; Henry L. Beach, 1882; H. C. Tyler, 1882; Azur Lathrop, 1883; A. H. McCollum, 1885; E. S. Warner, 1886; G. P. Little, 1886; W. D. Lusk, 1886.

The above dates show when the persons named were first chosen directors. George V. Bentley served continuously until 1885. Gabriel B. Eldred is the only director that has served since the organization until the present time. Tuesdays and Fridays are discount days. The bank is now in a healthful condition. In 1886 the first dividends were declared since the Lenheim defalcation.

At the annual meeting in January, 1887, [1]Gabriel Eldred's health having become impaired,

1 Since deceased, 1887.

so that he could no longer act as president, W. D. Lusk was chosen to fill that position. H. L. Beach was elected vice-president; D. R. Lathrop, cashier; Amos Nicholas, teller. Directors, A. Lathrop, W. D. Lusk, G. P. Little, H. L. Beach, J. Griffis, E. S. Warner, G. B. Eldred.

Resources January 1, 1887.

Loans and Discounts,	$165,879.22
United States Bonds and Premiums,	16,100.00
Due from Banks, Treasurer of United States,	25,719.66
Gold and Silver,	12,785.65
Legal Tender and National Bank Notes,	5,931.00
Sundry Cash Items,	662.33
Banking-House,	9,500.00
Real Estate,	2,500.00

Liabilities.

Capital,	$50,000.00
Circulation,	11,250.00
Surplus and Profits,	9,065.54
Deposits,	168,762.82
Total,	239,077.86

GABIEL ELDRED was born in Orange County, N. Y., April 15, 1818. His father, Ephraim Eldred, moved to Bethany when he was two years old, and died two years after. Gabriel lived with his grandfather in Sussex County, N. J., until he died, when he went to Bethany, where his mother lived. He was now a lad of thirteen years and worked at the hatter's trade with E. W. Hamlim, attending school winters. When he was eighteen he came to Montrose and worked at his trade with Case & Hancock two years; thence to Towanda, where he worked at the same trade three years; returning to Montrose in 1841, he worked at the same trade for C. W. Tuttle, and finally for Wm. M. Post, who was running a hatter's shop with employes. He purchased this business and continued it until he was elected sheriff of Susquehanna County, in 1851. This was the last hatter's shop at Montrose. This industry now, like many others, is concentrated in large manufacturing houses. Mr. Eldred served his full term as sheriff, 1851–54, and was deputy sheriff under John Young and Elias V. Green six years, from 1863 to 1869; he was prothonotary and immediately after he was elected justice of the peace, but served only one year, as W. F. Simrell, his successor in the prothonotary's office, died, and he was again elected to that office in 1870, and served three years more. He became so familiar with the records in this office, that he knew from memory where nearly every thing was; and the members of the bar and people generally began to think that he was almost indispensable. After his third term as prothonotary he was appointed commissioners' clerk, but served only one year, when he was elected cashier of the First National Bank. When he took that position the affairs of the bank were in a deplorable condition. His predecessor had robbed the bank of $105,000 or $5000 more than the capital stock. Mr. Eldred acted as cashier eight years and has been president two years. Although the capital stock is reduced to $50,000, the bank has redeemed all its pledges and is paying a dividend again. Mr. Eldred's life has been an active one, and he has discharged all of his trusts with honesty and fidelity. He married Jane Tuttle in October, 1844, and had two daughters that arrived at the age of maturity.

DUDSON R. LATHROP, a son of Benjamin and Clarissa (Avery) Lathrop, born in 1828, attended the Montrose Academy in boyhood, and at the age of fifteen entered the store of his brother Azur in Springville, where he remained five years, followed by one year with Lathrop & Salisbury, at Montrose. He has since been a member of the mercantile firms of A. Lathrop & Co., D. R. Lathrop & Co., J. Griffis & Co. and A. & D. R. Lathrop, besides spending several years as a clerk in other houses. He served as postmaster at Montrose for a short time, receiving his appointment under President Fillmore, and again served during the administration of President Lincoln. In 1853 he was elected county treasurer and served two years; was clerk in the bank of W. H. Cooper & Co. for seven years following 1858; cashier of the post-office at Scranton for a little over one year, and teller of the First National Bank at Towanda for two and one-half years, ending in 1874. For seven years following he conducted a mining store at Bernice, Sullivan County, Pa. In the fall of 1883 he was elected teller of the First National Bank of Montrose, and after serving one year he was chosen cashier, which position he has acceptably filled since. In 1854 he married Sarah E., a daughter of Hon. Davis D. Dimock, son of Elder Davis Dimock, an early Baptist clergyman. Her mother was Maria, a daughter of William Ward. They have two children—one, Benjamin, in the Post-Office Department at Washington, and Walter Lathrop, in the Medical Department of Pennsylvania University.

Amos Nichols was born August 9, 1833, in Bridgewater township. His parents, Zenas Nichols and Mary A. (Howe) Nichols, came from Herkimer County, N. Y., in 1808, and located first in Silver Lake. Shortly afterwards, in Bridgewater, one mile south of Montrose, he bought a property of the Clymer estate, and made improvements on the place, which is now owned by Charles F. Meeker. His children were Abel H., who died in Beverly, N. J., in 1884; Amos; Lucy, wife of John H. Lake, of Haverstraw, N. Y., died in 1873. Amos helped his father on the farm and attended the common schools in boyhood. In 1859 he bought out Orlando Eldridge, a merchant in Brooklyn, and engaged in the mercantile business three years in that place. In 1861 he was elected county treasurer and returned to Montrose until the expiration of his term, after which he had a position in the Treasury Department at Washington. Returning to Montrose, he was in partnership with A. B. Burns in the drug business nine years; with Charles H. Smith two years, firm Nichols & Smith; with H. P. Read three years, firm Read & Nichols. He then went into the crockery, grocery, boot and shoe business with his son (firm Amos Nichols & Son) from 1881 to January 1, 1886. He has been teller of the First National Bank since February, 1885. His wife is Harriet A., daughter of Horace Wade, of New Milford. They have one son, Harry A., of the firm of Nichols & Waltrous.

Colonel Christopher M. Gere, son of Ebenezer Gere, was born in New London, Conn., May 7, 1814, and came with his parents to Brooklyn township when he was seven years of age. He worked on the farm until he was sixteen, when he entered his father's shop and worked at plane-making, meanwhile attending the common schools winters. He went to Connecticut and completed his trade and returned to Brooklyn, where he continued to work at his trade until he was elected sheriff, in the fall of 1848, when he removed to Montrose, where he still resides. He took up surveying, having learned it from surveyors as he carried the chain. He was one of the surveyors that established the county line between Wayne and Susquehanna Counties; also one of the commissioners on the part of this State, who had charge of the survey establishing the line between Pennsylvania and New York. He obtained his title as colonel in the militia service. He married Emily A. Smith, and has one son, Christopher M., an employee of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company.

Schools.—Prior to the enactment of the law providing a system of education by taxation that should be free to all, the State of Pennsylvania made appropriations for academies in different parts of the commonwealth. The people of Susquehanna County have ever been alert and active in the matter of education, and early took advantage of the liberality of the State and obtained an appropriation of two thousand dollars on condition that the citizens of Susquehanna County should raise one thousand five hundred dollars. The 19th of March, 1816, Governor Synder approved an act incorporating [1] The Susquehanna County Academy with William Thompson, Davis Di mock, Isaac Post, Jabez Hyde, Jr., Daniel Ross, Wright Chamberlain, Hosea Tiffany, Jr., Robert H. Rose, Jonah Brewster, David Post, Austin Howell, Charles Fraser, Isaac Brownson and Putnam Catlin, trustees.

These trustees comprised the principal officers of the county, with the president and cashier of the Silver Lake Bank. A meeting was appointed for the 3d of September following. The care of the erection of a building was given to Isaac Post, and it was completed in 1818. The offices of judges and commissioners in the board of trustees were then filled by J. W. Raynsford, Benjamin Sayre, S. S. Mulford, I. P. Foster, Samuel Warner, Justin Clark, Bela Jones and B. T. Case, the last-named being then secretary, and for several years afterwards. There was no church edifice in the place, and the second floor of the building was used as a place of religious worship every Sabbath. The academy at that time occupied the brow of the hill above the new jail, the hill then being much steeper than at present, and containing a valuable quarry but little excavated. The grandparents of our time relate with glee their feats in coasting down this hill with an upturned bench for a sled, which many a merry boy and girl could enjoy together. About 1828 the building was moved down close to the sidewalk, between the present locations of the new academy and the old court-house, where it remained for twenty-two years.

[1] Blackman's "History."

Among the teachers engaged in this institution the following are remembered: 1818, William Jessup (advertised by the trustees as teacher of mathematics and "the learned languages") and Bela Jones; J. W. Raynsford, part of the year; 1819, Samuel Barnard and daughter, Catharine (since Mrs. Morgan); 1820, Ralph H. Read, Walker Woodhouse; 1821–24, Albert Bingham, David Benedict, P. Wright; 1825–28, Eli Meeker, Sloane Hamilton, Franklin Lusk, Benjamin and D. Dimock, Jr.; 1829–31, Seth T. Rogers, P. Richardson, S. S. Stebbins, Rufus B Gregory; 1833–36, B. S. Bentley; 1837–42, L. H. Woodruff(?), H. S. Fairchild, —— Payne, Rev. S. Manning; 1843–44, Z. L. Beebe and Lafayette G. Dimock; 1845–47, C. C. Halsey; 1848–49, A. J. Buel. Most of the above were collegiate graduates.

Among the lady teachers after Miss Barnard, and prior to 1830, were Misses Ann Harris (afterwards Mrs. S. Hodgdon), Maria Jones, Abigail Sayre (Mrs. James Catlin), Mary Ann Raynsford (Mrs. D. D. Warner). Of other schools, Miss Harriet Connor taught early over Raynor's store. A French and English select school was taught in 1828 by Mrs. B. Streeter. Courses of lessons in English grammar, and also lessons on the German flute had been given by different gentlemen; in the mean time, Wentworth Roberts taught in the Bowman House.

In 1832 the academy was thoroughly repaired, and an orrery and other apparatus procured. The same season an infant school was taught by Mrs. Amanda B. Catlin. She had the first piano in the place (in 1819), and taught music in 1832. Subsequently and prior to 1837 Misses Jane A. Brand (Mrs. Dr. Justin A. Smith, of Chicago, recently deceased), Lucretia Loomis, A. L. Fraser, Nancy and Caroline Bowman, Caroline C. Woodhouse and possibly others were teachers in the lower rooms of the academy, while the classical department occupied the one long room on the second floor.

Early in 1839 Miss Elizabeth Wood was the first teacher of the female seminary, in the same building. It was incorporated through the exertions of Colonel Asa Dimock. This institution, it was intended, should be entitled to three hundred dollars annually for ten years from the State. It first trustees were A. H. Read, J. C. Biddle, D. Dimock, Jr., George Fuller and Daniel Searle. In 1840–41 the preceptress was Mrs. Elizabeth H. Stone (afterwards Mrs. Niven). A piano was purchased, and Miss Theodosia A. Catlin taught a large class in music, though there were then but three pianos in the place. In 1841–42 Miss Mariana Read, of Homer, New York, was preceptress here. For three or four years following select schools by former teachers appear to have occupied the lower rooms. In 1847 Miss F. L. Willard began teaching in the academy, but afterwards kept a boarding-school for young ladies, assisted by Mrs. Theodore Smith and E. C. Blackman, and a day-school, which included young lads, in the building now the residence of George C. Hill, later in the old Post house, Miss Totten assistant. Pupils attended from remote parts of the county and from other counties.

A new academy had been projected in 1846, but it was not completed until the summer of 1850. The building, fifty by sixty feet, is now occupied by the graded school. Its cost was four thousand two hundred dollars. The first board of trustees consisted of William Jessup, president; R. J. Niven, secretary; M. S. Wilson, treasurer; Rev. H. A. Riley, F. B. Streeter, B. S. Bentley, William L Post, George Fuller, Alfred Baldwin, William J. Mulford, Leonard Searle, D. D. Warner and Henry Drinker. They made valuable contributions for the foundation of a library and cabinet of natural curiosities, which, it is to be regretted, have not been well preserved. The first instructors were Lemuel H. Waters, A.M., principal; Miss Mary J. Crawford, preceptress; William H. Jessup and Miss A. A. P. Rogers, assistant teachers; Miss Caroline Bowman, superintendent of primary department; Emily C. Blackman, teacher of music; Gustave H. Walther, teacher of German. Succeeding principals were Rev. Isaac Gray, Rufus C. Crampton, William H. Richmond, John L. Mills and —— Hartshorne, collegiates. After Miss Crawford the lady teachers were Misses Bessie Huntting, Caroline Bush, Frances J. Woolworth and —— Brown. A normal school was established in the fall of 1857, J. F. Stoddard principal. He was succeeded by H. Broadhead, B.A., and S. S. Hartwell, B.A. In the fall of 1863, under the care of F. D. Hunt, it assumed distinctively the features of a graded school, which it still retains. Rev. J. R. Stone had charge of the classical department; Misses C. M. Dixon, M. M. Chamberlin, Jessie Bissell, A. Perry and Mrs. A. M. Richards were among the earliest teachers of other departments. The following is a list of the principals of Montrose Graded School: F. D. Hunt, 1863 (two years); G. C. Hammond, 1865; E. B. Hawley, 1866; John G. Cope, 1867; W. C. Tilden, 1868; A. H. Berlin, 1869 (six years); Mont. Evans, 1875 (two years); Charles Roos, 1877 (three years); J. W. Gray, 1880 (part of one year); C. S. Woodruff, 1881 (three years); S. D. Barnes, 1884; A. H. Berlin, 1885. The school has six departments, graded from the primary to the higher department. Graduates from the school are expected to pass a thorough examination in the common school branches, and have a knowledge of higher mathematics, the sciences and instruction in Latin. The school is patronized by the surrounding country, and has fitted a number for college and many more for teaching. The school has always labored under the disadvantage of a constant change of principals, until Professor A. H. Berlin was retained for six years. He was born in 1845, and was graduated from Keystone Normal School, and has followed teaching as a profession. He was one of the first faculty of the normal school at Indiana, Pa., and subsequently principal of West Pittston schools seven years, and was recalled to Montrose in 1885, where his energy and enthusiasm are manifest in the management of the school.

The Old Free School of Montrose.—William J. Turrell taught the school upon its organization while it was held in the old academy. The teachers in the old free-school building were Messrs. R. Pike, A. Carr, ——Hayden, F. Fraser, A. Chamberlin (three seasons), D. Chamberlin, A. N. Bullard, L. F. Fitch, William A. Crossmon, Eugene A. Lyons, U. C. Johnson, A. R. Vail, —— Sampson. The last-named taught in 1856, at twenty-nine dollars per month, four dollars per month more than any previous teacher had received. Later teachers were paid still more.

The colored children were taught separately after November, 1857, and Miss H. N. Austin was their first teacher. Mr. M. J. Corse taught that winter in the free-school building, and was succeeded by J. F. Shoemaker, B. Thatcher (three seasons) and F. D. Hunt. While Mr. Hunt was teaching it was decided to establish a graded school, and to rent the academy for that purpose.

The ladies who taught the free school received occasionally as much as $3.75 per week—never over $4; and when two were employed at once each received $2.75. Miss N. Bowman had taught the female department before the schoolhouse was built. After December, 1837, there were the following teachers: Miss P. A. Smith, Mrs. Carr, Misses Charlotte Root, Helen Avery, Emeline Brownson, Ann P. Lathrop, Ruth A. Perkins, Caroline Bowman, Mrs. Sherer, Misses L. A. Chamberlin, Louisa Avery, Mary Warner, Jane Simpson, Helen Grover, Maria A. Deans, Salome Warner, Jesse Bissell, Jennie Mott and —— Chubbuck.

The building was occupied many summers by select schools taught by the Misses Caroline and Jane Woodhouse, H. Fordham, C. G. Read, A. McNeil, R. Tuttle, C. B. Birchard and possibly by a few of those mentioned above. Altogether, the building and the teachers were a power for good in the community which it is pleasant to recognize.

B. Thatcher taught the free school three years, and has been school director twenty-one years, and is now the secretary of the School Board.

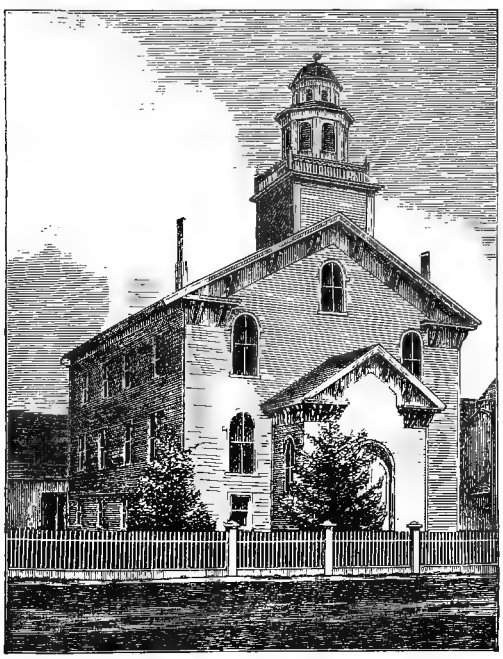
[1] BRIDGEWATER BAPTIST CHURCH of Montrose, Pa.—In 1801, when this portion of the State was a dense wilderness, Bartlet Hinds, son of Elder Ebenzer Hinds, of Massachusetts, came from Southampton, L. I., and settled in the township of Bridgewater. His wife, Mary, two sons, Conrad and Bartlet, a daughter named Susanna, and two sons of Mrs. Hinds, by a previous marriage, Isaac and David Post, accompanied him. Jonathan Wheaton, also a Baptist, moved into the township with his family the same year. Stephen Wilson had settled prior to this, in 1800.

For more than a year no religious meetings were held in the neighborhood, although the settlement grew rapidly with accessions from various quarters. At length Brethren Wheaton and Hinds commenced a prayer-meeting, in which several others joined. It was held frequently, but not every Sabbath at first; and with some manifest tokens of the divine presence, so that the meetings were maintained for many years. In the winter of 1806–7 two more praying families were added to their number, and the same season the way began to open for having the Gospel preached in their neighborhood. Mr. Hinds being at Wilkes-Barre, heard Elder Davis Dimock, the pastor of the Exeter Baptist Church, preaching in the court-house; an introduction followed, and the condition of the new and growing settlement so enlisted the preacher's sympathies that he made an appointment to preach there on Monday evening, March 30, 1807.

There was a general attendance and so much interest among the people to hear the Gospel that Elder Dimock concluded to remain another day. But God's purpose was for a longer period. A heavy fall of snow, quite four feet deep, prevented the preacher's return for a week. Yet over it all, on snow-shoes, or through it all, the people came day after day, many of them a great distance and through trackless woods, to hear the word of God. Many were pricked in the heart and began to seek salvation, while the Lord's weary but trusting ones were greatly refreshed and quickened. Elder Dimock made two other visits during the summer, when two persons were baptized upon a profession of faith.

From this time meetings were held every Lord's day, whether they had preaching or not, and as they who had "one Lord, one faith, and one baptism" had now become acquainted with each other, they agreed to hold every month what they called a "covenant meeting," for each other's mutual sympathy, comfort and watch-care. This soon ripened into a church organization, for in March, 1808, the Baptist Church in Exeter was earnestly requested to take measures for giving to these praying, covenanting disciples the privileges of distinct and full membership.

It was the custom in this section of the country, at that time, to receive such applicants for church privileges into the fellowship and membership of the body to whom the application was addressed, through a committee or commission, composed of the pastor and a given number of brethren, appointed for the purpose, hearing and pronouncing upon each person's Christian experience and worthiness of church standing; and if the examination proved satisfactory, they were subsequently "set off" as requested, and "power was given them to receive and expel members and to do all other acts of an independent church," subject, however, to the authority of the whole convention, as an individual member is in any particular church subject to its authority.



Accordingly, the church at Exeter sent their pastor, Elder Dimock, and several lay brethren to Bridgewater, and on the 9th day of April, 1808, after the usual preliminaries, at the house of Brother Bartlet Hinds, six brethren —Jonathan Wheaton, Henry Congdon, Asa Baldwin, David Knowlton, Luther Deans and Samuel Baldwin—were organized into a church of Christ, and, as the records say, given "fellowship to do and perform things necessary thereto." Henry Congdon was chosen clerk, and two days after their members were increased to ten by Sisters Mrs. Sarah Congdon, Polly Baldwin and Betsey Baldwin.

[1] By Rev. E. W. Husted.

At their next regular church-meeting, May 14, 1808, Brother Bartlet Hinds, by letter, and Mrs. Agnes Hinds, Stephen Wilson and John Gardner, by baptism, were added to their number. In June, 1809, Elder Davis Dimock, at their unanimous call and earnest solicitation, assumed the pastorate and moved his family to Bridgewater.

From this time additions were gradually made to them, as new settlers came into their boundaries. But in the fall of 1810 the Holy Spirit began to move upon the community, so that the record of one of their meetings expresses "great thankfulness for the great mercies of

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

God in the union of the church and the conversion of sinners, who were coming to Christ like clouds, and like doves to their windows." Fifty were added to the church by baptism as the fruit of this awakening and refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

Every year but two of Elder Dimock's long pastorate of over a quarter of a century witnessed some baptism, but no very general work of grace was experienced until 1826, when over eighty were baptized, and in 1827, over fifty.

It was during this revival that the Church resolved upon preliminary steps to secure a suitable house of worship. A meeting was held at the court-house on Christmas day, 1826, to consult upon a project. There was but one sentiment, and they unanimously agreed to undertake the work, great as it was for them. Accordingly, Brethren Isaac Post and Samuel Warner were appointed a committee to obtain subscriptions and superintend the erection of the house. The undertaking proved more arduous and the delay of their hopes much greater even than they feared, for it was not until three years had passed that they entered their own sanctuary. But in December, 1829, the church ceased to be dependent upon a district school-house or the county court-house. In 1846 the edifice was enlarged to its present dimensions—capable of holding five hundred persons—and was otherwise improved; since then it has undergone little change in general appearance, being renewed from time to time. During the past year, 1886, it has been very much improved, and now stands a well-preserved land-mark. The year 1832 was also a season of large in-gathering, when seventy-five were added by baptism. The largest accession made in any one year was in 1843, under the pastorate of Elder J. B. Worden, when one hundred were added.

But the church has had its days of darkness and sore trials. The most severe and afflictive of all these can hardly be passed over in this historical sketch. In 1839 forty-seven members were dismissed to form an independent church in the Union School District, Bridgewater, because of a wide difference of views in regard to church action upon slavery. At first this matter seemed portentous of great evil. After a time it promised to be satisfactorily arranged by an amicable division, and the existence of two distinct churches living in harmony. But for two or three years the cause of Christ greatly suffered, and the people of God "went through fire and water." At length, after numerous efforts at reconciliation, by councils, and such associational overtures and suggestions as seemed pertinent and proper, the old church became, in 1843, the sole organization representative of the Baptist faith and polity in Montrose and Bridgewater, nearly all returning from the Second Church, and the reunited people striving together for the unity of the Spirit, the bonds of peace and the promotion of the great cause of God.

* * * * *

The pastors who have labored with this people are as follows:

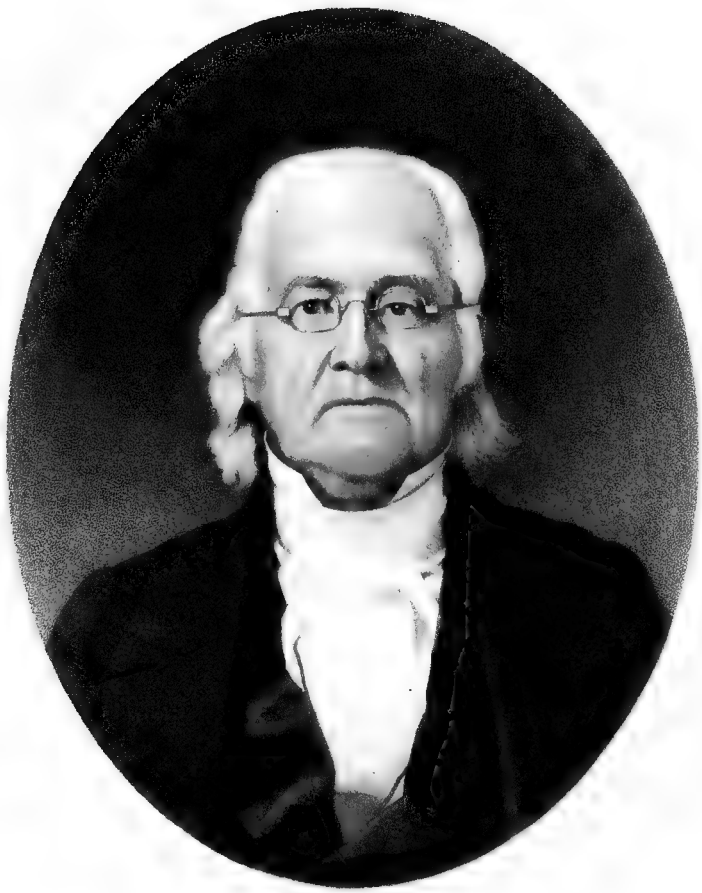
Elder Davis Dimock, 1809–39; J. B. Worden, 1839–44; A. L. Post, 1844–46; D. Taylor, 1846–49; Davis Dimock, 1849–51; F. Glanville, 1851–52; S. L. Ransted and A. L. Post, 1855–56; W. N. Wopeth, 1856–58; J. C. Boomer, 1858–62; J. R. Stone, 1862–65; B. C. Morse, 1866–68; H. F. Cochrane, 1868; L. B. Ford, 1870; J. E. Chesshire, 1873–78; Henry W. Sherwood, 1878–82; D. W. Shepherd, 1882–84; E. W. Husted, 1884.

During the past few years the church has passed through many scenes of revival interest. Nearly all of the old members have "fallen asleep." Deacon Mason Wilson still remains, after a consistent membership of over fifty years, being baptized by Elder Davis Dimock in 1832.

The church still occupies an honorable and prominent place in the town. There are about two hundred and seventy-five members enrolled. The Sabbath-school numbers two hundred and twenty-five, the largest number in its history, and is in excellent condition, the church and school working in harmony, the pastor and people realizing the fact that the school is the "hope of the church." Deacon George P. Little is the superintendent. The library of five hundred volumes, with its improved library system, is said to be the finest in the county.

And so, after an existence of over eighty years of "stormy and of cloudy weather," the old church still stands a monument to God's goodness, an old land-mark, pointing weary, footsore travelers to the road which leads to life eternal.

"[1] Elder Davis Dimock was born at Rocky Hill, Hartford County, Conn., May 27, 1776. His parents were David and Sarah Green Dimock. His father at the opening of the Revolutionary War entered the service first as a sergeant, and afterwards as lieutenant of the Continental army. He, with his mother and three brothers, on the opening of the war, were taken as a measure of safety into Vermont. At the close of the war the family returned to Connecticut, and resided at Norfolk until the year 1790, when, with the tide of emigration from Connecticut, they came into the Wyoming Valley and settled at Wilkes-Barre. He was then fourteen years of age.



"To a compact, symmetrical and truly admirable physical organism there was added a pleasing personal address. To an extremely social nature there was added an almost unbounded and attractive humor. To a quick perception of the relation of things, and the workings of human nature, there was added an ambition that knew no bounds but those of patriotism and honor. And to a heart unsanctified by the Divine Spirit, and that had come to drink in, quite deeply, infidelity to Christ and the Bible, there was added a purpose to gain and enjoy as much as possible of the world's pleasures, riches and honors. With these developments he labored on the farm and in the workshop, improved the scanty opportunities in his reach to gain knowledge by attending and teaching common schools, and was active in all of the political and other gatherings of the people. All seemed bright before him.

"On the 5th of June, 1797, he was united in marriage to Betsey Jenkins, of Tunkhannock, who became the mother of his twelve children, and the beloved and faithful partner of his toils and privations, as well as his hopes and enjoyments, during fifty-five years of his earthly pilgrimage. In 1801, while living in Exeter with his young family, toiling for and rapidly acquiring wealth—carrying on at the same time the businesses of farming, blacksmithing and distilling ardent spirits—he was arrested in his career, and by the power of Divine grace his proud heart was made to yield to the requirements of the law of faith in an atoning sacrifice, and changed at once all of the plans and purposes of his life.

"He was received and baptized into the Exeter Baptist Church, August 9, 1801, by Elder Jacob Drake, the pioneer Baptist minister of the valley. Heeding the great commission, which seemed directed to him, 'Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature,' turning back upon place proffered in legislative halls, he commenced preaching that Jesus whom he had persecuted, and that resurrection which, in the skepticism of his heart, he had repudiated. His first sermon was blessed by the Divine Spirit in leading his companion to embrace Christ as her only hope.

"In 1803, at the yearly meeting of the Apocalyptic number of Baptist Churches, then called the Susquehanna Baptist Connection, he was formally ordained to the ministry, by the imposition of the hands of the elders, and soon came to occupy a prominence which made him the master-spirit of the Connection.

[1] Blackman, p. 306.

Lewis Dimock

"In 1810, under his labors, occurred what was afterwards known as 'the great revival,' in which fifty-two, mostly by baptism, were added to the number of the church. The influence spread into the settlement from fifteen to twenty miles around, and he followed it up with an energy and zeal that knew no bounds but impossibilities. Often might he have been seen on his horse, threading his way from settlement to settlement, along forest paths, over hills and through valleys, sometimes guided only by marked trees. Here or there, where he found a hut or log cabin, he was wont to stop, if but for a moment, to minister a word of admonition or cheer to its sinning, sick or disconsolate inhabitants. He soon came to be everywhere known and a welcome visitor.

"He had studied medicine in his earlier years; and on coming here when there was no physician, his medical services were often required and given. Finding it an aid rather than detriment to his gospel ministry, he continued more or less to practice successfully during subsequent life.

"He accepted, through the general solicitation of his fellow-citizens, from the Governor, an appointment of associate judge of the then new county of Susquehanna. In this capacity he served successfully and honorably from the time of the organization of the judiciary, a term of twenty-seven years.

"He assisted in organizing churches in Auburn, Rush, Middletown, Choconut, Great Bend, Harford, New Milford, Jackson, Gibson and Dimock, and possibly elsewhere. Elder Dimock was the sole pastor of the Bridgewater Church from its organization, in 1808, down to June, 1835, a term of twenty-seven years. At the close of that period, notwithstanding deaths and removals, the church numbered three hundred and twenty-two members. At the expiration of his sole pastorate of the church, by his own request, Elder J. B. Worden became associated with him. This relation continued two years, when, from the infirmities of age and disease, and a desire to retire from the exciting scenes of a new era in the church, he resigned his relation, took a letter from this, and united with the church at Braintrim, having previously received a call to become its pastor. As pastor of that church, he labored according to the measure of his health and strength, witnessing many tokens that those labors were not in vain, until the fall of 1847, when, admonished by physicians and his personal consciousness of what a long life of labor and privation, as well as disease, had wrought upon his wonderful constitution, he resigned the pastorate to another.

"In the spring of 1848 he returned with his companion to Montrose to reside the remainder of his days with his children. He reunited with this church." His name appears in the Baptist minutes every year or two, in connection with the supply of the pulpit at Montrose, during the time that he was at Braintrim. He was a great force in the church for half a century. Gordon Z. Dimock, his only living child in 1887, says that his father only attended common school six months, and his mother attended a school that his father taught for three months. She was a daughter of Benjamin Jenkins, of Wyoming Valley, who was killed during the "Pennamite War." Elder Dimock was a hardshell Baptist, and did not believe in having a regular salary for preaching, but supported himself largely by blacksmithing, practicing medicine, etc. His salary as associate judge also helped him to raise his large family. Of course he performed the marriage ceremony for a great many couples. He received a handful of goose-quills (good for pens) from his first couple. He generally received more than that, however. He was a man of great native force, a fine specimen of the old-time preacher, and much beloved by the people. Once when he was preaching down the Wyalusing, a young couple that admired him very much urged him to accompany them home and stay that night with them. He reluctantly consented, as he had made other arrangements. During the night he awoke and saw them sitting by the fire-place poking the fire. He soon ascertained that he was occupying the only bed in the house. He arose and insisted upon the young couple's retiring, while he poked the fire the rest of the night. His wife died in 1852, aged seventy-two, and he died September 27, 1858, aged eighty-two. Their children were Benjamin Dimock, who was principal of the school at Bethany for a time, and died at Pompton, Wayne County, Pa. One of his sons is a boss on the gravity road from Carbondale to Honesdale. Sally married Nehemiah Scott, and remained on the Dimock homestead. One son, Norton W. Scott, rents the old place now of Geo. P. Little, the present owner. Davis Dimock, Jr., died while a member of Congress. Betsey Dimock married Hubbard Avery for her first husband, and Luther Badger (an ex-member of Congress, who died at Binghamton) for her second husband. Lydia C. was an authoress, wife of Leonard Searle. Asa G. was a painter, politician, State Senator (1841–43) for this district, and finally editor of the Wayne County Democrat, at Wooster, Ohio, where he died. John H., a lawyer, at Montrose. David died at sea. Dr. Gordon Z. Dimock, the only survivor of the old patriarch's family, resides in the first frame house that was built in the village, which was moved to its present location many years ago, which saved it from the fire that afterwards destroyed the building where it stood.

David Dimock, the father of Davis Dimock, was a Revolutionary soldier, served under Washington. He came to Wyoming Valley as a land agent, and finally came to Montrose, and lived with his son the latter part of his life. He was eighty-six when he died, and was active almost up to the day of his death. The Dimocks are said to be descended from an old English family, and can trace their ancestry to 1060, the time of William the Conqueror. Sir Henry Dimock was challenger for King George the IV. when he was crowned, which was the last time that ceremony has ever been performed.

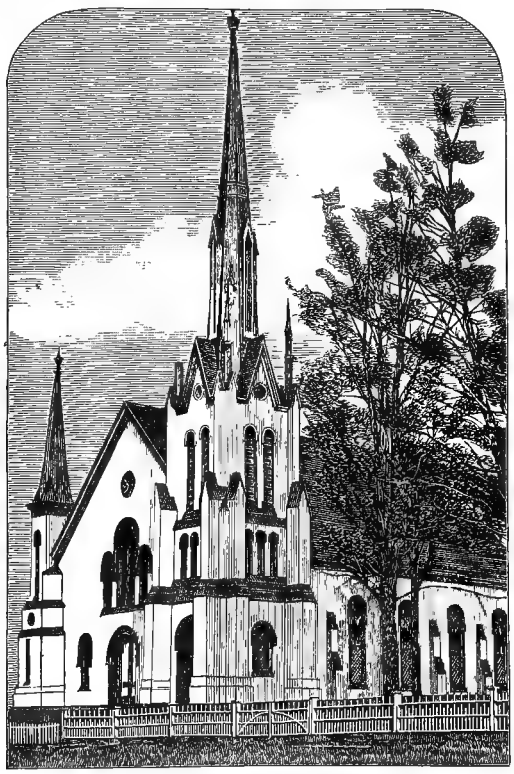
Rev. Albert L. Post, son of Isaac Post, was born at Montrose March 25, 1809. He was educated at Union College and read law with William Jessup. He was admitted to the bar in 1833; he practiced law for a few years and was deputy attorney-general in 1836. In 1837 he began the publication of the Spectator, a journal devoted to the freedom of the colored race. He was an Abolitionist when it was unpopular to be identified with the anti-slavery movement. In 1841 he was ordained to the Christian ministry, and devoted much of his time to evangelistic labors in connection with the Baptist Church, of which he was a member. He was a man of Christian integrity and conscientiousness, and would rather suffer than sacrifice a principle. Courageous in the maintenance of what he felt to be right, yet he was as gentle as a little child in the simplicity of his life. Ever the friend of the oppressed, he lived for the benefit of others. He not only talked in favor of freedom for the colored man, but assisted the poor fugitives when they came to Montrose from their homes of bondage in the South. He lived to see the principles which he had advocated triumphant. His wife was a daughter of Joseph Williams, an old settler of Bridgewater; their only son was Isaac J. Post, of Scranton. Rev. Albert L. Post died at Montrose January 7, 1887. During his life he wrote a number of obituaries and reminiscences. His diary also contains many historical facts, and for many facts in relation to the early history of Montrose the writer is indebted to him, as preserved in his writings and the writings of his father.

The present pastor, Rev. E. W Husted was born in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., July 24, 1859. His education, acquired at the best schools in his native city, and at Hamilton Theological Seminary, has been supplemented and rounded out by quite extensive European travel. He graduated at Hamilton in June, 1884, and was ordained here on the 24th of August of the same year. He was married January 29, 1885, to Miss Viola Harris, of Brooklyn, N. Y., a lady who, by talent and culture, is eminently qualified for the work to which she has been called.

[1] Montrose Presbyterian Church.—For a considerable period previous to the organizing of the church, occasional services were held among the Presbyterians and Congregationalists living within Bridgewater township. Such services have been traced back as far as to the summer of 1802; and there are records of the baptism of several children previous to the organizing of the church.



On the 3d day of July, 1810, a company met at the house of Joseph Raynsford, about one and a half miles south of Montrose, and a Congregational Church was organized by the Rev. Ebenezer Kingsbury, then a missionary of the Connecticut Missionary Society, and afterwards pastor at Harford, assisted by the Rev. M. M. York, pastor of the Congregational Church at Wyalusing. The following persons then present signed the covenant and entered into church fellowship on that day: viz., Moses Tyler, Phineas Arms, Edmund Stone, Simeon Tyler, Samuel Davis, Amos West, Anna Davis, Esther Lathrop, Sarah Tyler, Anna Raynsford, Hannah Fuller and Hannah Raynsford. Moses Tyler was chosen deacon, and Phineas Arms clerk.

Miss Blackman states ("History of Susquehanna County," p. 337), on what seems to be abundant evidence, that "the sermon on this occasion was preached in the barn of Walter Lathrop, near the barns since erected by his son Daniel." This was situated about one-half of a mile south of Mr. Raynsford's house. Meetings were afterwards frequently held in that barn. At the first meetiug of the church which followed, it was voted that "Each member should pay twelve and one-half cents for the Communion Table."

At the first communion season following its organization, fourteen additional members were received into the church and twenty-one children and adults were baptized. In January of the following year (1811) Rev. Joseph Wood, a Congregationalist minister, was called to be pastor of the church on a salary of two hundred and sixty dollars for the first year, and to increase ten dollars annually until it should reach three hundred dollars. He was to labor half of the time with this church and half with what is now the Brooklyn Church. The call was accepted, and he was installed June 19th of the same year by the Luzerne Association, and continued pastor until September 24, 1815. During this period, and for a year later, the services of the church were held most of the time at South Montrose, in the school-house or at the residence of Zebulon Deans, near the school-house. But occasionally they were at some other private house.

[1] By Rev. A. L. Benton.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

In the autumn of 1816 services began to be held at Montrose village, at first in the court-house and later in the academy. For several years they were divided, or alternated between Montrose village and the South District. The church had no regular pastor after Mr. Wood left, but was supplied at irregular times by missionaries or neighboring pastors, until early in 1818, when Rev. Gideon N. Judd, a graduate of Union College and Princeton Theological Seminary, became stated supply. The church had then increased to over sixty members. It was during his ministry that the academy began to be used for church purposes. The salary of the minister was more than double that first given, and their purpose to fully pay it is manifest in a vote taken June 5, 1819, to assess "all arrearages remaining unpaid, to every member of the church in proportion to the valuation of their property." And the fact that this was carried unanimously was a very good guarantee for its payment. At the same meeting a board of trustees was chosen for the society. This board consisted of Joseph Butterfield, Isaac P. Foster, Zebulon Deans, Benjamin Sayre and Elizur Price. During the ministry of Mr. Judd the first Sabbath-school in this town was organized, of which the Sabbath-school of this church is the legitimate successor. It was in the upper room of a public-house, on Sabbath afternoon, October 14, 1818, and consisted of six scholars and two teachers. Mr. Judd continued to be the stated supply of the church until May 21, 1820, when he closed his labors here to accept a call to Bloomfield, N. J. The church was then irregularly supplied until February 20, 1822, when, at a church-meeting held at the house of Reuben Wells, "it was agreed that a special invitation from the church be given to Rev. Enoch Conger to come and preach with us as soon as consistent." Mr. Conger supplied the church for some months.

At a meeting of the church, held September 12, 1823, Rev. G. N. Judd (then visiting in the place) presiding, it was unanimously voted to adopt the Presbyterian form of government and elect seven elders, and the following persons were elected to such office, viz.: Phineas Arms, Zebulon Deans, Reuben Wells, Moses Tyler, Joshua W. Raynsford, Benjamin Sayre and Jerre Lyons. Mr. Lyons immediately tendered his resignation and nominated Isaac P. Foster for his place, and Mr. Foster was unanimously chosen. About six years later, or August 4, 1829, Mr. Lyons was re-elected and ordained as an elder, together with William Jessup. These first elders were ordained by Mr. Judd during a meeting of the Presbytery of Susquehanna, in session at Montrose, September 16, 1823. In this same year Rev. Burr Baldwin, a graduate of Yale College and Andover Theological Seminary, then in his early manhood and having had considerable experience as a teacher as well as a preacher, and at that time agent for the United Board of Foreign Missions, came into this region for his health, and, having preached here, was called to the pastorate of this church. His installation took place September 22, 1824. Entering upon his work with characteristic earnestness, great prosperity attended his labors. Instead of half a day at South Montrose, both services from this time were held in the court-house here. Feeling the need of a house of worship, he sought to secure one and was successful. During his ministry the first meeting-house was built, on the lot where now stands the present church edifice. This was dedicated June 22, 1826. Revival scenes soon followed. Thirty-five members were received into the church this year on confession of faith, and among them were many efficient workers. The church was greatly prospered under his wise ministry, which closed in May, 1829.

Mr. Baldwin, after leaving this place, was pastor at New Hartford, Conn., and Ashland, Mass. He was nine years teacher at Newark, N. J., and did much missionary work within the bounds of Montrose Presbytery, supplying feeble churches, planting new ones, raising money to build sanctuaries and to support ministers. At the age of sixty-seven he made a tour of inspection through Texas, under the auspices of the Southern Aid Society. Returning, he gave a few more years' missionary work in Montrose and Genessee Valley Presbyteries. Then he was post chaplain in Eastern Virginia. At seventy-six he began a year's missionary work in Southeastern New York. After this he spent a graceful old age in retirement, but not in idleness, among the people of his former charge in Montrose, and died January 23, 1880, aged ninety-one years and four days.

In the autumn of 1829 the session directed that their moderator and clerk sign an invitation to Rev. Daniel Deruelle, of New Jersey, a graduate of Princeton Seminary, to come and preach for one year. He was afterward called to the pastorate and installed in June, 1830. A man of fine physique, of fervid eloquence and earnest piety, under his ministry the membership of the church was greatly increased. One hundred and twelve were added to it on confession of faith during the three years of his pastorate, which closed in 1833. Within this period (in January, 1831) the first church bell of the borough was purchased and used by this congregation. In the latter part of his ministry the people were much moved and became somewhat divided in sentiment respecting the measures and methods of an evangelist who labored for a time with them. The good pastor was much grieved at the want of entire harmony among his people for such a cause. And when he came to preach his farewell sermon he announced his text (Gen. xlv. 24): "See that ye fall not out by the way," and was so overcome by his feelings that he burst into tears, and sat down. One of the officers of the church seeing that the pastor would be unable to go on with his sermon, dismissed the congregation. Mr. Deruelle, after retiring from the work here, spent some time as agent of the Board of Education, that he might improve his health by such active labors and travel. He died in North Carolina, March 4, 1858, while riding in his carriage pursuing his work as agent of the American Bible Society.

Soon after the retirement of Mr. Deruelle, the Rev. Timothy Stow, a graduate of Hamilton College and Auburn Theological Seminary, was called to the pastorate. He came here in January, 1834, and was installed the June following. After a successful ministry of four years, suffering from bronchial difficulties, he ceased his labors in the spring of 1838. He died at Lawrence, Mich., October 13, 1860.

The next pastorate was that of Rev. Henry A. Riley. Born in New York City, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, he studied law for a few months and then entered the Medical Department of the University, from which he was graduated in 1825. After practicing medicine about four years in his native city, he entered Princeton Theological Seminary and graduated in 1832. In 1835 he was ordained and installed pastor of what is now the West Twenty-third Street Church, of New York, from which he came here upon a unanimous call from this church. His labors here commenced January 20, 1839, and he was installed March 12, 1840. A house having been promised him in the call, a parsonage was built on the lot still used for the same purpose, and was first occupied in June, 1842. With great ability, candor and earnestness in the pulpit, and a tender and faithful pastor out of it, his ministry was one of marked success. The old church edifice which has been in use for thirty-three years, being found insufficient for their needs, it was decided to build a new one. The old church was used for the last time for public worship March 25, 1860, at which time a tender communion service was held. The preceding day had been a reunion and memorial day in the church. The corner-stone of the new edifice was laid June 13, 1860, and the completed house of worship was dedicated February 5, 1862. Greatly beloved by his people, Mr. Riley resigned his charge after a pastorate of twenty-five years, and preached his farewell sermon December 27, 1863. The remainder of his days were spent among the people whom he had served so long and so faithfully. He died March 17, 1878.

Henry A. Riley

A few months after Mr. Riley retired, August 20, 1864, the Rev. Jacob G. Miller, a graduate of Williams College and of Auburn Theological Seminary, then settled pastor at Branford, Conn., received a unanimous call to this field. The call was accepted and the pastor-elect was installed October 13, 1864. This, like the preceding pastorate, was marked by stability and success. It was attended with steady growth to the church, and with some revivals of great power. And when, after seventeen years of faithful service, the pastor, with impaired health and greatly beloved, resigned his charge, he left an enduring monument in a strong, well-equipped church, which he had done much to establish. Dr. Miller preached his farewell sermon November 20, 1881. After a year spent at Marathon, N. Y., he became pastor of the Congregational Church at Manchester, Iowa, where he still resides.

Rev. A. L. Benton is the son of Chester and Tirza Porter Loomis Benton, natives of Connecticut, who resided in Cortland, N. Y., most of their lives, and were members of the Presbyterian Church there. He was born in Cortland November 9, 1831, prepared for college at the academy at Cortland, and, after a four years' course, was graduated at Hamilton College in the class of '56, and, after a three years' course, he was graduated at Auburn Theological Seminary in the class of '59. He supplied the First Presbyterian Church of Milwaukee, Wis., for five months, and in January, 1860, married Emma, daughter of General Halsey Sanford, of Ovid, N. Y. In the same month he accepted a call from the Presbyterian Church at Lima, N. Y., where he continued his ministerial labors for eleven years. In the autumn of 1870 he accepted a call to become college pastor, with Rev. Dr. John C. Lord, over the Central Presbyterian Church of Buffalo, N. Y., where he remained until the autumn of 1872, when, under a call from the Presbyterian Church at Fredonia, N. Y., he began his labors there, which continued for nine and one-half years. In May, 1882, Elder Benton was called to the Presbyterian Church at Montrose, Pa.; was installed its pastor on November 25th, following.

The old parsonage, which had served as the pastor's home for forty years, being in need of extensive repairs, it was thought best to remove it and build new. Consequently, the old house was sold and the beautiful, commodious and convenient parsonage now in use was built on the same lot. The pastor and his family moved into it in the winter of 1883–84.

The present membership of the church is three hundred and seventy-two. The contributions of the church for the year ending April 1, 1887, were: For missionary purposes, seventeen hundred and twelve dollars; and for home expenses, thirty-two hundred and ninety-two dollars.

The Sabbath-School of the church numbers about two hundred and twenty scholars, with twenty-two teachers. Organized in 1818 in a public-house, its first teachers were Joshua W. Raynsford, with Miss Mary Fuller, in whose father's house it was first held. J. W. Raynsford was doubtless its first superintendent. June 3, 1819, the school was moved from the place of its organization into the academy building. Holding it in a public-school building aroused opposition to the school, as being a desecration of the Sabbath. It was thought to be an unjustifiable use of the day. This led the trustees of the academy to close their doors against it. It then went into a room furnished by Benjamin Sayre, and Miss Hannah Cochran became superintendent. In 1822 the school numbered ninety scholars and eleven teachers. June 11, 1826, it was held for the first time in the new Presbyterian Church. In 1829 it was reorganized, and Hon. William Jessup was chosen superintendent, which office he held with great usefulness and success until 1849, or for twenty years—with the exception of about two years, when Hon. Benjamin S. Bentley was superintendent.

In 1830, by an equitable arrangement, the Baptist portion of the school withdrew, to organize a Sabbath-school of their own. In 1849 Hon. William H. Jessup, son of the former superintendent, succeeded his father, and continued its superintendent until April, 1886, when other duties compelled him to resign. This prolonged superintendence was marked by signal success in the maintained interest of the school and the conversion of many scholars. Judge Jessup retired from the office greatly beloved, after thirty-six years of faithful service, but retains his interest and his place in the school. The pastor was chosen to succeed him, with Professor A. H. Berlin and S. M. Foster as assistants. After one year Professor Berlin was made superintendent and Mr. Foster assistant.

The church has sent out eleven ministers, five of whom became foreign missionaries. These were :—

Rev. William Arms, son of Phineas Arms, one of the original members and one of the first elders of the church. He was received into the church March 16, 1816. For a period he was engaged in missionary work in Patagonia. Then he was in the same work in Borneo, until failing health compelled him to relinquish it.

Rev. Oliver Butterfield was son of Joshua Butterfield, one of the first trustees of the church. He united with it in 1821. He served for a period the Congregational Church of South Britain, Conn., and died at New Haven in 1848.

Rev. Lorenzo Lyons, brother of Elder Jerre Lyons, united with the church April 6, 1823. Graduating at Union College and Auburn Theological Seminary, he gave himself to the foreign mission work, and sailed for the Sandwich Islands in 1832. Here, with great delight and devotion, he continued his work, never stopping to again visit his native land and home, and died at the islands October 6, 1886, at eighty years of age.

Rev. James W. Raynor was received into the church May 24, 1840. Graduating at Amherst College, he studied theology in part at Union Theological Seminary, and in part under private instruction. Licensed by Montrose Presbytery, most of his labors have been within its limits. He has faithfully served the churches at Upsonville, Springville, Le Raysville, Mt. Pleasant and Uniondale, and has recently closed a second term of over six years' service in the Franklin Church, at Upsonville.. He now resides at Montrose, in quite feeble health.

Rev. J. Lorenzo Lyons, son of Elder Jerre Lyons, was received into the church August 16, 1840. Graduating at Williams College and Union Theological Seminary, he entered the foreign field. After some years of service at Sidon, in Syria, failing health compelled him to relinquish his work there and return to his native country. Here he was for many years agent for the American Bible Society, residing in Jacksonville, Fla. He is now pastor in charge of the Presbyterian Church at Waldo, Fla.

Rev. Henry H. Jessup, son of Elder William Jessup, united with the church October 1, 1843. Graduating at Yale College and Union Theological Seminary, he sailed for Syria in 1856. His first work was at Sidon; afterward he was stationed at Tripoli, whence he went to Beirut, where he has resided many years in labors more abundant. In 1879, while on a brief visit to his native land, being chosen to represent his Presbytery in the General Assembly, he was elected its moderator. Being absent from the country the following year, and so unable to preach the opening sermon of the next Assembly, as is customary for the retiring moderator, he was providentially called to this service in 1884, while on a brief sojourn in this country, after nearly thirty years of service in Syria. The moderator of the preceding Assembly had died, and he, as the last moderator present, was called to this high service. Returning to Syria in 1885, he still resides at Beirut, where he has charge of the large native church, and is also instructor in the Theological Seminary at Abeih.

Rev. Samuel Jessup, another son of Elder Wm. Jessup, was received into the church October 5, 1849. Graduating from Yale College and Union Theological Seminary, he served as chaplain in the army during the early part of the war. In 1862 he sailed for Syria and was engaged in missionary work at Tripoli until 1885, when he was called to Beirut, where he still resides. He has charge of the extensive work of the mission press there, and also edits an Arabic newspaper.

Rev. Bentley S. Foster united with the church May 5, 1850. Graduating from Williams College and Union Theological Seminary, he has been a faithful pastor at Dunmore, in this State, at Nunda, in New York, and of churches in New Jersey and in Michigan. He is now pastor of the Presbyterian Church at South Amboy, N. J.

Rev. Elisha Mulford united with the church April 4, 1852. Graduating at Yale College and Andover Theological Seminary, he spent two years in travel and study in Germany. He then entered the Episcopal ministry and was rector for a term of years at Orange, N. J. He is widely known as the author of "The Nation" and "The Republic of God." While filling the chair of lecturer in theology in the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge, Mass., he died December 9, 1885, aged fifty-two years. (See more full notice elsewhere.)

Rev. Isaac Riley, son of Rev. Henry A. Riley, former pastor of this church, united with the church April 4, 1852. Graduating from Yale College and Union Theological Seminary, he was successively called to be pastor at Middletown, Del., Pottsville, Pa., Newark, N. J., and Thirty-fourth Street Reformed Church, New York, from which latter place he was called to the Westminster Presbyterian Church of Buffalo, N. Y. Here, after a short but very successful pastorate, he died October 23, 1878, aged forty-three years.

Rev. Henry J. Crane united with the church April 28, 1856. Graduating from the University of New York and Union Theological Seminary, he has been settled successively at Wysox, Hunter, N. Y., Gibson and Ararat, and is now in his tenth year at Nicholson, a pastor beloved.

William Jessup, son of Rev. Dr. H. H. Jessup, was received into the church January 3, 1879. Graduating at Princeton College in 1886, he is now pursuing his theological studies at Princeton Seminary preparatory to entering the gospel ministry.

Two other young men, members of this church, are now pursuing their studies, one in college, and the other preparing for college, with a view of entering upon the same work.

The following persons have served as ruling elders in the church since the adoption of the Presbyterian form of government. To their wisdom and discretion, as well as piety, is due much of its stability and prosperity, viz.:

1823, Phinehas Arms, Reuben Wells, Moses Tyler, Zebulon Deans, Joshua W. Raynsford, Benjamin Sayre, Isaac P. Foster; 1829, William Jessup, Jerre Lyons; 1835, James Deans Hugh McCollum; 1840, Josiah Blackman, Benjamin S. Bentley; 1847, Perrin Wells, Silas Perkins; 1850, John Trumbull; 1866, La Fayette Fitch, George V. Bentley, William H. Jessup; 1872, Calvin C. Halsey, William W. Smith, Milton Roy, Edwin Lathrop; 1878, A. Jackson Brewster, Theodore A. Lyons, Daniel Sayre; 1886, Henry Warner.

[1] METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH of Montrose.—We are unable to give the date when the "Methodist Itinerant" first visited Montrose, though it is certain this somewhat ubiquitous personage made his presence known sometime before any church organization of this denomination was formed. The old Bridgewater Circuit was organized in 1813, but a number of years elapsed before there was any stated preaching in this village, and it was not until 1841 that a society was formed; the fact is, the ground hereabouts in that early day was preoccupied and not favorable to the growth of Methodism.

[1] By Rev. H. C. McDermott.

At the session of the Oneida Annual Conference, in the year named, a new circuit was formed of part of Brooklyn and Bridgewater, and denominated Montrose—the village of that name being the most important place within its bounds. The appointments in the new circuit were known as follows: Montrose, Miller Hill, Franklin, J. Hancock's, B. Shay's, M. Hall's, M. McKeeby's, Liberty, Conklin, Great Bend and New Milford. In the territory embraced in the above are now six thriving charges. The Rev. E. B. Tenny was appointed preacher in charge, and the Rev. George C. Thompson assistant. The Rev. Mr. Tenny lost no time, it appears, in perfecting a church organization. Two small classes of the old Bridgewater Circuit, the one meeting at South Montrose and the one meeting in a school-house about one and one-half miles northeast of the village that stood near the spot where Mott's factory now stands, were united, and in due time chartered as the Methodist Episcopal Church of the borough of Montrose. The most prominent members of the new society were Timothy D. Shay and wife, Simeon Lewis and wife, Joseph R. Lewis and wife, George W. Crocker and wife, Jacob Tewksbury and wife, George Lewis and Ariel Vaughn. The male members mentioned, except George Lewis, constituted the first board of trustees. Brother J. R. Lewis has been continuously a member of the board and is now its president. He, with Brother Jacob Tewksbury and Sister Simeon Lewis, are the only surviving members of the original class.

The place of worship was the old court-house, where they had preaching and class-meeting once in two weeks. The prayer-meetings were held in private houses.

The Methodists held their services in the court-house at 10.30 A.M. and the Universalists at 1 P.M., and frequently the latter would come in and ring the bell for their worship before the former were through with class. The society continued to worship in the court-house until 1845, when the first house of worship was constructed. The initial step to this enterprise was taken April 20, 1844, when, at a regular meeting of the Quarterly Conference, Simeon Lewis, George W. Crocker and Jacob Tewksbury were appointed a building committee for the contemplated chapel at Montrose.

The building was a frame, thirty-eight by fifty feet, with galleries on sides and end, and stood on a portion of the ground occupied by the present edifice, the land being donated by the Hon. William Jessup. The cost of construction was one thousand eight hundred dollars. The church was dedicated to the worship of Almighty God by the Rev. John M. Snyder, presiding elder of the district, on Thanksgiving day, 1845. The Rev. William Round was pastor at the time the enterprise was completed, though it was begun under the administration of his predecessor, the Rev. J. R. Boswell. The growth of the society was very slow. After the dedication of the new church divine service was held every Sabbath instead of once in two weeks, as previously. This régime continued for about twenty years. A small band of noble and brave hearts contended earnestly for the cause against opposition and discouragements, slowly but surely gaining ground. The Rev. Luther Peck, who was appointed to Montrose in April, 1865, began holding services twice on the Sabbath.

At the ensuing session of Wyoming Conference the circuit was divided and Montrose erected into a station, outside classes were detached, and the work in the village started on an independent basis. The membership at the close of that year was reported at ninety-two. There was but little change in relative strength of the membership until the autumn of 1872, when, under the labors of the pastor, Rev. A. D. Alexander, a marvelous revival of religion occurred, "stirring the entire community as with a mighty earthquake." Hundreds were converted to God, many of them the most substantial citizens of the vicinity. The results to the general cause of Christ were most precious. Other churches shared largely in the ingathering, but the Methodist Church found itself suddenly lifted into strength in numbers and influence. The membership at the commencement of the Conference year of 1872 was ninety-four; at the close of that year it was three hundred and twenty-nine.

One prominent result of that awakening was the inauguration of a new church enterprise. The congregation had overgrown the church accommodations, and it became imperative either to enlarge or build anew. After prolonged consultation the latter was decided upon. The removal of Brother Alexander at the end of his second year caused some dissatisfaction and considerable alienation to the new church enterprise. But the new pastor, the Rev. W. J. Judd, aided by a noble few, pressed forward with commendable zeal. A subscription list of nine thousand dollars was secured. In August the old church was removed from where it had stood for nearly thirty years, and the corner-stone of the new edifice was laid. The new building was seventy-seven by forty-five feet, with transept thirty-two by thirty-six feet. E. L. Weeks, J. D. Goodwin and S. F. Lane were selected as building committee. E. L. Weeks was given the general superintendency, and day help was employed. The work proceeded without especial incident until the severe winter compelled a suspension. In the spring of 1874 another change of pastors occurred, and the Rev. W. L. Thorpe was assigned to this field. In the meantime what proved to be the severest financial depression the country has known came on. One result was to render worthless about two thousand of the above-named subscription. In August the building committee concluded a contract with W. J. Gordon to complete the work (except slating) for and in consideration of the sum of four thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars and the material on hand. In November a severe wind-storm blew down the nearly-finished spire, entailing an additional expense of about one thousand dollars. The contract price being too low, it became necessary for the committee to expend two thousand dollars more to secure the completion of the building. The ladies of the church and congregation provided for the furnishing. Bishop E. G. Andrews dedicated the new house of worship May 16, 1875. Rev. B. I. Ives managed the finances. The cost of construction was about seventeen thousand dollars, and though enough was subscribed to cover this amount, yet such were the circumstances and the severity of the financial depression that, after all available subscriptions were secured, the society found itself about six thousand dollars in debt. During the second year of Brother Thorpe's pastorate another precious revival of religion occurred, resulting in seventy-five additions to the church. For several years succeeding, the society passed through great trials. It was tried in a furnace of affliction. There was much dissatisfaction among the members—a number withdrew, the love of others waxed cold, and the interest decreased rather than increased. During the pastorate of the Rev. H. H. Dresser a determined effort was made to liquidate the indebtedness, and about three thousand five hundred dollars was secured and paid. The remainder of the bonded indebtedness against the church was paid about one year ago, largely through the efforts of the present pastor and the liberality of Mr. Clemuel R. Woodin. In 1878 the tall and beautiful spire was found to be unsafe and had to be taken down. In the autumn of 1886 a neat and graceful spire was built, and the church edifice repainted. The present parsonage was purchased in 1856.

The society is now peaceful and prosperous. During the present winter a very precious revival of religion has occurred, resulting in over one hundred accessions. The present membership is two hundred and eighty-seven, the Sunday-school is large and increasing, and the prospect before this society was never brighter.

Many persons might be worthily named, and much interesting matter of a personal nature might be presented, but space forbids.

The following is a consecutive list of the presiding elders, pastors and assistant pastors who have served this charge, with the dates of their appointment and periods of service:

Presiding Elders: Revs. D. Holmes, Jr., 1841, two years; John M. Snyder, 1843, four years; D. A. Shepard, 1847, three years; Fitch Reed, 1850, two years; F. Paddock, 1852, three years; G. Landon, 1854, four years; G. H. Blakeslee, 1859, four years; H. Brownscombe, 1863, four years; D. C. Olmstead, 1867, four years; Luther Peck, 1871, four years; I. T. Walker, 1875, three years; William Bixby, 1878, two years; J. G. Eckman, 1880, four years; and the present incumbent, the Rev. William H. Olin, D.D., who was appointed in 1884.

Pastors: Revs. E. B. Tenny, 1841, two years; J. R. Boswell, 1843, two years; William Round, 1845, two years; Asa Brooks, 1847, one year; G. P. Porter, 1848, one year; E. B. Tenny, 1849, one year; John Mulkey, 1850, two years; P. Bartlett, 1852, two years; Joseph Whittham, 1854, one year; S. S. Barter, 1855, two years; B. B. Emory, 1857, two years; J. K. Peck, 1859, two years; R. Van Valkenburg, 1861, two years; A. H. Schoonmaker, 1863, two years; Luther Peck, 1865, three years; J. L. Legg, 1868, one year; King Elwell, 1869, two years; A. D. Alexander, 1871, two years; W. J. Judd, 1873, one year; W. L. Thorpe, 1874, three years; L. Cole, 1877, one year; W. B. Westlake, 1878, one year; H. H. Dresser, 1879, three years; T. Harroun, 1882, three years; and the present incumbent, H. C. McDermott, appointed in 1885.

Assistant Pastors: George C. Thompson, 1841, two years; N. S. Dewitt, 1843, one year; R. S. Rose, 1846, one year; D. Torry, 1847, two years; G. W. Leach, 1849, one year; W. B. Thomas, 1853, one year; D. Thompson, 1854, one year; John Mulkey, 1860, one year; William Shelp, 1865, one year. All of these have done heroic work for the church; a number subsequently became presiding elders in this or other districts, and several have achieved some distinction in the line of authorship. No full history of the Sunday-school could be prepared, so we have not attempted any. The school is in a very flourishing condition. C. S. Page, Esq., is superintendent.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH.[1]—The first record of any Episcopal service in Montrose is found in the local papers under date of March 30, 1828. This, as were most of the occasional services subsequent thereto, was held in the old court-house, even after a charter was obtained, bearing date December 20, 1830.

ST. PAUL'S EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The first Episcopal visitation was made by Bishop Onderdonk, October 5, 1829, when J. W. Raynsford, Esq., wife and daughter, and John Street and wife, were confirmed. These five persons constituted the beginning of St. Paul's Church in Montrose. It is probable that Mr. Raynsford was instrumental in procuring the first services, it being the tradition of the parish that he, accidentally becoming possessed of a copy of the Book of Common Prayer, was led by the study of its contents to the adoption of the emblem of the church, "Evangelical Truth and Apostolic Order." He was a man of great integrity and distinguished for remarkable practical gifts, being active in all the religious, educational, business and social interests of the community.

[1] Written by Rev. Edward A. Warriner.

The corner-stone of the first church edifice was laid by Bishop Onderdonk, June 2, 1832, and the building consecrated October 27th in the following year. This building was subsequently sold to the Roman Catholics, and is now owned and occupied by them. In the summer of 1856 the corner-stone of the present substantial structure was laid, and the building consecrated by Bishop Potter, July 17, 1857. The first rectory, the house now occupied by Dr. W. W. Smith, was built on land donated by J. W. Raynsford, in 1850. In 1874 the present fine rectory was built on a spacious lot given by Mrs. Henry Drinker, on South Main Street; and three years later, the present Sunday-school building and chapel on land adjoining the church, the plan of which, by a New York architect, was given to the parish by Mrs. Theodore Gilman, of the same city. It will thus be seen that the development of the parish has been very slow, covering a space of more than fifty-nine years; yet at no one time, notwithstanding frequent discouragements, has the parish substantially declined in the number of its supporters and communicants. After the first confirmation, there is no record of any other until July 28, 1839, when three persons were confirmed, making the whole number in ten years but eight. The third confirmation was eight years later, July 18, 1847, when six persons were confirmed by Bishop Potter. During the whole period of Bishops Onderdonk's, Potter's and Bowman's administrations, covering the rectorships of Revs. Marks, Peck, Pleasants, Hopkins, Long, Byllesby and Peet, a period of thirty years, there were only forty-six persons confirmed. During Mr. Halsey's rectorship of eight years there were twenty-eight additions to the communion-list; Mr. Kirkland's of two years, thirteen; Mr. Warriner's of eighteen years, one hundred and forty-nine. There were also confirmed eleven persons in the summer of 1867—making the whole number two hundred and twenty-seven. In addition to this number, many have become communicants by transfer of membership from other churches.

The first rector was the Rev. Samuel Marks, who was appointed resident missionary in Montrose in the spring of 1831, officiating also in New Milford and Springville. He was distinguished for his zeal and personal popularity. Died recently at Huron, Ohio, at an advanced age, and while still engaged in missionary work. Of the subsequent rectors, Revs. Peck and Pleasant, we have no information. Rev. George P. Hopkins is rector of St. Matthew's Church, Pike, Pa.; Rev. John Long, who built the first rectory, working on it with his own hands, is still engaged in missionary work in the vicinity of Reading, Pa.; Rev. D. C. Byllesby is rector at Media, Pa.; Rev. R. B. Peet, at Newport, R. I. Rev. William F. Halsey, under whose thorough and conservative rectorship the church was greatly strengthened and became self-supporting, died a few since at Radnor, Pa., where he had been for many years rector of St. David's. Rev. George H. Kirkland is rector at New Berlin, N. Y.

The first vestry were: Wardens, J. W. Raynsford and J. C. Biddle; Vestrymen, Judge Benjamin Lathrop, John Melhuish, S. F. Keeler, Henry Drinker, C. L. Ward and Admiral Rupley. The present vestry are: Wardens, A. Lathrop and C. N. Stoddard; Vestrymen, Thomas Warner, A. B. Burns, E. P. Munger, John R. Raynsford, James Melhuish and William M. Post.

Among the names of deceased members of the vestry not previously mentioned, and others who have been prominent supporters and communicants, are: F. M. Williams, Henry J. Webb, William H. Cooper, Charles D. Lathrop, Furman Stone, Hon. F. B. Streeter, Rev. Elisha Mulford, LL.D., Joseph D. Drinker, Benjamin C. Park, LL.D., Philander Lines, O. D. Beaman, Thomas Johnson, General D. D. Warner, Charles L. Brown, Hon. E. B. Hawley and Captain Jerome Lyons.

Of devoted women who have passed from earth, we find the following names: Ruth S. Lathrop, Elinor Drinker, Mrs. Henry Drinker, Mrs. F. M. Williams, Mrs. D. D. Warner, Sally D. Biddle, Mary E. Tarbell, Elizabeth Biddle (Mrs. Halsey), Eugenia A. Lacy, Mary W. Groesbeck, Mrs. Simon Sayre, Eliza Duffy, Lydia Welsh, Mrs. Judge Lathrop and Mrs. Truman Stone.

The Sunday-school numbers twelve teachers and about one hundred scholars. Thomas Warner is superintendent, Charles N. Stoddard treasurer, and William Stoddard librarian. In this connection should be mentioned the name of Mrs. Mary Webb, who is the oldest living communicant of the church, having been a member over forty years. In all these years she has been constantly engaged in church and Sunday-school work, and although advanced in years, she still teaches a large class of young ladies and gentlemen.

From this record, brief as it necessarily is, should not be omitted the following names of those who, though not members of the parish, have, with true missionary zeal, interested themselves in its development, and have contributed to its necessities and support in the years gone by: Mr. Tobias Wagner and wife, Misses Mary and Hannah Drinker, Mrs. John B. Wallace, Mr. Harry D. Biddle and Mrs. Pemberton Pleasants, of Philadelphia; and Mr. and Mrs. Paxson, Miss Fanny Paxson and Mrs. Gilman, of New York.

THE UNIVERSALISTS have a church at Montrose. The prime movers in its erection were Samuel Gregory and Daniel Searle. Sheriff Williams, the Stevenses and some others contributed. Revs. Peck, Marsh, Rogers and A. O. Warren have been preachers for them. During the skating craze it was converted into a skating-rink. Rev. Mr. Hand has been preaching here recently. It is now a missionary station. The society was organized in 1831, and the church was dedicated July 11, 1844.

THE ROMAN CATHOLICS first celebrated Mass at the house of Peter Byrne about 1840. They then purchased the old church edifice of the Episcopalians, when they built their new church in 1857. The Catholic Society are now completing a new church on South Main Street. The church is located here because it is in a central point. The congregation is mostly drawn from the surrounding country.

LODGES.—The history of Masonry in Montrose begins with the first settlement of the village. Three charters have been granted to hold Masonic lodges in Montrose: the first, under title Rising Sun Lodge, No. 149, was chartered in December, 1816, with the following officers: Jonah Brewster, W. M.; Perez Perkins, S. W.; Wm. C. Turrell, J. W.; J. Cook, S. D.; Luman Ferry, Jun. D.; Isaac Post, Treas.; J. W. Hill, Sec'y; and J. Munger, Tyler. Hon. Almon H. Read, Stephen Wilson, Wm. Turrell and David Post became Masons and members of this lodge in 1817, and later also D. G. Wilson, Solomon Dimock, Stephen Bentley, B. T. Case, Cyrus Avery, Mason Denison. In the year 1818 Almon H. Read was Worshipful Master. Under minutes of meeting, February 18, 1819, a motion is recorded recommending G. Clagget and Dr. M. Denison to the Royal Arch Chapter, but no reference is made as to where this chapter was located. On December 27, 1819, St. John's day, the lodge formed a procession and marched to the court-house where an appropriate address was delivered on the festival of St. John by the Rev. Mr. Chase. The lodge then formed and returned to the lodge-room "and partook of an elegant repast." At a meeting held on the 2d day of May, 1825, Samuel Bissel presented a petition for initiation and membership from James W. Chapman, and on the 30th day of May, 1825, Mr. Chapman was entered an apprentice. At this time meetings of the lodge were held in the old court-house. Judge Chapman was made a Mason a few days after becoming of age. He is probably the only remaining member of the old Rising Sun Lodge, and, notwithstanding his eighty-three years of life, and fifty-two of Masonic service, is hale and hearty, and has furnished many points in connection with this article. The annals of the lodge-room closed by the Grand Lodge suspending charter September 5,1825. During its existence it made many Masons, and was a strong organization.

About two years after the suspension of Rising Sun Lodge, a number of its old members petitioned for a charter for a new lodge, to be located in Montrose. The petition was granted, and in accordance therewith, a meeting of the following Masons was held at the house of Daniel Curtis on Nov. 13, 1827: Jonah Brewster, Isaac Post, James W. Hill, Samuel Gregory, Daniel Curtis and Hiram Finch were present. They met again November, 17, 1827, at the old court-house, where the new officers were installed by Hon. Almon H. Read as follows: Jonah Brewster, W. M.; James W. Hill, S. W.; Daniel Lathrop, J. W.; Isaac Post, Treas., and Hiram Finch, Sec'y.

This lodge did not thrive, and ceased its workings probably in 1829. Daniel Lathrop was its last W. M.

The present Warren Lodge, No. 240, was chartered by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania about twenty years after the suspension of Montrose Lodge, No. 213, under date June 4, 1849, with the following officers: R. C. Simpson, W. M.; Dr. E. S. Park, S. W.; and J. W. Chapman, J. W. (Bro. R. C. Simpson, afterwards D. D. G. M.)

Among the first members of this lodge were B. Richardson, F. Avery, C. M. Simmons, Walter Dimock, S. W. Hamilton, J. E. Howe and R. S. Searle. A. Woodcock, W. M., in 1852–53; G. L. Stone, W. M., 1854; Dr. B. Richardson, W. M., 1855; Dr. E. S. Park, W. M., 1856; Wm. H. Boyd; F. Frazier, W. M., 1857; Wm. M. Post, W. M., 1858; G. L. Stone, W. M., 1859; W. M. Post, W. M., 1860; Amos Nichols, W. M., 1861; and later on Hon. J. B. McCollum, A. O. Warren, Apollos Stone, D. W. Searle, W. E. Babcock, J. F. Shoemaker, W. H. Boyd, O. M. Hall, O. P. Beebe, J. R. Raynsford and J. F. Zerfass. District Attorney F. I. Lott is the present W. M.

Montrose Lodge, No. 151, I. O. of O. F., was organized in March, 1846. The charter members were Thos. P. St. John, Ezra Patrick, Jr., Wm. J. Mulford, Samuel B. Mulford, Robert J. Niven. T. P. St. John was the first Noble Grand and Ezra Patrick was Vice-Grand. Dr. C. C. Halsey and Daniel Brewster were among the first initiated. Moses C. Tyler, Gen. Warner, E. C. Fordham and many others from different parts of the county soon joined the order. It increased in numbers and became the parent order of that fraternity in the county. Lodge meets every Tuesday evening.

St. John's Encampment, No. 50, was organized in 1847. Charter members—T. P. St. John, Ezra Patrick, R. C. Niven, Jas. N. Eldridge and Wm. F. Bradley. Sheriff Johnson, M. C. Tyler and R. C. Niven were prominent in the early days of the order.

A Rebekah Lodge, Mary, No. 7, was organized at Montrose in 1869.

The Montrose Cemetery is located on a ridge of ground in the south part of Montrose belonging to the David Post estate. Bartlet Hinds, Jr., was buried there soon after the first settlement was made. The ground was used by the Post and other families and has been enlarged from time to time, as the needs of the village have required. There has never been any charter or regular cemetery association. Years ago money was raised by subscription and a number of acres were purchased and it was made a public cemetery. They surveyed this land into lots and apportioned a certain number to strangers and assigned lots to the subscribers. Wm. M. Post has recently enlarged the ground by inclosing more land for burial purposes. The cemetery is handsomely located on rising ground, from which beautiful sunset views are to be seen. There are a number of beautiful monuments, the most expensive of which are Wm. J. Turrell's, Judge Streeter's and Isaac J. Post's.

Colored People in Montrose.—Montrose was the centre of a strong Abolition sentiment, and one of the hiding-places on the so-called Underground Railroad. Isaac Post and his son, Rev. Albert Post, David Post, Samuel Warner, William Warner, William Foster, Deacon Meacham, Isaac Peckins and others assisted them. There was no one, Democrat or Republican, who would betray them. Judge Post was the most prominent of the early Abolitionists, and most of them located in Pleasant Valley, as they called it, on David Post's lands. He was very lenient with them, and his son, William M. Post, never turns them away, whether they pay for their lots or not. Charles Hammond was one of the first that came here. He and his wife worked for Isaac Post a great many years. They were steady and industrious. Mrs. Hammond keeps a restaurant on Wall Street, New York, now. They escaped with five others, riding their masters' horses the first night. They abandoned the horses and turned them homeward towards morning. Making their way nights, they finally reached Montrose. They usually came by way of Wilkes-Barre, under directions from Mr. Gildersleeve, who was persecuted and rode on a rail in Wilkes-Barre because of his Abolition views. Oct. 21, 1840, Isaac Post makes mention in his diary that five males, four females and two young children came to his house, as there was no place for them at the tavern. He gave up his office to them and succeeded in accommodating them. In 1842 eight colored men came directly from the South. Some of their adventures while escaping were quite thrilling. Deacon William Smith gives the following account of his escape. We give it nearly in his own words :

"I belonged to a widow woman in Maryland. She had several young sons. One day I got wet, and was drying myself by the stove. One of the sons said, 'What are you doing here? You stand here happy as a lord.' This first led me to think if there was a just God, as I had heard the preachers say, why should I have no privileges. I then determined to escape. There were seven of us planned to escape on the night of the 10th of April. I had been up late Friday night and thought I would play sick in order to rest Saturday before starting. So in the morning when the rest took breakfast I did not eat anything. One of the young men looked at me and did not believe that I was sick, so he sent me to his mother, who was a good doctor. I beat my stomach and rubbed my eyes in order to look sick. She looked at my tongue and felt of my pulse and looked at me as though she didn't credit my story. She says, 'I will send you some breakfast and you may come and plant some seed in the garden.' I could hardly help bursting out laughing, but I said I was sick; and she sent me up some medicine, which I threw into the fire. My sister saw my bundle of clothes and suspected that I was going to run away. I did not dare tell her for fear she would cry and they would find me out, so I said I was invited to a ball up to the manor. That night, as I was about to leave, my sister came out and looked at me. As my eyes met hers they filled with tears. I never knew that I loved my relatives. This was the first time that I ever knew that I loved my sister. The first point we reached was Chambersburg. As we were traveling along in the vicinity of Gettysburg we met a man who said, 'Good-evening.' We returned the salutation. Our speech betrayed us. He said, 'You are escaping from slavery.' We said, 'No, we are freemen and just returning from boating,' but he knew that we were slaves. He then claimed to be our friend, and said that it would not be safe to stay in the hotel; we might sleep in his barn. We took turns and kept one man on guard all night. About two o'clock two big men came in and looked around, and locked the door as they went out. Our watchman awakened us and we heard many persons whispering around the barn. We got what arms we had ready, for we had resolved on liberty or death. Billy Brooks, a big, stout man who afterward lived with the Sayres brothers a great many years, said, 'Follow me.' He gave a run and butted against that door with his head, knocking some of the boards as much as ten feet. We all followed him and were pursued. It had rained that night and the streams were swollen, which was providential for us. I was supple then; taking a pole, I leaped across the creek and helped the others over. We were on the outskirts of Gettysburg. It was morning and there was no woods. We crept into a cave[1] in the rocks. The bloodhounds did not get our track. We saw our mistress' sons ride past. About noon two of our men would go out. Providentially, they fell into the hands of some colored people near Gettysburg. The Abolitionists had heard of our escape. They sent out and found us and gave us something to eat and directed us towards Lisbon Forge, while our owners went towards Harrisburg. We had a number of adventures as we traveled nights. We came near being drowned twice,—once in crossing a creek on poles and in crossing the Susquehanna. A little man they called 'John the Baptist' was hired by the Abolitionists to row us over. The Susquehanna was high and the logs and floating timbers were coming down the river with great speed. We had a narrow boat and when we got out in the swift current we found that our boatman was drunk. Billy Brooks, who had followed the river, laid him down in the bottom of the boat and took the oars. John Stout nearly upset us in plunging for his hat. Finally we reached Wilkes-Barre and Gildersleeve sent us to Montrose. When we got here Benjamin R. Lyon directed us to Judge Post. He assured us of our safety and encouraged us. There was a little house where the jail stands, which was the only house used for colored people then. William L. Post hired me and I worked for him nine years. The Posts were all good to us. That woman that sits there was a little girl then (referring to his wife). She showed me into Mr. Post's house. I came here in 1842 and have been a local preacher in Zion Church about thirty-four years."

Zion Church was organized in the little house that stood where the jail stands about 1844, by Rev. John Tappin. The first leader was Peter Lee, assisted by John Carter, and John Booey was local preacher. There were about twelve members at the time of organization. Rev.

[1] Persons familiar with Gettysburg battle-field will remember the Devil's Den, a cave under Little Round Top, which was probably where these poor fugitives hid from their relentless pursuers.

Wm. Smith, Jane Gilmore and John Stout are the only ones now living here that belonged to the first class. Thos. Cook, Alfred Youngs, Benj. Howard and Alfred Wells belonged to that first class. There are about thirty members now. The first little church was built about 1847; the present church about 1859.

The Bethel Church was first organized about three miles beyond Montrose. They built a church here afterwards. The Posts did not neglect the education of these fugitives. Two of Isaac Post's daughters taught a number of them to read, and Miss Jane Post gave music lessons to two of the girls. One of the most noted characters among them was John Booey; he had thick lips and was very dull and stupid; he thought he had a call to preach, and was anxious to learn to read; most of them could learn and Miss Post tried to teach him, but it was a hopeless task. One day, after she had been away from the place some time, he came with his Testament to show Miss Post how he could read; he made his own selection and pointed with his finger as he began to repeat Scripture. Miss Post observed that the finger did not point at the same words he was repeating. He had learned to repeat a passage of Scripture and was trying to make her believe that he was reading. He tried to preach occasionally; once he forgot his text. He said, "I have dun forgot my text, but den let not your hearts be troublesome." He closed sometimes in grandiloquent style, like the following: "Mine eyes am closed in silence, and jaw cleaved to de roof of de mouf, and hope to 'sess dat pardon bought by de blood ob de Lord, who lay in de heart ob de earth forty days and forty nights." Sometimes he blundered out some truth. Once he prayed that "de Lord would bress those who had so often dissembled at dat place." Lewis Williams, a colored barber; Ed. Williams' widow, and a few others, have accumulated some property. In 1840 there were ninety-seven colored people in the county. There are about one hundred colored people at Montrose now. Many of them have removed, and the old slaves are nearly all dead.

CHAPTER XXI.

BRIDGEWATER TOWNSHIP.[1]

"At January sessions, 1805, the court of Luzerne County was petitioned by Thomas Parke and others to erect a township from parts of Tunkhannock, Braintrim, Nicholson and Rush, to be called Bridgewater. Its dimensions were described thus:

'Beginning at a point one mile above where Martin's Creek empties into the Tunkhannock, thence northerly to the forks of Martin's Creek, easterly from Bloomfield Milbourne's, thence north to intersect the south line of Lawsville, thence on that line to the southwest corner of Lawsville, thence northerly to the State line, thence west to the thirty-second mile-stone, thence south till it shall intersect a line to be drawn due west from place of beginning.'

"On hearing the petition, Judge Rush directed the commissioners to return a plot, which they did, November, 1806, and the court then confirmed it. The original dimensions of Bridgewater included a small portion of what is now Wyoming County. Springville, Dimock, Lathrop, Brooklyn, Silver Lake and portions of Forest Lake, Jessup and Franklin have been taken from it. It is more nearly the central township of the county than any other. Montrose, the county-seat, is about four miles west of a central north and south line, and one mile north of an east and west line. The site of the court-house was located in 1811. The township is a water-shed for three streams, the sources of which are in the vicinity of Montrose, and which in three different directions at length reach the Susquehanna River, viz., Snake Creek running north, the Meshoppen south, and the Wyalusing west and south. The Snake and Wyalusing Creeks, which rise within half a mile of each other, are probably one hundred miles apart at their mouths; but the Meshoppen, though running for many miles at nearly a right angle with the latter, falls into the Susquehanna but a short distance below it. Hopbottom Creek is the outlet of Heart Lake on the east line of Bridgewater; it runs southwardly into Martin's Creek, and eventually into the Tunkhannock. Jones'

[1] Blackman.

Lake, within a mile of Montrose, is the principal source of Snake Creek; Williams' Pond, in the northern part of the township, is another, but inferior source of it. Cold Brook, near the line of Silver Lake, is a tributary of Silver Creek, which is itself a tributary of Snake Creek. A small pond near the south line of Bridgewater has an outlet emptying into the Meshoppen."

The elevation of the borough above sea level is from sixteen hundred to seventeen hundred feet. The township varies in elevation from thirteen hundred to seventeen hundred feet. Stephen Wilson, Samuel Wilson, Samuel Coggswell, Nehemiah Maine, Samuel Maine, David Doud, Ozem Cook, Elisha Lewis, Robert Day, Daniel and Eldad Brewster, Daniel Foster and John Reynolds were all here from 1799 to 1801.

Stephen Wilson was the first permanent settler in what is now Bridgewater. He came from Vermont originally, and built a cabin just south of the present borough limits in the fall of 1798. In the spring of 1799 he found his way through the wilderness to his humble habitation, with his wife and two children, David and Mason S., and his brother-in-law, Samuel Coggswell. His house was located on the path from the source of the Wyalusing to the Nine Partners' settlement. The door of his cabin ever stood ajar to the pioneers, many of whom were entertained under his hospitable roof. His brother, Samuel Wilson, commenced on what was afterwards known as the Roberts farm. He sold this improvement and built another log cabin and finally left the county. Samuel Coggswell located a little west of Stephen Wilson, on what was afterwards the Park farm, within the Connecticut township of Manor. Nehemiah Maine took up land under Connecticut title, just east of the Reuben Wells homestead. The same year Ozem Cook located in Manor, on what was afterwards the Moses S. Tyler farm.

Robert Day was a man of Christian integrity, a member of the Baptist Church. He aided David Harris in the erection of the first gristmill down on the Wyalusing, and had a farm between that point and Montrose, where he spent most of his days. His first wife was a daughter of Jedediah Hewitt. H. H. Day, Esq., one of his children, afterwards resided in Susquehanna. Daniel Brewster occupied a farm since occupied by Thomas Johnson. He was in the War of 1812. He removed and died at Frenchtown Mountain, aged ninety-two.

Joshua W. Raynsford came from Windham Co., Conn., in 1801, to the small clearing made by Amolo Balch, one and one-half miles south of Stephen Wilson. His squatter's right was valueless, and he repaired to Philadelphia afoot, in order to obtain a valid title. He brought his family in 1802. The little log house that stood down by the spring had oiled paper for window lights, like the rest of the cabins in the vicinity. Mr. Raynsford thought that he would be a little more aristocratic than his neighbors and purchased twelve panes of seven by nine glass, which he brought very carefully from Wilkes-Barre, only to have his plans broken by the steelyards which Mrs. Raynsford carelessly threw upon the glass as it lay upon the bed. Joseph Raynsford, his father, came shortly after and erected a frame story and a half house, wherein the first Congregational Church of Bridgewater was organized in 1810. Joshua W. Raynsford was a man of marked characteristics and became a leading man in the new settlement. He was the first school-teacher in 1803 and had forty-two pupils. He was a leading spirit in the establishment of the Susquehanna County Academy, and in the organization of the Congregational Church. Owing to some difficulty he left that church, and became the prime mover in the organization of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. He moved to Montrose in 1817 and had his residence and justice of the peace office opposite Jerre Lyons'. His first wife was Hannah, daughter of Walter Lathrop. Their children were Mary Ann, wife of D. D. Warner; Edward, a merchant in Owego, N. Y., where he married Charlotte Drake. John R. Raynsford, one of their sons, is postmaster of Montrose and station agent of the Narrow-Gauge Railway. Edward, another son, resides at Susquehanna. Hannah, of the original family, was wife of C. L. Ward, Esq. The other children were Salome, Frederick and Jones.

Daniel Foster came to Bridgewater in 1800, along with Captain Hinds. He built the first saw-mill in Bridgewater, on a branch of the Wyalusing, where William Barron now lives. His son, Walter Foster, married Maria Bentley and lived at Montrose. Their son, Bentley S. Foster, is a Presbyterian minister at South Amboy, N. J. Stephen Bentley came to Bridgewater and lived on a farm until he died, in 1833–34. Maria was the oldest child; Marshall was a farmer in Bridgewater many years, and finally came to Montrose, where he died; Stephen moved to New York and became a land agent; Benjamin S. became a judge at Williamsport; Jane E. taught school, and was seven years superintendent of the Soldiers' Orphans' Home at Wilkes-Barre, (she now resides with Mrs. Riley at Montrose); George V. was a merchant and president of the National Bank at Montrose from 1881 to '85. His first wife was Catharine Sayre, and their son, Geo. F. Bentley, is a lawyer in New York. His second wife is a sister of Mrs. Thos. Dickson.

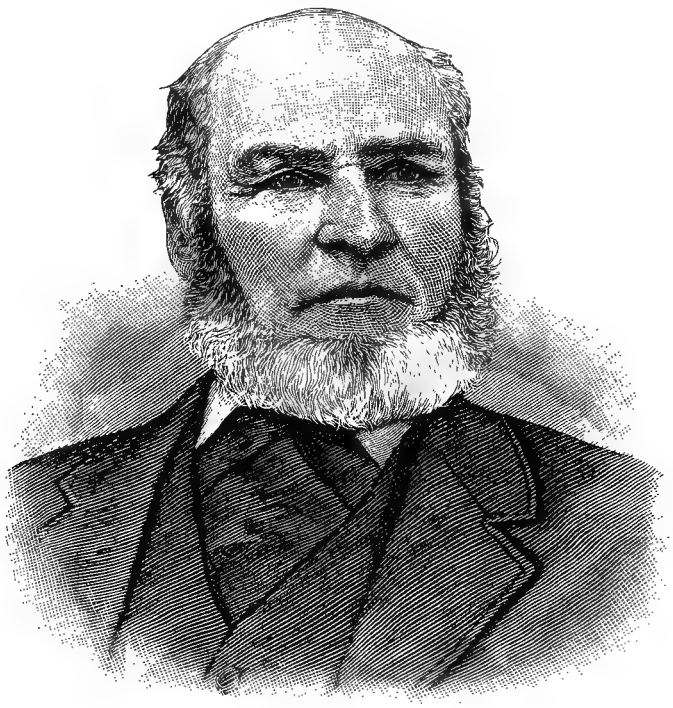
John Reynolds came with Capt. Hinds in 1800, and lived on the opposite side of the Wyalusing from Daniel Foster. His wife was a Halsey. He built the first fulling-mill in this vicinity on the Wyalusing soon after he came here. He was a Revolutionary soldier, member of the Baptist Church and a good moral man. He lived to be ninety-five years old. His son, Joseph Reynolds, married Effie Marsh, and followed the same business that his father started—carding, coloring, fulling and dressing cloth. They took produce or almost anything for pay. He died before his father did, in 1832, and left a widow and seven children. Of Joseph Reynolds' children, George M. learned the printer's trade of Geo. Fuller, and worked at his trade in Carbondale and Honesdale, where he published a newspaper and finally moved West; Albert G. lived in Brooklyn, and had a feed and carding-mill at South Pond; John is a farmer in New Milford; Henrietta is the wife of Nathaniel K. Sutton, a lumberman; Margaret's first husband was Wm. H. Norris, by whom she had two sons, who were in the army. Her second husband was Sheldon Meacham.



Elias West, for many years toll-gate keeper, settled near the line of Dimock township, on the turnpike. David Harris came from Southampton, L. I., and, as already intimated, built the first grist-mill on the Wyalusing about this time. Jonathan Wheaton settled about one-half mile east of B. Hinds, toward Jones' Pond, which was then called Wheaton's Pond. Abinoam Hinds and his brother-in-law, Isaac Peckins, came from Middleboro', Mass., in 1803. [1] Isaac Peckins' residence was within the present borough limits. He died in May, 1849, aged eighty-four.

David D. Hinds.—His grandfather was Elder Ebenezer Hinds, and his great-grandfather was also a Baptist minister in New England. His father, Abinoam Hinds (1764–1849), was a native of Middleboro', Mass., and came to Montrose in 1802, two years after his brother, Captain Bartlet Hinds, who came in 1800, and whose sketch may be found in the early history of Montrose. When a boy, Abinoam Hinds left home and went to sea, where he remained for some seven years engaged on a whaling vessel. Returning, he married Susan Snow, who bore him the following children: Susan became the wife of Stephen Hinds, her cousin, and resided at Montrose, a son of whom, Leonard B., was a lawyer at Susquehanna, this county, for thirty-three years, and died in 1882, aged fifty-four years; Mark died in Olean, Pa.; Richard died in the South; Lydia was the wife of Ackley

[1] A newspaper writer, under the heading of A Drawn Battle, says: "Over thirty years ago, the venerable Isaac Peckins thus narrated to me an adventure which happened about two miles northwest of Montrose: 'One day I went out to cut an ox-yoke, in a little swale or swamp near the medder on your father's farm. The briers on the wet ground had grown up dreffal thick, and taller than my head. Wal, I was chopping when I heered a kind of growling and stirring among the bushes on ahead. I looked and see a little kind of sheep path that way. So I got down on my hands and knees—for I couldn't go straight—and crawled along under some ways. At last I came to a round spot about as large as this room. There wa'n't anything onto it, but the tall briers rose all around. Right on t'other end there was another hole which led out. Just as I popped up my head and stood straight, there stood a great black bear within three feet of me. He stood still and looked right at me. I had left my axe behind, and I had nothing to defend myself. I remembered an old hunter't used to be around here, named Hale, who said there was no animal in this country that would touch a man if he looked at it straight in the eye. So I looked at him, and stepped towards him. He brussled up and snarled and stood still. I thought it was a ticklish place. I lifted up my voice and yelled and heowled as loud as I could. That seemed to set the creetur crazy. He heowled and tore the ground with his feet. I didn't know what would become of me. At last I took off my old hat, shook it and ran at him. All at once he dropped his brussels, turned round, dropped his tail and run out the other hole. I followed him, and was near enough when he went out to kick him behind. I had a good will to, but thought I was satisfied to get off as well, and I went back by my hole. Terrible great creetur!'"

Bronson and died at Jacksonville, Fla.; Abinoam settled in Dixon, Ill., where he died at the age of sixty-nine; he resided at Montrose until 1856; Preserved resides at Little Meadows, Pa.; and Agnes, the wife of John Stout, died at Owego, N. Y.

Abinoam Hinds and Isaac Peckins came here together, with their families and effects, in 1803, the former having decided to locate here on his visit the preceding year. They came with a yoke of oxen and one horse the entire journey, and it may be difficult, nearly a century after this event, for the reader to leave his surroundings of a beautiful village, with its fine residences, churches and schools, the country covered with a network of well-worked public roads, railroads and highly cultivated farms, and return to the same locality, then an almost unbroken wilderness, with only here and there, miles apart, a clearing or a log house, with none of the rapid modes of travel now so common, and no communication with other parts of the country save by tedious journeys on horse-back, or by means of a rude vehicle on almost impassable roads and by circuitous routes following some Indian trail or a line of marked trees. Abinoam Hinds settled on the farm now the property of Mrs. Watrous, formerly Mrs. H. H. Frazier, just outside of the borough, which, with the aid of his sons, he largely cleared of its forest trees, and brought into a state of cultivation. In the chamber of his log house Dr. Rose, an early physician, had his office for a time. Mr. Hinds had also another farm; the property is now in the possession of Eben Cobb, most of which he also cleared. In connection with Colonel Frank Fordham, he carried on a distillery near and below where Foster's tannery was located. He went to Philadelphia with his team of horses and yoke of oxen and carted thence the mill-stones for Bela Jones, when that gentleman erected his grist-mill at the foot of the lake which bears his name, and is said to have brought the first load of goods for Isaac Post from New York City, to be sold at Montrose. He was a man of great industry, frugality and integrity in all his relations with his fellow-men, and died at the residence of his son, David D., in Wysox, Pa., at the age of eighty-five years. After the death of his first wife he married Rachel Vail (1783–1876), a native of Cooperstown, N. Y., who came to Montrose and was residing with Elder Dimock, a Baptist clergyman, at the time of her marriage. By this union they had children,—John B., resides in Wysox, Pa., and was born in 1816; Ebenezer went to Iowa in 1860, where he died in 1885; Leonard B., resides in Franklin township; Major David D.; Conrad, accidentally killed in youth; and Hannah, the wife of James Van Tuyl, of Towanda, Pa.

D. D. Hinds

David D. Hinds was born on the homestead in Bridgewater township January 28, 1822, and after he was nine years of age depended upon his own efforts for his sustenance. At that age he was bound out to Samuel Barclay, in Dimock township, but only served one year. He afterwards resided with Robert Day and also with Miles Turrell; but when thirteen, through the solicitation of Mrs. Susannah Post, he went to live with Isaac Post, then a merchant and banker at Montrose. Young Hinds was a boy of quick perception in matters of business, earnest in his work and faithful and honest in all he had to do, and at this time had never attended school. Mr. Post placed him under the instruction of the well-known teacher, Benjamin S. Bentley, where he first learned the alphabet and the rudiments of an education, and where he continued for some time. He remained with Mr. Post until 1846, serving, after reaching his majority, for eleven dollars per month, which he added to the eighty-four dollars given him by Mr. Post when he came of age. In all Mr. Post's general business matters David was his trusty boy, and whether in teaming goods from New York, taking care of his bank at night or collecting his accounts, he always found him faithful to his charge and an expert in his work. On August 14, 1845, he married Malvina, a daughter of Perry and Eliza (Morse) Jenks, who was born April 28, 1822, in Lawrence, Otsego County, N. Y. The demands of a family led him to sever his business relations with Mr. Post, two years after his marriage, and start business on his own account, and accordingly, in 1847, he purchased a farm in Wysox, Bradford County, which, after farming and lumbering for four years, he sold and returned to Montrose, where he carried on the livery business for over eight years. In 1859 he purchased the Benjamin Sayre farm, near Montrose, which he carried on for some eight years, sold it, and, in 1866, bought his present farm of two hundred acres, in North Bridgewater, which was formerly the farm of Caleb Bush, where he has resided since. Mr. Hinds may safely be classed among the intelligent and thorough farmers of Susquehanna County, and in all the improvements, the fences and buildings, of his present farm, the handiwork of a practical farmer may be seen.

He has never held office except to serve as the present poor commissioner of the township, having been elected in the spring of 1886, and he has served eighteen years on the trustee board of the Methodist Episcopal Church. When only eighteen years old he took an active interest in the militia drill of those days, and was elected major by a large majority over his competitors, and received his commission from Governor Porter. During the late Civil War Major Hinds gave his time and money freely in doing necessary home work preparatory to enlisting men leaving for the war, and he served in the capacity of a recruiting officer, though not officially, in filling the companies commanded by Captains Stone, Dimock and Young. He volunteered as a private in Captain Stone's company, but on arriving at Scranton was rejected on account of disability by the examining surgeon. Although he received little education from books when a boy, Major Hinds is a ready accountant in business matters, has a retentive memory and is possessed of much natural talent and intellectual force. His word is his bond, and his integrity is beyond criticism. Both himself and wife are members of the church, the former of the Methodist, the latter of the Baptist Church. His children are a son, George Leonidas, at present a resident of St. Paul, Minn.; and a daughter, Elizabeth, wife of Mahlon Bostwick, a merchant at Montrose and a native of the county. Mrs. Hinds has one brother, Perry, a resident of Aurora, Ill., and half-brothers,—Rufus Stebbins, deceased; Henry Stebbins, of Aurora, who served under Captain Dimock in the Rebellion; and Rebecca (Mrs. Baldwin), of Aurcra, Ill. Her mother died at her residence in 1861, aged sixty-five years.

Zebulon Deans came from Lebanon, Windham County, Conn., to what is now South Montrose in 1804. Captain Bard came with him. They traveled the whole distance on foot, and selected farms adjoining. Mr. Deans purchased the improvement made by Elisha Lewis, and while here erected a frame barn at Montrose, which was the first frame building put in the place. Both John Bard and Zebulon Deans returned to Connecticut and brought their families that fall. Mr. Deans cleared up the farm where Albert Wells now lives, and was the first carpenter in the place. He built the Post tavern and the first Presbyterian Church in the place. He was elected deacon in the Presbyterian Church in 1812, and became a ruling elder, which position he held until he died, in 1848, aged seventy-seven. His wife, Olive, a daughter of Thos. Crocker, died in 1851, aged seventy-nine. Their children were Orimel, who moved to New York. James followed his father's occupation and retained the homestead; he was also an elder in the Presbyterian Church. He had two children—Horace A. Deans, who was thrown from a horse and killed; and W. B. Deans, photographer and merchant at Montrose. Zebulon Deans' four daughters were Matilda, wife of Hezekiah Bullard, a carpenter, of South Montrose; Phebe, wife of Elijah Bullard, a shoemaker of Montrose, (she is now living, aged eighty-eight); Lucy, wife of David Fields; and Fannie, wife of Thaddeus Fields.

Isaac Bullard, a Revolutionary soldier from Vermont, came to the South neighborhood about 1814, and located on the farm afterwards occupied by his son Hezekiah. He died in 1842, aged ninety-seven. His sons were Elijah, Hezekiah and Otis, who married Mary Crocker; Elijah was ninety-three years old when he died. His widow, Phebe (Deans) Bullard, and Mason S. Wilson are the oldest of the pioneer residents of Montrose now living, and the memory of both of them is remarkably clear. Hezekiah was seventy-nine and Otis seventy-seven when they died. Elijah Bullard's children were A. N. Bullard, school-teacher and carpenter, who lives at South Montrose; Catharine lives with her mother; Isaac N., merchant; Zebulon, on the homestead; Helen A., wife of Philander J. Pepper, of Williamsport.

Thomas Crocker came from Bozrah, Conn., to what is now the Conklin farm, in Dimock, in 1800. In 1802 he brought his family to the farm adjoining that of Elias West, on the north. Here he remained until 1812, when he removed to the farm where he died, in 1848, aged eighty-two. His wife died in 1844, aged seventy-five. Their sons were Hyde, Lucius, John S., Austin and Daniel W. Harriet was the wife of Hiram Finch, and Mary, wife of Otis Bullard. Hyde moved into Montrose and worked at the carpenter's trade many years. He died July 4, 1886, aged ninety-three. His wife, who was Sally Cornwall, is still living on the homestead with her son, Hyde Crocker, Jr. Austin Crocker, of the old family, is a farmer in Dimock. Daniel lived in Deposit; Lucius was a carpenter and moved elsewhere. John Bard came with Z. Deans in 1804, and first cleared the Perrin Wells farm. He next took the Thos. Crocker farm in 1810. His son, Deacon Samuel Bard, resided in Montrose, and died in 1879, aged about eighty.

In 1802 Samuel and John Backus came from Norwich, Conn., and settled on the Wyalusing, just below their father-in-law, Jedediah Hewitt, who had located next below Robert Day. Samuel married Eunice Hewitt and reared a family of children. John married Jerusha Hewitt. His log cabin was about one and one-half miles south of Montrose. He was ninety-three years of age when he died. Of his ten children, John H. resides at Montrose; Esther was the wife of Asa Fessenden, a farmer, who lived near the Backus homestead. Joseph Backus came later and helped Bela Jones erect a carding-machine at the outlet of Jones' Lake, in 1814. He went to Otsego County, N. Y., on foot, to purchase the machine, floated it down the river to Great Bend; thence it was carted to the lake and put in operation in a little building erected at the outlet of the pond, on a couple of trees which they had felled for a foundation. Jos. Backus' children were Elijah, who lives at Montrose; Samuel G. went to Nebraska; Joseph H. and Laura A. also went West.

charter. There the mother died. One son, Reuben, known as "Deacon" Wells, (1756–1848), born in Putman, Conn., after the family lost their property, removed with his wife, Abigail Turrell, two sons (Reuben and James) and two daughters, (Mrs. Samuel Bard, of Bridgewater, and Mrs. Daniel Taylor, of Bradford County), in 1812, to Bridgewater, this county, and bought two hundred and forty

E. C. Wells

EDWARD CLINTON WELLS.—His paternal great-grandfather removed with his family from Connecticut in 1774, and settled at Wyoming, where he met his death at the battle of Wyoming, in 1778. His widow and children returned immediately after the massacre, going all the way on foot to Connecticut, where they remained until 1797, when the family again returned to Pennsylvania and purchased land under the Connecticut title at Frenchtown, Bradford County, from which they were ejected by parties claiming title under the Pennsylvania acres of land, a part of the Wallace tract, on the road just south of the present hamlet of South Montrose, where himself and wife spent the remainder of their days, improving their property, which was divided equally between their sons. They were members of the Presbyterian Church at Montrose, and interred in the neighborhood plot on their own farm. One son, James who received one-half of the real estate married, reared a family, but about 1846, settled in Illinois, where he died.

Reuben Wells (1800–75), the other son, married, in 1834, Nancy (1804–68), a daughter of Zebulon Deans and Lucy (Chafee) Deans, a native of Putnam, Conn. Her father was a blacksmith by trade, and served in the War of 1812. She had brothers and sisters, but none of them came to this county. The children are Albert T., farmer in Bridgewater; Edward Clinton; and George P., a farmer on the homestead. Reuben Wells made large improvements on his part of the farm, and added one hundred and twenty-five acres, making his total number two hundred and forty-five acres. Prior to 1830 he assisted his father in erecting the present residence. He was a man of great industry, and managed his business affairs with prudence and economy. He accumulated a fair competence, which was divided among his sons at his death. He was well thought of by his townsmen, and he served for many years as poormaster, supervisor and assessor of Bridgewater. Both himself and wife were members of the Presbyterian Church at Montrose, contributors to all worthy local enterprises, and both were buried in the plot on the homestead.

Edward Clinton Wells, second son of Reuben, was born on the homestead near South Montrose, October 22, 1840. He was educated at the district school, Harford University, Montrose Academy, and for six terms was a teacher. After his marriage, in 1864, he resided on a rented farm near the homestead for four years. In the spring of 1869 he purchased a farm of one hundred and fifty acres, three-fourths of a mile west of South Montrose, which he managed until 1878. In 1877 he purchased twenty-five acres just north of that village, upon which he erected his present residence, which will vie with any in the township in its various appointments. In 1882 he added to the last-mentioned purchase one hundred and ten acres more of land contiguous thereto. He may be safely classed among the intelligent and industrious farmers of Susquehanna County. He has served his township in various official capacities, and was assessor for five years, school director for six years and supervisor for three years, and a member of the Farmers' Institute. His wife is Emma L., a daughter of Joseph S. (1800–76) and Catharine (1807–75) (Endress) Bomberger, who resided in South Lebanon township, Lebanon County, Pa. She was born March 2, 1845. Their children are, Ada E., educated at Montrose Academy, a teacher for several terms; and Lizzie N. Wells. The children of Joseph S. Bomberger are, Mary A., wife of Jonah K. Spayd of Lebanon, Pa.; Sarah, widow of Wm. Shirk, Shelby County, Iowa; Endress, died in Iowa at Rising Sun, and left a family; Catharine, wife of Edward R. Zimmerman, Washington County, Md.; John H., died at thirteen; William E., Kent County, Md.; Edwin J. E., farmer in Lebanon County; Uriah J. (1843–63), served in the late Rebellion, was sergeant of a company of heavy artillery, and died in a hospital at Camden, N. J.; Emma L., wife of Edward C. Wells; Joseph E., resides in Lebanon, Pa. Her grandparents, Bomberger and Endress, with their families, settled in Lebanon County, from Germany, where they became large landowners.

Joseph Butterworth moved from Middletown to Bridgewater about 1808–10, and settled where John Hunter lives in South Montrose. He was a farmer and drover, and bought the improvement made by Samuel Maine. His children were Oliver, Alanson, Lodema, Joseph and Edwin. Alanson married Julia Stone, and their children were Edwin, Albert, Jerome and Ellen, who resided in the vicinity. Jerome has the homestead.

Christopher Frink came to Bridgewater early with his three sons—Rufus, Jabez and Amos. Mrs. Jabez Frink was one of the first school-teachers at Montrose.

Benajah McKenzie came from Windham County, Conn., in 1804, and located on a farm in the southwestern part of the township, now owned by William H. Jones. Captain Bard and McKenzie went twenty miles to Black's grist-mill, near the mouth of the Wyalusing, to get their grain ground. He was working for Joab Pickett in 1805, when the Connecticut claimants were harassing the Pennsylvania surveyors by stray bullets fired to intimidate the surveyors. Late in life he removed to Montrose, where he died, February 9, 1872, aged eighty-seven. He had long been a member of the Presbyterian Church, and was highly respected. His wife was a daughter of Ezra Tuttle, of Springville. Of their children, Ezra went to Illinois, John died in Kansas, Eli lives in Lackawanna County, Naomi was the wife of Cyrus Barnes, Gideon and George removed West. Jane was the wife of Robert Foster, and is now a resident of Montrose. Edwin was a merchant at Montrose a number of years, where his family reside. He is now in business at Binghamton. Charles McKenzie was in the army nearly three years, and was killed during Grant's campaign against Richmond.

Benj Latrobe

WALTER LATHROP, born at Norwich, Conn., November 19, 1749, married in 1775, and had one son, Matthew, who was born the following year, in which also his wife died. In 1779 he married, for his second wife, Esther Fox, of Norwich, then twenty-four years old, by whom he had the following children: Hannah (1780–81); Wealthy (1782–83); Benjamin, born June 25, 1784, died July 22, 1861; Wealthy 2d (1786–1852), became the wife of Dr. Mason Dennison, of Montrose; Daniel (1789–1842); Martha (1792–1839); Rodney (1794–1849). In the year 1800 Walter Lathrop removed with his family from his native place, and settled in Luzerne (now Susquehanna) County, traveling the entire distance with an ox-team, which took six weeks' time. He settled in the unbroken forest of what afterwards was made Bridgewater township, in the South neighborhood, and there erected his log house, and began clearing off the forest and tilling the virgin soil. This log house stood on the spot now covered with an orchard, just below Silas Perkins'. This family were among the first permanent settlers, and only preceded by others by one year. Walter Lathrop died in 1817, and his wife in 1838, leaving to their children the invaluable legacy—the example of an industrious, virtuous and upright life, and an opportunity for them to carve out homes and fortunes for themselves, and establish schools, churches and society in a new country. There is no further record of the eldest son, Matthew, than his birth.

Benjamin Lathrop was sixteen years old when the family settled here. He became inured to the hardships and privations of pioneer life, and did his part well in all that pertained to the settlement of the country, developing its resources and founding its various institutions of education, religious instruction and establishing law and order. Although his life's business was farming, mature years brought to him sound judgment, a well-balanced mind and sagacity which was ever accompanied with his characteristic integrity of purpose in everything in which he engaged. He was active as an officer, and took troops as far as Danville, Pa., during the War of 1812–14, where they were dismissed, owing to the proclamation of peace. His commission as major of the Second Brigade, Eighth Division, composed of the counties of Northumberland, Union, Columbia, Luzerne, Susquehanna and Wayne, was issued by Governor Snyder and dated August 1, 1814. In 1811–13 he was one of the projectors of the Bridgewater and Wilkes-Barre turnpike to Binghamton, N. Y., and for many years its president. He served the country in a public capacity as commissioner for many years, and as associate judge by appointment, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Jabez Hyde, for five years following November 1841. Lathrop township was named for him in 1846. He was active in educational and religious matters, was one of the founders of St. Paul's Episcopal Church of Montrose, and served as vestryman for many years. His political affiliations were with the Democratic party, and although defeated, he ran largely ahead in his own county when a candidate for legislative honors.

His first wife, Clarissa (1791–1830), whom he married in 1809, was the daughter of Asahel Avery, by whom he had children,—Dr. Daniel A. Lathrop (1811–84), a physician, whose life-work sketch may be found in the Medical Chapter of this volume; Clarissa H. (1813–79), became the wife of F. M. Williams, of Montrose; Azur Lathrop, born September 6, 1815; Benjamin F. (1817–40), went West in 1838, and died in Ohio; Charles D. (1822–73), married Joanna Searle, of Montrose, in 1855, and was a farmer and stock-dealer (he died at Montrose); Dudson R., born October 17, 1828, cashier of the First National Bank of Montrose; Helen M. (1830–31). By his second wife, Fanny Jones (1791–1876), a native of Salem, Conn., he had one son, Francis J. (1832–78), who died at Lincoln, Nebraska.

Daniel Lathrop, son of Walter, married a daughter of Jacob Perkins and lived in the house previously occupied by his father's family. He occupied the Raynsford house later, and was gate-keeper on the turnpike. He died in 1842. His children were Edwin and George, farmers and business men, and Dr. Frederick Lathrop, who moved to Springfield, Ill. The daughters were Jane, Anne, Hannah, Cecilia and Ruth.

Ebenezer Sprout and Jesse Burrowes walked in from the Eastern States together at an early day. On their way through the wilderness they found a piece of coal, which they took to a blacksmith, where it was tested. They returned, and brought their families the next year with ox-teams. Ebenezer Sprout married a sister of Amos Burrowes, and lived about two miles west of Montrose until 1862, when they removed to Lycoming County. Rensselaer, Amos, Erastus and Ariel, live in that vicinity. Samuel and Lewis live in Muncy. Zebina Sprout resides on the homestead, and Charles on the farm adjoining. [1] Mrs. Miriam Sprout, years afterwards, told her son, Ariel "that their effects were all in one wagon, hauled by a yoke of oxen, and a cow led behind. We left home and friends and came to this dreary wilderness, where we had not the smallest hut to call our own. We did not have much, as over such roads, filled with rocks, logs and brush, one team could not haul much. I footed it most of the way from Connecticut here, carrying Emeline in my arms, and leading Mary Ann. Emeline was sick nearly all the way, and we feared she would die. Knowing that my father's family would follow in about a year braced me up."

The vivid account below of the pioneer mother has been given, because it is a good description of the privations and heart-aches of hundreds of settlers who left their happy homes in Connecticut and came into this waste, howling wilderness to build up homes for themselves and children.

Jacob Perkins lived in the South neighborhood, died and was buried there. His son Silas died at Montrose. Phineas Arms commenced where Frank Wells now lives. He was a Presbyterian elder. Part of his family—Phineas Philip, Iddo and William—came. Iddo tanned deer-skins. The family have all removed. Samuel Davis came about the time Deacon Arms died. Roswell Kingsley was here as early as 1814. He had a large family, all of whom have removed.

Samuel Gregory lived a little south of Montrose. He came here from Mt. Pleasant. He was twice sheriff of the county and was a bold and efficient officer. It was during his term that Treadwell was hung. He was a man of considerable influence. Rufus B. was graduated at Union College and became a lawyer; Asa was graduated at West Point Military Academy, a lieutenant in the regular army, died in Florida; Amanda was the wife of [1] "One afternoon, near sundown, your father being away from home, I was sitting on a log by our little cottage in the woods, thinking of the scenes of my childhood—the old homestead in Connecticut, the shaded yard, the old rock near the house where I and my brothers and sisters played in youth, and, in fact, all the memories which will naturally cluster around the home of childhood—a familiar sound caught my ear. It was the sound of the old dinner horn which I had so often blown to call the family in to dinner, at our old happy home in Connecticut. As it echoed through the woods, my heart beat with joy at that familiar sound.

"I caught the little baby in my arms, and bidding my two little girls to follow, hastened in the direction from which the sound proceeded, thinking I should meet them in a short distance. I traveled a long way, and, meeting no one, listened, thinking I had been deceived, and that what I had heard might have been the lowing of cattle; yet the familiar sound of the horn as I had heard it clung to my hopes that they were coming and not far away. While I listened I heard the sound again, more convincing to me than ever that I could not be mistaken, and in the direction of the place which they had purchased for their home. In a short time I was met by brothers and sisters, and such a meeting I shall never forget. Smiles and tears, kisses and happy greetings; God only knows how happy we all felt on meeting once more after what seemed to us to be so long a separation. Could we have sent and received letters by mail in those days, as now, it would not have seemed so long; but there were no mails reaching there at that time. How distinctly I remember all things as they looked the first year around that little house in the woods! Not having time to clear away the logs, the trees were felled, the brush burned, and the corn planted among the logs by means of striking an axe in the ground and dropping the seed in the hole. The pumpkin vines ran over the black burnt logs, great red pumpkins hanging down their sides, and the green corn peeping up among them looked full of promise for our food for the coming winter.

"In those times wheat-bread was not thought of, and rye shortcake was a rare thing. The cow which we brought with us was one of our mainstays, she furnishing us milk and butter to go with our corn, potatoes and pumpkins. All the meat we had was killed in the woods. The cow subsisted on the leaves of the small brush in summer, and browsed in winter from trees felled for that purpose. We raised flax, and I spun and wove it at home for summer wear; and many a pound of wool have I carded, spun and woven, getting one-half for my work."

Rev. Seth Rogers, an Episcopalian clergyman; Rhoda was the wife of Absalom Carey; Harriet was the wife of Philander Lines, a tailor at Montrose, father of Hon. O. A. Lines, present State Senator; Sally was the wife of Samuel Scott. Deacon Nehemiah Scott lived on a farm and finally moved to Montrose. Samuel, Davis and Norton were his sons.

Jeremiah Etheridge came from New London, Conn., in 1815, and was the first cabinet-maker in the South neighborhood. He removed to Montrose in 1818. Dr. Halsey's wife was a daughter of his. David Bushnell purchased the farm since owned by Matthew Baldwin in 1816. He died in Auburn, April 5, 1872, aged eighty-six. Joseph W. Parker moved to Bridgewater in 1816 from Saybrook, Conn. He was licensed in 1826 and ordained in 1829 by the Baptists, for whom he preached as a home missionary, principally in the counties of Susquehanna, Wyoming, Luzerne and Bradford, where he assisted in organizing several churches and baptized six hundred and two believers, of whom several entered the ministry. He was a faithful, persevering, good man, whose ministry covered almost forty years. Cyrus Cheever came from Harford to a place on the Wilkesbarre turnpike, where the gate was last kept in 1818. His wife died in 1870, aged ninety.

Samuel Rogers was born July 3, 1790, in Montville, New London County, Conn. His mother died when he was eighteen months old, and his father when he was less than three years old. He left New London County in 1813, and lived in Litchfield, Conn., five years; then he and his two brothers came to Brooklyn, Susquehanna County. In 1824 he bought an improvement consisting of a log cabin and about three acres cleared, where he now resides, in the southwestern part of Bridgewater township. He has cleared about one hundred and thirty acres of land. The first house he erected was a frame house, with thick plank floors, that he split out of chestnut. He is[1] now ninety-seven, being the oldest resident of the township. He married Anna Butler, who died in 1881, aged eighty-three. Their children are George W., who resides on the homestead; Irena, wife of John Barron, a farmer in Franklin; Samuel B., owner of a meat-market at Montrose; Experience, wife of William Barron, lives in Jessup; Anna, wife of Jno. Wheeler, of Binghamton.

Israel Stebbins lived adjoining Rogers, where Abram Lake commenced in 1825. One of his sons, E. R. Stebbins, is a coal dealer at Montrose. George W., lives in Auburn.

Henry Patrick lived adjoining Lake, where Matthew McKeebe now lives. Of his children, Harris was a lawyer at Athens, Pennsylvania; Harvey and Abel lived at Montrose; George and Charles moved elsewhere. Gilbert McKeebe bought the Patrick place about fifty years ago. Of his children, Matthew retains the homestead, and Isaac, Solomon, William and Theodore were the other sons.

Moses S. Tyler came from Brooklyn, and bought a farm of Phineas Smith on the Wyalusing. His sons were Ackley and Edgar.

SOUTH MONTROSE.

The large part of the hamlet of South Montrose, which consists of about twenty-five houses, has been built since 1875, the date of the completion of the narrow-gauge railroad from Montrose to Tunkhannock. Its business places are a post-office, two stores for general merchandising, steam saw and grist-mill, creamery, cider-mill and blacksmith-shop. A post-office was established at Coolville, about one mile south of South Montrose, August 5, 1874, and Frank S. F. Wells was appointed postmaster, although Enoch L. Cool performed the duties of the office. James Martin succeeded Wells December 4, 1874, and was succeeded by Du Bois Hunter May 31, 1877, when the post-office was removed to South Montrose, and Frank Tingley succeeded as postmaster. He was followed by Stewart Mead and Francis E. Barron, and upon the change of the administration, Enoch C. Lake received the commission in 1885, and is the present postmaster, with the office located in the store of E. C. & M. L. Lake.

STORES.—Perry Marcy, contractor for the Montrose Railway, first established a store at South Montrose for the sale of merchandise to the employees engaged in the construction of the road. Up to this time there had been a store for the sale of merchandise, which was carried on by William Corey for a short time. Mr. Marcy was succeeded by J. P. Lodrick, whose store was destroyed by fire. The site, located on the south side of the railroad track, was purchased by F. E. Barron, who rebuilt and carried on mercantile business there in 1886. Enoch L. Cool erected a store building on the north side of the track in 1884, in which mercantile business has been carried on since by E. C. & M. L. Lake.

[1] Since deceased, 1887.

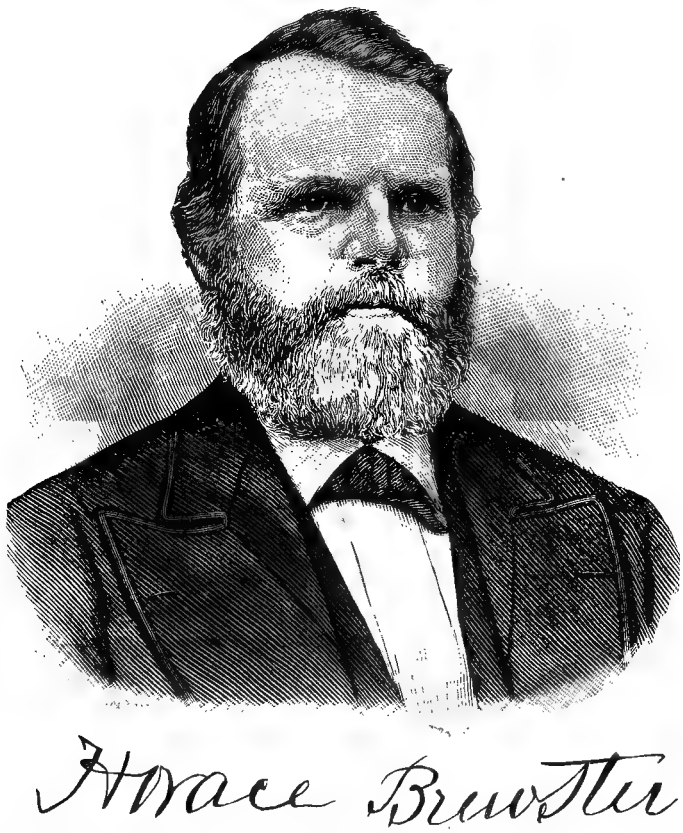
Judge Benjamin Lathrop established a blacksmith-shop at South Montrose in the early part of the century, where Jabez Frink carried on blacksmithing until 1846, when he was succeeded by Rufus Allen, of Montrose, a native of Connecticut. The shop has been conducted by his son, Loren Allen, for the past twenty-three years. The creamery was built by Raynsford, Cooper & Blakeslee, and is now conducted by the American Dairy Company.



Edgar Harper came to Bridgewater in 1851. In 1874 he erected a steam saw, plaster and feed-mill, which was burned five years afterwards. He rebuilt in 1879, and does a large business for the local trade. The capacity of his feed-mill is four hundred bushels of corn per week during the winter season, which he receives mostly from Indianapolis and Chicago. His plaster is made from stone brought here from Union Springs, Cayuga County, N. Y. The capacity of his saw-mill is from twelve to fifteen thousand feet daily, mostly hemlock, with some cherry and pine. He employs ten men.

Isaac Chapman taught school at South Montrose in a little log school-house, near where the present Union Church stands, in 1805. Mrs. Bullard, now eighty-eight years of age, remembers that school well; Mr. Chapman was only sixteen years of age at that time; he also delivered the first 4th of July oration at that place. J. W. Raynsford taught school in 1803, and was the first teacher. Benjamin Lathrop, Daniel Lathrop and Wealthy Lathrop were early teachers. There were three school-houses at that place; then the district was divided. One of the houses is now located near the railroad, and the other near Jerome Butterfield's. The little church at South Montrose was built as a Union Church for all denominations, and for funeral purposes. There is no church organization at this place. The church members in the place are all connected with the several churches at Montrose. Deacon Zebulon Deans and Deacon Reuben Wells were pioneer settlers where South Montrose stands, and it was on their land that the church and first school-houses were built. They each donated one-fourth of an acre for a burial-place. Olive Deans was the first person buried there, in 1818. The grounds have been enlarged since, and many persons are buried there.

Horace Brewster.—The Brewster family is of English origin, and the ancestors of Horace Brewster were settlers on Long Island. His paternal grandfather, James, a shoemaker by trade, came from near River Head, L. I., with his wife, Anna Foster, a sister of Daniel Foster, and resided with his son, Eldad Brewster, in Bridgewater, from 1802 until 1831, when he went to Wysox, Pa., where he spent the remainder of his days with his daughter, Mrs. Ferguson, dying at the age of ninety-two. He was in the War of 1812, and received a pension from the government. Anna Foster, his wife, who died a year before at her daughter's residence, in Wysox, at the same age, was a member of the Presbyterian Church, a genial companion, a Christian woman, and very much enjoyed the society of her children and grandchildren, to whom she often told Bible stories and tried to impress them with the truth. Their children were Abigail, became the wife of David Ferguson, of Wysox, Pa., and reared a large family of children; Daniel, a soldier in the War of 1812, was a pensioner, and died at the residence of his daughter, at Wells' Hollow, Bradford County, aged ninety-four; and Eldad (1779–1831), father of Horace.

Eldad Brewster, a native of River Head, served an apprenticeship in learning the trade of a weaver, which closed upon reaching his majority, in 1800. In that year, with barely funds enough to leave his home, in company with Captain Bartlet Hinds, Isaac Post, Robert Day, his brother Daniel, Daniel Foster, his uncle, and others, nine altogether, he came from Long Island and in May reached Bridgewater township, where he, with a part of the company, stopped at the cabin of Daniel Foster, which Mr. Foster had erected on a previous visit. Mr. Brewster soon made a purchase of fifty acres of woodland two miles southeast of the present borough of Montrose, a part of the Clymer tract, and his brother Daniel located on fifty acres adjoining. About 1804 he had considerable of this land cleared, and erected a log house thereon. He had agreed to pay three dollars per acre for the land, but, in common with many of the other settlers, he had no money to pay anything with, except as he could make it from his land, and in those days of barter and no money for produce, it was difficult to even get enough to pay taxes with. He accordingly worked on his farm summers, and during the winter season worked at weaving at Wyalusing and other localities earlier settled until he had his land paid for. He added to his first purchase until he owned one hundred and twenty-two acres. He built his first frame house in 1812, and added a two-story front in 1820, and the entire building, now standing, was his home as long as he lived. He was genial and kind to his family, a prompt business man, and possessed pure motives, as indicated by his life-work. Although he had only three months' schooling when a boy, he had a good, practical knowledge of business matters, and with his quick perception and sound judgment managed his affairs with prudence and economy.

Horace Brewster

His wife, Hannah (1797–1881), whom he married in 1814, was a daughter of Deacon Moses Tyler, of Bridgewater, who had settled here from Windham County, Vt., in 1808, but was a native of Massachusetts. He died at Montrose in 1854, aged eighty-eight; his wife in 1856, aged eighty. Moses Tyler had eight daughters, and one son who grew to manhood, Moses C., late associate judge. The children of Eldad Brewster are Tyler (1815–85), was a farmer in Harford township, where he died; Lucena, born in 1816, is the widow of the late Samuel Sherer, of Dimock; Horace, born October 15, 1818; Daniel, born in 1820, a carpenter by trade, now engaged in the sale of agricultural implements at Montrose; Warren (1822–73), died at Meshoppen, Wyoming County, leaving two children; Andrew J., born in 1825, a blacksmith at Montrose; Sally, born in 1827, wife of Salmon Hempstead, of Meadville, Pa.; Moses C. (1829–59), a carpenter, spent several years in Kansas, returned and died at Montrose; and Ann Maria, born in 1831, the wife of Ansel Stearns, of Harford. All of them reared families.

Horace Brewster had the usual opportunities for a district-school education, but at the age of seventeen was indentured to Levi Gregory to learn the trade of a carpenter. He served for three years, receiving for his total wages one hundred and forty-four dollars. Upon the completion of this time he attended one term at John Mann's Academy, St. Joseph, and for two terms was a teacher. He followed his trade at Montrose, in Yates County and at Tunkhannock until 1846, when he went to Davenport, Iowa, where he spent three years. Returning in 1849, he purchased the homestead —the place of his birth—and until 1874 resided in the house before described, erected by his father. In that year he erected his present comfortable residence, and he has added to the real estate, by purchase, forty-seven acres.

Mr. Brewster is a member of Susquehanna Grange, No. 74, a member of the Susquehanna Agricultural Society, of which he served as president in 1882 and 1883, and he is active and interested in all measures looking to the improvement of agriculture and inuring to the benefit of farming interests. He gave the right of way through his farm for the construction of the Montrose Railway, and now ships to market by this outlet his surplus hay and other farm products. Both himself and wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Montrose. Mr. Brewster has given much attention to the education of his children, four of whom are graduates of the same school, one son a lawyer and another a doctor.

His wife, Augusta, a daughter of Truman and Catherine (French) McNeil, of Homer, Cortland County, N. Y., whom he married in 1845, was born May 4, 1820. Her father was of Scotch-Irish origin, and died in 1821. Her mother married, for her second husband, James W. Hill, of Bridgewater, for many years a justice of the peace and a prominent member of the Baptist Church at Montrose, and died in 1842. By her first husband she had two children,—Augusta, wife of Horace Brewster; and David Truman McNeil. By her second husband she had children,—Naomi, Sarah, Mary, Fanny, James, George and Catherine. David Truman McNeil married in Kentucky, and at present resides at Osceola, Clark County, Iowa.

The children of Horace and Augusta Brewster are Katie, died at the age of twelve; Hannah Elizabeth, is the wife of E. C. Smith, of Bridgewater; Frederick D., was educated at the Montrose Academy, graduated at the Mansfield State Normal School in 1871, was a teacher for several years, read medicine with Dr. Vail, and was graduated at the Homœopathic Medical College, New York, in 1879, and is a practicing physician at Tunkhannock, Pa.; David Truman, received his preparatory education at Montrose Academy, was graduated at the Mansfield State Normal School in the class of '73, read law with the late Hon. Lafayette Fitch, was admitted to the bar in 1876, and is practicing his profession at Montrose; Mary, died at the age of four years; Fannie (1859–87), after taking the usual preparatory course at Montrose, was graduated at the Mansfield State Normal School in the class of '80, was a teacher and acting principal at the Montrose Academy, and was the wife of S. M. Foster, of Montrose; Addie (1864–87), received her preparatory education at the same school, was graduated at the Mansfield State Normal School in the class of '83, and taught in the Montrose Graded School until her health failed.

She died in February, 1887, and her sister died the March following.

[1] Luther Catlin came from Litchfield County, Conn., in 1812, and located near his cousin, Putnam Catlin, in what is now Brooklyn; but soon after made the first clearing on the Robert Kent place, and subsequently took up the farm previously occupied by Mr. Madison. He died at his home in East Bridgewater, February 4, 1885, aged one hundred years, three months and ten days.

Erastus Catlin (brother of Luther Catlin), and formerly from Litchfield County, Conn., as early as about 1815, owned a farm on what is now known as Butterfield Hill, about two miles south of and in sight of Montrose, where he and his family resided many years. He afterwards lived at North Pitcher, Chenango County, N. Y., where he died in 1854, in the seventy-seventh year of his age, his wife, Polly (Wright), having died in 1830, aged fifty years. The wife of Abel Turrell is the only one of the family now residing in Susquehanna County. His nephew, the Rev. L. R. Dickinson, is rector of the Episcopal Church at Great Bend.

James W. Hill settled in Bridgewater in 1812, and cleared a farm, where he resided until his death, in 1853. He and Reuben Reynolds occupied a log-house together for a time. Josiah Mills came to Bridgewater in 1811, and settled near Conrad Hinds' last location. A homeless orphan, at fourteen years of age, he enlisted as a drummer in the Revolutionary army. After a year's service he exchanged his drum for a musket, which he carried to the end of the war, receiving an honorable discharge. In 1817 he settled two and one-half miles west of Montrose, where he died March 23, 1833. One son, B. H. Mills, removed to Upper Alton, Ill. Robert Eldridge, a native of Connecticut, located on the Elias West farm in 1814. He subsequently moved to Brooklyn township, where he died, aged eighty. Of his sons, James occupied the homestead a number of years, then removed to Owego, and Orlando resided in Brooklyn township.

Charles Trumbull was a pioneer in Bridgewater; he had a large family of sons and daughters, who became separated. John Trumbull, one of the sons, retained the homestead. He died recently at an advanced age. Cornelius Wood came from near Albany, N. Y. His sons, John and Peleg, remained in the township. Jonathan, Eseck, Ezra and Ira moved elsewhere. Solomon Simmons came from Connecticut about the same time. His sons, Julius, Charles, Solomon, Harly and Garry went to Illinois. Mrs. Luther Catlin, daughter of Solomon Simmons, Sr., died in Bridgewater October 25, 1872, in the eighty-fifth year of [1] In the Republican, of October 27th, was announced the remarkable fact that Mr. Luther Catlin, of Bridgewater, on the Saturday previous (October 25th), had attained the extreme age of one hundred years.

As Mr. Catlin had expressed a desire to cast one more vote for President, the citizens of Montrose, irrespective of party connections, made arrangements to give to the event a special and prominent recognition by giving to this venerable citizen a suitable escort to the polls on Tuesday, November 4th.

Accordingly, on the morning of election day, between nine and ten o'clock, a line of citizens, in carriages, in which we noticed prominent Republicans, Democrats and Prohibitionists, preceded by the Montrose Cornet Band, went to the residence of Mr. Catlin, something over two miles from Montrose, where the rare old man was carefully placed in an easy carriage and the procession, with cheerful music and flags flying, marched into town.

In the carriage with the centenarian were his son, Julius Catlin, aged seventy-three; his grandson, Harry Catlin, aged twenty-three; and his great-grandson, Charles Keeler, aged twenty-one.

As we drove through the principal streets handkerchiefs and flags were waved from many homes along the route, and, as we passed up Public Avenue, crowds of people lined the way, all anxious to get a sight of the grand old man whose life began a hundred years ago.

At the court-house he was met by a dense throng, and, as he was borne up the steps and through the hall to the place of voting, a hearty cheer was given by the assembled multitude. As he deposited his twentieth Presidential vote, another rousing cheer rang out, in honor of the wonderful event.

At the same moment that he passed in his ballot, at the Bridgewater polls, his great-grandson—a few feet away—deposited his first vote at the Montrose polls.

Mr. Catlin was then taken into the recorder's office, just across the hall, where an informal reception was held. Hundreds of his old friends and neighbors, and among them many strangers, had the privilege of looking into his pleasant face, and of taking the hand of a man who might appropriately be likened to "The sturdy oak, the brave old oak,

That has stood in this land so long."

He seemed anxious to know the names of all who greeted him, and it was very interesting to note how, at the mention of some familiar name, his face lighted up with the memories of by-gone years. For one so old it was a very trying ordeal, but he went through it with much less fatigue than might have been expected, and he seemed to have a remarkably intelligent appreciation of the kind regard and cordial deference which was accorded him.

After the reception he was taken to the new sheriff's office, a large and well-lighted room in the annex, where our accomplished artist, Mr. G. W. Doolittle, brought the photographer's art and skill to assist in making a permanent impression of the four generations who had together cast their votes for the President of these United States.

Mr. Catlin was again borne to the carriage, by careful hands, and, amid parting cheers, with the escort of the band and citizens' carriages, was taken back to his home, where it is the hope and prayer of many, many friends that he may dwell in great peace and comfort until he shall pass away to that better land where none ever grow old.

her age. Samuel and Abraham Chamberlain, Walter Stewart, Lemuel Beebe, Ebenezer Williams, Abraham E. Kennard and Joseph Guernsey settled in the neighborhood. Ezra Kingsley went with the Mormons in 1832.

Samuel, Timothy and Phineas Warner were brothers, and came to Bridgewater from Connecticut. They were all farmers. Samuel came about 1815 to Conrad Hinds' first location in the North neighborhood. He was an earnest temperance and anti-slavery advocate. Samuel Warner, Jr., and Gilbert lived here a number of years. Phineas died in the army. Timothy had a family, of whom Eleida and Albert O lived here; Ansel lives in Brooklyn; John died in Oswego; Minerva married Mr. Barret, of New Milford. Phineas Warner first occupied the farm now owned by George Little. His children were Davis D.; Nelson C.; Sidney D. J., a physician in Luzerne County; John P., who resides in Scranton; Ann, wife of Dr. E. S. Park, of Red Wing, Minnesota; Elizabeth, wife of Gilbert Angel, of Binghamton.

General Davis D. Warner was born in Connecticut, February 1, 1802. His father, Phinnehas Warner, and himself, with two other brothers,—Mr. Nelson C. Warner, who now resides in Montrose, and Jared C. Warner,—came to Montrose in 1810. When the Warner family drove into Montrose, with an ox-team, hailing from the land of "wooden nutmegs," there were only three framed houses and the log dwelling into which they moved. The first night of their arrival they feasted upon bear's meat and venison. General Warner has held the confidence of the people of this county to a considerable extent, having been elected associate judge in 1851 and afterwards being elected twice to represent this district in the State Legislature, his first term being in 1861. While associate judge he attended the inauguration of President Buchanan, and was among the victims of the Washington "National Hotel poisoning" sickness, which circumstance will be remembered by many of our readers, as some from this county, who were victims with him, died from the same cause. Mr. Warner was in the State military service for some time, and among the memorable incidents of his career in that particular was the commanding of the military at the hanging of Treadwell, so noted an occasion in the history of Susquehanna County. One little incident worthy of mention was the patriotic demonstration which one of the oxen exhibited that furnished the motive-power which transported the Warner family from Connecticut to this county.

One of these oxen seemed to manifest a love of his native land to so great an extent, that he started back on the road from Connecticut which he had traversed, and was first found on the other side of the Delaware River with his head set for his former home.

Mr. Warner died March 29, 1879, aged seventy-nine. He was for many years proprietor of the "Franklin" (now Tarbell) House. His children were Jared, who resides in Scranton; Edward R., graduate of West Point, a captain in the regular army; Henry D., member of the Produce Exchange of Chicago; and Frederick, also of Chicago; Ellen, wife of Henry Searle; Ann, widow of Captain J. R. Lyons; Salome, wife of A. Watson; Delphine, wife of Edward Rogers; and Kitty, wife of Benjamin Stark. Nelson C. Warner was one of the respected pioneers of Montrose. He was born at Deep River, Connecticut, in the year 1804, and was brought to this county when only four years old. When a youth of sixteen he walked back to his native place, accomplishing the entire journey on foot. In 1831 he was united in marriage with Eliza D. Baldwin, of Bridgewater, whom he survived only four years. He was elected sheriff in 1845, serving three years, but he spent most of his early life at manual labor, being known as an upright and successful farmer. His children were Lydia F., wife of C. N. Stoddard, merchant; Edson S., Fletcher G., Charles N., Mary A., (wife of George P. Little), Emily A. and Helen E. (wife of F. I. Lott).

Orin Clemons came to Bridgewater from Litchfield County, Connecticut, in 1829, and purchased a farm in the North neighborhood. He died when he was seventy-seven, leaving a large family—Henry, who has been a carriage-maker for forty years; Welcome went South and was very successful, but lost his property during the war; his brother Frederick was also engaged with him at Columbus, Ga., in the manufacture of cotton gins; David invented a hame and engaged in manufacturing them in Scranton. There were seven girls; Eliza is the wife of F. Churchill, of Great Bend.

Merritt Mott came with his father, Laomi Mott, to Middletown in 1810. In 1832 he came to Bridgewater and purchased a carding-mill of ——Watrous. He started fulling, coloring and cloth-dressing, and finally introduced weaving. Judson W. Mott succeeded his father in the same business in 1863. In 1867 the factory was destroyed by fire. Mr. Mott rebuilt that year. He employs four or five hands and manufactures miners' flannel and stocking yarn principally. He makes about eleven thousand yards of cloth and a ton of yarn, and uses from seven thousand to nine thousand pounds of wool per year, most of which is purchased from the farmers in the county. Merritt Mott's children were Myron, who lived and died here; Amos, who lives at Tunkhannock; Frederick, who became a judge in Iowa; Chauncey, who died in the army; Judson, who retained the homestead; Edson; Sophronia, wife of Rev. John R. Murphy, D.D., of Iowa; Mary Jane, wife of Charles S. Foster of Montrose. Nathan Shipman was an early settler in the vicinity of Mottville.

BALDWINS.—Noah Baldwin (1745–1827) and Sarah (1756–1842), his wife, came to Bridgewater from Connecticut and settled one mile north of Montrose, on the place now owned by W. W. Williams, in 1807. His children were Asa (1778–1819), Polly, Samuel (1783–1870), Sally (1786–1875), Scott (1788–1874), Betsey, Matthew born March 30, 1794, died 1887, aged ninety-three. Asa married S. Scott's eldest daughter, and died, leaving her with eight children,—Asa; Eliza, wife of Nelson Warner; Samuel; Charles; Mary, wife of Amasa Mott; Charles and Samuel lived in New York. The family are all dead. Polly was the wife of Simeon Cook, who resided near Susquehanna. He died near Montrose, leaving a family. Samuel Baldwin resided near Montrose and died at the age of ninety. He had a large family, all of whom moved West except Polly, wife of Mr. Holbrook. Sally was the wife of John Turner, of Fulton County, N. Y. [1] Scott Baldwin came to the farm adjoining that of Simeon Tyler in March, 1808, and resided on the spot for sixty years.

Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin lived together sixty-four years, and reared a family of twelve children. Alfred Baldwin, one of the sons, was associate judge from 1866 to 1871, and harness-maker at Montrose many years. David went to Wyoming County, Sally was the wife of Orren Wood, Chapman moved to Sullivan County, John moved West, Noah lives in Auburn, Edmund resides at Montrose and has been court crier eighteen years. One of his sons is a lawyer, another a physician, and George S. and W. B. Baldwin are printers. Myron, Hannah, Louisa and Isaac are the youngest of Scott Baldwin's family. Matthew Baldwin, the youngest of the old family, settled on the farm in 1816, that he occupied until he died, and built a log house at first, which gave place to the present edifice in 1823. All the barns and other improvements were made by him. He was a Democrat in politics,

[1] The following statement made by Scott Baldwin shows what difficulties they had to encounter in this wilderness in 1808 and the years immediately following:

"We had but one dollar in money left when we got here. We had to work out part of the time for a living, and the rest of the time for our place. Our house was a log house, the floor made of slabs split out of trees, the windows made of sticks crossed and paper put on them for glass. The nearest grist-mill was three miles off, and we had to go farther sometimes, and carry our grists on our backs. At one time we had to pay $1.62 for rye, and that we had ground without bolting. When our bread was almost gone, we had to lay some by for the children, and go without ourselves. Day after day we had to depend on our guns for meat. For tea, we used spicewood.

"We used to make deer-licks by putting salt in certain places in the woods. One time I went to the place where I had put salt, and saw a very large deer-track. I climbed a tree, some thirty or forty feet high, with my gun. Before dark I tied my gun to a limb of the tree, pointing it, as near as I could guess, where the deer would come. There I sat, all night, until daylight, but no deer came. I thought I would not give it up so, and tried it again. The third night I sat on the tree as before until the cock crowed for morning. I then heard something coming. It proved to be a deer. He came to the lick, I fired, and when I came down from the tree, found I had killed a very large buck. We then had meat again.

"In the fall we got out of salt, and there was but one place we could get it, and there only at the price of $3.00 per bushel. I had nothing to buy it with, and concluded to see what hunting would do. I took my gun, went out into the woods, and found a bear that had gathered a large quantity of chestnuts. I shot it, took its skin, and with it bought a bushel of salt.

"Brother Samuel and myself went to Dr. Rose's for work. He gave us the job of clearing out the road between us and Silver Lake. We had to go from six to eight miles to our work. Our living was corn bread and dried venison. Our bed, hemlock boughs, with leaves for covering.

"There were settlers about six miles this side of Binghamton, and, on this end of the road, for about four miles north of Montrose; between them were dense woods, the path being only marked trees."

and a member of the East Bridgewater Methodist Episcopal Church. His children were Jeremiah, a farmer near the homestead; Mary M. (1820–81), wife of John Trumbull, a farmer in Bridgewater; William has a farm adjoining his father; Jonathan, toll-keeper at Susquehanna; James; Horace S. in Susquehanna; Lyman M., proprietor of the Exchange Hotel; Benjamin F. resides on part of the farm; George H. (1839–78), served in the late war with Captain Young's company nine months, then he enlisted for three years and served till the war closed. Jeremiah, Horace S., Lyman M. and Jonathan served in Captain Dimock's company.

Jonathan Vaughn died in 1869, aged ninety. His daughter, Elizabeth (1800–81), was the wife of Matthew Baldwin. He resided in Bridgewater, near the North school-house. Of his other children, Ariel and Jeremiah went to Connecticut, Stephen died in Wilkes-Barre, Mercy was the wife of Orrin Stephens, and Sally was the wife of William Shipman.

East Bridgewater.—The post-office was established at East Bridgewater in 1868. Cornelius J. Curtis, Samuel Smyth and N. O. Passmore were instrumental in getting this office for the accommodation of the neighborhood. Mr. Smyth was commissioned postmaster, but only served one year, when James McMillen was appointed, and has conducted the business of the office since. Mr. McMillen has the only store at the place, which he opened for the sale of groceries in 1881. David Rockafeller and Hart Roberts many years ago carried on blacksmithing just below the old plank-road.

There is a school-house here, and some of the early teachers in the neighborhood were Sally Wilsey and Hannah Belknap. Thomas T. Lillie taught in the vicinity in 1824, Hiram Allen in 1826, and, later, J. B. Kimber and James Layton.

Religious Denominations.—As early as 1820 religious services were held in the neighborhood, the school-house being used for that purpose. The supply was generally from the Brooklyn charge of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the meetings held by ministers of that denomination, although Elder Davis Dimock, from Montrose, a Baptist clergyman, and Rev. Burr Baldwin, the Presbyterian minister of the same place, frequently held services here. Some of the early members of the class here were Samuel Reynolds, who for forty years was a class-leader, Nathaniel Reynolds, Timothy Brown, Ezra Brown, Mrs. Nathan Jewett and Mrs. Peleg Wood.

In 1877, under the labors of Rev. George Comfort, of the Brooklyn charge, a Methodist Church organization was effected, and, with the aid of the society, the present neat church edifice was erected the following year. It remained a part of the Brooklyn charge for some three years, when it was annexed to the Montrose charge, and has been regularly supplied every alternate Sunday since by the minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Montrose. Rev. W. B. Westlake succeeded Mr. Comfort, and has in turn been succeeded by Revs. H. H. Dresser, Thomas Harroun and the present pastor, Rev. H. C. McDermott. The board of trustees consists of five members—three of the church and two of the society. Other clergymen hold meetings in the church when not occupied by the regular minister, under the regulations of its organization, and funerals have preference to any other service.

The burying-ground, which has been used since the early settlement of the neighborhood, is situated near the church, and there are interred many of its early members and the first settlers of the vicinity. The ground was donated by Hugh McCollum, and the deed made about 1840 to Mathew Baldwin, Latham Gardner and Hiram Guernsey a committee.

Another burial-place, on the stage-route from Montrose to Heart Lake, is located on the Foster farm, on the top of a high knoll, which was laid out during the early settlement of the neighborhood. The proprietaries of this plat were John Trumbull, Frederick Foster, Abram Chamberlain, John McCollum, Lyman B. Cole and Latham Gardner, the families of which have been interred within the inclosure.

A creamery, for the manufacture of butter and cheese and the sale of milk and cream, was erected at East Bridgewater in 1881 by the

Geo. J. Curtis

American Dairy Association, from which large shipments are made to New York and other markets.

CORNELIUS J. CURTIS.—Nathaniel Curtis, a native of Connecticut, removed with his family from Herkimer County, N. Y., in 1806, and was the pioneer settler of East Bridgewater, where he settled on one hundred acres of land, the present farm of his grandson, Cornelius J. Curtis. He first erected a log house, but prior to his death, in 1814, he built a frame house. His wife died about 1820, and both were buried in the neighborhood burying-ground, now to be seen near the church.

Nathaniel, Jr. (1778–1850), eldest son, married Mary Lamberson (1778–1848), a native of Salisbury, N. Y., and removed from that place in 1812, and occupied the homestead in East Bridgewater, after the death of his father. He erected the present residence in 1830, and was the first man in that part of the township to erect a building without the use of liquor for his men. This inaugurated a new era, and many of the neighbors afterwards followed his example. He took much interest in the early establishment of schools in the township, and upon the act of 1835, creating the office of school director, himself and Judge Lathrop were selected, and served in that capacity. He added one hundred and eighty acres of land to the original purchase of his father, and continued his residence on the homestead until his death. Both himself and wife were regular attendants of the Presbyterian Church at Montrose, and both were buried at East Bridgewater.

The second son, Harvey, was a man of considerable enterprise. He built the first gristmill on Heart Lake in 1823. His wife was a daughter of Captain Newman. He removed to Joliet, Ill., where he died in 1860.

The third son, Warren, was a farmer in Bridgewater, where he died in 1828.

The fourth son, Daniel, built a hotel in Montrose about 1814, and was the genial landlord during the early days of the old stage lines from New York to Owego, and from Philadelphia to Utica, which crossed each other at Montrose. This house was the origin of the present Tarbell House, and was kept by him in a popular way, for those days, until 1834. He removed to Joliet, Ill., where he died in 1862. His wife was a daughter of Major Ross.

The fifth son, Ira, had a farm contiguous to the homestead, where he resided until his death, in 1828.

The children of Nathaniel and Mary (Lamberson) Curtis are Abigail (1800–72), married Eseck Wood, resided on the adjoining property to the homestead for some time, moved to Bradford County, and afterwards to Polo, Ill., in 1862, where she died in 1872; Polly, born in 1802, is the wife of H. G. Ely, of Springville; Theodosia (1807–86) was the wife of Daniel McCollum, who resided in the same neighborhood; Anson (1810–55) graduated at Fairfield, Herkimer Co., N. Y., in 1836, practiced medicine at Pittston from 1839 until 1853, when he was elected prothonotary of Luzerne County, and died while in office; Gaylord, born in 1812, a banker at Susquehanna; Joshua W. (1815–61) resided on the plank road contiguous to the homestead, was a farmer, and died, leaving four sons—William C., Charles F., Nathaniel and John; Cornelius J., born where he now resides, October 24, 1816; Sylvia L., widow of Perry W. Kennard, resides on the homestead with her brother, the youngest son.

Cornelius J. Curtis married, in 1847, Charlotte G., a daughter of Harvey (1795–1872) and Lavinia (Fowler) (1808–55) Griffin, of New Milford, who settled there from Guilford, Conn., in 1820. She was born July 6, 1824. Her grandfather was the Rev. Andrew Fowler, a native of Connecticut, who was educated for the ministry, went to Charleston, S. C., where he was rector of Christ Church parish (Episcopal) until his death, at the age of over ninety years. Their only living child is Andrew Fowler Curtis, born January 26, 1855, who married in 1875, Flora Alice, a daughter of Henry Baldwin, of Forest Lake. Mr. Curtis is one of the intelligent, reading, thinking men of Bridgewater township. He added to his district school education instruction at Harford Academy and the school at Montrose. He became somewhat active in politics in early manhood, and served several terms as supervisor and school director. He was elected justice of the peace in 1865 on the Democratic ticket, and is serving by re-election his fifth term of five years each, consecutively. He was one of the original members of the County Agricultural Society, and has taken an active part in the educational interests in the community in which he resides, and in all other matters pertaining to the welfare of its citizens.

He erected his present commodious barn during the centennial year, and his residence is the one built by his father, herein alluded to. Both himself and wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Montrose, and he has served as treasurer and a member of the board of trustees of the Methodist Church at East Bridgewater, on the part of the society, since its organization, in 1877.

Daniel Austin came in 1810 and lived near the line, in the edge of Silver Lake township. His children were Andrus, who went to Potter County; Nicholas died in Liberty township; Dana lives near the fair-grounds; Electa was the wife of Edmund Meeker, of Silver Lake; Harriet, wife of Elijah Backus, of Montrose. Orrin Stevens lived adjoining, in Bridgewater. Elder W. J. Parker married a daughter of Thomas Scott, who lived in that neighborhood. Jonathan Vaughn lived in that vicinity; he came in 1810, and died in 1869, aged ninety. His son Crispen has the homestead. Avery Vaughn moved to Binghamton; Lucinda was the wife of Mr. Carter, of Rush; Jane married Calvin Griffis; and Ann married Milton Griffis. Benjamin Fancher married one of Samuel Scott's daughters, and had a large family. David has the homestead. The other children were Richard, Nehemiah, Sally, Polly, Ann, Caroline, Alvira and Abigail. Sally married Wm. Thode, a German, and moved to Germany—something unusual for American girls. Thomas Pickering, an Englishman, also located there. His sons were John, Jacob, Ralph and George. The former resides on the homestead.

Samuel Fessenden came early and cleared up a farm. His sons were Henry, Samuel B., Asa, John, Thomas, Isaac, and Harriet, wife of Luke Jagger. Henry married Martha Lathrop. Their sons were William, Charles, Samuel, Edward and Theodore. S. B. Fessenden married Hannah Harris. Asa married Esther Backus. Their sons, Newell and Frederick, reside at Montrose. Thomas married Caroline Backus. Of their five children, George lives at Montrose; Joseph Beebe lived in the west neighborhood. Their children were Orrin, Hiram, (an editor in Owego, N. Y.), William, Ezra, Edward, Owen. Ezra and William settled in the vicinity. O. S. Beebe son of Orrin, was county surveyor. Angeline, Hannah and Elizabeth were the daughters. Obadiah Green was a pioneer settler; of his children, David retained the homestead and George lives in Auburn.

John Darrow came to Bridgewater at an early day in its history; he was ninety-seven years old when he died. Of his children, John lives at Nicholson; Phebe was the wife of David Green; William lived in New Milford; Amos in Bradford; Herrick in Forest Lake; Denison in Michigan; Daniel lived where his son Augustus now lives, on the Wyalusing, in Bridgewater. He is now eighty-one years old and a resident in Montrose. Mrs. D. Green is eighty-five years old.

Captain Jarah Stephens, an old Revolutionary soldier, and his son-in-law, Joseph Williams, came from Otsego County and located their lands about three and one-half miles from Montrose, on the New Milford road, and in 1810 they rolled up a log house. Joseph Williams' children were Orrin, Frederick M. and Eleanor, wife of Rev. Albert L. Post. Orrin retained the homestead. His only son, Joseph, resides with his Aunt Eleanor at Montrose. Frederick M. married Clarissa Lathrop; Clarissa, their daughter, was the wife of Perry Barnhart. Anna, the efficient clerk at the post-office, is their only daughter.

Philander Stephens was a politician and held several offices of trust. He was commissioner in 1818, State Representative in 1824, and a member of Congress two terms, from 1828 to 1832. He married Myra Thatcher; his sons were Reuben, George and Almon; and daughters Henrietta, Huldah, Clarissa, Charlotte, Ellen and Elizabeth. Almon is still living at Great Bend. He has been State Representative twice.

Nathan Brewster, a native of Massachusetts, and Simeon Tyler, a native of Vermont, came in together from Connecticut with their families in February, 1807, and halted five weeks at the house of Joseph Raynsford. Mr. Brewster being disabled by a cut in the foot, Mr. Tyler erected a cabin for the accommodation of both families, one mile north of the court-house, on the farm now owned by Hon. J. B. McCollum. The [1] great snow-storm delayed their removal until April. The cabin was three miles north of Raynsford's; and a hole in the roof served for a flue to two fires built upon either side of a pile of logs that were rolled up in the centre. Mr. Tyler married Betsey, a sister of Nathan Brewster. Their children were Simeon, Betsey, Ansel, Harvey, Abigail, Lucena, Ozias and Brewster. Betsey married Harry Clark, a printer. Harvey Tyler, a carpenter, is the only son living in the village, now eighty years of age; he was county treasurer in 1847. Nathan Brewster built opposite his brother-in-law, where his son Zachariah now resides; he cleared up the farm, and lived and died there when he was sixty-six years old. Their children were Nathan Waldo, removed to Clarion County; Zachariah M., lives on the homestead; Polly Ann, wife of Hugh McCollum; Harriet, wife of Peter McCollum.

Jonah Brewster settled on a farm now occupied by Mr. Kent. He was something of a politician and held several offices; he was the first commissioners' clerk, in 1813, and was State Representative four years, from 1816 to 1820, and State Senator in 1822. He had five wives and ten children; he was a very bland man, as may be inferred from his political and matrimonial success. Hugh and Alexander McCollum came in 1810 and settled in Bridgewater, near Heart Lake, on farms adjoining. They built cabins and cleared up their farms. Hugh had a family; his son Daniel lived and died here. Alexander married Mary Trumbull, and after residing in Bridgewater many years he removed to New Milford, and finally to Lanesborough, where he died, aged ninety-one years. He had five sons,—John, Hugh, George, Alexander and Peter. George moved West; the rest of the family settled here. Hugh McCollum, (second) was born in 1805. He came to Bridgewater with his parents, and suffered the privations and hardships of the pioneers. He married Polly A. Brewster in 1832; they now live quietly at Montrose, and recently celebrated the fifty-fifth anniversary of their wedding at Hon. J. B. McCollum's house; Joseph Brewster and Alexander H. are their only children. They are both lawyers, the former being presiding judge of the courts.

Bela Jones came from Colchester, New London County, Conn., in 1810. He purchased a place on the lake, which bears his name, and, in connection with Joseph Backus, erected a carding-machine on its outlet, in 1814. He subsequently built a grist-mill and saw-mill. He was a prominent Democrat, and often presided at public meetings. He was town clerk in 1816; assistant teacher in the academy in 1818–19; took the census of Susquehanna County in 1820 and was State Representative in 1833 and 1835. He married Polly, sister of Nathan Brewster. Their children were Julia, wife of Henry Cruser; Louisa, wife of John Chapman; and Betsey, wife of Albert Wey, of Binghamton.

William Shipman came from Saybrook, Conn., in 1813, and located in the West neighborhood, where Edward Pickering now lives. He was a farmer and carpenter. He married Sarah Vaughn, and their children were Henry E., a carpenter in Scranton; Joseph W. resided on the farm now occupied by his son Harry; Joanna, of Montrose; Stephen V. is an architect of considerable celebrity in Chicago (he was in the late war and rose to the rank of colonel); Albert removed to Towanda; Sarah E. is the wife of Daniel Langstaff, of Scranton; Worden J. is a moulder.

Edward Fuller came from Connecticut to Bridgewater in 1806. He was a wrought nailmaker. He built a large frame house, which became a central point, being the place for holding elections, and, from the Christian character of Mrs. Fuller, the place where early religious meetings were held. [2] "As yet no man of the [1] The great snow-storm in 1807 and the total eclipse the year previous are notable events in the annals of the pioneers. The snow is said to have been five feet on the level, and the eclipse produced a condition similar to night.

[2] Blackman's "History."

South neighorhood was a professed Christian. Determined to impress upon her children her estimate of the Sabbath, she always dressed them in their best that day, even if that were no more than a clean apron to each one. They learned to be less boisterous than on week-days; so praying mothers could meet and sing the songs of Zion, and occasionally listen to a sermon read by Mr. Fuller or Mr. Raynsford." In 1812 Mr. Fuller was appointed sheriff. He married a sister of Elias West. Their children were Charles, who moved to Kingston and subsequently to Scranton, where he was engaged in the insurance business; Mary; Edward W., who resides at Cohoes, aged eighty-six; George resides in Scranton, and is mentioned in connection with the press. Edward Fuller died at Montrose, aged eighty-five, and his wife died at Scranton, also eighty-five. She was the last of the original ten members of the Montrose Presbyterian Church.

GARDNER.—Perry Green Gardner was at the Wyoming massacre in 1778, with his son Jonathan, then a lad of twelve years. They returned to Connecticut subsequently, where the father spent the remainder of his life. Jonathan, many years afterwards, visited the site of the battle, and found secreted the "pewter," which his father had hidden under some rocks, and which he used, as long as he lived, on his table. He married, at New London, Connecticut, Eunice

Latham Gardner

Latham (1771–1853), and settled in Schoharie County, and afterwards in Durham, Greene County, N. Y. In 1820 he moved to East Bridgewater, this county, where he bought of William Jessup and Isaac Post sixty acres of land in the hollow, where Mr. Freeman resides in 1886, north of Mathew Baldwin's, and erected a log house. Here he spent nearly all the remainder of his days, and both himself and wife were buried in the little cemetery at East Bridgewater. He died in 1850, aged eighty-four years.

His eldest daughter, Lucretia (1795–1870), wife of Isaac Babcock, had come here prior to the settlement of her father, and located in Dimock, where she died at an advanced age. A second daughter, Lydia, born in 1797, now the widow of the late Ezekiel D. Babcock, resides where herself and husband early settled in East Bridgewater, at the forks of the road. The homestead is managed by their son, Willis E. Babcock.

William (1800–54) settled on land adjoining his father. Alexander, born in 1803, died at Waymart, unmarried. Latham, born November 26, 1806, a native of the town of Broome, Schoharie County; and Hannah, born in 1809, the wife of Joseph Stanton, died at Brooklyn, N. Y., where she resided.

Latham Gardner, at the age of eleven years, went from home, and afterwards depended upon his own labor for his subsistence. He worked on a farm for three dollars per month and increased his wages as he advanced in strength and years. At the age of sixteen he took a farm on shares in Durham, Greene County, N. Y., which he managed for four years; was one year employed as a foreman in constructing a road over the Catskills, and for one year, 1829, kept a hotel at Durham, during which time he served as postmaster under a commission from President Jackson. He married, in 1829, Angeline (1811–81), a daughter of Joseph Moore, of Catskill, who settled in East Bridgewater in 1832, who with his wife were buried in the burial plot on the Foster farm—the neighborhood cemetery.

About two years after his marriage Latham Gardner and wife, in 1832, removed to the little farm occupied by his father, which he himself had paid for some seven years before, and taken the title in his own name. He built the present residence of Mr. Freeman, bought the Philo Luce farm adjoining, and in 1851 sold his entire property and purchased his present farm of two hundred acres in East Bridgewater of John F. Dunsmore, formerly the property where Alexander McCollum first settled. Here he has resided since, and is now in his eighty-second year of age. For twenty years Mr. Gardner bought stock in Bradford, Broome and Susquehanna Counties, and drove to New York, Philadelphia and other markets, closing this business in 1861. He was a member of the Democratic party until the election of President Garfield, when he espoused the Greenback cause and voted for General Weaver, the Greenback candidate. He was a candidate for sheriff at one time, and in 1884 for county treasurer on the Greenback ticket; but divisions in the party brought about his defeat in the former, and in the latter case his party was largely in the minority. His children are Philo M., born in 1831, resides in Missouri; Jane E., born in 1832, wife of Joel Griffin, a farmer at Heart Lake; Fanny Maria, born in 1834, wife of Harvey Griffin, postmaster and a farmer at Heart Lake; Dr. Edwin Latham, born in 1841; read medicine with Dr. Patrick at Montrose, where he had received his preparatory education; was graduated at Yale College; practiced his profession at Montrose for several years; was proprietor of Wyoming House, Scranton; returned and practiced until 1884, and removed to Binghamton, N. Y.; he became a member of the Susquehanna County Medical Society in 1869; Juliet Augusta, born in 1846, wife of F. H. Millard, a farmer in East Bridgewater; Harriet Angeline, born in 1849, died in 1860; Henriette A., born in 1851, wife of Stephen V. Trumbull, of New Milford; and six children died young of this large family of thirteen. Addison married Emogene, daughter of Chauncy and Eliza (Belcher) Allen, by whom he has a son and daughter and resides on the homestead.

William Gardner, son of Jonathan Gardner, depended upon his own resources after his boyhood for making his start in life. He learned the trade of a mason and followed this business for many years during his early manhood, and worked in constructing the locks on the North Branch Canal. While at work on the Plains, near Wilkes-Barre, he formed the acquaintance of Margaret Ann (1811–75), a daughter of Frederick Wagner, a farmer on the Plains, whom he married and who bore him the following children: Eunice, born in 1835, wife of Mathew J. Harrington, of East Bridgewater; Jonathan F., whose sketch follows, born October 19, 1836; James S., a farmer, near the homestead; Mary died in 1871, at the age of twenty-six; Lydia A., wife of Major J. W. Young, of Minneapolis, Kansas, who raised a company in the county and served in the late Rebellion; Ziba (1850–86), accidentally killed at Alma, Colorado; and William Franklin Gardner, who resides on a part of the homestead left by his father. After his marriage, in 1832, William Gardner settled where his son, William Franklin now resides, and by subsequent purchases owned some two hundred acres of land. He erected the present residence in 1846. He was a man of untiring industry, great courage, correct habits and pure motives. He never sought political preferment, but exercised the right of suffrage according to his own will. Himself and wife were buried at East Bridgewater, near the church.

JONATHAN FREDERICK GARDNER, eldest son of William and Margaret Ann Gardner, took the management of the farm into his own hands upon the death of his father, being then only eighteen years old. His early training had well prepared him for this task, and the property did not suffer for want of proper management, nor did the younger members of the family have less opportunities by the premature death of their father. After caring for the general business of the farm for twelve years, he, in 1867, bought one-half of the homestead property, and erected his present residence the same year, and at different times commodious out-buildings. He subsequently added thirty acres of land to his homestead, and in 1883 purchased the sawmill property at New Milford (Keep property), which he carries on. Mr. Gardner is a thoroughgoing and intelligent farmer, and by untiring industry and judicious management has accumulated a fair competence. In 1862 he enlisted in Company C, commanded by Captain Young, which became a part of the One Hundred and Fifty-first Regiment, commanded by Col. Allen. The men being mustered in at Harrisburg, proceeded to Arlington Heights, where they were kept on picket duty after the battle of Bull Run. Mr. Gardner was promoted to sergeant, and afterwards to second lieutenant. He enlisted for nine months' service; but unable to stand camp life, after five months he resigned his commission and returned home, where he has been engaged in farming since. His wife, born September 23, 1842, whom he married in 1866, is Harriet Elizabeth, a daughter of Rodney (1810–77) and Sally Maria (Bailey) (1814–51) Jewett, of Brooklyn township, whose farm property lay just on the line between Bridgewater and Brooklyn. Her grandfather, Nathan Jewett, died 1860, and wife, Electa Fox, from Connecticut, settled on this property in 1810, and erected one of the first frame houses in that locality. Her mother, Sally Maria Bailey, was a daughter of Col. Frederick Bailey, and Mary Witter, his wife. Col. Bailey settled in Brooklyn township in 1807, and was the younger brother of Captain Amos Bailey, who came from Groton, Conn., and settled in the township in 1801. Col. Bailey served in the War of 1812. He had six sons and four daughters. The children of Rodney Jewett were Mary Electa, wife of Rev. Charles Blake, a Methodist clergyman, now of Rome, Pa.; Nathan Rodney, occupies the homestead settled by his grandfather Jewett; Jennie A., wife of Benson Wood, a lawyer in Effingham, Ill.; Harriet E., wife of Jonathan F. Gardner; Gertrude Eliza, wife of H. W. Bardwell, of Tunkhannock; Lavinia A., wife of W. H. Stark, a farmer in East Bridgewater; Frederick Bailey, residing on the homestead formerly owned by his father, adjoining the property of his brother Nathan. The Baileys were Universalists and the Jewetts Methodists.

The children of Jonathan F. and Harriet E. (Jewett) Gardner are Annie M., died in 1875, at seven years of age; and Benson the same year, at the age of two years; William Jewett; and Jonathan Frederick Gardner, Jr.

The following is a list of the taxables in Bridgewater in the year 1823:

Alex. Allen.
Chas. F. Allen.
Erastus Allen.
Walter Allen.
Rufus Allen.
Chas. Avery.
Hubbard Avery.
Joshua Allen.
Phinehas Armes.
Iddo Armes.
Jas. D. Allen.
John Bard, Jr.
Samuel Bard.
Otis Bullard.
Samuel Berkeley.
Avery Bolles.
John Beard.
Eldad Brewster.
Jonah Brewster.
Medad Brush.
Jonas Brush.
Wheeler Backster.
Elisha Bisby.
Nathan Bennett.
Samuel A. Brownson.
Isaac Brownson.
David Benedic.
John Brutler.

J. T. Gardner

Rufus Bowman.
George Bowman.
James Boyd.
Joseph Butterfield.
John Backus.
Samuel Backus.
Nathan Backster.
Curtis Bliss.
Almon Barber.
Salmon Bradshaw.
Joseph Backus.
David Baldwin.
Stephen Bentley.
Marshall Bentley.
Salmon Bosworth.
Adrian Bush.
Joseph Beebe.
Caleb Bush.
Scott Baldwin.
Samuel Baldwin.
Benj. Banker.
Alex. Barron.
Nathan Brewster.
Amos Burrows.
Walter Brown.
Jesse Burrows.
Timothy Brown.
Lemuel Beebe.
Matthew Baldwin.
Josiah L. Beebe.
David Bushnell.
John Bennett.
Elijah Bullard.
Polly Baldwin.
Nehemiah Baldwin.
Samuel P. Cory.
Chester Cowles.
Caleb Cook.
George Craig.
Thomas Crocker.
Luther Catlin.
Hyde Crocker.
Benj. T. Case.
Alanson Coy.
Daniel Curtis.
George Clagget.
John Champion.
Henry J. Champion.
Erastus Catlin.
Cyrus Chever.
Zephaniah Cornwell.
Garret Clarke.
Noah Cook.
Josiah Churchill.
Leman Churchill.
Ira Cole.
Josiah Crofut.
Augustus Convers.
Richard Crips.
Abram Chamberlain.
Wm. Chamberlain.
Samuel Chamberlain.
Warren Curtis.
Harry Curtis.
Sylvester Curtis.
Nathaniel Curtis.
Henry Clark.
Henry Clymer.
John Chandler.
Charles Catlin.
Henry Congdon.
Lyman Cook.
Thomas Carrier.
Horace Carbine.
James Catlin.
Almer Clark.
James Deans.
Orimel Deans.
Elijah Deans.
John N. Deans.
Zebulon Deans.
Sarah Daniels.
Peter Davis.
Charles Davis.
Davis Dimock.
Asa Dimock.
Robert Day.
Lysander C. Day.
Jethro Dean.
David Dimock.
Benj. A. Denison.
Mason Denison.
Ezekiel Downer.
Joseph Darrow.
William Darrow.
Robert Eldridge.
Jeremiah Ethridge.
Henry Eaton.
George M. Eyre.
Elisha Furgo.
Jason Furgo.
Jonas Fuller.
Amos Frink.
Wm. Frink.
Amos Fuller.
Edward Fuller.
Hiram Finch.
Isaac P. Foster.
Fordham & Herrick.
Abram Fordham.
Fred. Foster.
Edward W. Fuller.
Benj. Fansker.
Rufus Frink.
Asa Fessenden.
Samuel B. Fessenden.
Daniel Foster.
John Fessenden.
Samuel Fessenden.
Jabez Frink, Jr.
John Fancher.
Cyrus Freeman.
Richard Foster.
Daniel Foster, (2d).
Jabez Frink.
Jos. S. Gregory.
Jos. Gregory.
Levi Gregory.
Abel Green.
Levi Gregory.
David Green.
Obadiah Green.
Israel B. Gregory.
Aaron Green.
Ezekiel Griffis.
John Griffis.
Elisha Griffis.
Jos. W. Guernsey.
Hiram Guernsey.
Wm. Gardner.
Samuel Gregory.
Jesse B. Goodsell.
Peter Graham.
Benj. Hickox.
Stephen Hazleton.
James W. Hill.
Samuel Hagdon.
Austin Howel.
Stephen Hinds.
Mark Hinds.
Asa Hartshorn.
Isaac Hubbard.
Rachel Hewitt.
Conrad Hinds.
Isaac Hart.
Joseph Halley.
Samuel Hall.
A. Hinds.
Samuel Hunting.
David Jaquish.
Wm. Jessup.
Bela Jones.
Alfred Jones.
Wm. Kerr.
Luther Kellum.
Ezra Kingsley.
Abram E. Kennard.
Roswell Kingsley.
Justus Kent.
Nathaniel Lyons.
Spencer Lyons.
Wm. Lewis, Jr.
Wm. Lewis.
Amherst Linsey.
Wm. Ladd.
Reuben B. Lock.
Jesse Lyons.
Nathan H. Lyons.
John Ladd.
Thos. S. Lillie.
Benj. Lathrop.
Asa C. Luce.
Elisha Lite.
Rodney Lathrop.
Daniel Lathrop.
Butterfield Lathrop.
Sylvanus S. Mulford.
Benajah McKinsey.
Ezekiel Main, Jr.
Harry Mills.
Jeremiah Meacham.
Sheldon Meacham.
Wm. McMicher.
John McLaud.
A. Moody.
Adonijah Moody.
Nathan Morgan.
Isaac Northrop.
Cyrus Messenger.
Everet Messenger.
Thos. Meredith.
Thos. H. Mussy.
George Mauger.
David Meriman.
Jonah Mills.
Jonathan Miles.
John McMalmish.
Hugh McCollum.
Alex. McCollum.
Amos Nichols.
Samuel Newcomb.
John Newcomb.
Hezekiah Nickerson.
Nathan Northrop.
Peter Osborn.
Asa Olmstead.
Henry Odell.
John Palmer.
D. A. Price.
Henry Patrick.
Asa Parke.
David Post.
Hiram Plumb.
Francis Perkins.
Joseph W. Parker.
John Phinney.
Peres Perkins.
Jacob Perkins.
Isaac Perkins.
Jason Potter.
Samuel Quick.
Horatio Roberts.
Merrit Risley.
Reuben Reynolds.
Daniel Roberts.
Joseph Reece.
Jacob Roberts.
Israel Reynolds.
Nathan Raynor.
Daniel Ross.
Almon H. Read.
Joshua W. Raynsford.
John Reynolds.
John Robertson.
Wm. Rowley.
Benj. Russell.
Sabin Robertson.
E. Robinson.
John Robinson.
Simon Stephens.
Josiah Stewart.
Jacob Smith.
Calvin Shepherd.
John Stroud.
John Smith.
Richard Smith.
Jonathan Sherman.
Nehemiah Scott.
Thos. J. Scott.
Benj. Jayne.
Jonathan Silsbee.
Horace Smith.
Lora Stone.
Matthias Smith.
John Shelp.
Christian Shelp.
Henry Shelp.
David Shearer.
Abel Sherman.
Christopher Sherman.
Jesse Sherman.
Walter Scott.
John Street.
Wm. Shepman.
N. Stephens.
Orrin Stephens.
Nathan Shipman.
Josiah Stephens.
John D. Stephens.
James Stephens.
Philander Stephens.
Luther Snow.
John Snow.
Gideon Southworth.
Ebenezer Sprout.
Walter Stewart.
Solomon Simons.
Israel G. Stebbins.
Thos. A. Smith.
Alfred Stephens.
Samuel Scott.
Royal Tyler.
Edward Terpin.
Stephen Trecy.
David Turrell.
Moses Tyler.
Wm. Turrell.
Wm. Thatcher.
Israel Taylor.
W. C. Turrell.
Dyer Taylor.
Wm. Turner.
Eseck Thayer.
Simeon Tyler.
Chas. Turnbull.
Nathan Taylor.
Isaac Van Brunt.
James Vales.

C. F. A. Vales.
Stephen Vaughn.
Jonathan Vaughn.
Ebenezer Whipple.
Cyrus Whipple.
Samuel Wilson.
Joseph Watrous.
John Williams.
Caleb Wicks.
Walker G. Woodhouse.
Samuel Warner.
Thos. Wells.
Milton Wood.
John Walbridge.
Henry Walbridge.
John Whitely.
Samuel West.
Wm. Wynne.
Jonathan West.
Elias West.
Phineas Warner.
Ansel Watrous.
N. Wilber.
Stephen Webb.
John Watts.
Joseph Williams.
Esek Wood.
Jonathan Wood.
John Wood.
Jared Warner.
E. Ward.
Ebenezer Williams.
Linas Watrous.
Reuben Wells.
James Wells.
Winthrop Wells.
James Young.
Wm. Young.
Israel Young.
Andrew Young.
Benjamin Young.

HENRY J. KENT.—Justice Kent (1771–1858), a young man, left his native State, Massachusetts, and settled in Windsor, N. Y., where he married, in 1795, Anna Stuart (1779–1858). Here they resided until 1811, when they came to Brooklyn township, this county, and settled on the farm afterwards owned by his eldest son, David, and in 1886 by his grandson, Justice M. Kent. He had visited the place the previous year and engaged a log house, which, upon the arrival of the Kent family, was occupied by Joseph Guernsey and family. The two families for six weeks lived in one room, four adults and twelve children—six in each family. Mr. Kent built a grist-mill (where Jewett's saw-mill now is) near the Bridgewater line, and Robert, his second son, tended it, although sometimes he did not have more than one customer a week. Justice cleared off a large part of his farm and brought its fields into a state of cultivation, and in this work, and in paying for the property, was assisted very much by his sons. On this farm he spent the remainder of his life, and died.

The present generation is unable to realize the hardships of these pioneers who settled in the wilderness, met the obstacles and inconveniences incident to carving out a home and supporting a large family, and denied themselves of every luxury now enjoyed, in order to make future homes for their children. This couple reared a family of eleven children, as follows: David (1799–1886), succeeded his father on the homestead; Robert (1801–78), settled in Bridgewater township; Elijah (1803–81), resided in Brooklyn, but died in Carbondale; Harry W. (1809–81), was a farmer in Brooklyn; Ezra S. (1812–74), was a farmer and merchant in Brooklyn; Charles, born 1814, a farmer in Brooklyn; George J., born 1823, resides in Brooklyn; Almira, born 1805, the wife of Josiah Mack, of Brooklyn; Rowena (1807–72), was the wife of Amos G. Bailey, son of Captain Amos Bailey, who settled in Brooklyn in 1801; Emily, born in 1817, is the wife of James Waldie, of Brooklyn; Eliza, born in 1819, is the wife of John Roper, of Brooklyn.

The first six of these children were born in Windsor, N. Y. Robert, second son, remained on the homestead, in Brooklyn, until his marriage, in 1825, when he purchased one hundred acres of land, the present farm of M. J. Harrington, on the Milford and Owego turnpike, in Bridgewater. His wife was Prudence (1804–63), a daughter of Captain Amos and Prudence (Gere) Bailey, before-mentioned, whom he married in 1825. He cleared most of this farm during his residence upon it, and built the present residence about 1833. All his children were born there. He was a man of persevering industry, and possessed an ambition to overcome every obstacle. He gave little attention to political matters, but was identified with the old Whig party. He was a man of strict integrity in all the relations of life, and both himself and wife left their impress upon the lives of their children. After the death of his first wife he married Almira Palmer, and removed to Brooklyn, where he died. In religious persuasion he was a Universalist. He left no children by his second wife. His children are Amos B., born 1826, a farmer and mechanic, of New Milford township; Eunice A., 1830, wife of Calvin Brush, a farmer in Oakland township; Henry J., born October 1, 1832; James R., 1835, a retired druggist of Brooklyn; Alice S. (1838–70) was the wife of Henry Parks, and died in Great Bend township; Lucy A., died in 1863 at the age of twenty-two years; Franklin M., 1843, a merchant in Scranton; Rodney W., 1847, a farmer in Brooklyn, and Andrew L., 1850, a farmer in Great Bend township.

Henry J. Kent, second son, in common with the boys of his early days, had the usual opportunities of the district school. Upon reaching his majority he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for seven years, working at Montrose, in New York State and wherever the best opportunity offered. He was dependent upon his own self-reliance, and by his trade accumulated enough to make a fair start in farming. He purchased his present farm in Southeastern Bridgewater, of about two hundred acres, in 1858, known as the "Jonah Brewster" place. At this time there was on this property a small frame house, said to be one of the first built in this part of the county. By the aid of his trade, besides conducting his farm, he has erected commodious out-buildings, and, with little outside assistance, in 1871 built his present fine farm dwelling-house. Since his residence on this farm his main business has been general farming and dairying. He may be safely classed among the intelligent farmers of Susquehanna County, and all the appointments of his place show the handiwork of a good agriculturist. He is interested in the Farmers' Institute, organized in 1886, and, following the footsteps of his father, is allied to the Republican party. His wife, whom he married in 1860, is Emily W. Moore, who was born in Bridgewater August 25, 1834. She is the daughter of Robert (1804–67) and Maria (Foster) (1810–67) Moore. Her paternal grandfather, Joseph Moore, a native of Ireland, was of Scotch-Irish extraction, and came to Greene County, N. Y., at the age of eighteen, and in 1833 settled in Bridgewater. Her paternal grandmother was Elizabeth Simmons, of Long Island. The former died in 1862, aged over eighty; the latter also died at about the same age, and both were buried in the graveyard near Heart Lake. Their children were Eliza, wife of Jeremiah Brandow, of New Milford; Robert; Jane, now the Widow Baldwin, of Ohio; Angelina (1811–81), was the wife of Latham Gardner, of Bridgewater; and Joseph, a farmer in Harford. The children of Robert and Maria Moore are Charles, of Susquehanna; Emily W., wife of Henry J. Kent; Nancy, wife of John Gavitt, of Bridgewater; Mary W., wife of William McKeeby, of Hooper, Broome County, N. Y.; Eliza, wife of John Crossen, of Great Bend; Amanda F., wife of Harrison H. Van Cott, of New Milford; Stanley, a farmer near Heart Lake; Samuel F., of New Milford; Henry R., of Scio, Allegany County, N. Y.; and Frank E., of New Milford. The family of Moore were Presbyterians, and Robert Moore and his wife were members at Montrose. All of this large family of children were born in Bridgewater, except the eldest son. The children of Henry J. and Emily W. Kent are two daughters,—Lou Carrie, educated at Montrose Academy, was graduated at Mansfield State Normal School in the class of '84, and followed her graduation as a teacher in the senior department of the Montrose Academy during the latter part of the same years (she began teaching at the age of fifteen); and Martha Eliza Kent.

H. J. Kent.

Marvin Kallam Bush. — His paternal grandfather, Caleb Bush (1755–1821), came from Litchfield County, Conn., in 1809, and bought five hundred acres of timber land in the northern part of Bridgewater township. His homestead was the present farm of Major David D. Hinds, and his other land was contiguous thereto, upon which he settled three of his sons, —Adrian (1787–64), Caleb (1794–1878) and Dennis (1803–47). The third son, Abijah (1801–1867), remaining on the homestead, afterward removed to Mount Pleasant, Wayne County, where he died. His wife was Susannah, who died about 1815, and his daughters were Lucy, became the second wife of Robert Day, who had settled in the township in 1800, where he resided until after the death of his wife, when he removed to Montrose, where he died in 1865. Fanny, married first Hewitt Kallam and had two sons, Lyman and Samuel. The former kept a public-house at Hopbottom until his death. The latter resides at Elizabeth, N. J. For her second husband she married Sargent Tewksbury, of Brooklyn township, and resided there until her death. Susannah, the third daughter, died unmarried. Caleb Bush and his wife were Baptists and were buried at Montrose. Adrian Bush, the eldest son, received a part of this tract of land from his father, consisting of one hundred acres. The second residence erected by him in 1842 is the present residence of his son, Marvin K. Bush.

He cleared off the original forest from a large part of his land and brought it into a good state of cultivation and added other real estate thereto. He was an industrious farmer, a quiet and unostentatious citizen, took little interest in political matters except to exercise the right of suffrage for his choice, but was a consistent member of the Baptist Church at Montrose, where both himself and wife worshipped and where they are buried. She was Amy Kallam (1789–1882), a daughter of Luther Kallam, who was a Revolutionary soldier, and settled in Forest Lake township from Connecticut, where he died at the age of eighty-six. Their children are Amy Ann, born in 1813, died at the age of nineteen; Temperance Adaline (1815–70), was the wife of Hiram Allen, of Candor, N. Y., where she died, leaving a family of children; Marvin Kallam Bush, born where he now resides Dec. 14, 1817; Susannah M., born in 1820, is the wife of William L. Beebe, a farmer in Bridgewater; Caleb S., born in 1823, a farmer on part of the original tract; and Augustus P., born in 1828, a farmer on a part of the same tract until his settlement at Montrose, where he now resides.

Marvin Kallam Bush succeeded his father on his part of the original tract of land bought by his grandfather in 1809. His boyhood was spent in farm-work and attending school, but his time being valuable in assisting his father to clear the farm and cultivate it, he only attended school winters after reaching the age of ten. Upon reaching his majority, however, he further added to his knowledge of books by attending a term at the Mannington Academy. In the spring of 1822 he bought one hundred acres of timber land near the home farm, cleared a large part of it, and for eleven years resided upon it. He ran in debt four hundred dollars in its purchase, which he paid in due time by raising grain, mostly oats, which he marketed at Honesdale, a distance of forty miles away. He purchased the home farm of his father in 1861, which he has managed since, and cared for both his father and mother in their declining years. Mr. Bush has given his active life to farm work, and quietly endeavored to perform the full duties of a citizen. He has served his township two terms as supervisor and has acted as auditor and inspector. His wife, Nancy, born January 20, 1821, whom he married in 1849, is a native of Merryall, Bradford County.

M. K. Bush

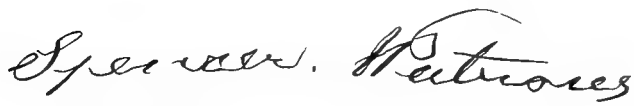
Their children are Calista, born in 1850, wife of Coleman Darrow, a farmer in Bridgewater; Randall L., born in 1854, owns and occupies the farm on the Wyalusing Creek originally owned by Robert Day, who married Lucy Bush, the great-aunt of Randall L. Bush; Judson A., born in 1856; and Hattie E. Bush, at home.

Mrs. Bush's father, Dr. Ebenezer Beeman (1757–1840), a native of Connecticut, married Hannah Lum (1778–1822), a native of Newton, N. J., and settled at Merryall, where he practiced medicine during his active life. Their children are Matilda, Euphemia, Diana, Harriet, Joseph, Cynthia, Almira and Almeda (twins), Emily, Rodolphia, Calista, Nelson and Nancy, wife of Marvin K. Bush. Only four are living in 1886.



SPENCER WATROUS. — Benjamin Watrous (1772–1820), a native of Chester, Middlesex County, Conn., married, in 1791, Lucy Spencer (1770–1839), of the same place, who bore him the following children: Ansel (1792–1865), a farmer of Conklin, Broome County, N. Y., died there; Joseph (1794–1875) settled in Bridgewater, this county, from Schoharie County, N. Y., in 1817, where he resided until his death, leaving a family; Linus (1796–1865) was a farmer in Conklin; Sally (1798–1863) was first a Mrs. Nickerson, whose husband was accidentally killed, and who subsequently married Benjamin Russell and resided in Jessup, this county, where she died; Margaret M., born in 1800, died at the age of six; Benjamin, Jr. (1802–83), died at Carbondale, Pa.; Hannah, born in 1804, died at the age of five; James and Maria (twins), born in 1807—the former, a farmer in Conklin died there in 1868—the latter is the widow of the late Hiram Guernsey, who resided in Bridgewater for many years, and removed to Brooklyn township, where he died; Spencer, born March 26, 1810; Ann (1812–72), wife of George Brewster, a farmer of Tioga County, Pa.; and Lucy, born in 1815, residing at Pittston, the widow of the late Peter Reese.

Benjamin Watrous removed with his family from Connecticut in 1797 and settled in the town of Middleburg, Schoharie County, N. Y., where he carried on farming until 1818, when he removed to Southeast Bridgewater, this county. His two eldest sons, Ansel and Joseph, had settled here the previous year. Here he purchased one hundred acres of land situate on the Milford and Owego turnpike, now the property of his son Spencer, to which he added one hundred acres more adjoining the following year. He did not live to make many improvements, however, on his property, for two years after his settlement here he died. The last purchase was divided among his eldest children. The widowed mother managed the balance until 1832, when it was purchase by Spencer Watrous, her youngest son. She married Isaac Hubbard for her second husband—a carpenter by trade—and in 1833 settled at Battle Creek, Michigan, where she died six years afterwards. Joseph, upon coming to Bridgewater in 1817, had settled where Mott's woolen-mill now is, but he subsequently located on contiguous land to the purchase of his father in East Bridgewater, and for many years kept a hotel there on the Milford and Owego turnpike. The religious persuasion of the family at this time was Baptist and the mother was a member of the church at Montrose. Benjamin Watrous was a man of correct habits, high moral character, and reared his family under a strict discipline of justice and honor. He sought to fulfil the full duties of the citizen and to be an example of honesty in all his business relations, which left his impress on the lives of his children.

Spencer Watrous (youngest son), born in Schoharie County, was only ten years old when his father died, and spent most of his time after the marriage of his mother to Mr. Hubbard, before reaching his majority, learning the trade of a carpenter. This proved useful to him afterwards, and in 1849 he erected his present residence, and at different times all his out-buildings. He has built many houses and barns for his neighbors, besides carrying on his farm. He has taken little interest in political matters; has never sought any political place in the township, but has served as supervisor and portmaster when those offices were given him by the voters of the township without his solicitation. He has been satisfied to move along with the even tenor of his mind, devoting himself to his home duties; honorable in his business and devoted to his family. In boyhood he had little opportunity for obtaining a knowledge of books, and belongs to the class of sturdy men who cleared off the forests of Bridgewater, prepared its soil for crops, built its roads, fences, school-houses, churches, and placed within easy reach of the generation following good facilities for obtaining an education and a sustenance without indefatigable toil. He served as captain under Governor Wolf in old militia times. He married, in 1839, Louisa (1817–86), a daughter of James (1781–1863) and Lucy Demming (1783-1861), Giddings, who came from Groton, Conn., and settled in Herrick township and reared a large family of children, one of whom, Clinton De Witt Giddings, has served in the Congress of the United States. James Giddings' parents were Solomon, who died in 1827, and Sarah (Waterman) Giddings, who died in 1784. The children of James Giddings were Sarah W.; Fanny D.; Andrew; Charles W., a presiding elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church for many years; Giles A.; Jabez D.; Louisa; Mariah; John James; George Henry; Francis Marion; DeWitt Clinton and Mary Ann Giddings. The children of Spencer and Louisa Watrous are Giles A., born May 15, 1840, married Celia E., a daughter of Spencer and Electa (Watrous) Read, of Saybrook, Conn.; George G., born June 24, 1847, a lawyer at Montrose, read law with Fitch & Watson, and was admitted to the Susquehanna bar in 1879 (his wife is Lucretia Davis, daughter of William and Elizabeth Martin Davis, who died at Harbor Grace, N. F.); S. Ann, born August 10, 1844, widow of H. E. Tiffany, resides at Montrose; and James G. Watrous, who died at the age of four years. Mrs. Watrous was a member of the Methodist Church, and afterwards of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Watrous was formerly a member of the Baptist Church. Giles W. Watrous, loyal to his country's call for men to put down the Rebellion, enlisted in November, 1861, in an independent company raised at Carlisle, under Captain W. J. Palmer, to act as body-guard of General Anderson. The company went to Louisville, Ky., where it afterwards served as the body-guard of General Buell in the battle at Pittsburgh Landing, and as the body-guard of General Rosecrans at the battles of Crab Orchard and Stone River. Giles was sent with a message by General Rosecrans to General McCook, where he was captured on the Salem pike, near Murfreesboro', and taken to Libby Prison. After one month's imprisonment he was paroled and sent to Camp Chase, Ohio, from which place he returned home in March, 1863, his discharge papers having been previously made out with the rest of his company while he was in prison.

On August 31, 1864, he again entered the service and enlisted in the Marine Corps at Philadelphia. He went to Washington, when, with seventy-five picked men, he served as the body-guard of President Lincoln until the early part of 1865, when he was sent with the ship's guard to Norfolk, Va., where he was detailed to do duty in the navy-yard. After four months he went on board the "Powhatan," the admiral-ship of the South Pacific Squadron, which sailed to southern seas and cruised on the coast of Panama and South America until 1868, when his time expired and he returned home. He now farms the homstead, which has been in the family since its purchase, in 1818. The brothers and sisters of Benjamin Watrous, the first settler here, are Gideon, Joseph, Harris, Sally, Aaron, Russell, Ephraim, Lyman. The last is the father of Electa (Brooks) Watrous, herein mentioned. Three of the above—Ephraim, Harris and Russell—were sea captains.

KIRBY BUNNELL.—His paternal grandfather, James (1768–1841), a native of Litchfield County, Conn., married Azuba Carter (1768–1816), was a blacksmith by trade, and died in Southeast Bridgewater township, this county. Their children were Ephraim K. (1798–1881), died in Bridgewater; Avis (1800–82), married Daniel Landon, and resided in Susquehanna County; Elijah (1803–72); Dotha, born in 1810, married a Mr. Tooley and resided in Tennessee, where she has a large family; James A. (1813–86), settled in Dimock in 1849, where he died thirty-seven years afterwards; Lucy, born in 1805, the wife of Charles Farnham, resided in Massachusetts; Matilda (1807–53), wife of Harry Stone, resided and died in Litchfield County, Conn., where also Samuel Bunnell (1816–84), the youngest child, lived and died. Elijah Bunnell married Lucy (1804–64), a daughter of Apollos and Eunice (Throop) Stone, of Litchfield County, who were of Scotch origin. Their children are Kirby, born Feb. 15, 1827; William, born 1829, a retired business man and farmer in Dimock; Dotha Ann (1831–38) and Truman S. (1834–38) both died of an epidemic, scarlet fever, the same year; Lucy J., born 1836, married Henry Rogers, now of Lawrence, Kansas; and Harry, who died young.

Elijah Bunnell came to Susquehanna County in May, 1833, driving through by the Newburg turnpike, and settled on the farm where his eldest son, Kirby, now resides. He was known as a great hunter, and supplied his table largely with choice wild game, besides disposing of his surplus meats to his neighbors. He ran in debt for his farm, from which he was only released after twenty years of industry and toil and the hearty assistance of his sons. Kirby Bunnell, the eldest son of Elijah, was six years old when his parents removed from Connecticut. He received meagre opportunities for obtaining an education in boyhood, because his services in assisting his father on the farm were necessary, in order that all might be realized that was possible to relieve the family of debt. Being the eldest son, he was placed at hard work at an early age, but by study at odd times and reading after reaching mature years, he so added to his early book knowledge as to vie with many who had superior opportunities in youth. This farm consisted of ninety-six acres, a part of which was cleared when the family settled there. His father built a part of the present home residence in 1840, to which Kirby made an addition sixteen years afterwards. He succeeded his father in the management of this property in 1855. Mr. Bunnell is interested in the various enterprises of his township and county, favorable to the development of agricultural matters, and his advanced practical ideas, as expressed at the Grange meetings, show his consideration of the subject under discussion worthy the favorable criticism of his fellow-citizens. He was one of the organizers of the Farmers' Institute in May, 1886, at Montrose, and was one of the charter members of Susquehanna Grange, No. 74. His paper, "Will Farming Pay?" read at the Jackson Grange meeting in December, 1886, was well received and favorably noticed. He was elected on the Democratic ticket and served six years as supervisor of his township. He is a man of quick perception and original thought. In 1851 he married Sarah A., daughter of Truman and Rachael (Stoddard) Stone, who settled in Bridgewater about 1850, on the middle branch of the Meshoppen Creek, both being natives of Litchfield County; the former died in 1885, the latter in 1884. Their children were Apollos, of Montrose; Sarah A., born in 1829; Emeline, wife of Augustus Gregory, of Bridgewater; Lucy, wife of L. Carter Smith, of Bridgewater; and Jessie and Julia, twins, both of whom died young. The Stone children all settled near each other and near their father's homestead. Kirby and Sarah A. Bunnell have no children of their own, but reared an adopted daughter, Alzina Oakley, whom they educated, and who married Jesse Stone, a brother of Mrs. Bunnell, both of whom died in Bridgewater at about the same time of small-pox.

CHAPTER XXII.

JESSUP TOWNSHIP.

THIS township is south of Forest Lake, west of Bridgewater, north of Dimock and Rush, and east of Rush and a small part of Forest Lake. The latter territory belonged to Middletown at the time Jessup was erected, in April, 1846. The other parts of the new township were taken from Bridgewater and Rush, and the name given it was in compliment to Judge Jessup. The bounds of the township were subsequently modified, January, 1854, by adding a strip from Rush, north of the Wyalusing, about eighty rods wide, to Jessup; and by taking off a small part of the northeast corner and adding it to Bridgewater. At a later period the Chapman Independent School District was here formed, comprising parts of the three contiguous townships. Jessup is now, with the exceptions named, about four and a half miles square.

Wyalusing Creek bisects the township a little south of the centre, entering from Bridgewater and having a slightly southwesterly course. The valley through which it flows lies low, and as it takes the waters of a number of tributary streams, the surface, consequently, is broken into a succession of high ridges and deep hollows. Through the latter flow from the north, in the order named from the east, Forest Lake, Birchard and Stuart Creeks, the former being the largest stream, and affording several small mill-sites. Flowing into the Wyalusing from the opposite side, and emptying into it a little below the latter stream, is South Creek, the main tributary on that side. Near its headwaters are several water-powers which have been improved. West of it, and extending into Rush, is the long, high ridge, commonly called "Fire Hill," on which are several elevations of unusual beauty; and the diversified views obtainable from their summits are not surpassed in the county. Directly north, on the opposite side of the Wyalusing, and trending north and south, is "Porter Ridge," containing some of the best upland farms in Jessup. East, and parallel with it, are McKeeley and "Dutch" Hills, the latter in the northeastern part, and so called because the settlers of that part of the township were of Dutch origin, coming from New York. Here are also some fine lands which were originally well timbered, much of the growth being hard wood; and large quantities of maple sugar were here made before the country was cleared up. At the confluence of the larger streams the lands are low, fertile and of the nature of flats, the most extensive being "Bolles' Flat," at the mouth of Birchard Creek. These were tempting spots in the eyes of the land-hunters, coming from the hilly regions of the East, and here the first settlements were made.

Kirby Burnell

The pioneers of Jessup came in small colonies, with the expectation of taking lands under the Connecticut title. To them it was known as "Manor" in the eastern, and "Usher" in the western part; and they, in common with most of the other settlers along the Wyalusing, were tenacious in the belief that this title should secure to them the right to the lands upon which they had located. Being disappointed in this opinion, some of them became disgusted with the situation, and their stay was of short duration. It is said that as early as 1800 fifty persons lived along the creek, between what is now Fairdale and the Rush line. Their settlement and consequent history, being so much blended with this locality, is not easy to trace in other parts of the township. The Honorable Charles Miner is authority for the statement that Samuel Maine was here with his family of seven as early as 1798; but Miss Blackman inclines to the opinion that he did not come till the year following, and that Ebenezer Whipple and his associates were the first settlers on the Wyalusing, within the present bounds of Jessup. They located on "Bolles' Flat" on the 10th of March, 1799, and the Maines may have came soon after. The Whipple settlement was composed of Ebenezer Whipple, his stepson, Ezra Lathrop, Abner Griffis, William Lathrop and Nathan Tupper, all coming from near Unadilla, in Otsego County, New York.

The two last-named lived so far down the creek that it is now in Rush township. Ebenezer Whipple lived in the centre of the Flat until 1806, when he sold to Peter Stevens, and the latter, four years later, disposed of his interests to Robinson Bolles, for whom the "Flat" was named. Whipple afterwards lived on the Carrier place, where he died, in 1826, aged seventy-two years. He was very skillful in the use of the rifle and killed, besides other game, as many as a hundred deer in a year. He had a son named Cyrus, who moved to Iowa and who recounted his experience in Jessup as follows:

"I was five years old when my father emigrated from Otsego County, N. Y., to the banks of the Wyalusing. Soon after there came a freshet, the creek overflowed its banks, and a portion of its current swept through our cabin, running near our fireplace a foot deep or more. I remember my mother's washing and dipping up the water by the side of her kettle. This was our introduction to pioneer life."

The sister of Cyrus Whipple, at that time a young girl, was also skilled in the arts of the woodmen and could use a rifle with deadly effect. It is said that "she one day saw a deer in the creek as she was passing by, and called at a house for a man to shoot it. As it happened, only the lady of the house was in; she took the gun and accompanied the girl within shooting distance, but then her courage failed. The girl herself now rose to the occasion. Seizing the gun, she fired, and instantly a famous buck lay splashing in the water."

Mrs. Cyrus Whipple, also, was a courageous woman. "One day, in the absence of her husband, she saw a ferocious wild-cat within a few rods of the house. It caught a goose and began to eat it. The thought that it might, at another time, make a meal of one of her children nerved her, though naturally a timid woman, to sally forth with a rifle to shoot it. When she came near, it placed its paws upon a log and gave a growl of defiance; then she brought the rifle to bear upon it, and the next moment it lay lifeless." [1]

Of Ebenezer Whipple's skill as a hunter, Mr. J. W. Chapman related the following:

[1] Miss Blackman.

"Mr. Whipple happened along one day with his rifle, where my father and Mr. Jeremiah Gere were chopping trees, and stopped to talk a few minutes of his exploits in shooting partridges. 'What!' inquired one of them, 'you don't shoot them with a rifle ball, do you?' 'Of course,' replied he. 'I always take their heads off with a ball, rather than mangle their bodies with shot,' continued he. They looked at each other with a somewhat incredulous glance, as if suspecting it to be rather a tough yarn, when one of them happened to espy a couple of those birds a few rods off, hopping up at each other in play or fight. 'There's a chance for you, Mr. Whipple,' said he; 'if you can shoot off a pheasant's head with a ball, let's see it.' The old man deliberately drew up his rifle, and quietly said, 'Wait till they get in range;' and the next moment pop went the rifle, and sure enough both their heads were taken off by the ball! Their incredulity vanished, while the old hunter walked off with his game in triumph."

Charles Miner was in Jessup in 1799 and 1800, and had his home at Ebenezer Whipple's, while he worked on his clearings. He took up two lots, one on the farm where afterwards lived Buckingham Stewart, where he cleared four acres and sowed it with wheat. After this was harvested and stacked it was destroyed by bears. This locality is still sometimes called "Miner Hill." The other lot was several miles northeast from the above, and about a mile from Whipple's, where later lived Lyman Picket. Here he had a bark cabin, and, with the assistance of a man, commenced chopping, but made slow progress. His own account of his experience, about that time, was given in a letter read at the Pioneer Festival, Montrose, June 2, 1858, in which, after mentioning that he and a Mr. Chase went to the forks of the Wyalusing from Mr. Parkes', he says,—

"Mr. Bronson piloted us to lot thirty-nine in Usher. The vocabulary of us intruding Yankees spoke of Usher, Ruby, Locke, Manor, Dandolo and Bidwell as our recognized localities. A hill, descending gently to the south for half a mile; a spring gushing from its side, running through groves of sugar maple, beech, cherry, whitewood, and here and there a monster of a hemlock, through swales now green with springing grass; we made a bark cabin, open in front to a huge log against which our fire was kindled; a bed of hemlock-boughs; each a blanket; a six-quart camp-kettle to boil our chocolate; plates and dishes made from the soft whitewood or maple. Here we took up our quarters for the summer (1799). Chopped awkwardly, slept soundly, except being awakened too early from our town habits by the stamping deer, for we had taken possession of a favorite runway. This, if my memory is correct, was about two [1] miles west from where Montrose was afterwards located. That summer and the next, population poured in rapidly under the auspices of Col. Ezekiel Hyde, our Yankee leader. His headquarters were at Rindaw. From Wilson's, down the east branch of the Wyalusing to the Forks, were Maine, Lathrop, Whipple, Sweet, Griffis, Tupper, Picket (the famous 'painter' killer) and Beaumont; on the middle branch, at the large salt spring, the Birchards, I think the first and only inhabitants of Ruby; on the north Branch, in Locke, the Canfields and Brister, the renowned wolf-slayer. The Parkes were the only settlers in Bidwell, as Wilson was in the Manor. Was it a time of suffering? No! no! of pleasurable excitement [Mr. M. was then but nineteen years of age], of hope, health and mutual kindness. Novelty gilded the scene. There was just enough of danger, toil and privation to give life a relish. My Sunday home was at Mr. Whipple's, whose residence was on the Wyalusing, a mile south of us. He was a capital hunter. An anecdote will give you his character. Just at dusk, he returned from the woods in high spirits. 'I have him—a large bear—we will go out in the morning and fetch him in!' Behold! as he had shot in the twilight, he had killed Nathan Tupper's only cow. Mr. Whipple, the most fore-handed settler, had three. 'Neighbor Tupper,' said he, 'I am sorry—it was an accident. Now choose of mine which you please.' 'I won't take your best; let me have old Brindle; she is worth more than mine,' said Mr. Tupper; and the matter was settled by that higher law, 'Do as you would be done by.' Not an instance of dishonesty, or even of unkindness, do I remember. Grain was scarce, mills distant; a maple stump was burned hollow for a mortar, early corn pounded; the good Mrs. Whipple stewed pumpkins, and of the mixture made capital bread.

"The rifle of Mr. Whipple furnished abundance of venison. Deer was plenty—a few elk remained—on the river hills that encircled us there were the pilot and rattlesnake, where annual fires prevailed. In the deep shade of the dense forest they had not yet penetrated."

In the course of the summer of 1800 Mr. Miner cut his foot and was taken to Mr. Whipple's, where he was cared for several weeks. "When he got well," said Cyrus Whipple, "his taste for farming subsided, and he began to think that he mistook his calling." He removed to Wilkes-Barre, where he engaged in teaching, and later became editor of the Luzerne Federalist. In 1804 he married Letitia Wright, of Wilkes-Barre, but afterwards made several visits to his pioneer friends in Jessup, who held him in high esteem.

[1] In his "History of Wyoming," he gives it three miles west, which is nearer correct. He probably supposed Montrose located on the old road to Great Bend, which ran farther west than the present one.

Cyrus Whipple wrote that on the occasion of one of these visits to his father, Mr. Miner said,—

"'I tell my wife, sometimes, I never enjoyed life so well as I did when I lived away up in the woods with Uncle Whipple; and she'll box my ears for it.' On another occasion my father related to him a wolf-story, which Mr. Miner published fifteen or twenty years after my father's decease, adding: 'The noble old hunter now sleeps in the bosom of that soil of which he was one of the pioneers, after having filled up and rounded off an amiable, useful and blameless life.'"

In later years Mr. Miner became one of the best-known writers in the State, and his "History of Wyoming" is replete with the most valuable information in regard to the Connecticut claims, making it a standard book.

Abner Griffis settled on a farm adjoining Ebenezer Whipple. In 1801 he took possession of the grist-mill which Holden Sweet had built on the Wyalusing, above the Flat, Sweet, cultivating his farm meantime. The latter had endeavored for more than a year to get the mill in operation, vainly spending most of his property in the endeavor to bring the water in troughs for a quarter of a mile. In a few months Griffis succeeded in starting the mill, but for more than a year it was without a bolt, and he had to sell a cow to procure one. Up to this time the settlers had been obliged to go to the mouth of the Wyalusing to get their grinding done, and the mill proved a great accommodation to the community. He remained here until 1804, when he returned to his farm.

Byron Griffis.—The first permanent settlers within the present limits of Jessup township were Abner Griffis, Ebenezer Whipple and his stepson, Ezra Lathrop, who came, with their families, from near Unadilla, New York, down the Susquehanna River to the mouth of the Wyalusing Creek in canoes, thence on ox-sleds up that creek, and located on and near Bolles' Flats, between Fairdale and Grangerville, on the Creek road, during the early spring of 1799. Family tradition states that Abner Griffis had been on the ground the previous summer and determined upon a location, then returned for his family and friends. He had been engaged as a "minute-man" in the Revolutionary War, and received a pension until his death, at the age of over eighty years, at Unadilla, to which place he returned after the death of his wife, at the home of their son Elisha, in Forest Lake township. He owned and operated the first grist-mill in the township for several years. The children of this couple were Solomon, died at Unadilla; Hezekiah, deceased; John, a farmer, died in Jackson township, whose son, Leander Griffis, ex-county commissioner, resides on the homestead there; Ezekiel, a lumberman, died in Bradford County; Rebecca, married a Mr. Leonard, and is now dead; Elisha, a farmer and hotel-keeper in Forest Lake township, died in 1870, aged eighty-one years; Patty, married Pliny Birchard, a farmer of this township, and upon his decease, moved to the West and died there; and Robert, born April 9, 1791, who, in 1813, married Lydia Robinson (1795–1857), of Jessup, and had children—Amanda, married Madison Bostwick, of Montrose; Bartlet, born 1816, now a painter at Tama City, Iowa; Harriet, 1819, married Tracy Frink, a farmer of New Milford township; Mahlon, 1821, a retired farmer living at Vestal, N. Y.; Byron, born January 18, 1824; Laura D., 1827, the wife of Joseph Simpson, a surveyor, living in California; Isaac, died in infancy. Squire Griffis took Mrs. Comfort (Kellum) Sherman (the widow of Squire Jonathan Sherman, of this township) as his second wife in 1858. The Kellum family were early settlers in Forest Lake township. Robert Griffis settled in 1814 on Porter Ridge, on the farm now owned and occupied by his youngest son, Byron, where he remained until his death, in 1884, at the ripe old age of ninety-three years. He was a man of marked ability and strength of character. In 1825 he was appointed by the Governor justice of the peace, and served in such capacity fifteen years. In 1840 the first election for township officers occurred, and he was elected by the people and continued in such office for ten years thereafter.

In 1836 he was elected one of the county commissioners, and served in different offices until 1856, a continuous period of thirty-one years, in addition to acting as postmaster for ten years at Porter Ridge, an office now discontinued. He was an accommodating and obliging neighbor, an influential and moral citizen, a devoted member of the Middletown Baptist Church, with which he united in 1829, and regularly attended until age and infirmities prevented. His voice and example were ever given to good works, and his influence lives after him. Byron Griffis enjoyed the advantages of the district school during winters until twenty-one years of age, and then worked out a couple of years until called home and given half of his father's interest in the farm. Upon this place he has spent his life. In 1850 he bought his brother's interest, and in 1854 made the final payment to the original owners of the land. His parents remained with him until their deaths, that of Mrs. Griffis occurring January 31, 1872. He has been quite a factor in politics, but has not sought office, though he has acted in various township capacities, amongst others as school director three terms. He has been proffered nomination as justice of the peace, but declined. On September 2, 1849, he married Adelia C., daughter of William and Mary (Bowman) McGill, who was born November 10, 1824. William McGill was a mason-builder at Towanda, and the son of Dennis McGill, who came with his parents from Ireland when twelve years of age, and settled near Towanda, Pa. Their children were Dennis, a farmer, died in Bradford County; William, also a farmer, went to Illinois and died there of cholera; Jacob, a shoemaker, died in Bradford County; James, a farmer, has recently gone to Michigan; Hiram W., a carpenter, living in Towanda; Marinda, married first Edward Patterson, and second John Gorham, and is a widow now living in Bradford County; Eliza, wife of Benjamin Smith, a farmer of Bradford County; Polly, married Martin Moore, of Rome, Pa., and died nearly forty years ago; Adelia C., wife of Byron Griffis; and Rebecca, married Mallory Wolf, a Luzerne County farmer.

The Bowmans were among the earliest settlers in Bradford County, Jacob Bowman, grandfather of Mrs. Griffis, having been a soldier in the Revolution. The children of Byron and Adelia Griffis are Laura A., died in infancy; Leroy H., born April 17, 1853, married Eliza Ellsworth, and is a business man in Montrose; Oscar F., born April 17, 1855, married Emma Allen, has one child, Frank Byron, and lives near the homestead; Estella Adelia, born June 20, 1857, married Elmer Tewksbury, a farmer of Auburn township; Eugene B., born November 9, 1859, married Hattie Deuel, has two children, Arthur L. and Bessie A., and is a farmer of Rush township; and Perry E., born August 1, 1866. Mr. and Mrs. Griffis are consistent members of the Middletown Baptist Church, he having joined nearly fifty years ago, and is now acting as deacon, having been elected to succeed L. Minor Turrell, Orange Mott, Jr., and Levi Tupper, all of whom died within a few months of each other.

The Griffis family is about the only one which has remained continuously in the township since its first settlement. Abner Griffis died at the residence of his son Solomon, in New York. Of him Mr. Miner said: "He was the beau of the Wyalusing; he had a fine form, a ruddy cheek, bright eye, pleasant smile, manly expression, and with the rifle no superior."

In 1799 the four Maine brothers—Samuel, Nehemiah, Ezekiel and Meacham—came and located in the valley of the Wyalusing a mile above Bolles' Flat, and along South Creek. Samuel lived on the flat at the mouth of the latter creek and made some improvements, which he sold to his brother-in-law, Samuel Lewis, in 1800, and began improving another farm, which was later known as Butterfield's. Meacham Maine was south of him, on the ridge, and both he and Samuel moved to Indiana before 1813. Ezekiel Maine lived on the present Shay farm, where afterwards lived David Turrell, and Nehemiah Maine lived in what is now Dimock.

Ezekiel Maine, Jr., was born while his father lived on "Maine Hill," on the Shay farm. In the same year, 1799, at least six more tracts of land were located in Jessup, by Holden Sweet, Zebdiah Lathrop, Eben Ingram, Jeremiah Meacham, John Reynolds and Daniel Foster. The three first named remained, but Meacham and Foster returned to Long Island for their families, after having put up log cabins.

Holden Sweet located on the creek, where is now the mill, making the first improvement of that nature the same year; but in 1800 exchanged places with Abner Griffis, moving farther down the creek, near Ebenezer Whipple's. A little more than a mile north Zebdiah Lathrop located and died in the township. His son, Zebdiah, removed to Rush and afterwards to Iowa. Two of his daughters married Roswell Morse and John Hancock. The road by his house was petitioned for in 1801, to begin between the houses of Ebenezer Whipple and Ezra Lathrop, on the Wyalusing, and to extend to Ellicott's road, near the thirty-fourth mile-tree.

Jeremiah Meacham selected the farm adjoining Ezekiel Maine's on the east. He then returned to Connecticut for his family, and arrived here—nine in all—on the 1st of March, 1800. They came via Great Bend to H. Tiffany's, in "Nine Partners," and from thence to Stephen Wilson's, and found but one house between—that of Joseph Chapman, in what is now Brooklyn. Upon reaching Ezekiel Maine's and finding no path beyond, the family halted until a road was cut. There was not a nail in Mr. Meacham's house, the shingles being held on with poles.

The east line of Jessup passes through the house occupied by his son Sheldon until his recent decease, on the farm cleared by Mr. Meacham, and where he died. A part of the estate passed to the late Jeremiah Meacham, Jr., who resided on it until a few years since. In early life he united with the Baptist Church, in which he was deacon for many years. As an upright, honest, Christian man, his name and character are without blemish. He died in Montrose, February 24, 1871, aged seventy-eight years.

In the spring of 1807, on the 1st day of April, there was four feet of snow on the ground. Jeremiah Meacham's wife and three daughters were then all confined to their beds with sickness. Dr. Fraser came from Great Bend to attend them. Their fire-wood being exhausted, they were obliged to burn the fence, as the woods, though only eight or ten rods off, were inaccessible by the ox-team. There were no drifts on account of the woods. For seven days it was cold, blowing weather; then the sun shone out, and in the little clearings the snow melted so rapidly that, with the large amount in the woods, it caused what is known as "the great flood."

John Reynolds and Daniel Foster came, the second time, from Long Island, in company with Bartlet Hinds, of Bridgewater, in May, 1800. They lived in the [1] cabin that Mr. Reynolds had built the previous year, and to this, in the next fall, Mr. Foster and his family came. His son Walter was then in his eighth year.

The saw-mill spoken of was built as early as 1801, and was the first improvement of that kind in Jessup. That year a road was petitioned for by Ichabod Halsey, who had come with Foster and who located on what is now the Roy place, "to cross the Wyalusing at Foster's saw-mill." Daniel Foster died in 1829, and the place passed into the hands of his son Walter, who deceased in 1872, at the residence of his son, near Scranton.[2]

As early as 1801 David Doud was on the place where Charles Miner made his first clearing and where, later, settled Buckingham Stuart. About the same time Samuel Lewis and his family were living on the Maine place, at the mouth of South Creek. West of him David Olmstead located as early as 1802, coming from Norwalk, Conn. He was a soldier in the Revolution, in the northern campaign under General Gates, and was also with Washington in his retreat from New York. He died in Jessup November 29, 1829, but some of his descendants have resided in the township to the present time. Asa Olmstead was on the farm next east, and higher up the stream was Matthias Smith as early as 1808. When he located here he was a son-in-law of Ebenezer Whipple.

The adjoining farm was owned by Colonel William C. Turrell, his log house standing on the present Dr. N. P. Cornwell place, but lower down, on the low lands. For a long time the place was called "Turrell's Flat." He received his title from being chosen lieutenant-colonel of the One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Militia, in 1811. He was an active, influential man, but removed to the West about 1840. Higher up the creek was the farm of Lyman Cook, and beyond that was David Turrell, who removed to Michigan, where he died in 1849, aged sixty-six years. Where William Robertson now lives was the third of the Turrell brothers, bearing the Christian name of Doctor. His improvements were among the first on that hill, and this lot of land was the southern limit of the Rose tract, in this part of the county.

The first settlers on the hill but higher up, were Lemuel Walbridge, and his son Henry, also natives of Connecticut, who located near the summit about 1812. They also bought the Doctor Turrell farm, below them, and Henry Wallbridge first improved the Jagger farm. About the same time Christian Shelp, a Mohawk Dutchman, came from New Milford, where he had settled after moving from New York, and bought four hundred acres of the Rose lands between the above two places. His father-in-law, Henry Pruyne, who had settled in Great Bend in 1810, came with him. The latter was a Revolutionary soldier and a pen-

[1] "The cabin had no floor, except that mother had a short board to keep her feet warm. When Mr. Reynolds brought his family in the spring of 1801, father moved into his own house across the creek, Mr. Reynolds being on the left bank, on a knoll still marked by the remains of the old chimney and foundation of the house. He had the first fulling-mill in Jessup. Its site is marked by the stone chimney left standing when the building was burned. For some years, his family occupied a part of it. My father built, in 1812, a framed house, also on the right bank, but a few rods farther west. He paid for his land twice—first to his friend, Mr. Reynolds, who held a Connecticut title only, and afterwards to the Wallace estate, or rather to Peter Graham, to whom the obligation was transferred. After giving to the latter one hundred and thirty acres and the saw-mill, he had two hundred and fifty acres left."

[2] Miss Blackman.

sioner. He died in 1843, and his widow, Rachel, the following year, aged eighty-one years. Christian Shelp had sons named John, Nathaniel, Henry, Christian, Jr., and Stephen. Henry afterwards lived on the farm which his father had occupied many years. Charles Davis, a son-in-law of Shelp, located in the same neighborhood, and as these settlers were permanent, the locality took the name of "Dutch Hill," which it has retained to the present.

Another family, whose settlement was permanent, was that of Robinson Bolles. [1] He came from Groton, New London County, Conn., in the autumn of 1810, with his wife and nine children. They were twenty days on their journey—their wagon drawn by horses—two days being required from New Milford to the former location of Ebenezer Whipple. This had been sold to Peter Stevens, from whom Mr. Bolles purchased. The house stood in the centre of the flat, but the latter afterwards built, on the north side of the road, the large house now owned by his grandson, Amos, a son of Simeon A. Bolles. He died in 1842, aged seventy-six years, highly respected, having reared a large family, most of whom remained in Jessup. The sons were as follows: Simeon A., who lived north of the "Flat," on the farm now owned by one of his sons, Robinson. He died in 1877, aged eighty-five years. He was also the father of Charles B., Wilson, Amos, Anson, Henry and Hannah Bolles. Abel, the second son of Robinson Bolles, after living a while on the Peter Rone place, moved to Bradford County; Nelson, the third son, died in 1825; Elkanah S., the fourth son, lived on the farm which is now occupied by his son, Edgar; John, the fifth son, moved to Bradford County; James, the sixth son, lived on part of the homestead and was the father of James, Isaac, Daniel and George Bolles; Lyman, the seventh and youngest son, moved to Texas. The daughters of Robinson Bolles married,—Maria, John C. Stevens, of Bradford County; Hannah, Daniel Pickett; Nancy L., Silas Baldwin; and Prudence, Almon Pickett. But one of these, Mrs. Silas Baldwin, born in 1809, survived until December, 1886.

[1] Miss Blackman.

In the northeastern part of the township, above "Dutch Hill," the first settlement was made in 1812 by Zephaniah Cornell. A part of his farm of two hundred acres extended into what is now Forest Lake. In 1828 he sold the lower part to Marvin Hall, and moved to what is now called "Cornell Hill," but returned to the old homestead, where he died December 8, 1871, at the ripe age of nearly eighty-nine years. His son, S. D. Cornell, occupied the Forest Lake place until his death, in 1881, aged seventy-four years. Lower down the road, David Sherer and his son-in-law, John Robertson, located before the close of 1815, coming from New Hampshire. Sherer bought the Henry Wallbridge farm, on which he lived until 1837, when he sold out to E. Jagger and moved to Dimock, where he died in 1846, aged eighty-seven years. He left Ireland when a lad five years of age, and coming to America, entered the Revolutionary army at the age of eighteen years. He was at the battle of Stillwater, the surrender of Burgoyne and at Valley Forge. In his religious professions he was a Presbyterian, and the last fifty-five years of his life was a consistent member of that church. His son John became a Presbyterian minister. William was a physician, who died in Kentucky. James and Samuel became residents of Dimock. His daughter, Mary, became a Mrs. Baldwin and was a pioneer teacher. John Robertson lived first on the Steiger farm, west of his last location, the homestead of his son William, where he died in 1877. Of his nine children,—David became a resident of Springville; Warner moved to Bradford County; William is on the homestead; Milton is a citizen of Montrose and Samuel of Elmira. Hannah married Jason Arnold; Mary, David Patterson; Helen, Dr. P. A. Bissell, of Mahanoy, and Rhoda died a maiden.

Among other settlers along the Wyalusing, in 1813, were Buckingham Stuart and Isaac Hart, who came all the way from Vermont on foot. The former was a millwright and followed his trade a number of years, locating, in 1819, on the place on which David Doud had lived after 1801, being the first Miner improvement, made in 1799. The previous occupant was Levi S. Agard, whose sister Stuart had married. Both have deceased, the husband having been more than ninety years old. In 1813 Nathaniel Stuart, the father of Buckingham, located on the Wyalusing, below Foster's. His son, Nathan, returned to Vermont and there lost his wife and four daughters, by drowning in a freshet. One of the daughters of Nathaniel Stuart became the wife of Cyrus Whipple His son, Abraham, died in Auburn, and Isaac in Iowa.

Prior to 1813 John Blaisdell, from Massachusetts, located on Porter Ridge, where he reared sons, named John, James, William and Timothy, all of whom have deceased. James Cook located lower down the Ridge, on the Cyrus Sheets farm, and Israel Birchard was above, coming from Forest Lake, where he had settled in 1801. He died in 1818, aged fifty-three years. Of his eight sons, Horace lived in Forest Lake; Lucius lived in Montrose; Pliny, Harry A., Jesse, Upson, Ralph and Lyman lived in Jessup many years. The descendants became very numerous.

Jonas Fuller, a millwright, came from Vermont in 1813, but did not locate his lands until the following year, when he purchased one hundred acres on the line between Jessup and Dimock. He subsequently removed to Auburn, where he became an octogenarian. One time, in passing between Elk Lake and the Wyalusing, he met a wolf and neither was aware of the other's presence until they were only a few feet apart, when Fuller raised his arms and gave a loud yell, which so frightened the wolf that it turned and ran away. At that time Champlin Harris was boarding at Fuller's, and spent much of his time hunting and trapping, catching at least a dozen bears and wolves. He was later a settler in Jessup, on the Samuel Warner place.

Orlando W. Stone.—Benajah Stone was a captain in the Revolutionary War, and lived and died in Litchfield County, Conn. One son, Benajah, died in Michigan, where he had settled; Isaac died in Indiana; and Lorry Stone, born on the homestead in Connecticut, settled in Jessup township on a wilderness tract of land in the year 1814, where he spent the remainder of his life and died in 1871, in his eighty-third year. His wife, Permelia Mallory, died in 1846, aged fifty-four years. Her father, Truman Mallory, of Litchfield County, was also in the Revolutionary War. Lorry Stone took up one hundred and seventy-seven acres, the present farm of his son, Orlando W. He rented the old Turrell mill on South Creek and carried on the lumbering business for several years, cutting timber from his own land and buying quantities elsewhere. He also rented Foster's mill on Wyalusing Creek, where he conducted a large lumber business for that early day. He was very industrious, paid for his farm and settled a homestead for his children. He paid little attention to politics, but held several township offices. His eldest daughter, Adaline, wife of Asbury Woolsey, died in Bradford County in 1863. Lorenzo is a resident of Silver Lake township. Orlando W. was born May 19, 1820. George L. commanded a company in the late Rebellion, was in the battle of Chancellorsville under General Hooker, and was wounded at Gettysburg. Returning home, he was commissioned postmaster at Montrose, which office he held over four years, when he settled at New Milford, where he has served as justice of the peace for several years. Caroline A. is the wife of Mervin Barber, of Chautauqua County, N. Y., who was also a soldier in the late Rebellion. Charles H. served as corporal in his brother's company, was wounded at Gettysburg and is a farmer in Nebraska. Stanley was a cavalryman under Generals Sheridan and Kilpatrick, and was in the service three years. He was also wounded during the preliminary fighting before Gettysburg; was captured near Richmond and sent to Libby Prison, where he remained until so reduced in flesh that he was unable to stand upon his feet. He was then sent to the rebel hospital, where he remained until exchanged, just before the close of the war. He is a farmer and carpenter in Franklin township.

Orlando W. Stone in boyhood learned what he could from books at the school then located on his father's farm, and was a teacher. He married, in 1846, Lucretia H. (1824–83), daughter of Levi Wells, of Dimock. The

O. N. Stone

Wells family came from Connecticut. Levi Wells' mother escaped with her mother and children to the Delaware at the time of the Wyoming massacre, where her father and oldest brother were killed by the Indians. The only surviving child of Orlando W. and Lucretia H. Stone is George A., born November 19, 1871. For his second wife he married, in 1884, Mrs. Hannah (Devine) Hibbard, of Rush township, who was born in 1831. Her children are William Elbert, of Montrose; Amelia J., Etna J. and Simon A. Hibbard. Her parents were John (1801–40) and Jemima (Shoemaker) (1799–1871) Devine, who settled in Rush township in 1830, on Devine Ridge. For one year after his first marriage Mr. Stone resided at Dimock, and then returned and bought the farm just south of his present homestead. After ten years he purchased the homestead farm, where he has since resided. He was assessor of the township for seven years and has held several township offices. He is one of the stockholders of the Montrose Railway, and is a thoroughly practical and successful farmer and business man. He is a liberal giver to all religious and charitable enterprises.

South of this place Nathan Eastman made some improvements, which became the property of Truman Walker in later years. He was the father of James R. Walker, who died in the army, and of William R., now occupying the homestead. The first settler on that road was James Young, a native of Scotland, who came in 1819, with the intention of settling in Silver Lake, having heard flattering accounts of the lands of Dr. Rose, but upon reaching the place of J. W. Robinson, in what is now Dimock, he was induced to purchase land belonging to the Wallace estate (now in Jessup), about three-fourths of a mile west of B. McKenzie. Here his family occupied a log house, without a door, as many had done before them. Such hardships, however, seem not to have shortened the lives of the pioneers; Mr. Young lived to be seventy-three, and his wife, who died in 1862, nineteen years later, was over ninety years of age.

In this part of the township a colony of people from New Jersey settled about 1883. Among them was Benjamin Shay, of Sussex County, who bought the David Turrell farm, which was, at that time, one of the best improved in this part of the country. He died here in 1876, more than seventy-six years old. His children were Dennis, living in New Milford; John, died in Jessup; David and A. W., living on the homestead; George T., in Nebraska; Betsey E., married H. C. Bertholf, of Jessup; Hannah E., the wife of Hiram Whitney: Sarah E., wife of J. B. McKeeby and Mary, wife of D. S. McKeeby, also from New Jersey. On "Fire Hill," in the southwestern part of the township, settlements were also made by natives of New Jersey and New York. The improvements made by the Hart brothers, in 1812, were purchased by Samuel Bertholf, the father of H. C. Bertholf, now occupying the place, which, from its location, is not inappropriately called "Lightly Home." Southwest lived William Cronk, the father of John Cronk, residing on the Samuel Roberts place. Other sons live in Rush township. John Bedell, another native of New Jersey, settled here in 1842, remaining until his death, in 1877, at the age of seventy-seven years. Several of his sons still live in that locality.

In 1814 Benajah Chatfield came from Vermont and settled on the second clearing of Charles Miner, now occupied by Lyman Pickett, where he died in 1835, aged seventy-three years. His widow died in December, 1843, aged seventy-eight years. His son Abel lived on the homestead until his death, not quite forty years ago. He was married to Sophronia Tupper, and one of their daughters, Adelia C., is the wife of Charles Bolles; Victoria married L. B. Pickett. Nathan Tupper lived in the upper part of the township, and was killed by the falling of a limb from a tree. He had nine children besides the youngest daughter, Sophronia, who married Abel Chatfield. Among the sons were Lorain, Jehiel and Harry. On the Matthew McKeeby farm Salmon Bradshaw settled in 1814, but removed to Dryden, New York. Christopher Sherman, a Revolutionary soldier, came to the same neighborhood the same time and died here in 1835. His sons were Jonathan C., Jesse and Abel.

In the neighborhood east, John A. Patch settled in 1816 and died in the township in March, 1840. His son, Joseph H., moved to Forest Lake, and Benjamin L., the youngest, moved to Carroll County, Ill., where he was elected president judge. Farther south lived Jacob and John Bump, but they removed at an early day.

[1] George Clagget made the first improvement on the corner where Dr. N. P. Cornwell has been located since 1837. It was a part of Col. Turrell's farm; Curtis Bliss owned it in 1820. The latter and John Shelp went through Western New York on a tour of exploration about this time, and, in a letter soon after published in Waldie's Messenger (at Montrose), he says,—

"As to the soil we are satisfied from what we saw, and from the information we received of the amount of crops raised where we have been, that if we and our neighbors will cultivate our soil as it ought to be cultivated, there are few places which we have seen on our route that will be able to claim a superiority over us as to quantity of produce, and certainly none as to value."

Two of his neighbors took nearly the same route, soon after, to judge for themselves of the correctness of Mr. Bliss' statements, and add,—

"Though our soil generally is not equal to some that may be found westward, yet, independent of the sickness interrupting the labors of a farmer on the flats, our crops, acre for acre, are worth much more here than there. There is one thing well known to all the settlers in our country—that the soil here is very lasting—for the oldest farms, when ploughed and properly cultivated, produce the best crops, better than new lands."

Mr. Bliss states,—

"I have been in thirteen States in the Union, and in comparison with all the parts that I have seen (taking into view the price of land and the uncommon healthiness of this county), I can truly say I think there is every reason for the inhabitants of Susquehanna County to be satisfied with it."

On Porter Ridge and in the northwestern part of the township a new class of settlers came in after 1835, generally purchasing the improvements made by the first settlers. Among these were Wakeman C. Handrick and his wife, Urania Stone, who had been reared in Forest Lake. They bought the Rufus Robbins place in 1837, and still live there. They reared the following children: George J., living in the southern part of Forest Lake; Edgar L., a physician at Friendsville; Oscar S., of Scranton; Elmina J., married William Clark, and lives on the homestead; and Sophronia L., the wife of Lester Turrell, of Forest Lake.

On the farm next below, Joseph Marsh lived a long time, but moved to Bradford County, and the place passed into the hands of Frederick Dayton, who was married to Sophronia Stone, also of Forest Lake. Their sons were Watson (living south of the homestead), Canfield and Clark. Eastward was the Henry Dewees place; and on the late Van Dyke farm was Jonathan Caswell. Farther south, on the ridge, Elder William Brand, a Baptist minister, settled in 1832, and lived there until his removal to the West. One of his daughters became the wife of the Rev. Justin A. Smith, D.D., a distinguished divine of Chicago, in which city she died, in 1871. The Elder Brand farm passed into the hands of Dr. William Bissell, and is now owned by his family. He came to the county in 1827, and studied medicine with Dr. Samuel Bissell, of Brooklyn. In November, 1831, he read with Dr. Fraser; then was in practice two years with Dr. Leet, of Friendsville. In 1834 he married Parthenia, a daughter of Adonijah Webster, of Choconut, and settled in the southern part of Forest Lake; but in 1838 located on Porter Ridge, where he lived until his death, September, 1863, at the age of eighty years. Three years prior to this he had retired from active practice. Mrs. Bissell, born in 1817, still survives, and, with her daughter Jessie, are the only members of the family living. The latter married Myron B. Helms, and lives opposite the homestead. A son, Alanson, lost his wife in the late Civil War.

Albert Leonard came to Jessup in 1808, being brought here from New York, by John Griffis, when he was but three years of age. He improved a farm in the township, but in 1874 became blind, and has so continued, living at present with his daughter, Mrs. W. V. Bedell.

The population of the township fluctuated somewhat as the land was taken up, and immigration to the West received attention. The following were the taxables in 1847 :

[1] Miss Blackman.

James D. Allen.
Chas. Avery.
John Bedell.
Granville Bailey.
Philander Barber.
Marvin Barber.
Wm. E. Burrows.
Pliny Birchard.
Israel C. Birchard.
Elias L. Birchard.
Ralph S. Birchard.
Jesse A. Birchard.
L. W. Birchard.
Harry A. Birchard.
Orrin S. Beebe.
Jos. Backus.
Jeremiah Baldwin.
Silas Baldwin.
Anthony Blackman.
Samuel Bertholf.
Elkanah Bolles.
Abel Bolles.
Simon A. Bolles.
Nelson Bolles.
James S. Bolles.
John Blaisdell.
Jas. S. Blaisdell.
Wm. Bissell.
Andrew Bissell.
John Bissell.
Minor Brooks.
Madison Bostwick.
Clark Burr.
Geo. Bowman.
Caleb Cook.
Roswell Cook.
John Cook.
Lewis Card.
Chas. Crandall.
Joel Cogswell.
N. P. Cornwell.
Abel Chatfield.
John O. Clark.
Isaac L. Camp.
Samuel A. Caswell.
Robt. M. Caswell.
Corydon Caswell.
Jonathan Caswell.
Wm. Covert.
Chapman Carrier.
Austen W. Carrier.
Erastus Cook.
Richard B. Downer.
John Dority.
Fred. Dayton.
Henry Dewees.
Stoddard Dewitt.
Levi Dewitt.
Chas. Davis.
Henry Davis.
Benj. Depue.
Geo. K. Eastman.
Nathan Eastman.
Walter Foster.
E. G. Fessenden.
Thos. Fessenden.
Isaac B. Fessenden.
John Fessenden.
H. C. Fairchild.
David Green.
Jacob Green.
Robt. Griffis.
Bartlett Griffis.
Mahlon Griffis.
John Gerry.
Martin Granger.
George Henry.
Wm. Holbrook.
John Hancock.
Marvin Hall.
Daniel Hoff.
Bartlett Hoff.
John Hoff.
Harmon Hinds.
Champion Harris.
Richard D. Harris.
Wakeman C. Handrick.
Austin Howell.
John A. Howell.
Philemon Harsh, Jr.
John Johnson.
Benj. A. Johnson.
Luke Jagger.
Elias Jagger.
Luther Jagger.
Daniel Jagger.
Albert Kelsey.
James Lewis.
Ebenezer Lathrop.
Nicholas Lowly.
Jeremiah Meachem.
Sheldon Meachem.
Jeremiah Martin.
Robt. Martin.
Thos. Martin.
Harry Mills.
Clark Mills.
Joseph S. Mitchel.
Elijah Mott.
George Minkler.
Matthew McKeeby.
Matthew McKeeby (2d).
Solomon McKeeby.
D. P. Miller.
Ezekiel Maine.
B. C. Newcomb.
W. P. Newcomb.
Samuel Newcomb.
Parthena C. Newcomb.
George Otis.
Erastus Otis.
Benj. P. Otis.
Richard Otis.
Walter Olmstead.
Asa Olmstead.
Jos. Parmeter.
David Patterson.
Wm. L. Post.
Henry Prime.
Eben Pickett.
Jared Pickett.
Daniel Pickett.
Samuel Roberts.
Nelson H. Roberts.
David S. Robertson.
John Robertson.
Wm. Robertson.
John W. Robertson.
John Reynolds.
Alpha Reynolds.
John Reynolds (2d).
Wm. Smith.
Zenos Smith.
Benj. Sayre.
Henry Shelp.
Christian Shelp.
Henry C. Shelp.
John Shelp.
Thos. Shelp.
John Shelp, Jr.
Lucius Steiger.
David C. Sherman.
Christopher Sherman.
Lemon Sherman.
Jonathan C. Sherman.
Abel Sherman.
Harvey Sherman.
Andrew V. Stout.
Jos. W. Smith.
Horace Smith.
Mathias Smith.
Henry E. Smith.
Zenos Smith.
Lucius Smith.
Benj. Shay.
Theodore Shay.
Dennis Shay.
Lora Stone.
Geo. L. Stone.
O. W. Stone.
Edward Torpin.
Benj. Van Ess.
James Vail.
Russell Verry.
Albert Woodcock.
Jas. Waldie.
Stephen Wolsey.
Joseph B. Wolsey.
Henry Walbridge.
Samuel Walbridge.
Samuel Walker.
James Young.
John Young.
Henry Young.

BUSINESS INTERESTS.—The oldest interests in the township, aside from the ordinary agricultural pursuits, are the grist and saw-mills on the Wyalusing, above Bolles' Flat. The first mill was built in 1799 by Holden Sweet, but before it was set in operation he exchanged property with Abner Griffis, who had the mill till 1804, when he sold out to Jacob Cooley. The latter had settled on the creek half a mile above the mill, and in 1803 built a distillery at that point, which he carried on about seven years. In this period one of his children was drowned in the creek, and another was scalded to death in the still. After having bought the mill he built a dam of poles and took up his residence in the mill building, operating the mill until 1811. He then rented the place two years to D. Lampson, and went to Canada. At the end of that time he returned and built a house on the site of the Edgar Bolles residence, and again left. This house, it is said, was destroyed by the neighbors, who suspected that Cooley was guilty of passing spurious money, and who wanted to free themselves of his presence in the community. After his family had left it was reported that Cooley had met with a violent death for an offence similar to the one he was accused of in Jessup. From him the mill passed into the hands of Jesse Ross, thence to his son, Isaac H., and from him to his brother Perrin. Since that time the owners have been in the order named : Asa and Adolphus Olmstead, Mason Dennison, Samuel Bertholf, Benjamin Depue, Timothy Depue, T. J. Depue, Alanson H. Bolles, and since 1882, J. G. Snow. The property consists of eight acres of land, grist-mill with three runs of stones, saw-mills with circular saws, and a cider-mill. The mill is one of the oldest land-marks in the township.

In 1817 Thomas H. Doyle was a cloth-dresser, six miles from Montrose, on the Wyalusing road, and in 1818 Isaac H. Ross and Jonathan C. Sherman took the same stand—the house is now a part of the above mills.

Later, wool-fulling machinery was operated near here by Alonzo P. Kinney, Joseph W. Smith, and last, by John S. Ward. The building which stood on the S. McKeeby place has been removed. Robinson Bolles, the elder, had a small tannery on his farm, and also carried on boot and shoe-making. The business was closed up after his death, in 1842. In the southwestern part of the township W. V. Bedell has for many years carried on an undertaker shop and also manufactured wagons. Lower down the Wyalusing John Bennett had mechanic shops fifteen years, which have not been occupied continuously to carry on wagon-making and blacksmithing.

Near the Bridgewater line were the woolen-mills of John Reynolds,[1] which passed away many years ago; then came a saw-mill which, when operated by a man named Gregory, caused his death by his being caught by the machinery. The death of Ethan Russell was also caused by this mill. It is now the property of W. Barron. The Foster saw-mill, lower down the stream, has passed away. It was last used as a wagon-shop by Ralph Birchard. Small saw-mills on South Creek, and the Smith mill, on Forest Lake Creek, have also been abandoned. High up the latter stream a small saw-mill, with feed-grinder attached, is operated by N. Andrews.

Porter Ridge post-office was established at the house of Pliny Birchard, who was the postmaster in ———. Thence it was moved to the house of Austin Lathrop, farther down the road, Robert Griffis being the postmaster. It was discontinued in ——.

FAIRDALE, the only hamlet in the township, is pleasantly located on the left bank of the Wyalusing, on "Turrell's Flat," a little above the mouth of South Creek. It contains a church, two stores, post-office, shops, and had in 1880 seventy-five inhabitants. Matthias Smith was one of the settlers whose continuous residence was longest at this place. He lived on the Dimon farm, and for a time had a small distillery. His sons, Zenas and Lucius, also now aged men, are still citizens of Fairdale. David Olmstead and Richard Otis are also old citizens near the hamlet.

Dr. Nathaniel P. Cornwell was the first located physician, coming here more than forty years ago. He lived on the corner of the old Colonel Turrell farm until his death, in August, 1883. In the last years of his life he was infirm and not in active practice. Other practitioners have been Drs. G. M. Harrison and A. B. Sherman.

Fairdale post-office was established in 1829, with Asa Olmstead as postmaster, who kept it at his public-house, half a mile below the present hamlet. In 1842 it was re-established, and Daniel Hoff was the postmaster, keeping it at his public-house, higher up the road. Next it was at the store of John Jackson, who was succeeded by Jacob H. Rosencrans, the office having been kept in that building about twenty years. Since October, 1885, the postmaster has been Oscar C. Downer, merchant and public-house keeper. The building he occupies was erected for tavern purposes, after the Civil War, by Jacob Decker, and was kept by him until his death. It was then changed to a store by John and Edward Granger, who traded a few years. Among other merchants was James Martin, who was in business a long time, and also traded at Snow's Mills. The building occupied there was burned down while owned by J. W. Throckmorton. After the Hoff tavern was discontinued, before 1860, the building was used as a chair-factory, and at present a cooper-shop is carried on near this place. Henry Slawson, James Vail and L. E. White have had mechanic shops.

RELIGIOUS.—The Rush Baptist Church was organized in Jessup in 1831, and for a time the meetings were held in Bolles' school house. This building stood opposite the present schoolhouse, near the grave-yard, which is one of the oldest in this part of the county. It is said that Nelson Bolles was the first person interred there, when one acre of ground was set aside for burial purposes, and placed in care of trustees Simeon A. Bolles and Daniel Pickett. The grounds have been enlarged by the addition of half an acre, and the cemetery is well kept. In 1886 the trustees were Charles B. Bolles, Peter D. Roe and E. W. Bolles.

[1] See account of his settlement.

The first church building in the township was a small frame meeting-house, which was built about 1841 on the Hall farm, in the northern part of the township, and was used by the Wesleyan Methodists and other denominations. Owing to the changes in the ownership of lands, which brought in a new class of people, the use of the building as a place of worship was soon abandoned, but the house stood until after 1857, and was sometimes used to hold secular meetings.

In the neighborhood of Fairdale the Methodist Episcopal Church had a number of adherents many years before a regular organization was effected. After a class was formed, among the members were Marvin Hall, Benjamin Shay, Truman Walker, Diadame Walker, Charity Hall, David Olmstead and wife, Doras Shay and wife. A small meeting-house was built in the hamlet, which was replaced by the present edifice in 1868. It is an attractive structure, with about three hundred sittings, and cost three thousand four hundred dollars. The committee under whose direction it was erected was composed of Truman Walker, David Olmstead, Zenas Smith, Marvin Hall and Benjamin Shay. It was formally dedicated in November, 1868, and has since been repaired. The lot has also been supplied with a number of good sheds. In 1886 the trustees of the property were David Olmstead, William R. Walker, Thomas Beaumont and Marvin Hall. In the fall of 1886 a new parsonage was erected opposite the church, at a cost of one thousand dollars, which is the property of the Fairfield Circuit, formed in 1868, to which these Methodists belong. Rev. J. S. Lewis is the present pastor. The membership of the church at Fairdale is one hundred, constituting a class led by P. S. Shelp. A large Sunday-school has Wm. Robertson as its superintendent.

FREDERICK DAYTON. — Eli and Hannah (Baldwin) Dayton were natives of Litchfield County, Conn., where both died. He was a farmer and a hero of the Revolutionary War. Enlisting soon after the beginning of that eventful struggle, he served for three years in the army and took part in the campaign with General Montgomery in Canada. Discharged through a severe illness, he returned to his home. He had children,—Lucinda, Daniel, Isaac, all born there. Daniel Dayton (1788–1870), in 1811, married Mary Ann, daughter of Canfield and Mary Ann Stone, also of Litchfield County. She died at the age of twenty-six, after bearing Mary Ann, born 1813 (Mrs. Ahira Wickham, now of Towanda, Pa.); Hannah (1815–47) was the wife of N. C. Wickwire, and died in Illinois; and Daniel C., born 1816, a retired merchant in Towanda, Pa. For his second wife, in 1818, he married Catharine (1799–1857), daughter of William Clark, of Cornwall, Conn. Their children are Frederick, born 1819; William, born 1821, a farmer in Litchfield County; and Isaac, born 1828, also a farmer there. In his eighty-second year Mr. Dayton came to Susquehanna County to visit his son Frederick, with whom he remained six months. Returning to his home in the fall, he lived until the following May, and died on the old homestead.

Frederick Dayton, born at New Preston, Conn., spent his boyhood upon the farm of his father and obtained his education at the district schools and at the Warren Academy. During the succeeding eight years he taught school, the first three being at Fishkill, N. Y., the remaining five in his native State, excepting one term in Pennsylvania. In 1845 he came to this county and bought the present homestead, then comprising one hundred and twenty-five acres, and since increased to one hundred and forty-three acres, upon which he erected commodious farm buildings. In 1845 he married Sophronia, daughter of Judson and Polly (Turrell) Stone, of Forest Lake township. She was born in 1827, and her children are as follows: Watson, born 1846, a farmer of Jessup, who married Betsey Ann White, of Le Raysville, Pa.; Canfield S., born 1850, an artist-painter, located at Cincinnati, Ohio, who married Jessie Rockwell, of Towanda, Pa.; Urania E., born 1856, married Charles B. McKean, a tanner at Irvonia, Clearfield County, Pa.; Clark D., born 1858, a farmer in Forest Lake, who married Sarah M. Tilden; and Zaidee Catharine, born 1860, the wife of Milton E. Birchard, residing on the homestead.

In all good works he found a ready and valuable aid in Mrs. Dayton, who was in all things a true and loving wife and devoted mother. Upon family and friends her example has been stamped and long will be remembered. A sufferer for many months from creeping palsy, she bore all with resignation and fortitude, and died, surrounded by family and friends, September 22, 1886. For years she had belonged to the Middletown Baptist Church, which her husband also attends; and the membership of that church bear many happy thoughts of her friendship and comfort during the various trials of life.

J. Dayton

Mr. Dayton has never been a politician, though his services have been freely given to the township in various offices, among them being school director, supervisor and poormaster. During the Rebellion he was an ardent and outspoken supporter of the National Government, and his voice and purse were frequently called upon during that troublous period. He has always attended closely to his farm interests and may safely be called a representative farmer.

CHAPTER XXIII.

DIMOCK TOWNSHIP.

DIMOCK was erected December, 1832, as the nineteenth township in the county, with the following bounds: North, Bridgewater, from which nearly one-fourth of the area was taken; south, Springfield, from which the remainder of what is now Dimock was taken; east, Brooklyn; west, Auburn and Rush. After Jessup was erected, in 1846, that township became the northwestern boundary, and a slight change in that line was subsequently made. The township was named in honor of Davis Dimock, associate judge of the county at the time the township was formed. Its dimensions are not quite seven miles from west to east, and a little less than four and a half miles from north to south. Under the Connecticut surveys this area comprised parts of the towns of Cheleur, Bidwell, Dandolo and Manor, and settlers were, therefore, first attracted to different localities, as they had purchased lands before immigrating.

The general surface is elevated, and nearly the entire slope is towards the south. In the northwestern part, beyond the ridge, which trends west, near the north line of the township, are two sheets of water, of symmetrical appearance and closely united, which bear the name of Elk Lakes. The outlet is a small stream called Lake Creek, which flows northwest, through Rush, into the Wyalusing. The lakes cover about one hundred and fifty acres, and have, in late years, been regarded as one, and called Elk Lake. On account of some of the early settlers in this locality, this body of water was also long known by the name of Lathrop Lake. The surrounding country is very attractive. About a mile south is Young's Pond, a small body of water, which is the source of a branch of White Creek, which drains that part of the township. East of the centre the drainage is into Meshoppen Creek, whose main stream is for several miles parallel with the Brooklyn line, thence bends southwest, passing into Springville below Parkvale. Its principal branch in the township is the outlet of Cape's Ponds, small sheets of water north of the centre. Numerous springs abound, forming brooks, which afford living water for most of the farms. In some sections the presence of mineral springs has been noted.

"A mineral spring was discovered in 1871 on the farm of Widow John Rosencrants, in Dimock township, near the Meshoppen Creek, half a mile above the State road. The water of this spring has not yet been analyzed; but, judging from the smell, taste and appearances, the ingredients are sulphur and iron. On confining the water in a jug, the presence of sulphur is acknowledged by all; and a portion of the iron precipitates itself from the water in a few days' time, and the smell and taste soon disappear. Allowing the air to come in contact with the water in an open bottle, it turns to a dark color; but if the bottle is kept corked, the water seems to remain good any length of time."

The township had much valuable timber, and several fine belts of the original growth still remain; but the greater part of the surface has been cleared up. A large quantity of the trees on the lower lands were elms and lindens, from which circumstance Dimock has been called the "Bass Wood" township. On the higher ridges were groves of fine trees; and a considerable quantity of hemlock also abounded.

The soil does not vary from that found in the central part of the county, and the farm products are, like those of the surrounding townships, mainly those of the dairy. Attention has been paid to the breeding of fine cattle, and good herds are owned by P. C. Conklin, E. Tiffany and others.

THE EARLY SETTLERS of Dimock were not as numerous as those of other sections of the county, where richness of soil and proximity to markets induced them to locate. But they belonged to the same hardy, self-reliant and determined class of people as formed the nucleus of other prosperous settlements, and despite adverse conditions, attracted desirable neighbors. Among those coming first were, according to Miss Blackman, Thomas and Henry Parke, in 1796; Joseph Chapman and son, Joseph (in Cheleur), temporarily, in 1798; George Mowry, and sons, Charles and Ezekiel (in Manor), in 1799; Martin Myers and Thomas Giles, the same year; Asa and Ezekiel Lathrop and Asahel Avery soon after 1800.

Thomas Parke, commonly called Col. Parke, came from Charleston, Rhode Island, in June, 1796, to occupy a tract of ten thousand acres of land, which he had purchased under the Connecticut title. These lands constituted nearly half the area of the town of Bidwell, along the waters of the Meshoppen, in what is now Dimock and Springville. He fixed his residence in the southeastern part of Dimock, at a place which became known as Parkvale, where he and his younger brother, Henry, commenced to make a clearing. They were the sons of Capt. Benjamin Parke, who commanded a company at the battle of Bunker Hill, and who lost his life in that engagement. Thomas and Henry being the younger of four sons, were placed under the care of their grandfather, a Puritan clergyman, who gave them a good education. Thomas was a good practical surveyor, and occasionally contributed to the newspapers of that period. When he came here there were but two settlers west of the "Nine Partners," and west to the Wyalusing, a distance of twenty-five miles, was an unbroken forest. With the aid of his compass he explored and marked a path to the forks of the Wyalusing, the nearest point where he could obtain bread-stuffs, which he carried to his home on his back. In the winter of 1797 he walked home to Charleston, R. I., and returned the same way the following spring.

He busied himself preparing a home, and in 1800 he returned to Rhode Island, and was married to Eunice Champlin, of New York. In the spring of 1802 he brought her, with their infant son, Benjamin, to this home in the wild woods, where she acquitted herself in a manner worthy of a pioneer and proved herself a true helpmeet. On the 5th of December, 1802, their daughter, Sarah C., was born to them, and this was the first birth in the township. Of this pioneer home, and the life the occupants led, the Hon. Benjamin Parke said, October 5, 1885,—

"That dwelling stood in a beautiful valley, nearly surrounded by hills, beside a brook of pure water which ran through and gave name to the valley. Though of unhewn logs, it was of ample size and comfortable. It appeared, however, as a home far different to those who then saw it for the first time, than it did to the one who had toiled six years to prepare it. Col. Parke brought with him his sister, a young and accomplished girl, besides his wife and infant son. They, as most of the women who emigrated early to Susquehanna County, had been reared in the bosom of New England families, and left the society of dear friends and relations. They had enjoyed, too, from childhood, a frequent intercourse with the city of Newport, the then emporium of New England fashion and style. What a change and contrast! A small clearing in the midst of a dense forest; few neighbors within five miles, and none nearer than a mile and a half of their dwelling. Their house, being of larger size than most others near, and upon the only traveled road leading eastward, in that section, was the general stopping-place of most of those coming from the Eastern States, to look for or settle upon farms in that part of the country. Here they were most cheerfully received, and entertained without charge, though beds and floors were frequently filled and covered with lodgers.

"No one then thought of receiving pay from such transient guests. Their company and the news they brought from the outer world was more than an equivalent for their entertaiment."

A home of greater comfort and beauty was afterwards erected near the site of the old cabin, and under its hospitable roof eight children were reared. It was also a place where the old pioneers delighted to gather and recount their experiences when this country was but sparsely settled. Here, too, temporarily lived Henry Parke, of whom an old citizen said:

"An uncle of the Hon. Benjamin Parke was occasionally a resident there for some days together. He was a very sociable, intelligent gentleman, and I was often entertained with his account of the first settlement of that region. Among other things, he told of backing provision from Black Walnut Bottom, on the river, following a line of marked trees; and once, being belated, he failed to find the clearing, and camped by the side of a log till morning. Starting again, in a few moments he discovered the clearing, and was much vexed that he had lain out so near home."

It is said that this exposure permanently injured his constitution and hastened his death, which occurred in New York City in 1831. Henry Parke was never married, but resided with his sister on the farm which afterwards became known as "Woodburne." Here Asahel Avery and others had cleared up five acres of land for Charles Miner, who never occupied it. In the house which Henry Parke built on this place he taught school about 1810, and children from the families of Avery, West and Fuller attended. The two last-named lived in the township of Bridgewater.

A short time prior to his death, the Hon. Charles Miner wrote concerning this section, as he recollected it in 1800,—

"Thomas Parke and his brother, Henry—active, intelligent men—with a black boy, were alone in Bidwell. Charles Mowry was one of my fellow-students in Nature's beechwoods academy. After I became a printer, he wrote an article for my paper. I said to him, 'Mr. Mowry, you are capable of better things than rolling logs. Come to my office, and in two years you will be fitted for a printer and editor.' Brother Asher, at Doylestown, needing help, he entered his office, proved a good writer, clear, nervous; became preceptor in the academy; established a paper at Downingtown, Chester County, which he sustained with profit and reputation many years. He was invited by Governor Findlay's friends to remove to Harrisburg, and he afterwards became canal commissioner. As honest and clever a fellow as ever breathed, but as thorough a Democrat as I was Federalist."

Colonel Thomas Parke firmly believed in the validity of his Connecticut titles, and defended them by argument and with his pen until the decree at Trenton was promulgated, which he never believed was just or right. He was loyal to his own convictions and to the interests of his neighbors, "refusing to give up the agency of the Connecticut claimants, and to accept an agency on the other side, together with a lease for all the lands he claimed, which would have made his title indisputable. He thought that in so doing he would show a distrust of the title under which he and others claimed lands, give his opponents an advantage over others for whom he acted, and thereby injure those who, relying upon his integrity, had intrusted their interests to his care, and who were not present to accept a surrender of his agency, and act for themselves. By this decision he lost all the worldly estate he possessed, and was afterwards obliged to purchase upon credit from his successful opponents, paying, by surveying, about six hundred acres, including the farm upon which he resided and died, in 1842.[1]

Most of the early years of his residence in Dimock Col. Parke devoted to surveying the county into townships and lots, and was for three years one of the commissioners of Luzerne County, and one of the three trustees appointed by the Governor, in 1811, to run the lines, lay off and organize Susquehanna County. He took a great interest in military matters, and Jesse Bagley said, in 1871,—

"In 1806 I worked for Colonel Parke when the first militia training was held there; Thomas Parke, Captain; Myron Kasson, Lieutenant; Joseph Chapman, Ensign, and myself Sergeant or Corporal. Abiathar Tuttle is the only man now living who trained with me. Captain (afterwards Colonel) Parke proposed that to every one who would the next time appear in uniform—blue coat and white pantaloons—he would give a dinner. About twenty so appeared, and were treated to an excellent dinner."

Mrs. Parke survived her husband sixteen years, departing this life November 10, 1858, in the ninetieth year of her age. Their eldest son, the Hon. Benjamin Parke, LL.D., returned to the ancestral home in 1860, after an absence of thirty years, and soon after engaged in an extensive milling enterprise which wrecked his fortune. He removed to Harrisburg, where he died, and the homestead at Dimock passed into other hands, none of the Parke family remaining.

Captain Joseph Chapman held a Connecticut title for four hundred acres of land in "Cheleur," which shared the same fate as Colonel Parke's. He and his son, Joseph, came to this tract in 1798, cleared up a site for a house south of Dimock village, which was built the following year. They named their place "Montcalm," and returned to Brooklyn to spend the winter. In the fall of 1799 Martin Myers occupied this house until he could build his own, in the same neighborhood, farther south. In the spring of 1800 Captain Chapman brought his family from Dandolo (Brooklyn) to "Montcalm," but Joseph Chapman, Jr., remained in Brooklyn, occupying a farm which has remained in possession of their family.

"Isaac A. and Edward, sons of Captain Joseph Chapman, were boys who spent their days in the laborious occupation of felling and clearing the forest, and assisting to provide for the wants of the family; and their evenings by the light of a huge blazing fire, studying whatever books could be obtained from the few 'settlers,' who lived within a circle of from ten to twenty miles around, and who were all neighbors warmly interested in each other's welfare and happiness. In this manner, aided by a very intelligent elder sister, and the occasional assistance of the more educated of the settlers, did these two brothers educate and improve themselves to such a degree, that to human apprehension, only an early death prevented them from being the very first men in our State.

[1] Miss Blackman.

They were both excellent mathematicians, practical surveyors and draughtsmen. Poetry and landscape painting were occasionally resorted to as an amusement, and many of the singular events and rude scenes of that new and wild country were the subjects of their pen and pencil. Edward afterwards studied law, and commenced the practice at Sunbury, where he died deeply lamented by all who ever had the pleasure of his acquaintance." (From Harrisburg Keystone, 1839. B. Parke, Esq., Editor).

"In reference to the sister to whom they were so much indebted, the Hon. Charles Miner said: 'Miss Lydia Chapman, a lady of high intelligence and great merit, became an inhabitant of Wilkes-Barre and an instructress of a school. Married with Dr. G. W. Trott; their accomplished daughter intermarried with the Hon. G. W. Woodward.'

"He added: 'Edward and Isaac Abel Chapman open upon the world first-rate men. The fine poem by Edward commencing—

> "Columbia's shores are wild and wide,
> Columbia's hills are high,
> And rudely planted side by side,
> Her forests meet the eye"— justly challenges the critic's praise.

"'Isaac became an editor; proved an excellent writer, but was too independent to be a party printer in ancient times. For many years he was engineer in the employ of the Mauch Chunk Company, whose confidence and favor attest the scientific accuracy and social merit.'

"In 1826 Isaac A. Chapman invented the syphon canal-lock. His death occurred December, 1827, at Mauch Chunk. Two years later proposals were issued for the publication of his 'History of Wyoming,' which eventually appeared. The preface, by himself, bears date July 11, 1818. He took the census of Susquehanna County in 1810."

In about 1813 "Montcalm" became the home of John Bolles, who came from Wilkes-Barre with his family to occupy it, and lived there several years. Later he lived at Dimock Corners, on the farm where afterwards resided Lewis Brush, but died in Bridgewater, ninety years old. "Montcalm" became the property of Nathan Tingley, who was a later settler, but who became very prominently identified with the affairs of Dimock.

"Martin Myers was a Hessian soldier in the British army during the Revolution. He came to Pennsylvania from one of the New England States, having left the service before the close of the war, and settled down as a peaceable citizen of the country against which he had been sent to fight. By the contract between the Government of Great Britain and the Prince of Hesse-Cassel, a sum of money was to be paid to the latter for all the Hessians not returned, and they were, at the end of the war, carefully sought for to be taken back. Myers, not wishing to return, sought concealment, and was aided by a young woman with whom he had become acquainted. He was not found, and after the troops had left the country this woman became his wife. In the fall of 1799 he is said to have carried the following load upon his back from Black's mill, on the Wyalusing, up to the forks of the creek, a distance of ten miles, the flour of one bushel of wheat, one bushel of rye, fourteen shad and a gun. At the Forks he added to his load one gallon and a pint of whiskey, a large bake-kettle weighing twenty-five pounds, and a common-sized cross-cut saw, all of which he carried without assistance thirteen miles farther to his own residence. These thirteen miles were entirely in the woods, and he was guided only by a line of marked trees. This Samson-like feat was performed by no 'Samson in size,' as we are told by his daughter, Mrs. Button, who also informs us that his grave is one-half mile east of Dimock Corners. He has a son, Alvin, now living in Rush. Another son, Surzardis, formerly resided in Dimock."[1]

"In 1799, Thomas Giles, from Connecticut, moved in between Colonel Parke's place and Brooklyn. Soon after, his daughter Fanny, aged four years, while gathering chestnuts in the woods near the house, was lost. Many people joined in the search for her. 'On the third day there were persons there who lived thirty miles away. No trace of her was ever found.'"

The Lathrops came from Connecticut and located south of the lakes near the Auburn line. Asa Lathrop began making a clearing on the hill south of the Corners in 1800, but did not bring his family until the following year. After living there a short time he removed to the outlet of the lakes and built there one of the pioneer mills of the county. From this fact his name became fixed upon the locality and was also applied to the lakes. These mills, though several times rebuilt and owned by other parties, are still frequently spoken of as Lathrop's. He died in 1827, aged seventy-two years, and was the father of sons named James, Walter and Asa. The former was the father of sons named Israel B., William F., Austin B. and Charles J., most of whom remained identified with the interests of this part of the county.

In the early period of their residence at this place wild animals were numerous and bold, and it is related of James Lathrop that, hearing the squealing of pigs, one bright moonlight night, about 1810, he rose, went out, and found a bear had scaled the log fence—five feet high—with a porker weighing two hundred pounds; and had walked off hugging it, and was then in the act of getting over another fence, when, seeing Mr. Lathrop coming and brandishing a bush-hook, he dropped the porker and took to the woods on all-fours.

[1] Blackman.

It is probable that Ezekiel Lathrop came about the same time, or a little earlier than the family of Asa Lathrop, and that his settlement here was induced by the improvements made by Asa the previous year. His location was nearer the Auburn line, on the farm which was later known as the Dyer Lathrop place, who was one of the sons. Other sons were named Spencer, Nehemiah, Ezekiel and John. Several of these became octogenarians. At the house of Ezekiel Lathrop were held the first religious meetings in Dimock, the services being those of the Baptist Church, Elder Davis Dimock and other missionaries being the preachers.

Samuel Robinson, father of John W. Robinson, who was a large land-owner in the township, and lived west of Ezekiel Avery, also came from Connecticut at an early day. John W. Robinson had been in the county as early as 1798, assisting Colonel Ezekiel Hyde as a surveyor. He probably accompanied him to Wilkes-Barre, where he engaged in mercantile business, and was married to a daughter of the revolutionary soldier, Colonel Zeb. Butler. Later he purchased the Wallace interest in lands in Susquehanna County—about eight thousand acres unsold, and all the contracts previously made—and took up his residence in Dimock, to look after his interests. For a home, he bought the house of John Williams, about 1811. The latter had bought it a few years previously of Asahel Avery, one of the first settlers of the township. Robinson found himself unable to raise the mortgages which he had given Wallace for the lands he had purchased, and became financially embarrassed. This was due, doubtless, to the long time he allowed the settlers to make their payments. In the mean time, as he could give no valid deed, there was distrust among the settlers, some of whom were threatened with ejectment by Robinson; but "one morning," it is said, "he found a pail of tar and feathers, and a bag of powder and shot suspended from his door-latch, giving too strong a hint to be disregarded, and within twenty-four hours he left the township."

Nearly all those who had made payments to Robinson were afterwards again obliged to make the same payments to the Wallace estate. Robinson left about 1824, and William D. Cope became the owner of the property first here improved. He was a son of Thomas P. Cope, the land-owner.

Asahel Avery, wife and six children, had come in 1801, from London County, Conn., and occupied a log cabin when it was but two-thirds roofed. The centre only had a floor, made of split bass-wood logs—"The horse and calf on one side of this, and the fire-place on the other." It was necessary to protect the animals, as bears were numerous on the ridge of pines north of this place, and often alarming people by their presence. Mr. Avery was a carpenter by trade, and was building a good frame house opposite his cabin, in 1809, when he sold out to John Williams, and moved to Great Bend, where he died in February, 1813.

Some years later Nehemiah Maine made a clearing on the Baker farm, in this locality, but removed. Isaiah Maine did not come until 1819, when he began improving the farm now occupied by one of his sons, F. A. Maine. Another son, A. W., resides at Dimock village. A daughter, Mary Jane, married William Bunnell, of Dimock.

In 1808 George W. Lane came from Windham County, Vt., and improved a place which was sold to Philander Stephens. Near by he improved another farm, but moved to Montrose, where he died. He was the father of F. S. Lane, the attorney. Philander Stephens settled first in Bridgewater, but spent the latter years of his life in Dimock, his death occurring in July, 1842.

Frederick Fargo.—About the year 1810 two brothers, Elisha and Jason Fargo, left their native State, Connecticut, and, with all their worldly possessions in a bundle strung on the end of a stick, walked the entire distance to Susquehanna County, and bought sixty-five acres of land near the Elk Lakes, Dimock township, from the Drinker estate, from which they at once commenced to clear the heavy timber. Elisha (1790–1870) married Alice (1794–1874), youngest daughter of Asa (1745–1872) and Abigail Lathrop, who bore James L., now living at East Rush; Norris, living in Bradford County; Asa B., residing in Maryland; Orrin F., a resident of Binghamton; George, making a home at East Rush; Frederick; Charlotte, married Jonathan Bunnell, and resides at Auburn; and Elisha M., now living at Montrose.

Asa Lathrop built the first grist-mill in all this section, located at the outlet of Elk Lake, and carried on that business until he died. Elisha Fargo was a farmer, and both himself and wife died in their eighty-first year. Frederick Fargo, born November 12, 1824, obtained but limited education owing to his strength being required on the farm, where he assisted his father until twenty-four years old, when he married Nancy (1828–84), daughter of Gershom and Sally Bunnell, and took up a piece of land about one mile west of Elk Lake. Their children are Sarah H., married Robert Leebody, of Elk Lake; A. Wilson, married Anna (Broadhead) Porter, and resides at Elk Lake; and Charlotte Francesca, married John Q. Adams, of Auburn Four Corners. The Bunnell family came to the county at an early day, and settled in what is known as the "Beach Woods," Auburn township. One of the first in Rush township to answer the call for troops, made when the government was in jeopardy, was Frederick Fargo, who enlisted August 12th, and was appointed corporal of Company H, One Hundred and Forty-first Pennsylvania

Fred Fargo

Volunteers, and joined the Army of the Potomac, then commanded by General McClellan. With this army he took part in the battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, and was severely wounded on the latter field, where he was left for dead. He was captured by the rebels, and shortly afterwards exchanged and sent home, where his friends had mourned on account of his supposed decease. On recovering sufficiently he joined the Invalid Corps, and was thence transferred to a company of detached cavalry, placed upon scouting duties, with headquarters at Washington, D. C., in which service he remained until honorably discharged, in June, 1865. While engaged in this department he was on picket duty at one of the forts beyond the East River Bridge the night President Lincoln was assassinated, and for the next fourteen days and nights was in the saddle the most of the time, hunting in and around Washington for the assassins. On leaving the army he returned home, and the same season sold his farm and bought a half-interest in the Elk Lake Grist-Mills, wherein, with three run of stones, he made large quantities of buckwheat flour for the New York and Philadelphia markets, in addition to the regular custom work. In 1869 the internal arrangements of the mill were overhauled and material improvements admitted, taking out two overshot wheels and putting in a Leffel's double turbine wheel; also throwing out a rock run and putting in French buhr stones, at a total expense of some two thousand dollars. In this business he continued sixteen years, selling out in 1881 to his partner, ex-Sheriff John Young, and has since engaged in general farming, having purchased the Asa Lathrop farm and, in 1871, a tract of his mother. Interested in political affairs, he has served with satisfaction in various township offices. Mrs. Fargo was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church until her death, and her husband was also connected there. He is a member of H. C. Titman Post, No. 93, of Auburn Four Corners, also of Montrose Lodge, No. 151, I. O. O. F.

On Pine Hill was Avery Bolles, a son of John Bolles, who settled on Montcalm in 1813. Here he made some improvements, but took up his permanent abode on another farm. At an earlier day, about 1808, Samuel Davis and family, from Windham County, Vt., settled in the same neighborhood. In this locality was also Elhanan Smith.

On the steam road between the Corners and Elk Lake, Joshua Smith, from Groton, Conn., settled in 1812, remaining there until his death, December 3, 1840, aged seventy-six. The homestead became the property of Urban, the youngest of eleven children. A few years after their settlement at this place, Silas, one of the sons, at that time about ten years of age, was followed by a pack of wolves to within a short distance of his father's house, barely reaching it in safety.

North, on this ridge, on the Samuel Sherer farm, Jacob Perkins made some good improvements, but later lived farther east, on the turnpike. South, on the same road, was Frazier Eaton, whose farm became the property of Benjamin Blakeslee, who lived and died there.

Samuel Sherer.—His paternal ancester, John Sherer, a native of Scotland, after many years of persecution of the family on account of their religious faith—Presbyterian—crossed the Channel, as thousands of others did, and settled in the North of Ireland. David Sherer (1759–1846), born near Londonderry, Ireland, a son of John and Martha (Patton) Sherer, came to America in 1770, and settled in Derry, N. H. In his eighteenth year he enlisted in the Continental army, and for a year and a half bore arms for his adopted country, participating in the battle of Stillwater and the capture of Burgoyne. In 1789 he married Hannah Youngman (1771–1851), and had the following children: John, who became a Presbyterian minister; David; Hannah (Mrs. John Robertson); William, who practiced medicine in the West; Mary (Mrs. Nehemiah Baldwin); James and Samuel. Late in 1815 the family left New Hampshire and located in what is now Jessup township, this county. David Sherer was a farmer and an active, influential man, an advocate of religion and education, and for fifty-five years a member of the Presbyterian Church, to which society also his family belonged, holding membership at Montrose. The Youngman family are of English ancestry, their presence in this country dating back to 1684, when Francis Youngman settled in Massachusetts and became a member of Rev. John Eliot's church at Roxbury. Several of his descendants took up arms for the infant colonies and rendered most excellent and loyal service during the Revolution, receiving public recognition therefor. This family name is rapidly dying out, and but few remain to bear and perpetuate the English branch. Hannah was the daughter of Nicholas (1723–1814) and Mary (Wright) (1724–1802) Youngman. Nicholas was the son of Ebenezer (1690-1754) and Mercy Jones Youngman. Ebenezer was the son of Francis Youngman, who died in 1712.

Samuel Sherer was born June 22, 1813, and obtained his education in the district schools, where he afterwards taught for nine or ten winters, spending the summers upon his father's farm. An earnest and painstaking man, his influence and strength of character were recognized by his townsmen, and his services called into use in various public offices. In 1867 he was elected commissioner of the county and served satisfactorily for three years. He strenuously advocated the building of the Montrose Railway, and offered the right of way for the western route of the road, which, however, was not adopted. From early youth to the time of his death he took an active interest in educational and religious matters, and liberally contributed to these interests as well as to all charitable works demanding his attention. He was especially anxious in the matter of giving his own children superior educational advantages, and three of them have been teachers for several years. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Montrose, with which his family is also identified, and for three years served as a member of its board of trustees. He met his death accidentally while performing his farm duties, and died August 26, 1886. On June 22, 1837, he married Lucena, daughter of Eldad and Hannah Brewster, who was born in 1816. Their children are Augusta L. (1838–1862) was the wife of Edward Dickerson; Olive T. (1840–70) was the wife of Frank J. Smith; David, resides adjoining the homestead; Sarah A., a teacher in Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mary and Hannah have also been teachers.

Mrs. Sherer's father, Eldad Brewster (1779–1831), came from Long Island to what is now Montrose, in company with Captain Bartlet Hinds, in 1800, and his farm and that of Daniel Brewster were those since occupied by Thomas Johnson and Horace Brewster in Bridgewater township. In 1813 Eldad Brewster married Hannah (1796–1881), a daughter of Deacon Moses Tyler. At his death he left a widow and nine children, as follows: Tyler (1815–85) was a farmer in Harford township; Lucena, widow of Samuel Sherer; Horace, born in 1818, a farmer in Bridgewater township, has one son, D. Truman, a lawyer at Montrose, and another son, Dr. Fred. D. Brewster, a practicing physician at Tunkhannock; Daniel, born in 1820, a business man at Montrose; Warren (1822–75) was a wagon manufacturer at Tunkhannock; Andrew Jackson, born in 1824, a business man at Montrose; Sarah, born in 1826, is the wife of Salmon A. Hempstead, of Meadville, Pa.; M. Coleman (1828 57) was a carpenter at Montrose; Ann M., born in 1830, wife of Ansel J. Stearns, of Harford, this county.

Jonathan A. Atherton came originally from Massachusetts to Wyoming, thence to Hyde Park, thence to Dimock, where he purchased the old Samuel Bard farm, on which he now resides. Of his children, Henry has been paymaster on the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company's Railroad for twenty-three years; Jerry L. and Bicknel B. have been employed by the same company as foremen of coal breakers; Rosa is the wife of T. H. B. Lewis, of Kingston, Pa.; Florence is the wife of David Sherer, of Dimock, and Sophia is the wife of H. T. Lake.

On the slope south of Elk Lake, Erastus and William Rathbun made a settlement before 1813. The latter was a clothier by trade. In 1817 they sold out to Simon Stevens, who came from Braintrim. He lived here until his death, in 1841, aged nearly sixty-five years. He had fourteen children, some of whom still reside at Elk Lake. Mr. Stevens held important county offices and was noted for his strong opposition to Masonry.

Sam'l Shaw

In the same locality George Young settled in 1814, moving on a place which had been improved somewhat by Dennison Gere. He died in 1831, aged seventy-two years, and the homestead afterwards became the property of his son John, at one time sheriff of the county. The adjoining farms were owned by Joseph and James Camp, who sold out to David Young, Sr. (a brother of George), in 1815 and left the country. David Young, Sr., died about 1830, but his descendants still live in this part of the township. A few years later James Service settled near Elk Lake.

One-half mile east of Dimock Corners Israel Hewitt settled in 1814, and reared sons named Latham and Israel. They were great hunters and skilled in the use of the rifle. On the Chapman farm, west, Samuel Kellum settled in 1815, but, in 1819, sold out to some Englishmen who were interested in the prospective village of New Birmingham (now Dimock), and who disposed of their interests soon after. At this time, it appears, there were four hundred and fifty thrifty apple trees on the Chapman place.

About this time John Austin located in this neighborhood, but later settled on the I. B. Woodhouse farm, on the Elk Lake road. He was the father of fifteen children. Oliver Scott was on a farm farther east, which was later the home of Samuel A. Brown.

In 1816 Elisha Gates and his son-in-law, John Lewis, from Groton, Conn., settled on the farm north of Col. Parke, on lands still owned by his family. He had sons named John and George. In December, 1886, the latter was living in the township, aged eighty-eight years. In the late Civil War his six sons were in the service and John had three sons in the Union army.

Elisha Gates had the reputation of being the best mathematician in Dimock, and was frequently called on to solve puzzling questions for persons from other counties.

On the Meshoppen, east from this place, settled the Tiffany family, Preston Tiffany locating on the present O. Tiffany farm. Other members were Elisha, Joseph and Horace Tiffany.

In 1819 Alexander Smith, a native of Scotland, came to Dimock and located on eighty acres of land one mile east from the Corners, but did not reside permanently there. While living in Dimock the first twins in the township were born in this family, which received the names of William W. and Christiana.

In 1820 Royal Tyler came from Rhode Island and settled on White Creek, in the southwestern part of the township, where he died in 1842. He had sons named Sylvanus, who lived on the homestead until recently; Moses, who moved to Bridgewater; Royal, immigrating to Kansas; and James became a resident of California.

At a later day the Burdick family opened a farm east from Tyler's, and of the sons reared by Amos Burdick, John remained on the homestead. Nathan settled on an adjoining farm, Matthew on a farm north, and Alpheus on the old Lewis place, in the eastern part of the township, where he still resides.

In the southwestern part also settled George Risley, the father of sons named Dwight, Thomas, Aaron and Frank, most of whom improved farms in that locality or in the northwestern part of Springville.

John Woodhouse immigrated from Otsego County, N. Y., and after living in Bridgewater two years, settled on the farm now owned by one of his sons, F. M. Woodhouse. This was all woods except about three acres, which had been cleared up by a man named Fisk. He died in August, 1864, aged seventy-eight years. Besides the son on the homestead, there were other sons,—A. D., living in Springville; John G., a physician who died in Laceyville; Isaac B., living on the State road in Dimock; and Edward W., of Bradford County.

North of this farm lived Thomas Miles, the father of Wm. C. Miles, of Dimock, and Dr. Jonathan Miles, of Lackawanna County. On the Dolan farm lived Levi Wells, the father of William Wells, of Pottsville.

In 1820 Adam Waldie and his two gifted sisters lived one mile northeast from Dimock, on what became the Murray farm, but after a short residence they moved to Forest Lake.

In the fall of 1821 Joseph Baker, of Chester

County, came to prospect lands, and after looking at a number of locations in Susquehanna County, he bought nearly three hundred acres of improved land at Dimock Corners, to which he moved his family in the spring of 1822. A part of this farm is still the property of his son, Judge I. P. Baker, residing at Dimock village.

The same year Enoch Walker and his son, George, came from Choconut to the farm called "Woodbourne," and which under their ownership became one of the best-known places in the county. A part of the mansion was built by Henry Parke when he occupied this land. In 1822 George Walker had a small store in the room of this house, which afterwards became his library. Enoch Walker came from Chester County with his children, in April, 1820, to the farm, late the residence of Caleb Carmalt, Lakeside, Choconut, where he remained two years, before removing to Woodbourne. One who spent many months, at different times, under his roof, says,—

"His earliest training was under the judicious care of an excellent Christian mother, whose precepts and example were the abiding rule of his life, and enabled him to endure with great fortitude, many and various trials. When young, he appeared as a minister among Friends; and in 1796 spent some time as a missionary to the Oneida Indians, under the auspices of the Yearly Meeting of Friends; and traveled much in the service of the Gospel, and on business, until the close of a long and active life.

"He was ever a pattern of true hospitality, in word and deed; careful in training his children in strict morality and religion, and ever kind and considerate for the happiness of all under his care and influence. He was active in promoting the settlement of the county with worthy and industrious persons, and always evinced a liberal and forbearing spirit towards every sect and denomination, in the fullest sense of a true 'Universal Christian Benevolence.'

"He was returning, 11th mo. 8th, 1853, in his 83d year, from one of his accustomed visits of love and duty, to relatives and friends in and near Philadelphia, and had reached the house of Noah Rogers, Waymart, Wayne Co., in expectation of being at Woodbourne the following day. He spent a cheerful evening, and retired to rest—and to sleep the sleep that knows no waking here." He was buried at Friendsville.

GEORGE WALKER.—During the years next succeeding the first landing of William Penn at Upland, now the city of Chester, Pa., in August, 1682, large numbers of the members of the Society of Friends, anxious to leave England on account of the restrictions placed upon religious liberty by King Charles II, sought the hospitable shores of the New World and made homes within the borders of the Keystone State. Among this number, Lewis Walker, a native of Yorkshire, came, in 1686, and bought from the proprietor, William Penn, a large tract of land near that section of our State since the Revolution known as "Valley Forge," in the beautiful Great Valley, Chester County. This land has since remained in possession of the family, and it was at one time strongly desired by certain members to hold a bi-centennial reunion of the Walker family at that place; this, however, was not carried out, owing to the wide scattering of the descendants. Enoch Walker, the son of Joseph and Sarah Walker, a direct descendant of Lewis, was there born on April 13, 1771, became a leader among the members of the Society and officiated as a minister until coming to Susquehanna County with his children, in 1820. He married Phebe Miller, who was born in 1770, and bore George, born February 16, 1798; Sarah M. (1799–1874), Priscilla (1802–1832), Phebe (1803–1832), Enoch (1806–1828). Lewis, born 1807, died in infancy, followed the next month by the mother.

Robert C. Walker, at one time Secretary of the United States Treasury, was a cousin of Enoch Walker. George Walker spent his early years on the farm of his father in the Great Valley, and was educated at the Westtown Boarding-School, a noted place in early days. His mind inclined to surveying and kindred subjects, and, after leaving school he was placed with John Thomson, the father of Edgar Thomson, the late president Pennsylvania Railroad Company and Joseph Warner, of Philadelphia, to assist in making the preparatory survey for the construction of the Schuylkill Canal, thereby acquiring a practical acquaintance with the profession he has since so successfully followed. In 1820, with his father, three sisters and one brother, he came North and bought land at Lakeside (now the home of James Edward Carmalt, Esq.), eleven miles beyond Montrose, where he entered mercantile business. Two years after, the family removed to a farm some five miles south of Montrose and also engaged in general trade, continuing the two stores for several years. This place they named "Woodbourne," and about 1824 Enoch Walker was appointed postmaster, his son George transacting the duties of the office as deputy.

Geo. Walker

From this time until his death, in 1853, Enoch Walker gave much attention to the temperance cause, and advocated leaving off, not only all intoxicating drinks, but tea, coffee and tobacco, on the part of all those professing Christianity.

In 1836 George Walker was appointed by Governor Ritner prothonotary and clerk of the courts in Susquehanna County, which position he filled until the passage of the law by the Legislature in 1839, requiring direct election for such offices. During his term of office he was frequently called upon to act as surveyor and civil engineer, and, in 1838, was chosen as arbitration surveyor to survey certain lands on the Wyalusing Creek, in Bradford County, which had been taken possession of by non-purchasers, the title to which was claimed by James Le Ray de Chamont, a French nobleman, who had been compelled to leave France during a revolution, and settled at Le Raysville, Jefferson County, N. Y.

While engaged in this work he was fired upon by the squatters and forced to leave the field. When the matter was submitted to the courts, Le Ray's title was confirmed. From that time he devoted himself to farming and to surveying in Susquehanna, Wayne, Bradford, Luzerne, Wyoming, Lackawanna and Sullivan Counties, and during one summer surveyed thirty-five thousand acres at the head-waters of the Loyalsock and Muncey Creeks, in Lycoming (now Sullivan) County, for Joseph P. Morris, Philadelphia, formerly president of the Bank of Pennsylvania, and the grandfather of Dr. W. F. Morris. As surveyor and civil engineer he was engaged in the preliminary work upon the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad and New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad, and, on request of Judge Asa Packer, made the first survey for the Montrose Railway.

George Walker has never been a politician. He first voted for John Adams for President, and since that the Whig and Republican tickets. Born a Friend, though not able of late years to associate with the society, he has been a friend to all denominations without regard to sect—a true follower of William Penn in granting liberty of conscience to all professing Christians. In 1876 he sold his farm, "Woodbourne," to Dr. W. F. Norris, of Philadelphia, who had visited him the previous summer. For over forty years he acted as agent for Philadelphia parties, for several thousand acres of land, located in Susquehanna, Wayne and Bradford Counties, and through his judicious sales of land, brought many families to settle upon those tracts.

In 1832 Dimock became a separate civil body. Two years later, in 1834, the taxables wers as follows:

Jacob Ainey.
John Ainey.
Walter Allen.
Rufus Allen.
Benjamin Blakeslee.
Lucius Blakeslee.
Merick Blakeslee.
Luke Blakeslee.
Leland Blakeslee.
Avery Bolles.
George Blakeslee.
Samuel A. Brown.
Lake Bronson.
John Bronson.
Isaac Babcock.
Garret Berry.
Samuel Berry.
Henry Barkley.
Samuel Barkley.
Joseph Baker.
John Baker.
William Baker.
William Baker (2d).
Stephen Bolles.
Andrew Bolles.
John Bolles.
Julius Beach.
George Bagley.
Francis M. Babcock.
William Burhight.
Amos Burdick.
Levi Burdick.
Theron Beak.
Wm. D. Cope.
Thomas Carrier.
Samuel Curling.
John Carmichael.
William Ely.
Simeon Evans.
Charles Eddy.
Robert Eldredge.
James Eldredge.
Orlando A. Eldredge.
Elisha Fargo.
Nehemiah Lathrop.
Dyer Lathrop.
Solomon Lathrop.
John Lathrop.
James Lathrop.
Wm. F. Lathrop.
William Lawrence.
George W. Lane.
Hannah Lane.
John Lewis.
Amherst Lindsley.
John McCarey.
Isaiah Maine.
Henry Mack.
Nathan Morgan.
Albion Moody.
Thomas Miles.
Hugh McCollum.
Adonijah Moody.
Thomas Northrop.
Jason Newton.
Loren Newton.
Thomas Parke.
John Pneuman.
John Reynolds.
Israel Reynolds.
John Rosencrants.
Philemon Robinson.
Perrin Ross.
Mark Raymond.
Joseph Raymond.
Horatio Roberts.
Thomas J. Risley.
Proctor Risley.
George Risley.
Joseph Reese, Jr.
Philander Stephens.
Milton Stephens.
Simon Stephens.
Hubbard Smith.
William Smith.
Joshua Smith.
E. W. Smith.
Richard Stone.

Jason Fargo.	Reuben Spencer.
Jabez Giles.	David Stout.
Thomas Giles.	George Stout.
Daniel Giles.	Preston Tiffany.
Elisha Gates.	Dalton Tiffany.
John Gates.	William Tucker.
Nehemiah Gregory.	Sylvanus Tyler.
George Gates.	Moses Tyler.
Richard Gerritson.	Royal Tyler.
Libbeus Gavett.	Mason Tingley.
Richmond Gavett.	Jacob Vosburg.
Abisha W. Gray.	John Woodhouse.
Abijah Gregory.	Enoch Walker.
Levi B. Gurnsey.	George Walker.
John Goss.	Randall Wilmot.
Latham Hewitt.	Cyrus Whipple.
William Harkins.	Stephen Woolsey.
Israel Hewet.	Gordon Williams.
John Howard.	David Young.
William Hoar.	George Young.
Oliver Heald.	Andrew Young.
Stephen Hazleton.	John N. Young.
Elisha Hazleton.	William Young.
Gideon Hempstead.	Davidson Young.
Asa Lathrop.

Saw-mills were owned at this period by James Lathrop, Amos Burdick and Elisha Fargo. Asa Lathrop had a grist-mill. The blacksmiths were Gideon Hempstead, Jacob Ainey and Rufus Allen. William Smith was the wagon-maker, and William Young the tanner. John Baker was the inn-keeper.

In 1836 the Register mentions Julius Beach as an enterprising farmer who has done much for the introduction of the mulberry into the county. He presented to the cabinet of the Montrose Lyceum a skein of beautiful silk (white)—the first silk manufactured in the county.

(The morus multicaulis fever was at its height in the county three years later.)

From a newspaper of the period we take the following:

"Mr. Avery Bolles, of Dimock, in the fall of 1835, procured a kernel of a superior kind of seed wheat, sowed it separately, and in August, 1836, gathered the product and laid it aside. A few days ago he shelled it, counted the kernels, and found them to number one thousand one hundred and ninety-eight."

Dimock Village, the most important business point in the township, is on the corner of the old State road, running east and west, where it crosses the Wilkes-Barre turnpike. From this circumstance it is sometimes called "Dimock's Four Corners." It is also a station on the narrow-gauge railroad. The location is pleasant, but its nearness to Montrose has acted against its becoming a place of great size or business activity. It contains Baptist and Presbyterian Churches, a public-house, three stores, a good school-house and more than one hundred inhabitants.

"About 1819 a number of emigrants, mostly from England, settled at what is now Dimock Corners, which they called New Birmingham. Among them was Thomas Bedford, said to have been wealthy, and to have furnished his reputed brother-in-law, Thomas Emerson, the funds to erect the hotel now standing on the corner. A Mr. Hicks opened a store, and a Frenchman by the name of Major, a cabinet-maker and a local preacher, also erected a house, and carried on business. After a few years most of them sold out and left."[1]

The hotel had a large sign giving its name as the "Birmingham House," and was for many years preserved as a curiosity. The hotel was sold to Joseph Baker, who was succeeded by his son John, who kept it until about 1860. On the breaking out of the war Captain Elijah B. Gates left the tavern to enter the service, and was succeeded by Philander S. Babcock. The house became the property of T. B. Williams and was placed in good repair by him. Among the later landlords have been N. H. Sherman and Thomas Dolan. A second public-house was opened in an old building remodeled for this purpose, before 1837, by Caleb Barnes, and was kept by him a few years. F. M. Babcock, G. W. Lewis, John Foster, Lyman Sherman and J. J. Thompson followed, when it was given over to private use, remodeled and is now the residence of T. B. Williams. Before the building of the Delaware and Lackawana Railroad both those houses enjoyed a large patronage. April 13, 1818, a post-office was established, called Springville Four Corners, though the office itself was kept nearly a mile from the Corners, on the next hill north, by John W. Robinson, who afterwards sold to Wm. D. Cope. The house was the one for which Asahel Avery had made preparation; it was burned in 1830, when Mr. Cope lost with it the most of his furniture.

"Woodbourne" post-office was a continuance of this, Enoch Walker, postmaster from 1824 until 1830, when it was removed to the Corners, receiving the old name, and Perrin Ross was appointed postmaster. He kept the office in his residence in the Major house, opposite the hotel, where later lived Dr. Dennison. January 14, 1833, the name was changed to Dimock, and December 28, 1833, John Baker was appointed postmaster, and kept the office at his hotel. In 1854 he was succeeded by George W. Lewis, who removed the office to the place kept by him, the lower hotel. Since that time the appointees have been, in 1861, Elisha B. Gates; October, 1861, A. N. Moody; 1862, Philander S. Babcock; 1863, J.W. Carrier; 1864, Alfred Miles; 1874, Daniel T. Handrick; 1885, Harvey T. Allen. The office has daily mails.

[1] Miss Blackman.

In addition to those already mentioned as merchants, Richard Stone had a good store in a large double house, where S. A. Crocker now lives, about 1830–36. He built the store-house which was occupied by L. H. Woodruff after the latter period. The latter came from Bradford County, but had previously been a teacher in Binghamton. After trading here about thirty years, he removed to Wilkes-Barre. That building was afterward occupied by G. W. Struppler, who traded several years. Next came Harvey Allen. The building was burned down January 1, 1884, and the present building was erected on its site by the occupant of the store, Harvey Allen. George Stevens opened a store in the opposite corner about 1840, and sold to Benjamin Thompson, who built the residence adjoining. Here have traded a large number of persons, the last occupant being N. F. Hines, in 1886.

A third stand was established by Hiram Blakeslee, who is still there in trade. For a time he also manufactured clothing. Henry Babcock was in trade in the house now occupied by Charles M. Tingley, and M. G. Shoemaker was at the Wilber shop.

As practitioners of medicine, there have been at this place Dr. Ben Adam Dennison, about 1830, who died in Dimock; Dr. A. C. Blakeslee, a number of years, and with him for a time Dr. P. L. Brush; Dr. J. E. Barnes was in practice at a more recent period, remaining about five years; and Dr. N. C. Mackey, Dr. Foot, Dr. Freeman and Dr. Gulick remained shorter periods.

Joseph Ainey was an old-time blacksmith, and in more recent years C. C. Mills carried on wagon-making quite extensively. The spacious shops he erected are not fully occupied at present.

East Dimock post-office was established June 9, 1862, and George L. Williams was the postmaster. He was succeeded by George C. Giles. The office was intended to serve the Parkvale section of Dimock, and was kept part of the time in Brooklyn township, near that locality. It was discontinued July 16, 1883.

ELK LAKE is a post hamlet in the northwestern part of the township, seven miles from Montrose, and has a fine location south and west of the lakes. It contains several mills, shops, a store, a good school-house and about a dozen residences. The post-office was established August 31, 1842, with the name of ELK LAKE, and Charles J. Lathrop was the first postmaster, who kept it in his store, near the mills. He was succeeded by Orrin F. Fargo, November 13, 1850. On the 15th of December, 1855, the name was changed to LATHROP LAKE, and William F. Lathrop had the office until April 19, 1861, when Philander A. Stephens was appointed, and the post-office again took the name of ELK LAKE, which it has since retained. Stephens kept the office at his house several years; then it was removed to the store, at the Corners, where it yet remains. He was succeeded as follows: in 1866, by William A. Kellogg; 1867, William M. Crane; 1874, George Stephens; and since the fall of 1885, Marion E. Griffis. The office has a daily mail, on the Auburn route to Montrose.

C. J. Lathrop was an early merchant, selling goods several years prior to his having the post-office near the mills. In 1847 Wilson Bard started a store in a building which was changed into a residence for the miller. J. H. Hall and Justus Hickox also traded in a small way. Justus Smith, in 1856, removed to Springville, and was the last at the mills. About 1865 W. A. Kellogg opened a new stand near the Corners, south of the lakes, but, two years later, sold to Leabody & Crane. John Leabody followed, and was succeeded by the firm of Leabody & Stephens. On the death of Leabody, George Stephens became the sole owner and traded until 1884, when he sold out to Marion E. Griffis, the present merchant.

On the outlet of the lakes is the site of the old Lathrop Mills, which have been operative the past eighty years. The present mill was built soon after 1830, and has had many owners, among them being Searle & Lathrop, W. A. Kellogg, Fargo & Lathrop, Wells & Bard, E. & F. Fargo, John Young, Young & Woodruff, and the present, J. G. Cart. It is still quite a good custom mill. The saw-mills on the stream, above and below the mill, are not now in operation. The upper mill, last owned by E. Fargo, was moved to Rush, where it was carried on by George Fargo. The lower, or Lathrop mill, has been abandoned.

South of the Corners, on the Auburn road, a steam lumber-mill was erected, half a dozen years ago, by J. Estes, who sold one-half interest to Edgar Burdick. Soon after, the latter disposed of his interest to Byron Allen, and the establishment is now carried on by Estes & Allen. It contains machinery to cut lumber, shingles, to plane, and to grind feed. Five men are employed.

Near the head-waters of White Creek, in the southwestern part of the township, Sylvanus Tyler put up a saw-mill, which was operative until 1856, when it was removed to make place for one of the best flouring-mills in the county. Both saw and grist-mills were now operated by water and steam-power, and much business was done. In October, 1883, the property passed into the hands of Jefferson and Francis Dougherty; but the mills were burned down in 1884, and a small feed-mill only now occupies the site. Small saw-mills in this locality have been abandoned.

On the Meshoppen, in the southeastern part of the township, the water-power was improved in the early part of the century to operate saw-mills, which were owned by the Parke family. The country in this section remaining heavily timbered, the water-power was constant, and the place was deemed a good site for more extensive mills. The prospect of having the narrow-gauge railroad built up this valley added to this view and encouraged the Honorable Ben Parke to build the finest flouring-mill in this part of the State. The mills were completed in 1868, at a cost of $30,000, and included first-class milling machinery, saw and lath-mills. The water was carried to the mills through a trunk four feet in diameter and six hundred feet long. The enterprise appears to have been fated to ill-luck from the beginning. Soon after the trunk was completed, part of it was swept away by a freshet. The railroad was built to the west of the mills; the patronage was not large enough to make the investment a paying enterprise, and other circumstances prevented the proprietor from realizing his anticipations. He sold the Parkevale property, including the mills and a large tract of land, to George Keiser. In April, 1882, the mills were destroyed by fire, and the dam was afterwards torn away. In 1886 there was nothing to distinguish Parkevale from ordinary farm property. The locality has romantic surroundings, and while the residence of the Parke family, was one of the best-known spots in the county.

On the Meshoppen, near the Brooklyn line, mills are operated by Eugene Lathrop; and other mills on this stream have passed away. On the outlet of Cope's Pond, whose power had been increased by dams, two saw-mills were operated as the property of John W. Robinson, and were located but a short distance apart. Lower down the stream was a saw-mill owned by R. Gavitt and Samuel A. Brown, which was later the property of Marcus Hinkley. An earlier mill had been carried on by Preston Tiffany. Soon after 1810 a man named Ely had a carding-mill on this stream, taking the water directly from the falls. The machinery was removed, but the building still stands on the E. T. Tiffany farm. The Hinkley mill, on this stream, was first gotten in operation about 1820.

Educational and Religious.— Aside from the interest manifested in common schools, Dimock has had several schools of a higher order, which were well attended and deservedly popular. The oldest of these was Woodruff's Academy, established at Dimock, prior to 1850, by L. H. Woodruff, and conducted by him as a private enterprise. He was himself a successful educator, and taught a few years, occupying a building which had been erected for this purpose. Subsequently young men from college taught, the last instructor being his son, Clarence Woodruff. After this the building was used as a public hall, but it has recently been changed into a tenement.

Prior to the late Civil War the Literary Society of Dimock erected an academy building twenty-two by forty feet and two stories high, in which select schools were taught by B. M. Stone, William H. Baker, H. V. Thompson and others. By arrangement with the trustees of the building, one room was used for public schools, which have been continuously taught in that building since 1860. The Literary Society consisted of fifty-six members, each owning one or more of the five-dollar shares, which created a fund to erect the building and maintain the school. I. P. Baker, B. M. Stone and others were elected trustees, and the property is now held in trust by Judge Baker, the society for many years having only a nominal existence. There were, in addition to the schools in this building, lectures and literary meetings, which moulded and educated public opinion. The upper room of the building forms a hall, in which religious meetings are now held.

It is probable that these schools were at least the indirect means which led many of the young men of the township to engage in professional occupations; and, as a result, Dimock has furnished a larger number of lawyers and doctors, in proportion to its population, than any other township of the county. Among those claimed either as natives or as citizens, who engaged in these avocations, are the following:

Physicians: I. B. Lathrop, of Springville; E. L. Blakeslee, of Montrose; Riley Blakeslee, of Harford; Riley Blakeslee, of Philadelphia; John G. Woodhouse, died at Laceyville; Thos. Harkins, of Iona; A. C. Blakeslee, of Nicholson; Albert Ainey, of Brooklyn Centre; David Ainey, of New Milford; Addison Newton, of Illinois; Jonathan Miles, of Lackawanna County; Edward L. Brush, of Springville; William Dolan, of Scranton; John Dennison, of Wilkes-Barre; Frederick Dennison, of Mehoopany.

Attorneys: William Ainey, of Allentown; William Wells, of Pottsville; E. L. Blakeslee, of Montrose; Nahum Newton, deceased; Miller Allen, of Montrose; Elhanan Smith, of Towanda; Clarence Woodruff, of Scranton; and William M. Main, who had finished his studies as a law student, but died before being admitted to the bar. The township also claims Judge Wilmot, on account of his residence in Dimock for a short period.

The Dimock Baptist Church was organized June 3, 1834, by a council composed of delegates from the neighboring Baptist Churches. Eight males and seventeen females entered into membership, nearly all having letters of dismission from the Bridgewater and Auburn churches. Jonathan Miles was chosen deacon and Elijah B. Slade clerk. Five days later, June 8th, the church received its first addition of membership, when Elder J. W. Parker baptized a number of persons, among them being Mason Tingley, later and for many years a deacon. Then came as preachers at occasional periods Elders Davis Dimock, J. W. Parker, J. D. Jones, J. B. Worden, Elijah Sturdevant and others. Elder Jonathan Melvin was the first settled pastor, coming in June, 1841. Successive ministers of the church have been Elders P. Frink, James D. Webster, Isaac Gray, J. W. Parker, J. M. Barns, H. H. Gray, Wm. Tower, Harvey Kingsbury, John E. Barns, T. F. Clancy. In March, 1867, Elder A. L. Post commenced his ministry, giving the church full time, and continued his service until his death, in 1879. On the 1st of April, 1880, Elder J. A. Eldred entered upon a pastorate which continued a little more than two years. In 1884–85 the pulpit was vacant, but there was occasional preaching by supplies. Since May 1, 1886, Elder S. W. Cole has been the pastor on part time, serving also the church of Auburn.

Though there have been so many ministerial changes, the church has had quite a large aggregate membership, about one hundred and fifty persons in all having belonged. The present membership is seventy-three, and the affairs of the church appear to be in good condition.

Besides Jonathan Miles, the deacons of the church have been William Baker, Mason Tingley, E. G. Baker and Alpheus Burdick. The latter is the present deacon, and has served the church twenty-two years, being for a long time a contemporary of the venerable Deacon Tingley, who, being incapacitated by age, was succeeded in 1875 by E. G. Baker.

The clerks of the church have been, in the order of their election, Elijah B. Slade, Adonijah Taylor, Mason Tingley, D. B. Smith, E. M. Tingley, Alonzo Woodhouse, Urban Smith, M. K. Tingley, and Philip D. Burdick since Nov. 14, 1863.

The church edifice at Dimock was begun by the people of that community without reference to denominational distinctions, each contributor receiving stock in the building. In 1851 members of the church secured the unfinished building, and through the efforts of Deacon Tingley it was completed for the use of the Baptists, though open to all sects for funeral purposes. It is a plain, almost square, two-story building, and, having galleries in the sides, has ample seating capacity. In 1886 it was in a fair state of preservation. The early Baptist meetings of the township were held in the vicinity of Elk Lake, and embraced a number of attendants who did not become a part of the membership of the present church.

The Presbyterian Church of Dimock.—A preliminary meeting having in view the organization of a Presbyterian congregation at Dimock was held Aug. 19, 1854, when it was decided to form a church Sept. 16, 1854. At the designated time the following persons were enrolled as members, most of them having withdrawn from the Montrose Church for this purpose: L. H. Woodruff, Jacob Wallace, Wm. B. Dean, Robert Foster, Charlotte Beach, Caroline Thompson, Eunice Bolles, Helen Bolles, Eliza Scott, Catherine Wallace and Nancy G. Maine.

Meetings were held in the academy building, and April 16, 1855, nine trustees were elected, when the congregation became an incorporated body, with a view of building a house of worship. Various causes acted to prevent, and the congregation became so weak in the course of a few years that, at a meeting held Aug. 10, 1865, but six members attended. Jacob Wallace was elected treasurer and L. H. Woodruff secretary. In 1868 there were ten members in good standing, and E. W. Woodhouse and wife joined at a meeting held this year, when L. H. Woodruff was elected a ruling elder. The Rev. Harrison preached occasionally and was followed by the Rev. George Spaulding. The organization of the congregation not having been kept up, it was again incorporated, with the present name, Nov. 17, 1870, to erect a church edifice on one acre of land, which had been donated for this purpose by L. H. Woodruff. The trustees selected were E. W. Woodhouse, A. W. Maine and J. M. Wallace. In 1871 the present edifice was erected, and was thereafter used as the regular place of worship. It is a neat frame structure with a shapely spire, and in 1886 was under the control of Trustees T. B. Williams and Jacob Wallace. In 1873 the Rev. Arthur Folsom became the stated supply and continued several years. Edward W. Woodhouse and Asa Dewey were elected elders, but removed, and in 1886 the congregation had no elders and but half a dozen members. The affairs of the church sadly need reviving.

Methodist meetings have been held in Dimock almost since the period of its settlement, but no house of worship has been provided nor a permanent organization established. Near the centre of the township several classes have existed for a period of years; but, yielding to the influences produced by the changes of population, they have gone down, to be revived at some future period. The present class was organized in 1875 by the Rev. H. G. Harned, preacher in charge of the Springville Circuit, with twenty-five members, and H. F. Newton class-leader. Meetings were held in the Presbyterian Church at Dimock until the spring of 1886, since which time they are held in the Literary Academy building. Norman E. Travers is the present leader of the class, which has twenty members. The members continue to be a part of Springville Circuit.

At Elk Lake an appointment was taken up during the pastorate of William Shelp, and while the Rev. F. A. Doney was the preacher in charge, in 1876, a great revival occurred, continuing for a period of six weeks, and resulting in eighty conversions. In July, 1876, a large number were baptized and added to the church, and meetings have since been regularly held. The school-house has been supplied with a pulpit and an organ, which are the property of the class, which meets there for preaching services every two weeks. The members number twenty-four, and belong to Rush Circuit. A Sabbath-school of fifty members is maintained.

Near Dimock Station are the camp-meeting grounds of the Wyalusing Camp-Meeting Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church—a body which became incorporated August 15, 1877, on the petition of the following persons: I. P. Baker, C. S. Gates, H. Crocker, Jr., G. W. Sterling and A. W. Tiffany. The association has thirteen directors who control its affairs. The capital stock is limited to twenty thousand dollars, divided into shares of ten dollars each. The grounds were located in 1875, and consisted of twenty-three acres, about twenty acres being shaded by young and thrifty trees, on a gentle hillside. Here is an unfailing spring of pure water, and other natural advantages make it a desirable location. The grounds have been improved by the erection of two hundred and forty cottages, a chapel thirty by fifty-eight feet, and a new boarding tent. The meetings are held annually for a period of eight days and are occasions of great interest.

The cemeteries of Dimock are located with reference to the convenience of the different sections of the township, and are small plots of ground, preserved and improved by the people living in their neighborhood. The land for the one at Dimock was donated by Mason Tingley. Other burial-grounds are in the northeastern part of the township, at Elk Lake, and in the southwestern part, in the Tyler neighborhood.

JOHN L. LAKE.—His grandfather, John Lake, of Hunterdon County, N. J., had an extensive business as auctioneer, was a farmer and a prominent politician and served as sheriff of the county. His father, Abraham (1796–1874), married Susan Garrison (1793–1861), was a farmer and a large dealer in horses and stock. He was reputed to be a good judge of horses, and his opinion was sought in their sale by men far and near. He removed with his family to Knowlton township, Warren County, N. J., where he purchased a farm, which, with the assistance of his sons, he cleared of debt. Subsequent to the removal of his son, John L. Lake, to Dimock township, this county, he also settled here, where he died. The Garrison family were settled near Phillipsburg, N. J. The children of Abraham and Susan Lake are Elizabeth, born in 1819, wife of Jacob J. Beck, resides at Hainesburg, N. J.; John L., born in Hunterdon County, September 20, 1828; William G. (1822–60) was a farmer in Auburn township, this county, where he died; Mary Jane, born 1825, is the wife of E. L. Cool, a farmer in Bridgewater; Rachel, born in 1827, the wife of Ira K. Raub, a farmer in Springville; Dian (1830–54); Abraham (1832–48); Isaac G. (1834–82) was a farmer and stock dealer in Bridgewater, and was accidentally killed. One of his sons is of the firm of E. C. & M. L. Lake, merchants at South Montrose.

John L. Lake rendered great assistance to his father in paying for his farm in Warren County, and in early life learned the necessity of industry and economy, the sure road to a successful business career. He had limited opportunities for obtaining an education from books in boyhood, but became inured to hard work and gained practical lessons therefrom. In 1856 he came to Susquehanna County, and purchased one hundred and six acres of land in the southwest corner of Dimock township, to which he has added until he is the owner of four hundred and twelve acres, nearly all in one tract. He bought the Newton saw-mill, on White Creek, in 1878, which he has conducted since. Naturally taking to the stock business, he began in 1876 buying stock, and marketing in the coal regions, and subsequently in New York, Scranton and Newark. He has been succeeded in this business by his son, William L. Lake, who buys and ships large herds of stock from this county, Buffalo and other places, to New York and other Eastern markets. Mr. Lake, with the assistance of his sons, manages this large farm successfully. He has been active in local politics, and has served as supervisor and path-master for over twenty years. He is temperate in his habits and never tasted either liquor or tobacco. He is prompt in business matters, and known for his integrity in all the relations of life. He married Joanna Hay in 1861, who died ten years afterward, leaving three children—William L., George M. and Charles H. Lake. His wife was a daughter of Peter and Susan Hay, of Warren County, N. J., who settled at Auburn Corners, this county, about thirty-five years ago, and were farmers. His second wife, whom he married in 1873, is Mrs. Mary C. (Raub) Vough, who was born October 5, 1829. She is a daughter of Michael (1792–1869) and Mary (1796–1863) (Read) Raub, who were farmers near Blairstown, N. J., where the family of Raub have resided for several generations. Her grandfather, Michael Raub, was a soldier in the Revolution. Mrs. Lake had one child by her first husband, Mary, whose first husband was Minor Stephens, by whom she had one child, Jacob B. Stephens, and for her second husband, she married Alfred L. Risley, and resides at Springville.

I L Lake

B. L. Brush.—The first representatives of this family in Susquehanna County settled in Oakland township in 1820, came from Connecticut and founded the settlement known as Brushville. Lewis Brush, one of the sons, located for a time in Bridgewater township, in the Watrous district, and thence removed to Dimock in 1838. He was a Representative to the Legislature during 1843–44 for the district composed of Susquehanna and Wyoming Counties, and received his nomination from the Democratic party. He subsequently served as justice of the peace for many years, and his judgment and counsel were accepted and relied upon. Hon. Lewis Brush married Lucy Ann Williams, also from Connecticut stock, who bore the following living children: Dr. Platt E., who studied medicine and practiced several years successfully; was a surgeon during the Rebellion, and now resides at Springville; Bruce L., born 1838, subject of this sketch; Helen M., married T. B. Williams, Esq., of this township; Eugenia, married Theodore Baker, of Dimock township; Moselle, married, first, James Rymer, and, second, a Mr. Willman, now living at Jermyn, Pa. Mr. Brush died in this township in 1866. Bruce L. Brush obtained a good education from books in the district schools, the Montrose Academy, the Harford Academy and the Woodruff Academy, in his native town, under the tuition of Hon. William H. Ainey, now of Allentown. He afterwards taught in the district schools several winters and worked upon his father's farm during the summer seasons. When the first draft of men for the war was made he was one of those upon whom the lot fell, and expected to be engaged for the next nine months, but, on reaching Harrisburg, was exempted on account of physical disability. In 1860 he bought the farm beautifully located between the two Elk Lakes, and in 1878 erected the present home. A farmer, he has given but little attention to other matters than the science of farming, though he has been somewhat active in the laudable Grange movement and Odd-Fellowship. His fellow-townsmen have recognized his stanch and honorable character by election to various offices, and he has acceptably served as school director, constable, assessor and supervisor. When the Montrose Railway project was under way he gave the right of way to the company through his portion of his deceased father's home farm, and has always exhibited an interest in matters of public improvement. He married, January 7, 1863, Sabra A., the adopted daughter of David and Sabra (Smith) Young, born 1840, and has children,—Viola A., the wife of C. W Stedman, a farmer of Rush; and Lizzie P. The other children of Mr. and Mrs. Young were Edward, Mary and Henry, the latter of whom is now a resident of Washington Territory. The Young family is of Scotch-Irish descent, and settled in what is now Dauphin County, Pa., at an early date, and came to Susquehanna County in 1815. The late ex-Sheriff John Young was a cousin to David Young.

B. L. Brush

JUDGE I. P. BAKER.—His grandparents, John and Hannah Baker, were natives of and resided in Chester County, Pa. Their son Joseph (1768–1837) married Elizabeth (1769–1843), a daughter of William and Deborah Baldwin, who bore him the following children: John, born in 1788, married Emily Johnson, who resides in Dimock township, being now in her eighty-fifth year; Deborah, born in 1790, married Amos Baldwin, of Chester County; Hannah, born in 1791, wife of Abraham Bailey, of Dimock township; William, born in 1793; Mary, 1794, became the wife of Lewis Bailey, of Chester County; Joseph, 1797; Eli, 1799; Eliza, 1801, married Samuel Woodward, of Brooklyn township; Margaret, 1802, wife of Ezekiel W. Harlan, of Mauch Chunk, Pa.; Julia, 1804; Elizabeth, 1806; married George Gates, of Dimock, now in his eighty-ninth year; Abeline, 1810, is the wife of Urbane Smith, a justice of the peace in Dimock; and Judge Isaac P. Baker, who was also born in Chester County, February 7, 1812. Joseph Baker was a thorough-going and enterprising business man, and while a resident of Chester County carried on a grist-mill, saw-mill and nail-factory on Brandywine River, until the great flood came and destroyed his entire property, even washing away his books and papers. In 1821 he purchased some three hundred acres of land at Dimock Four Corners, this county, and the following spring removed thence with his family, excepting his eldest daughter, Deborah, who remained in Chester County. He largely improved this property while good health lasted, but a stroke of paralysis made him an invalid for several years before his death. His mother was a niece of Daniel Boone, and the family is of Quaker origin. Isaac P. Baker, the youngest child, remembers attending school at the old log school-house several miles distant from their home, to which he walked through woods and over streams. Upon reaching his majority he spent one year in boating coal from Mauch Chunk to Philadelphia, and was often brought in company with the late Judge Asa Packer, who began the same business at the same time. Returning home, he managed his father's farm for two years, and in 1837 he began buying cattle in various parts of the State and driving them to Eastern Pennsylvania markets for sale. This business proved to be his principal life-work. He continued to buy stock in Pennsylvania, New York and Ohio for market in the eastern part of this State, and for about five years was associated with Squire Urbane Smith, and during the last few years shipped them by carloads from Buffalo and central points in Ohio until 1872, when he retired from the business and located on the farm which he had all these years heretofore carried on himself. Here he resided until 1884, when, being succeeded on the home property by his son, Theodore H., he settled at Dimock Four Corners, where he has since resided. Judge Baker has been an active business man, and, together with his other affairs, was a promoter of the Montrose Railway. He early took an interest in political circles, was a member of the old Whig party, and upon the organization of the Republican party, in 1856, was one of the first to advocate its principles and assist in its formation. Notwithstanding his large business operations in the West, he has invariably exercised the right of suffrage at home, and strenuously upheld as a leader, by every honest measure and reasonable effort, the principles of reform in the Republican party. In 1861 he accepted the nomination of his party for associate judge, was elected and, with the late Judge Charles F. Read, served for a term of five years. He sat on the bench with Judge Mercur for four years, and with the late Judge Farris B. Streeter for one year. Together with his wife and many others, he became a member of the Baptist Church at Dimock during a series of revival meetings held there in 1841, by Elder A. L. Post. He married, in 1839, Annis H., a daughter of William G. and Elizabeth (Carrington) Handrick, of Middletown, this county, who was born August 15, 1814, a woman well known for her intelligence, hospitality and womanly virtues. Their children are Elizabeth M. (1842–68), was the wife of L. W. Hamlin, of Salem, Wayne County, Pa.; Theodore H., born in 1844, married Eugenia B., a daughter of the late Hon. Lewis Brush; Lillie A., born in 1847, is the wife of Dr. Lee Hollister, of Wilkes-Barre; Isabella E., (1851–64); William J., born in 1853, married Ida, a daughter of Friend and Hannah Hollister.

L. P. Baker

WILLIAM BUNNELL.—His paternal grandfather, James (1768–1841), a native of Litchfield County, Conn., married Azuba Carter (1768–1816); was a blacksmith by trade and died in Southeast Bridgewater, this county. Their children were Ephraim K. (1798–1881) died in Bridgewater; Avis (1800–82) married Daniel Landon and resided in Susquehanna County at one time and died in New York State; Elijah (1803–72); Dotha, born in 1810, married a Mr. Tooley and resided in Tennessee, where she has a large family; James A. (1813–86) settled in Dimock in 1849, where he died thirty-seven years afterwards; Lucy, born in 1805, the wife of Charles Farnham, resided in Massachusetts; Matilda (1807–53), wife of Harry Stone, resided and died in Litchfield County, Conn., where also Samuel Bunnell (1816–84), the youngest child, lived and died. Elijah Bunnell married Lucy (1804–64), a daughter of Apollos and Eunice (Throop) Stone, of Litchfield County, who were of Scotch origin. Their children are Kirby, born 1827, a farmer in Bridgewater township; William, born February 27, 1829; Dotha Ann (1831–38) and Truman S. (1834–38)—both died of an epidemic, scarlet fever, the same year; Lucy J., born 1836, married Henry Rogers, now of Lawrence, Kan.; and Harry, who died young. Elijah Bunnell came to Susquehanna County in May, 1833, driving through by the Newburg turnpike, and settled on the farm where his son Kirby now resides. He was known as a great hunter, and supplied his table largely with choice wild game, besides disposing of his surplus meats to his neighbors. He ran in debt for his farm, from which he was only released after twenty years of industry and toil and the hearty assistance of his sons.

William Bunnell was four years old when his parents settled in Bridgewater. In youth he was a close student of books and completed his education under Dr. Lyman Richardson, at Harford, and under Elder Gray, at Montrose Academy. He was a teacher for two winter terms, but from 1854 to 1858, as a traveling salesman, made a series of tours through Mississippi and other Southern States. On December 21, 1858, he married Mary J., a daughter of Isaiah (1785–1858) and Polly (Williams) Maine (1792-1878). Her father was in the War of 1812, and came to Dimock from Groton, Conn., in 1818, settling where his son, I. A. Maine, now resides. His purchase being made under the Connecticut title, he was compelled to pay for a second time. The children of Isaiah Maine are Alanson, a retired farmer at Dimock Corners; Isaiah A., a farmer in Dimock; William (1820-41) read law at Montrose, but died before being admitted to the bar; Thomas, a farmer in Dimock, died in 1883; Mary J., wife of William Bunnell, whose children are Alice (1860-86); Lucy Jane, a graduate of Mansfield Normal School, is a teacher in Bridgewater; Fanny L. and Willard M. Bunnell. Mr. Bunnell has been a farmer and a merchant; he has been prominent in local politics; was a War Democrat and has served his township in various capacities officially. In 1880 he espoused the principles of the Greenback party, and advocated measures adopted by both branches of Congress in 1862, whereby all money furnished by the government should be a legal tender for all debts, both public and private. In the fall of 1881, in company with T. B. Williams and S. J. Northrop, he established the National Record at Montrose, which was devoted to the Greenback sentiment. He took charge of the outside work until the patronage of the paper reached eighteen hundred subscribers. Mr. Bunnell sold out his interest in the newspaper in the fall of the same year.

He was one of the early promoters of the Grange movement in the county, one of the men to bring about its resuscitation, and is an active member of Susquehanna Grange, No. 74. He was one of the promoters of the Montrose Railway and was active in the establishment of the Farmers' Institute, in 1886. Mr. Bunnell has been frequently invited to deliver addresses upon various topics, and his earnest advocacy of the principles of his theme, his wide range of thought and common-sense ideas have won for him no little consideration among his fellowmen.

JAMES A. BUNNELL, son of James and Azuba Bunnell, owned the Hoar farm, and spent the remainder of his life there after settling in Dimock from Connecticut. He was born in Litchfield County, and his wife, Mary Ann Hall, born in New Haven County in 1815, survives, in 1886, residing with her children. The eldest, Frederick Hall Bunnell, was born in Waterbury, Conn., January 12, 1840; Robert O. is a farmer and carpenter in Dimock; Lyman W., also a farmer in Dimock; and Welcome L., a farmer in Springville.

FREDERICK H. BUNNELL was nine years old when his parents came to Susquehanna County. He was raised on the home farm, and obtained his education at the district school and at the Dimock Academy. For three terms he was a teacher. In 1863 he went to Chicago, and on September 1, 1884, enlisted at Grand Rapids, in Company A., Twenty-first Michigan Regiment of Infantry. He was first employed in an Engineer Corps on the hospital buildings at Lookout Mountain, and subsequently sent to Alabama under General Rosseau. Returning to Chattanooga, his regiment (Twenty-first Michigan) was ordered to Dalton on guard. After one week there they marched to Atlanta, Ga., where they arrived in November, and found the city on fire. Here they were assigned to the Second Brigade, First Division, Fourteenth Army Corps, under General Sherman. The next day they started through Georgia, went to Savannah, and threw up breastworks, but the city having been taken by the navy, and Fort McAllister surrendered, they marched into the city without fighting, on December 21st. In January they left and marched through Lexington and Columbia, then on fire, and were engaged in the battles of Adairsville and Bentonville in March, where they lost seventy men. On March 24th Mr. Bunnell was detailed to serve as hospital guard at division headquarters, which position he filled until the war ended. He was discharged at Washington, June 8, 1865, and went to Detroit, where the regiment was disbanded. Returning home, he married, the same year, Harriet, a daughter of Jacob B. and Catherine (Sherman) Wallace, by whom he has children,—James Wallace, Francis Elmer, Lettie Mary, Irene Estella, Byron Bruce and John M. Bunnell. The fourth child, Kirby, died young.

Since the close of the war Mr. Bunnell has been a farmer in Dimock. He was one of the charter members of Susquehanna Grange, P. of H., and its first regularly initiated member, and has been identified with the Grange movement since. He was elected Overseer of the Pomona Grange in December, 1885, the same month elected Master of Susquehanna Grange, and on June 1, 1886, he was appointed by the State Grange Deputy of the south part of Susquehanna County. Since holding the office he has organized Elk Lake Grange, No. 806, with twenty-nine charter members, and in December, 1886, reorganized Union Grange, No. 152, with thirteen members. By virtue of the last two offices he is a member of the State Grange.

CHAPTER XXIV.

SPRINGVILLE TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was erected in April, 1814, out of the southwestern part of the old township of Bridgewater. At the same time the southeastern part of that township was erected into the old township of Waterford (including Lathrop and Brooklyn), which became the eastern boundary of Springville. The northern limits of the new township extended within five miles of Montrose, including the greater part of what became Dimock in 1832. Wyoming County lies south, and west were Auburn and about one mile of Rush, until after Dimock was erected, when that township became the northern boundary of Springville, whose area was now reduced to about thirty square miles—six miles along the Wyoming line and five miles north and south.

Wm. Burnell

"At different periods since the erection of Susquehanna County there has been more or less disquiet among the residents remote from the seat of justice, and those of Springville have been of the number. As early as 1839 the matter of annexing Springville and Auburn to portions of Luzerne and Bradford, to form a new county, with Skinner's Eddy for a county-seat, was openly agitated. Again, in 1842, it was only vigilance on the part of some that prevented their loss to Susquehanna, when Wyoming County was organized. To this day there are those who contend that the township, for half a mile within its southern border, belongs of right to Wyoming, since the line dividing them is the unrectified one of 1810–12. This should have been due east from Wyalusing Falls, and was so run by the surveyors going east; but the party from the east line of the county, on account of some variation understood by surveyors, failed to meet those from the west, being considerably south of them. The matter was finally compromised by making the line not "due east and west," as directed. This had so long been acquiesced in, and farms and town arrangements were so well established in 1842, it was concluded best to make no changes."[1]

The lands of the township are elevated and slope well towards the south, the general level being broken by high ridges along the water-courses. Most of the streams drain southward, the principal one being Meshoppen Creek. It enters the township at the northeastern part, and, after taking the waters of Pond Brook, passes out of it east of the centre. In the southwestern corner White Creek passes into Auburn, draining that part of the township. In all parts of Springville good springs abound, and in the eastern section there are several small lakes or ponds. The streams have enough fall to afford mill-sites, but lack the volume to make the operation of machinery profitable. The low lands are limited, but in several sections the uplands are handsomely located, and, having a soil naturally fertile, some of the finest farms in the county have there been made since the timber growth has been removed. The higher parts were once covered with beech, maple and hickory, and the hillsides and lower lands with elms, basswood and hemlock. But few pines and scarcely any oak were found in the township. The cereals do well, but dairying has become the principal occupation of the people.

[1] Miss Blackman.

The Pioneers.—Not possessing so many inviting natural features as some other townships in the county, settlements in Springville did not antedate the century. The first clearing was made in the fall of 1800, near where the Presbyterian Church was afterwards built, by Captain Jeremiah Spencer and his sons, who put in six acres of wheat. He was a native of New Hampshire, and had served in the Revolutionary War, but lived in Rensselaer County, N. Y., prior to his coming here. Captain Spencer and his brother Samuel had come to this section to survey a township six miles square, for Oliver Ashley, of Connecticut, who had bought such a tract of land of the State, for a half-bushel of silver dollars, and to which he gave the name of "Victory." On an old map such a township appears, having an irregular shape, whose southern line ran near where is now the hamlet of Lynn. It embraced in the main what is now Springville township and a part of Auburn. The family of Captain Spencer came in 1801, and consisted of his wife (who was a sister of Judge Ashley), sons named Daniel and Francis B., and five daughters. Captain Spencer died in 1825, aged seventy-five years. He was interred in the cemetery for which he donated the land, as were also some of the members of his family. Francis B. Spencer lived at Springville, being the first postmaster at that place, in 1815, and was well educated for those times. He died at Factoryville, January 1, 1869. Daniel Spencer was widely known as a great hunter, and some remarkable stories of his skill are related.

"Hazard's Register contained a notice of Daniel Spencer's wonderful pound of gunpowder, entitled, 'Susquehanna County against the world!' 'In the early settlement of this county, Mr. Spencer, of Springville township, killed, with one pound of powder, one hundred and five deer, nine bears, three foxes, one wolf, three owls and a number of partridges and quails. Mr. Spencer has killed upwards of fifteen hundred deer since he came to reside in this county.'

"The following is the testimony of one of his former neighbors: 'He was out one day in the fall of the year, when the bucks frequently get into a family quarrel, as in this case. He found two lusty bucks that had been fighting, and in the battle their horns, being long and prongy, became locked together so firmly that they could not be separated by any effort they could make, and one of them died either in the battle or by starvation, and the other had dragged his dead comrade around until he was just alive and had become a mere skeleton.'

"The road from Colonel Parke's to Springville Hollow was opened in 1803 or 1804 by the Spencers. Previous to that, only marked trees and a bridle-path had guided the traveler to the Susquehanna River at the mouth of the Meshoppen."

Samuel Spencer, the brother of Captain Spencer, bought five hundred acres of land in the present Lymanville neighborhood, south of the Connecticut township of Victory, for which he paid Colonel Jenkins, of Wyoming, a horse and saddle. Returning to New Hampshire, Spencer sold this land to his brother-in-law, Gideon Lyman, of Wethersfield, Conn., for five hundred dollars, but who did not occupy it until 1803. In March of that year he came, with his wife and eleven children, and made a temporary home on the place which afterwards became the farm of Justus Knapp, on account of its nearness to Captain Spencer, who returned with them from the East, where he had been on a visit. As soon as he could prepare a house, Gideon Lyman moved his family to the land he had bought of Samuel Spencer—to the locality which has ever since been known by his name.

Owing to his generosity while on the way hither, in relieving a friend pressed by a creditor, Mr. Lyman had only fifty cents in his pocket when he reached his destination. The house he occupied was built by felling basswood trees, splitting them open, and laying them up with the flat side inward. It was probably eighteen by fourteen feet, and had to accommodate thirteen persons through the summer. The roof was made of white ash bark, but the floor was of the same material as the sides of the building. Two barrels of pork constituted the stock of provisions, and Mr. Lyman was obliged to go to Exeter, near Wilkes-Barre, and sell a horse to get grain for bread. This left him only one horse. He sold a bed to buy a cow. To crown his discouragement, he found he held a worthless title, and had eventually to buy of Mr. Drinker, recovering nothing of what he had paid in good faith to the claimant under the Connecticut title. But he had been a soldier in the Revolutionary army, and was not easily daunted. His first house was built about ten or twelve rods from one of the most bountiful springs in our country; but this was so concealed by laurels that he had lived upon the place several years before it was discovered. Subsequently he built nearer it, and the house is now occupied by his grandson, James H. Lyman. The spring supplied him, and many of the neighbors, with an unfailing stream of pure, cold water during protracted drouths. Here he lived until his death, in May, 1824. His children all lived to old age, and all but one "were present at his funeral. His sons were Elijah, Gideon, Joseph Arvin, Samuel, John and Prentiss. Elijah is still living (September, 1869), in Allegany County, N. Y., aged eighty-seven. His sister, Dolly Oakley, is eighty-five. Gideon, a twin with the latter, died when fifty-five years old. Naomi Spencer died when sixty-nine; Samuel when seventy-one; Joseph Arvin in his sixty-second year. The five others are living, the youngest being seventy-one."

Having such a large family, and being so far removed from the sources of supplies, with few means to procure what was obtainable, the Lymans suffered many hardships, which were shared by other families in this locality.

"One summer there was a scarcity of bread. A crop of rye was growing, and as soon as it was full in the head it was cut in small quantities, and when dry, was taken out of the straw, cleaned, and set before what was called a Dutch fireplace, and kiln-dried; it was then ground in a coffee-mill, the hopper of which would not hold more than a pint, then sifted and made into something called bread.

"Gideon Lyman one Sabbath morning, searching for his cow, found some raspberries; anything so gratifying and exciting he did not think it right to tell his wife during holy time, and so waited until evening, when custom closed its observance. His wife was then unable to sleep for joy. In the morning, pails of berries were secured.

"A few years later Mrs. L. and a young woman set out with a lantern one evening, to go about a mile and a half to watch with a sick neighbor. Starting from a house where they had been visiting in the afternoon, they lost their way, and spent the night in the woods. A brisk snow-storm added to the unpleasantness of the situation, but they made a fire, and as they had a hymn-book, they passed the time in singing hymns. In the morning they proceeded on their way and crossed a wolf's track in the snow before they reached the small stream which they followed to their destination."[1]

In 1801 Ezra Tuttle, a neighbor of Gideon Lyman, came and settled on what afterwards became known as the Packer farm, north of Captain Spencer. He had bought three hundred acres of land under the Connecticut title, paying one dollar an acre therefor to Colonel Ezekiel Hyde, of Rush; but to perfect the title he was obliged, afterwards, to pay the Pennsylvania claimant, Henry Drinker, an additional five hundred dollars. He built the first frame house in the township, and he and his sons cleared up two hundred and fifty acres of land. They also constructed a large part of the turnpike from Montrose to Tunkhannock, in 1815, and opened other roads in the township. Some of his other early improvements are also well remembered. His death occurred in 1826, and he was interred in the cemetery near the homestead. His son Myron was the first child born in Springville. and after residing here many years he removed to the West in 1846. Of the other six children composing the family, two were sons and four daughters. The latter married,—Sylvia, Wells Carrier; Sabina, Benajah McKenzie; Betsey, Samuel Sutton; Achsa, George Strickland. Benoni Tuttle, one of the sons, died in the township many years ago. Abiathar Tuttle, the other son, and the oldest of the family, was thirteen years old when his parents came to reside in Springville. He became a carpenter, and helped to put up many of the buildings occupied by the early settlers. In later life he resided on the farm now occupied by John Tuttle, north of Springville village. For more than sixty years he was an exemplary member of the Methodist Church, and also became a Free and Accepted Mason at an early day. He died March 7, 1879, at the advanced age of ninety-one years, having retained his physical and mental powers to the last. He was interred at White Haven, Pa.

In 1800 Salmon Thomas came from New Hampshire, made a small clearing, sowed wheat and returned to his home. In 1801 he came back, accompanied by his father and brother Charles. Both of the former took up one hundred acres of land on the hill southwest of Spring Hollow. The sons being single, lived with their father, Samuel Thomas. In 1805 Salmon married Rosalinda, daughter of Ezekiel Lathrop. They reared sons named Reuben, Benjamin, Dennison, Salmon, Davis (still living on the homestead) and Edwin. Charles Thomas married Phœbe Sutton and settled on a farm adjoining the homestead. Their children were seven sons and one daughter, namely: Eri, Francis, John, George, Charles, Daniel, Almeda, and Samuel S. The latter is a resident near Lynn Station, and is a teacher of more than thirty years' standing. Samuel Thomas, Jr., a brother of Salmon and Charles, came at a later day, and after living near the north line of the township some years, removed to Connecticut.

Hon. Asa Packer, son of Elisha Packer, of Groton, New London County, Conn., was born in that town on the 29th day of December, 1805. As soon as he was old enough to do for himself, a situation was procured for him in the tannery of Mr. Elias Smith, of North Stonington. In the year 1822, when but seventeen years of age, he set out on foot, with a few dollars in his pocket and his worldly goods comprised in a knapsack, for Susquehanna County, Pa. Here he apprenticed himself to the trade of carpenter and joiner in Hopbottom, (now Brooklyn). While so engaged, he went with his employer to Springville, to build the mansion of the late William Drinker, Esq. on the place recently occupied by Thomas Nicholson, Esq., and since purchased by Mr. Packer himself. It was here also that he first met the daughter of Zophar Blakeslee, Sarah Minerva, who afterwards became his wife. He heard of the Lehigh Valley as affording greater remuneration for labor, and superior opportunities for advancement. He was induced, therefore, to remove thither, and in the spring of 1833 located at Mauch Chunk. He brought to his new home but a few hundred dollars, his capital consisting rather of his active mind, strong arms and industrious habits. His first and second summers were spent in boating coal from Mauch Chunk to Philadelphia, himself acting as master of his own boat. The energy and capacity which he displayed while thus employed commended him to the favorable notice of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company, with whom he afterwards formed a profitable connection, which lasted a number of years.

[1] Blackman.

He subsequently formed a partnership with his brother under the firm-name of A. & R. W. Packer. They did a large business at Mauch Chunk, took contracts for the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company, and were the first through transporters of coal to New York market. In 1851 Judge Packer purchased nearly all the stock of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, and afterwards became its president. Under his management the road, in connection with vast coal interests, became a great success, and Mr. Packer became the wealthiest man in the State. He was twice a member of Congress, Democratic candidate for governor in 1859 and undoubtedly elected, but counted out in Philadelphia. He founded the Lehigh University in 1865, assisted very materially in building the Montrose Railway in 1871. He died May 17, 1879. (For further account see Lehigh and Carbon history.)

Blakslee.—Zophar, Benjamin and Aaron Blakslee came from Connecticut in 1801 and settled in Springville. Aaron,[1] the youngest (1784–1859), settled where H. K. Sherman resides, north of Springville, which was his home until his death. He married a sister of Freeman Lane. He was a leading member of the Methodist Church, and contributed largely to the erection of the church edifice at Springville. His house was the welcome stopping-place for itinerant clergymen. He had two sons—Erasmus Darwin (1818–47) and Rev. Geo. H. Blakeslee (1817–76), the latter a Methodist minister, thirty-five years a member of Wyoming Conference, married the daughter of James Cargill, of Jackson. His daughters were Mariah, 1812, widow of Dwight Risley, now residing in Springville; Angeline (1813–70), married Charles Keeney, of Braintrim; Eleanor, 1822, married A. D. Woodhouse, of Springville; Miranda (1828-81), married Oscar Marsh, and after his death became the wife of Stephen Clark, of Carbondale. Benjamin lived and died in Dimock. One son of his, Lyman, resides at Lynn, whose daughter is the wife of James M. Jeffers, a merchant of that place. Another son is Hiram, of Dimock. Zophar Blakslee (1776-1836) occupied the hollow now covered by the village of Springville until 1829, when he subsequently removed to near the Auburn line and settled on a farm, where he died. His widow remained on this homestead for nearly thirty years after his death. His first wife was Clarinda Whitmore, who died prior to 1810, leaving children—Lucius, a merchant and contractor, who lived and died in White Haven, Pa.; Sarah Minerva became the wife of Judge Asa Packer, of Mauch Chunk; Hannah was the wife of Charles Ashley, of Springville, and died on her way to California; Clarinda married William Baker; and Fanny was first the wife of Caleb Barnes, of Springville, and after his death married William Cooley, of Auburn. His second wife, Abigail Taylor (1777-1864), bore him children—James I., born in 1815, president of the Montrose Railway, trustee of the Packer estate, and a prominent railroad and coal man, resides at Mauch Chunk; Benjamin Franklin, March 3, 1820; William W., a merchant at Wetherly, Pa.; Lucinda, the wife of Abram Luce, resides at Lynn; Eunice, wife of John Crellin, of White Haven, Pa.; Gibson lived and died on the homestead; Eliza, first the wife of Franklin Griswold and second of Lafayette Safford, of Auburn; Marion is the wife of Charles O. Skeer, of Mauch Chunk; Lemuel, born May 3, 1831; and Betsey Mariah, married Lyman G. Cogswell, of Lynn.

Benjamin F. Blakslee was sixteen years old at the death of his father, and took charge of the home farm until he reached his majority,

[1] This branch of the family spell the name Blakeslee.

when he purchased a part of it, and there carried on general farming until 1874. At this date he settled at Lynn, where he has since resided and continued the management of his farm. Although his opportunities for book-knowledge were limited in boyhood, yet his home training and early farm experience gave him practical ideas of a business life. In common with other citizens, his desire for an outlet by railroad to the county-seat, connecting with lines reaching to the sea-board, whereby the products of this section of the county might be placed in the best markets, led him to be one of the first to agitate the subject of a railroad connecting Montrose with the Lehigh system. When the matter assumed practical shape, he was made one of the executive committee at the first meeting held at Montrose for the organization of the Montrose Railway, and was one of the board of commissioners prior to the election of directors. He was sole solicitor for stock for the new road along the route and elsewhere, collected the same, and to his persevering efforts in both of these departments may be largely attributed the success of the enterprise. He has been a director of the road since its organization. Mr. Blakslee has taken little interest in politics, save to exercise the right of suffrage, yet has served his township as supervisor and collector. He married, in 1840, Eliza Mack (1818–75) a daughter of Elijah Mack, an early settler of Brooklyn. Their children are Edward M., a farmer and merchant at Lynn, the mercantile business being a partnership under the firm-name of Greenwood & Blakslee; Sarah A., first married Samuel Tyler, of Dimock, and after his death married William Low, of Auburn; Mary L. is the widow of the Rev. Wm. H. Gavitt, a Methodist clergyman and now residing in Springville; Lucy M., wife of J. Cokely, of Springville; and Dore and Lizzie, dressmakers, residing at Lynn. For his second wife, Mr. Blakslee married, in 1878, the widow of Charles H. Silkman, a lawyer of Scranton, formerly Mary E. Rogers, the daughter of Noah (1794–1855) and Lucy Bidwell (1805–74) Rogers, who were early settlers of Waymart, Pa. This Noah Rogers was a prominent and influential citizen of Wayne County, and one of the projectors of the Delaware and Hudson Railroad. Mrs. Blakslee has been an earnest worker in the church and Sunday-school since the age of fourteen, has written religious articles for publication, and essays to read in public. She has fine musical talent, having composed several pieces of music, and for many years was a successful teacher of instrumental music. In 1857 she was organist at the Adams Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, and twenty years after at the Park Place Methodist Episcopal Church, both of Scranton, Pa. She has three sons—Warren D. and Lewis P. Silkman, and Franklin A. Blakslee. One of her brothers, A. N. Rogers, since 1865, has been superintendent and general agent of the Bobtail Gold-Mining Co., of Central City, Colorado. Another brother, William E. Rogers, M.D., was a practicing physician in Scranton (1856–60), but most of his time since 1861 was spent in the Eastern States. He died in Concord, N. H., in 1886.

B. L. Blakslee

Lemuel Blakslee, youngest son of Zophar Blakslee, was five years old when his father died, and at the tender age of eleven years left the parental roof and went out into the world to carve out a home and competence for himself. From that time until seventeen years of age he worked out by the month. He then took his first trip from home, visited Mauch Chunk, and saw for the first time the operations of coal-mining. The next year he returned to that place, and for two years worked for his brother-in-law, Asa Packer. For one year following he farmed it in Jessup, when, upon reaching his majority, he began working at the carpenter's trade, which he continued until six years after his marriage. In 1856 he built a house on his own account, on the homestead, for his mother, and there himself resided also until 1862. For two years following he farmed it in Auburn township. For six years thereafter he resided on the Packer place, in Dimock; owned a farm at Kasson Corners for one year, and then purchased one on the Montrose and Tunkhannock turnpike, known as the "Porter place," which he still owns, adjoining the village. Mr. Blakslee has always exhibited a commendable enterprise, and he has evidenced his public spirit in several instances to the benefit of his fellow-townsmen. The depot building at Springville is owned by him, which he erected in 1876, and his present residence, on the west part of the Porter farm, near the depot, he built the year following. He also laid out and opened the street known as Depot Street, and donated the land upon which the graded school building is erected, situate on that street. He has been station agent at Springville since 1877, and during the construction of the road assisted in building its water-tanks. Depending upon his own resources from boyhood, by self-reliance and a laudable ambition, he has, by honorable methods, made a competence for himself and family; and besides his present property, is a half-owner with his brother, James I., of the Asa Packer place, one mile northwest of Springville. He married, in 1855, Charlotte Lane, who was born in Springville March 15, 1837. She is a daughter of Thomas (1791-1852) and Sarah Harkins (1794-1880) Lane, who resided one mile northwest of Springville village. Sarah Harkins was the daughter of Jeremiah Harkins, who was an early settler in Springville. Thomas Lane was the son of Gershom Lane, who settled in Springville about 1808. The children of Thomas Lane are Rouetta, 1820, wife of Joseph Bramhall, of Wyoming County; Hannah, 1824, married Jackson Lewis, of Bradford County; Clementine, 1829, wife of Aaron Bunnell, of Wyoming County; Anna Maria, 1833, wife of Lucius Williams, of Newark Valley, N. Y.; and Charlotte Lane (Mrs. Blakslee). Lemuel and Charlotte Blakslee's children are Jessie M.; Louise E.; Robert L.; Sarah M., who died young; James A.; Lottie C.; Marion C.; and Kate H. Blakslee.

Lemuel Blakslee

HARVEY K. SHERMAN.—His grandfather, Christopher Sherman (1758–1835), was a native of the island of Rhode Island, where he married Patience Childs. He was by occupation a farmer, and served as a soldier in the Revolutionary War. Their children were Jonathan Childs, Hiram, Jesse and Abel. Of these, Jesse settled in what is now Jessup, and raised a large family. He afterwards removed to the State of Indiana, where he died. Abel also came and settled in Jessup, reared a large family, and resided there until his death. Jonathan Childs Sherman was born in Portsmouth, R. I., October 30, 1785. When about twelve years old his parents moved to Washington County, Vt. Here he learned the trade of a cloth-dresser, at which he worked until 1809, when he came to Bridgewater (now Jessup), and purchased a tract of two hundred acres of land, upon which a small clearing had been made by Elisha Griffis.

H. K. Sherman

Here he remained until fall, cleared up a piece of land, put in a crop, erected a log house, and then returned to Vermont, where he worked at his trade during the winter. In the spring of the following year he married Abigail Cornell (1792–1822), and with his bride came to their wilderness home in Jessup, and commenced housekeeping amid the discomforts and privations of pioneer life. They had children,—David C. (1811–85), who for a number of years resided in Jessup, but afterwards removed to Bradford County, Pa., where he died; Rebecca S. (1814–78), was the wife of William B. Handrick, late of Springville; Lillis (1816–40); Avilda (1818–52), was the wife of Ralph S. Birchard, late of Jessup. In 1823 he married, for his second wife, Comfort (1795–1872), daughter of Luther and Amy Kallum, born in New London, Conn., from which place her parents removed to Bridgewater (now Forest Lake), where she married Mr. Sherman. Luther Kallum was a soldier of the Revolution. Their children are Harvey K., 1826; Amy A. (1827–70), was the wife of Andrew Blaisdell, late of Montrose; Comfort C., 1829, widow of Nelson Bolles, late of Jessup; Samuel H. (1830–64), resided in St. Louis, and enlisted under the first call of President Lincoln for troops; Ruth, 1832, wife of Chester Wright, of Forest Lake; Perry C. (1834–62), was a member of Company H, Fourth Pennsylvania Reserves, and was killed at the battle of Charles City Cross-Roads June 28, 1862; Mortimore O., 1836, now residing in Colorado. In 1811 Mr. Sherman was commissioned by Governor Simon

Snyder a lieutenant of the Seventh Company, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Regiment of State Militia, for four years. In 1828 he was appointed, by Governor Andrew Schultz, a justice of the peace for the township of Bridgewater, which office he held for a long term of years. He was known and designated for many years only as "Esquire" Sherman. In politics he was a Jacksonian Democrat, held the office of collector, and was elected one of the commissioners of the county. He was a prominent Mason, and for one or two years Lodge No. 206, of which he was a member, met at his house in Jessup. He left among his papers a certificate and traveling card from the Grand Lodge, at Philadelphia. He died esteemed and respected by his neighbors and all who knew him.

Harvey K. Sherman was born in Bridgewater (now Jessup) March 5, 1826. His boyhood was spent on his father's farm, and he had the usual advantages of the district schools. He remained with his father until he was twenty-one, and then worked out for a year for B. H. Mills. The following year he worked the homestead farm on shares. In 1848 he married Eunice (1823–51), daughter of Samuel and Eunice Backus, of Bridgewater, Pa. The same year he purchased seventy-five acres of the home farm, and the following year commenced farming for himself, built a barn and made other improvements. In 1853 he married, for his second wife, Amy, 1828, daughter of Asahel B. and Melinda Prichard, who came from Connecticut and settled in Springville in 1817. (For history of Prichard family, see sketch of Orrin Prichard.) After his marriage he returned to his farm in Jessup, where he remained until 1856 (the year his father died), when he removed to the homestead. After his father's death he purchased it of the heirs and remained on it until 1864, when he sold it to Jasper Rundell, and came to Springville. Here he purchased a farm of one hundred acres, known as the Aaron Blakeslee farm, upon which is still standing the house in which Judge Asa Packer and wife first went to housekeeping. To this farm Mr. Sherman has added sixty-eight acres, erected new barn and commodious out-buildings, and all the appointments of his farm evidence the handiwork of a practical and intelligent farmer. Their children are Earnest P. (1858–63); Morton R. (1859–63); Edward H., 1865, educated at the district and graded schools, and is now a student at the Mansfield Normal school, in the graduating course. Mr. Sherman has been identified with the Republican party since its organization, and has been active in support of its principles and in aid of its success. He was a stanch Unionist during the Rebellion, and from his home three young men enlisted and gave their lives to their country—his brother, Perry C., Albert P. Birchard and George Eckhart, while another, Samuel Tarbot, was seriously wounded. He served the township of Jessup as constable and collector and school director for five years, and has served three terms as assessor since coming to Springville. In 1849 Governor Johnson commissioned him a captain in the Susquehanna Troop of the Third Cavalry Regiment of Pennsylvania Militia. Himself and wife are members of the Methodist Church of Springville. When the Montrose Railroad was first talked of, Mr. Sherman took much interest in the enterprise, and, with others, was instrumental in securing its successful accomplishment. He is a stockholder in the road, and has been a member of its board of directors since the company organized.

In 1802 Myron Kasson, a native of Litchfield County, Conn., came from Auburn, where he had begun to make a clearing in 1799, but which he exchanged for a tract of land in Springville, which had been purchased by Chester Adams, but not improved by him. This place, located in the northwestern part of the township, Kasson cleared up, and lived there until his death, in 1859, three months after the decease of his wife. He was the father of George and Jabez Kasson, who moved to the West, and of James Kasson, residing on the homestead. The latter is the father of Myron Kasson, of Montrose. Daughters of Myron Kasson the elder married John B. Beardsley, of Auburn, and Lyman Blakeslee, of Lynn. Myron Kasson was one of the most prominent men of the township in his time and also figured in the affairs of the county with credit to his townsmen and honor to himself.

In 1802 or 1803 Reuben Spencer, a brother of Jeremiah and Samuel, came to Springville, but died in 1804. The same year Eunice Spencer became the wife of Abel Marcy, of Tunkhannock, which was the first marriage in the township. With Reuben Spencer came Daniel Brewster and Aaron Avery, who became discouraged in the course of a few years, and fearing starvation, removed to New York. Avery afterwards came back and remained in the township many years.

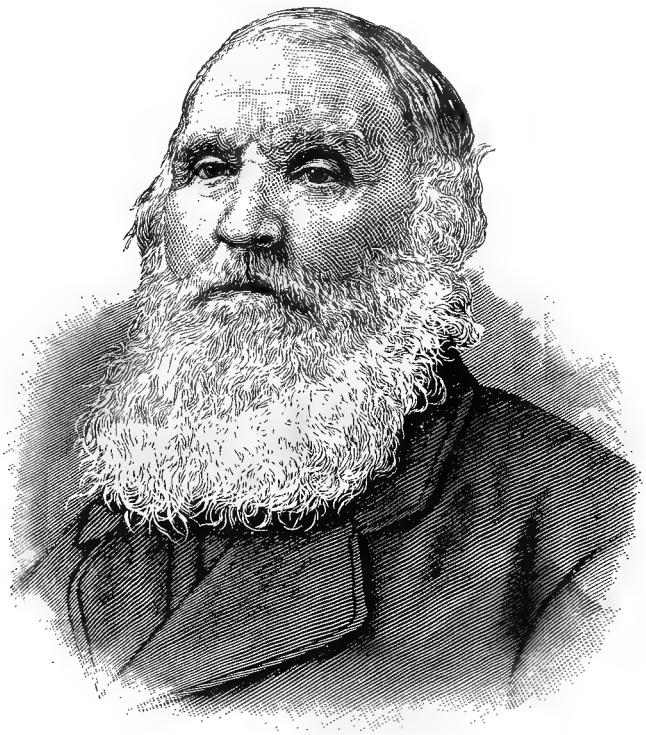
In 1803 Frazier Eaton and family came, settling in the northern part of Springville, and the following year Thomas Cassedy, wife and two children settled in the neighborhood of Capt. Spencer's place.

In 1806 Pardon Fish, Ebenezer Fish and John Bullock, with their families, came from Saratoga County, N. Y., and found a temporary home in the house which Gideon Lyman had occupied just below Capt. Spencer's, in the summer of 1803. They soon after secured more comfortable homes, and most of them became permanent settlers. Pardon Fish, Sr., died in the township, after 1850, in his ninety-ninth year. Descendants of the family are still in Springville. With this company came Justus Knapp, at that time in his seventh year, who remained in the township continuously until his death, in December, 1870. He had a family of nine children,—five sons and four daughters,—most of whom died before their father. The last son was killed at Gettysburg July 2, 1863. Justus Knapp was for many years a justice of the peace, taking that office in 1846. When he came to Springville the improvements at Montrose consisted of two log houses, and of the settlements south, to where he located, he said, in 1870,—

"There was a log house near where the Widow Isbell now lives, accupied by Dr. James Cook; the next house south was Roberts'; the next what is called the Raynsford house; the next Deacon Wells' and Deans'; the next was where Friend Hollister now lives, near the north line of Dimock township, that being the last place where we stayed overnight till we arrived at our place of destination.

"Near Dimock Corners Captain Joseph Chapman lived; the next house was occupied by Martin Myers; the next by Benjamin Blakeslee; the next by Frazier Eaton; the next by Samuel Thomas; the next by Ezra Tuttle; the next by Captain Jeremiah Spencer."

Aaron Taylor, a native of Connecticut, settled on the Susquehanna in 1796, but, in 1806, came to the southwestern part of Springville, having a farm on the turnpike. He was the father of Aaron Taylor, Jr., who afterwards settled in the Kasson neighborhood. The same year Wells Carrier came to the township.



In 1807 Jeremiah Rosencrants came from the lower part of the State and made a clearing in the township northeast of Spring Hollow. He was married to Sally Strickland, whose family came a few years later. They had sons named Jeremiah and Samuel, and daughters who married Abiathar Tuttle, Benoni Tuttle and Oliver Gray.

STRICKLANDS. — Jonathan Strickland, Sr., came from Waterbury, Conn., in 1808, and settled on the Meshoppen Creek, in the eastern part of Springville, the present residence of his grandson Theron, where he died in 1816, his wife, Susanna, having died the year previous. Two of his sons stopped at Easton, Pa.; another son, Jonathan, Jr. (1773–1853), married Polly Sutton (1772–1866), sister of Samuel Sutton, Sr., an early settler of Springville, and in 1812 came from Russell Hill, Wyoming County, and settled on the farm where Samuel Shook now resides, with a family of eight children. Two of his daughters also resided in Springville; one married Samuel Sutton, Sr., and the other was the wife of Jeremiah Rosencrant. His youngest son, Sylvester, came with the parents to this homestead.[1]

Sylvester Strickland (1791–1876) married, in 1811, Rachel Taylor (1792–1868), daughter of Obediah and Rhoda Taylor, the former of whom died in 1830, and the latter in 1855. Sylvester was pleasant and genial in his manner, social in his disposition, rather easy-going in business matters, but possessing sound judgment and discretion. His wife was a woman of great strength of character, sterling sense and strong mind, yet possessing the kindest of hearts and an affectionate disposition. She was a great worker, and the trials and discomforts of a pioneer life were met with an energy and zeal that have left their lasting impress upon her children. She was the counselor of the family and neighborhood, and "Aunt Rachel," as she was called, died respected and beloved by all who knew her, and her wise counsel and advice was remembered and followed long after her decease. Their children were Harriet C. (1812–79) married Calvin Rogers, of Springville; Ezra, born July 19, 1814; Isaac (1816) married Rachel Jayne, a daughter of Judge Jayne, of Wyoming County (he was a soldier in the late war, was a member of Company E, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry, and died in the service, leaving a family of children); Susanna A. (1819), the widow of Theron Marcey, of Tunkhannock; Rhoda E. (1820–87) was the wife of Joseph W. Fisk, a native of Springville, where he kept a hotel for a time, and afterwards removed to Whiteside County, Ill., where she died (they had seven children); John, 1822, married Mary C. Kintner, has a family and is a farmer, residing in Springville; Alfred, 1824, now residing in Kansas; Philander, born March 3, 1826; Ruth Ann, 1827, wife of Elder P. T. Maryott, a retired Baptist clergyman, residing in Springville, and their children are Calvin, Hattie, Clifford, Frederick, Philander, Rachel, Vernie and Florence Maryott; Theron, 1830, married Susan Shook, 1843, a daughter of John and Lydia (Albert) Shook, of Northampton County, Pa. (he succeeded to the homestead farm, where he now resides; they have children,—Allie, Jennie, Clark and Jesse); Clarissa (1831–83) was the wife of Martin Park, and resided near Nivin, in Springville township

[1] The political affiliations of the Strickland family to the present generation have been with the Whig and Republican parties.

Ezra Strickland

The old house erected by Sylvester is still standing, although a commodious farm-house was some years ago erected by his son Theron. He and his sons mainly cleared up the farm, and the family circle of the children remained unbroken by death for a period of thirty-three years.

EZRA STRICKLAND, the eldest son of Sylvester and Rachel Strickland, was born in Springville, and, when old enough, attended the private school taught by Hannah Parke in the log house of her brother, Colonel Thomas Parke, situated at what is now called Parke Vale, to reach which he had to travel two miles through the woods. He next attended a school taught by Esther Prichard in his father's log house. He was a hardy young man, of robust constitution. As soon as old enough to wield an axe he assisted his father in felling the forest and clearing the land. Thus he was early inured to hard work, and life at this time presented only its practical side; but the lessons of industry, perseverance and economy that he then learned were most valuable to him in after life. At the age of seventeen he purchased his "time" of his father for forty dollars, and afterwards took large contracts of wood-chopping and clearing of land. Though his educational advantages were limited, he made good use of his time while at school, and afterwards added to his book-knowledge by home study. After leaving home he taught school several winters, and for a time was engaged in lumbering on the Lehigh River. In 1834 he bought a woodland tract of fifty acres of Colonel Parke, which he cleared up and which he now resides upon, although he has added to his original purchase considerable real estate. In 1839 he married Eliza Ann Parke (1806–81), daughter of Colonel Thomas Parke (1769–1842) and Eunice (Champlin) Parke (1768–1857), who came from Newport, R. I., in 1796, and were the first settlers in Dimock. Mr. Strickland, although past his three-score and ten, is still the active manager of his farm, and during the years of his busy life has cleared nearly three hundred acres of the native forest, and his home-farm attests his industry and farmer-like care. His business methods and business transactions evince good judgment and sound financial views. He has not sought office, but has served his township as auditor and supervisor. His wife, although of delicate health, was a lady of rare intelligence and Christian excellence, and was a member of the Episcopal Church at Springville. No children blessed their marriage, but Mr. Strickland is assisted in the care of his home by his niece, Miss Florence Maryott.

PHILANDER STRICKLAND was born at the homestead in Springville, and with the other sons assisted his father in clearing up the farm and improving the home until he was twenty years of age. His early educational advantages were limited and meagre, but what book-knowledge he gained he afterwards added to by observation and experience. He early learned that life's duties were practical, and to successfully meet them required perseverance and pluck. He worked out by the month the year before coming of age, and upon attaining his majority, in 1847, he purchased one hundred and ten acres (part of Drinker's Meshoppen tract) and began life for himself. This farm, which is his present homestead, was at that time only a farm in name. There was only about four acres cleared, and the purchase money (five and a half dollars per acre) was mainly in his own two willing hands. But energy, perseverance, industry and economy are bound to succeed, and with these he was well stocked. To get money to pay for his farm he worked out during the farming season, and in the winter he made from the white ash, which here abounded, boat oars, and in the spring following would market them in Baltimore. He erected a house the year he bought the farm, which he occupied until 1868, when he built his present pleasant and commodious residence. In 1852 he married Susannah Johnson (1831–75), daughter of Benjamin A. and Zeluma (Lindsley) Johnson, who first settled in Bridgewater, but subsequently removed to Springville, where they died. Their children were John H., 1855, a farmer of Lathrop, who married Nancy Parmenter, of Springville; Phebe A., 1862, wife of D. T. Eastman, of Lathrop. In 1877 he married his present wife, Celia B. Pierpont, born in 1834, a daughter of Rufus Pierpont, of Lathrop. After the decease of her father her mother married Levi Lindsley, of Easton, Pa. Miss Pierpont's sisters are Mrs. Elizabeth Williams, of Waterbury, Conn.;

Abigail, wife of William Shelp; and Mary, who was the wife of John H. Ainey, of Springville. Her half-brothers and sisters are Rachel, wife of Dennis Johnson, of Springville; Levi, a merchant of Scranton; Rufus, who farms the homestead in Lathrop; and Fanny, wife of Wm. L. Beardsley, of Kansas. Mr. Strickland is one of the representative farmers of this county, and his buildings and all the appointments of his farm give evidence of industry and thrift and intelligent management. He has served his township for two terms as assessor and also as auditor, supervisor and school director. Both himself and wife are members of the Springville Methodist Episcopal Church.

Philander Strickland

IRA A. STRICKLAND is the grandson of Jonathan Strickland, Jr., whose children, besides Edward (1808–78), the father of Ira A., were Asa, who resided in Lathrop, where he died at the age of seventy; George, resided on a part of the homestead in Springville and died in 1876; Amanda, married Hiram Osterhout, and moved to Missouri; Mahala, married for her first husband James Ball, of Springville (her second husband was a Mr. Rhinevault, of Forest Lake, and after his death she married Jeremiah Rosencrant, whose first wife was her sister Eliza—she died at New Milford, nearly ninety years of age); Rebecca was the wife of Leonard Prichard, of Springville; Elisha, now seventy-five years of age, a farmer of Springville; Jonathan, died in Iowa; and Seth, residing in Bradford County, Pa. Edward Strickland married, in 1835, Mary Knights (1810–77), daughter of Amasa Knights, who married a Quaker lady named Aldrich, and came to Lathrop in 1816. Her parents afterwards removed to Illinois, where they both died—the father of cholera and the mother of small-pox. Their children are Ira A., born January 13, 1838; Orrin, 1840, resides at Maynard, Iowa; Emma, 1845, widow of Willard Root, of Waterville, Conn.; Eliza, wife of M. F. Button, of New Milford. Before his marriage he purchased a woodland tract of ninety acres, adjoining the Strickland homestead, erected a house and moved into it the spring following his marriage. This he cleared up, improved, and in 1859 erected the present dwelling-house. He was a careful, industrious farmer and a man of sterling integrity in his business relations; his wife was a member of the Christian Church of Springville.

Ira A. Strickland

Ira A. was born at the homestead, where his boyhood was spent in attending the district school and assisting on the farm. He taught school one term, but his natural inclinations and tastes were for agricultural pursuits, and he afterwards remained on the farm. After his father's death he purchased of the other heirs their interest in his estate and succeeded to the homestead, which is now, and always has been, his home. He has added, by purchase, 135 acres to the original farm, and he manages his extensive farming interests in a practical business way, that indicates that he has not mistaken his calling. In 1861 he married Elizabeth McCracken, born in Lemon, Wyoming County, Pa., in 1842, and was the daughter of Peter McCracken, a native of Scotland, who married Useba Avery (1815–1879), and died at West Nicholson in 1846. Their children were Henry, Otis, Charles, Elizabeth, Daniel and Volney McCracken. These five brothers were all soldiers in the late war, and it is said that Daniel McCracken was the first soldier to enlist from this county. Elisha Strickland had two sons in the army,—Peter B. and William; the former was wounded and died before Richmond. Ira A. has two children, Daniel M. and Walter, the former born in 1865, and the latter in 1869. Mr. Strickland has served his township as auditor for two terms, has been deeply interested in educational matters, is serving his third term as school director and has satisfactorily discharged the duties of treasurer of the School Board for six years.

THE TAXABLES in 1815, when what is now Dimock was still a part of Springville, were as follows:

John Austin.
Elijah Avery.
Aaron Avery.
Chas. Ashley.
Chas. Butterfield.
Zophar Blakeslee.
Merritt Blakeslee.
Benj. Blakeslee.
Aaron Blakeslee.
Leonard Blakeslee.
John Bolles.
Andrew Bolles.
John Bullock.
Samuel A. Brown.
Thos. Brown.
Amos Bronson.
John Bronson.
Joel Brooks.
Leonard Baldwin.
Dennison A. Babcock.
Isaac Babcock.
Ezekiel Babcock.
Gideon Bailey.
Henry Barkley.
John W. Camp.
Samuel Curling.
Thos. Cassedy.
Josiah Crumpton.
Aug. W. Carrier.
Joseph Cooper.
James Cotton.
Wm. Drinker, Jr.
Mason Dennison.
Thos. Emerson.
Joseph M. Ely.
Asa Fisk.
Pardon Fish.
Caleb Fish.
Nehemiah Fox.
Elisha Gates.
Spencer Hickcox.
James Hickcox.
Levi Hodges.
Hiram Hudson.
Latham Hewitt.
Israel Hewitt.
Israel Hewitt, Jr.
Thos. Johnson.
Myron Kasson.
Samuel Kellam.
Wm. Lawrence.
Allen Lawrence.
Walter Lathrop.
Asa Lathrop.
James Lathrop.
Spencer Lathrop.
Ezekiel Lathrop.
Dwyer Lathrop.
John Lewis.
Geo. W. Lane.
Thos. Lane.
John Lyman.
Gideon Lyman.
Samuel Lyman.
Jos. A. Lyman.
Benj. Lull.
F. Nickerson.
Israel S. Otis.
Chas. Otis.
John Oakley.
Seeley Oaks.
Jos. Passmore.
Henry Park.
Thos. Park.
Isaac W. Palmer.
Isaac Porter.
Benj. Prichard.
Asahel B. Prichard.
Samuel Platt.
James Russell.
Jeremiah Rosencrants.
Jeremiah Rosencrants, Jr.
John W. Robinson.
Daniel W. Robinson.
Wm. Reynolds.
Albert Rusco.
Geo. Risley.
Edward L. Randall.
Wm. Smith.
Joshua Smith.
Joshua Smith, Jr.
Thos. Smith.
Thos. A. Smith.
Elkanah Smith.
Simon Stephens.
Sylvester Strickland.
Jonathan Strickland.
Jeremiah Spencer.
Daniel Spencer.
Francis Spencer.
Samuel Sutton.
Samuel Sutton, Jr.
Archibald Sheldon.
Jesse Scott.
Titus Scott.
Walter Scott.
James Service.
Abigail Thomas.
Chas. Thomas.
Salmon Thomas.
Samuel Thomas.
Wm. Taylor.
Ezra Tuttle.
Abiather Tuttle.
Benoni Tuttle.
Wm. Tucker.
Royal Tyler.
Jonathan Taft.
Aaron Taylor.
Preston Tiffany.
Lewis Tiffany.
Joseph Wheeler.
Allen Watson.
Wm. B. Welch.
Salmon Whitcomb.
Polly Walter.
Wm. White.
W. Wilson.
A. R. Tyler.
Arad Wakelee.
David Young.
David Young, Jr.
Geo. Lagro.
Chas. McClosky.
Jas. Meacham.
Augustus Meacham.
Edward H. Meacham.
Edward Milnor.
Abel Marcy.
Isaiah Main.
James Major.
Geo. Young.
Daniel Yeoman.
Edward Goodwin.
Samuel Quick.
Martin Park.
Wm. B. Welsh.
Robt. Smales.
David Rogers.

Samuel Sutton lived east of Spring Hollow, and died on the place which was afterwards occupied by Samuel Sutton, Jr. The latter died in 1876, aged eighty years; his wife, Betsey, 1885, aged eighty-eight. His brother, Silvester, moved to the West. His sisters married,—Phœbe, Charles Thomas; and Sally, George Watson. The rifle of Samuel Sutton, Jr., is now the property of his grandson, William W. Prichard. It is an heirloom more than one hundred and fifty years old.

Amos Prichard came from Connecticut and settled on the hill northwest from Springville. He had sons named Asahel B., Marshall, Erastus and Isaac. The first-named was a carpenter at Springville village, living in the Henry Williams house. He was the father of sons named Miles and Orrin, and daughters who married,—Amy, H. K. Sherman, and Roxanna, Fred. Muzzy.

Benjamin Prichard, also from Connecticut, but not relative to the above, was a pioneer blacksmith at Spring Hollow, living on the M. Riley place.

In 1815 Titus Scott came from Waterbury, Conn., and located on the hill east of Spring Hollow. In May, 1816, he brought his family and lived at this place until he was more than ninety-five years old. In 1817 Jesse Scott, a brother of Titus, came, settling in the village, where he carried on his trade as blacksmith. He also became more than an octogenarian. Mark Scott, a third brother, came in 1822, and lived on the farm now occupied by his son, Lucius. He died in 1860, aged seventy-seven years.

In 1814 Arad Wakelee came from Waterbury, Conn., to the Barnum place, in Franklin, but three years later came to Springville and purchased a farm which had been improved, to some extent, by Samuel Pierpont. He was a public-spirited man and became very aged, dying June 6, 1879, in the ninetieth year of his age. The homestead is now occupied by David Wakelee, his son. His daughter Mary married Henry J. Webb; and Sarah M., the Rev. Luther Wolcott. On an adjoining farm lived David Wakelee, the father of Arad, and of daughters who married,—Miranda, Philander Stevens; Esther, Horace Spafford; and Eliza, A. Smith.

"[1] Augustine Meacham and wife came from Claremont, N. H., in 1818 or 1819, and resided here until both died in old age. William Drinker, agent of the Drinker estate, and an older brother of Henry Drinker, of Montrose, located in Springville some time between the years 1817 and 1820. He built the house where Thomas Nicholson lived many years, Hon. Asa Packer being one of the workmen. He had previously been married to Eliza G. Rodman, of Philadelphia. Upon leaving Springville he came to reside in Montrose, and occupied the house built by Charles Catlin, the present residence of H. J. Webb, Esq. He lived for a time in Union, N. Y., and afterwards in the 'Bowes Mansion' at Great Bend. He died at the West, about the year 1836. William Drinker, a bachelor uncle of William, the agent, came and resided with the latter in Springville. He had a fondness for literature, a good knowledge of conveyancing, and was a skillful draughtsman; many of the maps of the Drinker estate were prepared and drawn by him. He died while on a visit to Philadelphia in 1822."

In 1835, after Dimock had been set off and numerous changes had taken place, The Taxables were as follows:

Aaron Avery.
Ira Avery.
Edward S. Avery.
Volney Avery.
Daniel B. Avery.
William Avery
Willis Aldrich.
Isaac G. Aldrich.
Alva P. Aldrich.
Charles Ashley.
Nathaniel G. Ashley.
Holmes Atwood.
Harvey Buck.
John Bullock.
Elijah Burdick.
Aaron Burdick.
Zophar Blakeslee.
Aaron Blakeslee.
John Oakley.
Selah Oake.
Joshua Odle.
John Potter.
Isaac W. Palmer.
Martin Parks.
Thomas Parks.
Asahel B. Prichard.
Hector Prichard.
Benjamin Prichard.
Joseph B. Prichard.
Leonard Prichard.
Isaac Prichard.
Asa Packer.
Isaac Porter.
Jonas Philips.
Willlam W. Pride.
Lyman Prosser.
Ichabod Prosser.
Samuel Quick.
David H. Quick.
Enos P. Root.
Artemus Rosencrans.
Jeremiah Rosencrans.
Jeremiah Rosencrans, Jr.
David Rogers,
Calvin Rogers.
Silas Rogers.
E. G. Risley.
Thomas P. Risley.
George Risley.
James Russel.
Francis Spencer.
Benjamin Sheldon.
Cyrus Smalling,
Arnold Smith.
Justus Smith.
Justus Smith, Jr.
Titus Scott.
Henry Scott.
Jesse Scott.
Frederick Stephens.
Lawrence Stephens.
Daniel Spencer.
Jeremiah Spencer.
Archibald Sheldon.
Nathaniel Sheldon.
Milton Sheldon
Asahel Strickland.
Jonathan Strickland.
Sylvester Strickland.
Edward Strickland.
Elisha Strickland.
Ezra Strickland.
Samuel Sutton, Jr.
Sylvester Sutton.
Samuel Sutton.
Elijah B. Slade.
Jacob Shibley.
Samuel Stark.
Seth Stark.
Myron Tuttle.
Ezra Tuttle.
Jonathan H. Taylor.
Edmund Taylor.
Halsey Taylor.
William Taylor.
Aaron Taylor.
David Taylor.
Gideon L. Taylor.
Abiathar Tuttle.
John Tuttle.
Salmon Thomas.
Charles Thomas.
Benjamin Thomas.
Dennison Thomas.
Reuben Thomas.
George Watson.
Amos Williams.
Bradley Williams.
William B. Welch.
William White.
Arad Wakelee.
David Wakelee.
Amos Wheeler.
Williams & Stephens.
Orrin Baldwin.
Thomas Bagley.
Albert Beardsley.
Daniel B. Brooks.
Peter Brownal.
Daniel Brownal.
Erastus Brown.
Sidney Bullock.
Ziba Bullock.
Caleb Barnes.
Archibald Blandtine.
Robert Blandtine.
James Button.
Amariah Bartholomew.
Thomas Cassedy.
John Cassedy.
Abel Cassedy.
Thomas Cassedy, Jr.
Joseph Cooper.
Joseph Cooper, Jr.
Samuel Carlin.
Philip Conrad.
Enoch Davis.
Jonathan Edwards.
Pardon Fish.
Pardon Fish (2d.)
Caleb Fish.
Ezekiel Fritz.
Benajah Fowler.
Ansel Gay.
George H. Giles.
George H. Gardner.
George Gardner.
Peter Hollenback.
James W. Hickox.
Spencer Hickox.
Hiram Hudson.
Nathaniel V. Hobbs.
Amos Hall.
Jacob Hollenback.
Comfort Hubbell.
Peleg Hoadley.
William Harkins.
John Harkins.
John Hudders.
Hiram Jones.
Minor Kelley.
Myron Kasson.
George T. Kasson.
Stephen Lott.
Spencer Lathrop.
Samuel Lyman.
John Lyman.
Prentice Lyman.
Gideon Lyman.
Joseph A. Lyman.
Charles F. Loomis.
Porter Loomis.
John McLaughlin.
Sylvester Mayo.
Joseph L. Meeker.
James Meacham.
Augustine Meacham.
Samuel Monroe.
Anson Monroe.
Lewis Moody.
Abraham K. Miller.
Jonathan Nutt.
Thomas Nicholson.

ALBERT BEARDSLEY.—His paternal grandfather, Ephraim Beardsley, lived and died in Kent, Litchfield County, Conn., where for many years he was the hospitable landlord of the "inn of olden time." Philonus, son of Ephraim, left Kent in 1816 and came to the new country of Susquehanna County, then almost wholly a wilderness, and bought of John Passmore, in Auburn township, the farm now occupied by his son, John B. Beardsley, which he greatly improved before his death and made his homestead the remainder of his life. His wife was Mary Beach, whom he brought to their new home in 1817, with their family of four children. They were early identified with St. Andrew's Episcopal Church at Springville, and attendants there with their family. Their children are: Albert, born May 8, 1800; Susan married Andrew Bolles, of Dimock, and is now his widow; Charles resided in Montrose for a time, and later established an extensive carriage manufactory in New York City, and John B. Beardsley succeeded to the homestead. The father died in 1833, aged sixty-four. Albert Beardsley, eldest son, was born in Kent, and was seventeen years old when his parents came to Pennsylvania. He was educated in the home district school at Rush, and at Montrose Academy. He was a teacher in Springville, Tunkhannock, and for four terms he taught school in the vicinity of his birth in Connecticut. It was during these years that he formed the acquaintance of Eliza Gere, a native of an adjoining town to Kent, a woman of refined tastes, hospitable and genial, who has been the faithful wife and partner of his life now for over sixty years. She received an academical education and was a teacher for several terms prior to her marriage. She was born in Washington, Litchfield County, Conn., March 10, 1803, and they were married in 1826.

Some time after their marriage, in 1827, this couple settled in Springville, and the same year built their present residence, in which, in 1876, many friends met to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage, and made them happy with kindly greetings and tokens of esteem. In 1827 he taught a winter term of school in Connecticut, and in 1828 he was the teacher at Springville.

In 1830 Mr. Beardsley was appointed a justice of the peace by the Governor, and by appointment and election held the office for some twenty years in succession. Now, at the age of eighty-seven years, Esquire Beardsley narrates that in his entire time as Justice, judgment was affirmed by the higher courts in every instance, save one, when appeal was made—a high compliment to his ability, discrimination and sound judgment as a jurist. He was a warm admirer of Henry Clay, was formerly a Whig, and upon the organization of the Republican party in 1855–'56, he was one of the first to endorse its principles and advocate its measures. He has been identified further, officially, in the public affairs of Springville in serving as town clerk and treasurer for the township and schools. In business matters, by judicious management and economy, he has made a fair competence, and many years of his life have been spent in the capacity of a private broker.

Their only surviving child is Ellen, born in 1840, married in 1864 George A. Jessup, born in 1838, the son of the late Judge William Jessup of Montrose, who was educated at Montrose Academy and at Homer Academy, N. Y., now vice-president and cashier of the Scranton City Bank. Their children are: Eliza B., Albert B., Amanda Harris and George Maxwell Jessup. Mrs. Beardsley's parents were Deacon David (1767–1857) and Cynthia (Park) Gere, the latter dying before her husband at about eighty, and both natives of Litchfield County, Conn. David Gere was for twenty years a deacon in the Presbyterian Church at Kent, Conn., and settled at Montrose about 1829, where himself and wife spent the remainder of their lives. Their children were: Sally, wife of Orrin Clemens, resided in Bridgewater and Great Bend, died at the latter place, leaving eleven children; Welcome, married and resided in Kent, where he died, leaving seven children; Pamelia, wife of Benjamin Hitchcock, a merchant at Montrose, removed to New York, where both died, leaving two sons; Eliza (Mrs. Beardsley); Cynthia, 1806, the widow of Holdridge Dewey of New York, resides in Jersey City and is now eighty-one years of age; Armaluna married a Mr. Park, and is now his widow, residing at Montrose, having one daughter, Janette; Azuba, married James Helm of Wilkes-Barre, where both died, leaving two daughters; Phebe Ann was the wife of O. P. Townsend, a book-keeper in the Evangelist office, New York, for forty years, and died leaving a large family.

Albert Bierdsley

Business Interests.—The people of the township are mainly agriculturalists, but soon after its settlement small business centres were established, which have increased in importance as the surrounding resources have been developed. The oldest and largest of these places is

The Village of Springville, now located in Spring Hollow, in the most northern part of the township, west of the centre. It is one of the best-known places on the old Wilkes-Barre turnpike, south of Montrose, and is also an important station on the Narrow-Gauge Railroad. Since the completion of the latter thoroughfare the village has had its business life quickened, and its general appearance has been much beautified. In 1886 it had Methodist and Episcopal Churches, a fine school building, four stores, a large public-house, shops, post-office, and one hundred and seventy-five inhabitants.

The Blakeslees, Scotts, Prichards, Pierponts, Wakelees, Hickoxs and Baldwins were the early settlers of the hollow, as is elsewhere related. In 1827 Samuel Beardsley came from Auburn to identify himself with the interests of the village, and has remained ever since. For many years he followed the business of money broker and was also the notary public. When he became a resident F. A. Burrows was the merchant, Spencer Hickox the tavern-keeper, Benjamin Prichard the blacksmith, Ezekiel Fritz the tailor, Dr. Miner Kelley the physician, Marshall Prichard the carpenter, and some of the above-named farmers around the village. Some of the first good buildings were put up by Jesse and Emory Scott, Marshall Prichard, Dr. Elijah B. Slade and Spencer Hickox. The latter was the inn-keeper. On the site of his tavern was a small house of entertainment, opened in 1818 by Leonard Baldwin, which was enlarged and improved from time to time by Hickox, who was a popular landlord. He was succeeded by J. W. Rhoads, Samuel Loomis, and, in the fall of 1868, by Dr. P. E. Brush, who became the owner of the building. It is still his property, and was kept, in 1886, by N. H. Sherman. The hotel was entirely remodeled by Dr. Brush. In the lower part of the village David Lathrop opened another public-house, which was continued, after his death, by his widow until 1868. The building was destroyed by fire a few years ago. Many years ago the traveling public was entertained at the old Spencer House, below the village, and the stage-horses were changed at Myron Tuttle's.

On the authority of Miss Blackman, it is stated that Francis Morris & Brother sold the first goods in Springville, the year being uncertain. In 1816 Samuel Pierpont had a small store on his farm, now the David Wakelee place. In 1826 F. A. & E. Burrows opened the first regular store in a small building which stood on the McCain stand. They were succeeded, in 1830, by Noble & Day, and, later, by James Noble, who sold out to Sherman D. Phelps, later of Binghamton, N. Y. About 1840 Fred. Williams put up a new building on this site and engaged in trade, closing out in 1844. He was succeeded by Azur Lathrop and, after him, came S. S. Grover, James McMillan and Asa Park, Minot Riley and J. R. Lathrop, M. Riley, R. T. Handrick, Thomas Irving, Minot Riley and the present W. W. McCain.

Opposite this stand another store was opened by A. Beardsley about 1840, in which he and Thomas Jackson traded. Later came Ira Scott, followed by Scott and various partners—John R. Hungerford, Hungerford & Meserole, and the present C. A. Hungerford. A third stand was opened by Spencer Hickox, opposite his hotel, in which Thomas Jackson traded about 1842. Various merchants occupied it later, among them being Justus Smith, Henry Williams and Thomas D. Hoxie, of Paterson, N. J., the store being in charge of M. Prichard. It is now occupied by Isaac Meserole as a tin-shop.

After removing from the above place, Thomas Jackson built the house later converted into the M. E. Church, in which he traded a short time, then removed to Joliet, Ill., where he became very wealthy.

The furniture and undertaking establishment of Tuttle Bros. occupies a three-story frame building, erected a few years ago. Since January, 1886, I. B. & H. Lathrop have had a drug-store in Springville, the first in the village, where is kept the Springville post-office.

Springville post-office was established September 19, 1815, and Francis B. Spencer was the first postmaster. The successive appointees have been, in 1828, Spencer Hickox; 1845, Azur Lathrop; 1849; Ira Scott; 1849, Thos. Jackson; 1850, Ira Scott; 1853, Israel B. Lathrop; 1861, Amos Williams; 1862, Ira Scott; 1866, John B. Hungerford; 1874, Charles A. Hungerford; 1880, William R. Meserole; 1885, Homer B. Lathrop.

There are two mails daily from the north and the south and a tri-weekly mail from Hop Bottom. Since July 1, 1884, Springville has been a money-order office.

In 1824 John J. Whitcomb was a tanner and currier at Springville. Later, William Young was a tanner, and was succeeded in that business by Frederick Stevens. After 1840 William B. Handrick became the owner of the tannery, which was rebuilt four years later. In the course of years steam power was added and the capacity of the tannery much increased. It was burned down January 30, 1879, and rebuilt the same year. It was again destroyed by fire April 10, 1882, while operated by Byron C. Handrick, and has not since been rebuilt. Machine-shops are carried on by M. Prichard & Son (William W.), and Theron Strickland. A large shop belonging to E. H. Culver is vacant.

"In 1828 Dr. Miner Kelly was appointed justice of the peace for Springville. Either in that year or the one following, Dr. Jethro Hatch, from Connecticut, settled in the place. Previous to their coming Dr. Jackson, of Tunkhannock, was the physician for all this region. About 1835 Dr. William Wells Pride bought out Dr. Hatch, and remained nearly twenty-five years. Upon giving up the practice of his profession he removed to Middletown, Conn., where he passed the evening of his days with his daughter, Mrs. Rev. Dr. J. Taylor. One cannot correctly estimate the value to the community of two such Christian lives as those of Dr. and Mrs. Pride. Both had gone in their early prime as missionaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions (1819–26) to the Choctaws in Mississippi; the former from Cambridge, N. Y., and the latter as Miss Hannah Thatcher, from Harford, Susquehanna County. Two of their children were born at the South. On account of the doctor's failing health, the family were obliged to come to the North, the parents most regretfully leaving the work to which they had hoped to give the remainder of their days. Dr. Pride had been established in Gibson a short time before coming to Springville. In the latter place he was a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church, and an active anti-slavery advocate. Mrs. Pride died at Middletown, Conn., August 8, 1861, aged sixty-three years; Dr. Pride, March 24, 1865, aged sixty-nine years. His house in Springville is now owned and occupied by Thomas Nelson, Esq."[1]

Dr. Israel B. Lathrop has been a practicing physician in Springville since 1844, and is one of the oldest practitioners in the southern part of the county. For some years he was contemporary with Dr. Pride and succeeded Dr. J. R. Hall. Prior to 1860 Dr. P. E. Brush followed his profession three years, served in the army and practiced a short time after his return. He is still a resident of the place, though not in practice. In 1878 Dr. Homer B. Lathrop engaged in practice actively for six years, and is also a resident of the village. Dr. F. G. Grattan is in active practice. Other practitioners at this point were Drs. John G. Woodhouse, A. C. Blakeslee, N. C. Mackey, C. D. Mackey and E. B. Slade.

Maple Lodge, No. 902, I. O. O. F., was instituted at Springville July 17, 1883, with twenty charter members and the following principal officers: H. B. Lathrop, N. G.; Z. N. Smith, V. G.; W. W. Prichard, Secretary; C. A. Hungerford, Treasurer. In 1886 there were sixty-five members and the following officers: S. A. Shook, N. G.; Lemuel Blakeslee, V. G. W. W. Prichard, Secretary; and I. A. Strickland, Treasurer. The lodge owns a large, well-furnished hall in the third story of the Tuttle building.

MINOT RILEY. — His grandfather, John

[1] Blackman.

Riley, came from Dublin when he was eighteen years old, with a merchant of that city who was emigrating to America, intending to establish a mercantile business in New York City. Young Riley was accompanying him, expecting to enter his employ after their arrival. The merchant died during the passage over, and the young man landed in New York with little money and no friends. Having received a liberal education in the old country, he turned this, his only "stock in trade," to good account and went to teaching school. He was in Connecticut engaged in this avocation when the War of the Revolution broke out, and leaving his schoolroom, he enlisted as a soldier. After the Revolutionary War he married a Mrs. Goodsell, whose maiden-name was Davis, and settled in Connecticut. They had children,—Henry and John. John Riley, Jr., was born in Connecticut, October 31, 1788. His early boyhood was spent at home, and, his father being a teacher, he had superior educational advantages. But a student's life had no charms for him and his half-brother, Lloyd Goodsell, having settled in Braintrim (now Auburn) in 1799, he determined to seek his fortune in that new country, and in 1807 came all the way on foot from Connecticut.

He first found employment at lumbering down on the Susquehanna River, near Meshoppen. About 1811 he settled in Auburn and took up a woodland tract of one hundred acres. He lived with his half-brother while making a clearing and putting up a log house. In 1812 he married Polly Miles, a daughter of Jonathan Kellogg, and a native of Connecticut. After his marriage he took his bride on horseback to their log house home and immediately commenced housekeeping. He erected a sawmill on the west branch of the Meshoppen Creek, which passed through his farm, and was afterwards known as Riley Creek.

Minot Riley

He was recognized as a shrewd and enterprising farmer and business man, possessing much wit and sound sense and was a good financier, never owing more than he could pay. He died in 1880, at the age of ninety-two, and his wife survived him until she reached the same ripe age. They had lived together as man and wife nearly the full term of man's allotted years. Their children were Kellogg (1813–40), was for a number of years a merchant of Tunkhannock, in company with Sherman D. Phelps; Harriet, 1816, died young; Minot; Harriet (2d), 1821, widow of the late Dr. J. P. Lambert, now residing in Illinois; Eliza (1823–72), was the wife of John M. Bushnell, of Auburn. Minot Riley was born Nov. 15, 1818, in Auburn, Pa., where he spent his boyhood on his father's farm. He had the advantages of the district schools, and later attended select school. After attaining his majority he spent a part of his time on his father's farm, and part of the time lumbering for a year or two. About this time he went to Tunkhannock and assisted his elder brother in the store, and there received his first lessons in the mercantile business. After his brother's death, in 1840, he remained to settle up his estate and then came back to Auburn and assumed charge of the home farm. In 1842 he married Emily C., daughter of Oren (1796–1885) and Eleanor V. Avery (1797–1852) Baldwin. Her father came from New Hampshire and settled in Springville, where she was born January 6, 1821. In 1835 her parents removed to Tunkhannock, at which place she was married. Mr. Riley brought his bride to the home farm, where he remained until 1844, when he went to Tunkhannock (now Lemon) and purchased a grist-mill situated on the main branch of the Meshoppen Creek. This he overhauled and repaired, and in March of that year, after he had his mill in running order, a big freshet came, demolished the bulkhead and carried the mill down the stream a half-mile and completely ruined it. Nothing daunted by this serious misfortune, he immediately commenced the work of rebuilding, and, although he had to take his lumber from the "stump" and erect the mill on a new site, he had it completed and was ready to commence grinding in July following. About 1848 he sold the grist-mill and purchased a saw-mill about one and one-half miles farther down the stream, and turned his attention to lumbering for two or three years. He then returned to Auburn and farmed the home farm, under an arrangement with his father, until 1857, when he came to Springville and purchased a half-interest in a store and stock of goods and entered into partnership with Ira Scott. This was the commencement of a mercantile career that, with slight interruptions, he continued for nearly thirty years. The partnership with Scott was dissolved in 1858 and shortly afterwards Dr. I. B. Lathrop became associated with him in the business, and the firm of Riley & Lathrop continued until 1861, when Dr. Lathrop retired, and he continued the business alone. In 1872, shortly after he sold his stock and business to Roscoe Handrick, he became a partner with Albert Alger in the mercantile business at Lynn, which terminated with his death in 1874. He resumed business again at Springville afterwards, and in 1885 he again sold out his mercantile business to W. W. McCain. Since retiring from business Mr. Riley devotes most of his time to his farm, which he purchased in 1878. He has also recently purchased what was known as the "Vanness" farm, and it would seem to be his desire that his latter years should be spent as his earlier years were—in agricultural pursuits.

His pleasant home in the village he erected in 1869, and here he resides surrounded by the comforts that a life of business activity has garnered. Diligent in business, honorable in his dealings, he represents the best type of the successful country merchant and careful financier. Of the four children born to them but one survives. Their names are Morton Wilmot (1843–44), George Clinton (1852–64), Mary Ursula (1855–64). Their surviving son, Stuart, 1860, was educated at the district and select schools of his native town. He also received a business training in his father's store, and was in partnership in the business, under the firm-name of Riley & Son, when his father sold out and retired. He is now engaged at farming with his father and resides at home.

Lynn is a pleasantly located village on the turnpike, several miles below Springville village. It contains a fine church, three stores, several shops and fourteen residences. A little more than a mile east is Lynn Station, on the narrow-gauge railroad, which is the shipping-point for this part of the township. In 1816 A. Luce came from Pittston and opened a wagon-maker's shop, in which were built the first platform wagons in the county. Several hands were employed and business was carried on quite extensively about a dozen years. Near this time, in 1868, he built his large brick residence and, about the same time, Miner K. Williams built another fine brick house on the opposite corner. Soon after the place assumed a substantial growth, but has become more important as a business point only in recent years. It is said that James Piatt sold the first goods, occupying a small building which has been burned up. The first store-house of noteworthy size was erected by Dean & Johnson, who occupied it for trading purposes several years. A large number of firms have merchandised at Lynn, some remaining in trade but a short time. In 1883 A. B. Sheldon put up a store building on the corner opposite the old stand in which George & Irwin Luce have traded since 1884. Near by is the new store of Greenwood & Blakeslee, and on the old site is the store of James M. Jeffres, which was remodeled in 1886.[1] The old building had a dozen different occupants, Miner K. Williams being one of those who there merchandised. In this building is kept the Lynn post-office, which was established April 21, 1836, with John Cassedy as the first postmaster. His successors were, in 1840, Thomas Cassedy; 1845, Stephen Lott; 1849, Thomas Cassedy; 1851, Andrew Johnson; 1853, David G. Sherman; 1859, Henry N. Sherman; 1861, Edward M. Phillips; 1866, Eugene S. Handrick; 1869, Orville T. Spencer; 1876, Charles W. Smith; 1878, James W. Osterhout; 1882, F. S. Greenwood and Arthur L. Titus; 1883, F. S. Greenwood; 1885, James M. Jeffres. Two mails per day are supplied. Dr. A. L. Boughner is the resident physician at Lynn. Other practitioners have been Dr. Miner Kelley, Dr. D. N. Camp, Dr. C. D. Mackey and Dr. D. W. Sturdevant.

Springville Lodge, No. 181, I. O. O. F., was instituted at Lynn July 21, 1876, with twenty-one members and H. A. Mack as the first Noble Grand, and A. R. Safford, Secretary. Since that time the Noble Grands have been A. B. Sheldon, A. R. Safford, M. K. Williams, C. A. Hungerford, W. W. Prichard, F. L. Fish, G. L. Coggswell, M. B. Lyman, J. M. Jeffres, W. E. Taylor, Herbert Fish, Edgar Ely, S. O. Crawford, Thomas Ellsworth, William Smales, N. C. Mackey, B. C. Handrick and S. L. Garrison. The lodge has sixty-two members, meets in a fine hall in the Jeffres building, and is in a prosperous condition.

Niven is a post-office and hamlet in the southeastern part of the twnship. The locality was first known as "Fisk's Corners," and most of those residing here at an early day embraced the Mormon faith and left the country about 1836, to connect themselves with Mormon settlements in the West. Joseph Fisk owned one of the farms at the Corners, and died at that place. Other settlers here were people named Monroe, Winters, Hall, Oakes and Shibley, the latter living across the line, in Wyoming County; and Joseph Shibley was a preacher of this sect. In their profession they were not polygamous, and were reputed good citizens. After their removal another class of settlers came, and a number of them made way for the present occupants of the many fine farms of this section. Among those coming in last were the Parke, Stark, Squiers and Stephens families.

Dr. J. P. Lambert opened a small store on the A. Parke place and also followed his profession, but did not remain long. Others sold goods here, the last one being Justus Hickox, after the late Civil War. Not long after the store was opened J. W. Fisk built a public-house, which he sold in 1865 to Jeremiah Stephens, who kept a licensed place till 1877. Upon his removal here he became the postmaster, serving until 1881, when Rosetta A. Stephens was appointed, and the office held at the same place. Three mails per week are supplied. Niven post-office was established August 14, 1855, and was named for the Hon. Niven, through whose influence it was secured, and Seth B. Stark was the first postmaster. He was succeeded, in 1861, by Joseph W. Fiske, and the latter four years later by J. Stephens.

[1] Burned March 6, 1887.

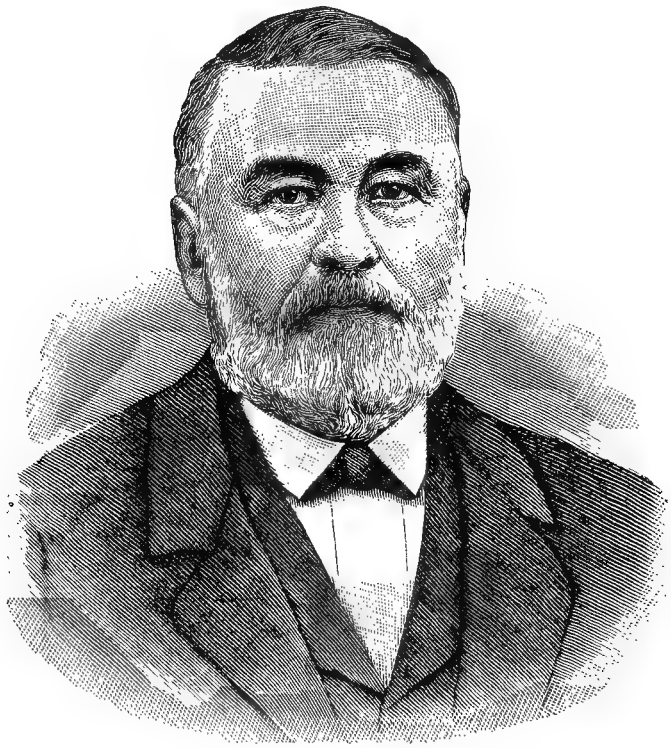
The hamlet has had mechanic shops, and in 1880 had thirty-seven inhabitants.

The first saw-mill in the eastern part of the township was built in 1824 by Samuel Rosengrant, and quite an extensive business was done in sawing lumber and hauling it down the creek about ten miles, where it was formed into rafts and run down the river. Nathaniel Hobbs had another mill at the outlet of Schooley Pond, about the same time; and other mills, some of them portable, were built, but as a rule they proved poor investments to the owners, and hastened the destruction of much timber which would now be valuable. One of the best sites on the Meshoppen has become known as States Mills. In 1826 a saw-mill on this site was owned by Ezra Tuttle, who died that year from injuries received in the mill. A grist-mill was built later, and, in 1835, the Odell family owned it. In time J. States became the proprietor and still owns the saw-mill. The grist-mill was burned down early in 1886, but has been rebuilt by N. M. Seeley. In the lower part of the township a steam-mill, owned by H. A. Mack, was burned, and, being rebuilt, was again destroyed by fire in 1882. Northeast from Springville village R. Squires had a good steam saw-mill, which has lately been inoperative. Near the Dimock line was a water-power saw-mill, and, farther down the same stream, other small mills have outlived their usefulness.

Asa Packer purchased a number of farms in the township, which he improved for dairying, and established a creamery near the village of Springville, where the milk from these farms was consumed. This creamery is still carried on by Lemuel Blakeslee.



Benjamin Stephens, son of Eliphalet and Elizabeth Felten Stephens, was born in Nicholson township, Wyoming County, June 26, 1817. His grandfather, Eliphalet L. Stephens, came from Connecticut with his family and settled on the east side of Tunkhannock Creek, about three miles below the present site of Nicholson, having children—Jessie settled in Nicholson township and died there at ninety-three, leaving a family of children; and Eliphalet. By a second marriage he had a son Lord, who died in Carbondale; and by his fourth marriage he had children—Katy, wife of Hiram Stark, of Lemon township, Wyoming County; Sally, widow of Ziba Smith, resides in Nicholson borough; Betsey, wife of Gordon Hewett, died in Lemon township; Polly and Peggy, died young women; Ward, in Lathrop; William lived in Nicholson, was drowned in the Tunkhannock and left a family; Elsie, wife of William Felten, died in Lathrop.

Eliphalet (son of Eliphalet L.) Stephens' children are Jessie, resides in Kansas; William, married, died and left a family in Hyde Park; Rachel is the wife of Lewis Billings, of Lemon township; Benjamin; Joseph, a farmer in Nicholson, on the homestead, resides in the stone house, where his father lived, on the west side of the Tunkhannock; Heister resides in Nevada; George, a farmer in Wisconsin; Halloway, drowned in the Mississippi at the age of twenty-three; Elizabeth, married John Schooley and resides in Nevada with Heister; Abagail, died in Wisconsin, leaving a family; Ritner, a farmer in Wisconsin; and Eliphalet, the youngest, last heard of in Missouri. All of the above married, and eleven of them reared families.

Benjamin Stephens spent his boyhood at home until he was sixteen, when he was placed in charge of a farm by his father, which he and his sister Rachel successfully managed for one year. The balance of his minority was spent in farming and lumbering with his father, receiving very meagre opportunities for any education from books; yet he got practical ideas of business, which formed the basis of his successful career afterwards.

The year he became of age he paid for his first yoke of oxen by getting in lumber donated him by his father. In 1840 he cut logs on his father's property for a raft, manufactured the lumber at his father's mill, and in the spring of 1841 his brother Joseph rafted the same to Columbia, realizing therefor five dollars per thousand. This gave him money, which he applied in payment for the improvements on one hundred and four acres which he had bought of his father in 1840, formerly the property of Erastus Brown. He had to pay for the right of soil to the Drinker estate, and afterwards added forty-six acres to his purchase. In August, 1840, he married Delilah (1823–52), a daughter of Jeremiah and Sophia Rosengrant, of Springville, whose family are elsewhere mentioned in this history. In October following he went to house-keeping on his farm, but soon removed to East Nicholson and worked for his father to complete the payment of his improvements. This couple met the obstacles then incident to house-keeping with fortitude and patience. Their first house was a plank one, twenty-four by sixteen. Mr. Stephens built the present one in 1853, at various times spacious out-buildings, and the farm is well-fenced with substantial stone wall. He was an industrious farmer, a man of good judgment, and reared his children to habits of industry and honesty of purpose. He was early a Whig, later a Republican, and held the offices of supervisor and poor-master for twelve years. The children by this marriage are Jeremiah, born 1841, resides at Niven, is serving his second term as justice of the peace, married Rosetta Stark, of Springville; Henry, 1843, farmer in Nevada; (Reno), married first Lydia Brown, of Nicholson, and after her death, Emily Quick, of the same place; Miner, 1849, a farmer adjoining the homestead in Springville,

Benjamin Stephens

married first Mary Vaugh, and second, Emma Felton. Benjamin Stephens, in 1852, married Caroline (1821–85), daughter of Peter and Rebecca Bond, a native of Northampton County, Pa., who bore him children, Otto Silsman and Newton H., died young; Appleton Bryant, born 1858, resides on the homestead, married Emily, daughter of Washington and Mary Waterman, of Nicholson township. Benjamin Stephens' third wife, whom he married in 1885, is Mary E. Shibley, born in 1824, a daughter of John and Sarah Shibley, who was the widow of Henry Stark, of Nicholson township, and her surviving children are, Augusta, Loren L., Sarah E. and Daniel Stark.

Mr. Stevens built his present residence in Nicholson borough in 1874, where he has resided since. He keeps the management of his farm in his own hands, and has placed his four sons on farms which he has purchased.

ALBERT SQUIER.—His paternal great-grandfather, with his oldest son, residents of New Jersey, served in the Revolutionary War, and his father, Arah Squier, was drafted in the War of 1812. His grandfather, Stephen Squier, removed from New Jersey, and settled with his family in Nicholson in 1793, where he died. He was a shoemaker by trade, but on coming to Pennsylvania bought some four hundred acres of land, upon which he made considerable improvement during his life. Arah Squier (1789–1870) was four years old when the family settled in Nicholson. He married Fanny (1797–1841), the daughter of Col. Levi Phelps, who settled in Lathrop, at the junction of Tarbell's Pond and Horton's Creek, in 1812, and for a time was a farmer on the Phelps place, and he was also a lumberman. Their children are Ira, born in 1813, married Emeline Lovee and resides at Nicholson; Fanny, 1815, the wife of Seth B. Stark, of Springville; Albert, born November 27, 1817, in Nicholson township, then Luzerne County; Nathaniel (1819–76) married Nancy Robinson, was a farmer in Nicholson, where his widow resides; Arah (1821–75) was three times married,—first to Perlina Place, second to Adelia Ball, third to Hannah Robinson, and resided and died at Tunkhannock; Amanda, 1823, widow of Densmore Stark, of Springville, resides at Scranton; Wealthy Ann, 1825, wife of Ziba Billings, proprietor of the Packer House, Tunkhannock; Mary (1827–75) was the wife of Lewis Billings, of Nicholson; Daniel T. died at six; Rebecca (1831–76) was the wife of Jedediah Hewett, of Brooklyn; William, 1834, married Frances, daughter of Dr Samuel Wright, of Lathrop, and resides on the Wright homestead; Eliza, 1841, wife of Alonzo Foot, of Scranton.

Albert Squier

Of these children, Albert Squier has spent most of his active business life in Springville, where he is known as a man of sterling integrity, of correct habits and an honorable citizen. He was reared on the farm, and early learned what hard work meant. His first venture for himself was just before becoming of age, when he hewed oars enough to buy himself a colt with the proceeds. In 1837 he bought one hundred and eighteen acres, a woodland tract in the southeast corner of Springville township, erected his log house, in which he kept bachelor's hall, while he was making improvements on his land, which had cost him three dollars per acre. In 1841 he married Elizabeth Phelps, who was born in Nicholson December 21, 1823, who has been a help-mate worthy in every way, and has done her part well from the beginning of their married life in poverty to their present comfortable competence, both herself and husband having been members of the Methodist Church at West Nicholson for the past forty-four years, and supporters of the various charities in their vicinity. In 1848 Mr. Squier built his first frame house, and in 1864 he erected his present residence. His life work has been general farming and dairying, and all the appointments of his place, with its commodious out-buildings and from four to five miles of stone wall, show his persevering industry, and are a monument to his ambition and thrift to those who succeed him in the ownership of this property. Although not blessed with any living offspring of their own, their nephew, Elijah Harris Phelps, has resided with them from his boyhood, and is now the main manager of the farm. Their only child, Luman Squier, died in 1860 at the age of seventeen. Mr. Squier has never been an aspirant for office, but has been interested in local matters, has acted with the Democratic party, and has served his township as school director. Elizabeth Phelps' parents were David (1795–1852) and Roxanna Sackett (1795–1869) Phelps, married in 1813, who resided at Nicholson, and whose children were Mary, born 1815, wife of Alvah Aldrich, of Plymouth, N. Y.; Almira, 1817, wife of Sanders Ward, of Cicero, N. Y., died at Nicholson; David C., 1821, married Altheda Sheffield, and resided at Nicholson, moved to Illinois, and died in Kansas; Elizabeth, 1823 (Mrs. Squier); Levi, 1829, married Cynthia Camp, of Maryland, and has children; Otis (1833–63) enlisted in 1862, Company A, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and was killed the following year, near Falmouth, Va. (married Serepta Harris, daughter of Elijah Harris, of Lemon, and left children,—Sarah, Roxanna and Elijah Harris Phelps); Homer, 1836, married Lydia Beebe, and resides in Springville, and has children,—Henry D., Jesse E, William H., Tempia A., Mary A. and Ida M. Phelps.

One son of Sanders Ward, above noticed, James H. Ward, enlisted also in Company A, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and served three years, being mustered out at Richmond in August, 1865. He was a resident of Springville, but enlisted from Wyoming County. This David Phelps was the son of Col. Levi Phelps, before mentioned, whose other children were Alvah, Curtis, Ira (drafted and went as far as Danville in 1814), Griswold, Millie, Polly, Phebe and Fanny Phelps (Mrs. Arey Squier).

EDUCATIONAL AND RELIGIOUS.—An account of the early schools is elsewhere given, and mention of a few select schools only is here made.

"In the fall of 1843 or '44 William Belcher proposed teaching a select school in Lyman settlement, providing he could get a room. John and Joseph A. Lyman built a small house on the old homestead, near the Junction, or corners of five roads, where the school was kept for several years, and which became known as the Lymanville Select School, giving name Lymanville, as it has been called ever since, though there is no village. The Methodist Episcopal Church parsonage and school-house is all there is to distinguish it from other farming communities." [1]

About 1845 J. Lorenzo Lyons established a select school in a private residence, which was successfully taught a number of years, and which was attended by about thirty pupils. He subsequently became a missionary to Syria, but is at present a colporteur in Florida. From 1849 to 1851 Miss Caroline Skinner, a sister of the Rev. G. M. Skinner, at that time rector of St. Andrew's Church, taught a select school of much the same nature as Rector Freeman Lane had taught, at an earlier day, in the village of Springville. She was an accomplished teacher, very exemplary in her life, and her memory is still highly cherished.

[1] Miss Blackman.

Miss Dora Scott and Miss A. Etheridge had a well-attended school. In the same period the Rev. A. H. Sloat had another select school, and the aggregate attendance of the two was more than one hundred.

Professor S. S. Thomas, a native of the township, is a very successful public school teacher and has taught twenty sessions of select schools in Springville, much of the instruction being devoted to the preparation for teaching.

In the summer of 1882 the citizens of Springville village raised nearly one thousand dollars, which, with the sixteen hundred dollars appropriated by the township, was used in building a fine school edifice in that village. It has a good location, on one acre of ground, and has an attractive exterior. It is thirty by fifty-two feet, two stories high and substantially finished.

In this building a graded school of three departments was opened in the fall of 1882, under the principalship of C. O. Bramhall. He was succeeded by Harry James, who was principal until the close of the schools, in 1886. In the fall of that year C. O. Bramhall again assumed charge and is the present principal. More than one hundred and twenty-five pupils are in attendance, many of them being residents of other townships. The school is maintained at a yearly expense of nearly $1,000 per year.

Soon after the settlement of the county Methodist meetings were held in the southern part of Springville, where afterwards was organized the Lyman Class. This was composed mostly of members of the Lyman family, Joseph Earl, George Atkinson, William Belcher, Nathaniel Sheldon, John Oakley, William Taylor and some others living in Wyoming County. Meetings were held at private houses, in the woods, and in the school-house, as soon as it was built, and the preachers came at long intervals only. The Rev. Silas Comfort was one of the first presiding elders, and in 1812 the Rev. George Harmon held that position in this section of the country; in 1815 the Rev. Marmaduke Pearce; and in 1819 the Rev. George Lane. After 1830 preaching was held statedly by ministers assigned to what became the Springville Circuit, which extended over a large area of country, but which had this section as a centre, so that the work became more permanent and led to the demand for a house of worship consecrated to the services of the Methodist Church. Accordingly was built, in 1842, a plain frame meeting-house, thirty-six by forty-eight feet, which became known as "The Lymanville Church," but which was incorporated September 2, 1848, as the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Springville, on the petition of the following persons, at that time members of the church: Joseph Whitham, Samuel Lyman, Timothy D. Walker, George Atkinson, Joseph A. Lyman, N. Sheldon, Prentiss Lyman, Landis Lyman, Elihu H. Lyman, William Belcher, Whitman Earl and William Taylor. Previous to the building of the church, a home for the preacher had been built on the land of Gideon Lyman, but in 1851 the old buildings were removed and a new parsonage was erected, which is still the home of the ministers of Springville Circuit. The church was repaired in 1878, and the property is at present in a fair condition. In 1886 the trustees were N. B. Sheldon, U. A. Church, Willis Walker, H. A. Spencer, L. S. Taylor and G. G. Rogers. Two of the former members of this church have become foreign missionaries, leaving this country in August, 1883, for Tokio, Japan, where they became teachers in the Anglo-Japan College. They are David S. and John O. Spencer, sons of H. A. Spencer, for many years one of the principal members of this church. The former was born in 1854, and the latter in 1857, and were educated in the Wyoming Seminary. Francis Spencer, Jr. (of another family) also became a minister of the Gospel from this church, as also did George H. Blakeslee, of the same township.

The bounds of Springville Circuit have been frequently changed, several other circuits having been formed out of it. In 1886 it embraced the appointments at Lymanville, Lynn, Springville and Dimock, and there were nearly two hundred members on the circuit. Prior to 1830 the preachers of the old circuit were the Revs. Thomas Wright, Joshua Dawson, Caleb Kendall, Joshua Rogers, Mark Preston, William Lull and Philetus Parkiss.

In 1830 the Methodist Churches of this section were served by the ministers of Bridgewater Circuit, Susquehanna District of the Oneida Conference. In 1841 the name of the circuit was changed to Springville, and the district to Wyoming. In 1855 Wyalusing District, in the Wyoming Conference, took its place, and so continued until 1877, when this county was classed in the Binghamton District, where it still remains.

In 1816 a class of Methodists was formed at Springville which had seven members, and of which Abiathar Tuttle was the leader. Thomas Lane was a later leader. Betsey Sutton and Sarah Harkins were active members. Samuel Sutton became the leader at a still later day. The first preaching services were held in private houses, and in an old log school-house near Ezra Tuttle's. For a time no meetings were held in this locality, and the few surviving members had to attend meetings at Dimock Four Corners. The membership being augmented, services were again regularly held in the village of Springville, and in 1861 The Second Methodist Episcopal Church of Springville was established in its own house of worship. For this purpose a building which had been erected by Thomas Jackson for a storehouse was remodeled and converted into an attractive edifice, which is still used. November 22, 1865, the church became an incorporated body, with the following trustees: Abiathar Tuttle, John Compton, Jacob N. Vought, Loren Newton, J. W. Rhodes, Joseph S. Risley. The class is at present under the leadership of Professor C. O. Bramhall, and is in a flourishing condition.

The Lynn Methodist Episcopal Church is the youngest organization of that denomination in the township, and may justly be called a memorial to the enterprise and devotion of a few ladies residing in the hamlet where the church stands. On the 6th of October, 1880, a Ladies' Aid Society, of eight Methodist members, was formed, whose general object was to promote the interests of the church. A fund of one dollar was secured at this meeting. At the second meeting it was decided to build a church, and a fund of two dollars was secured towards that object. A series of entertainments were now held, which materially augmented the building-fund, and in 1881 subscriptions were solicited with a view of commencing to build. The operations were placed in charge of a committee composed of A. Luce and Lucinda Luce, James Jeffres and Edith Jeffres, B. F. Blakeslee and Mary Blakeslee. An eligible lot was donated by Mrs. A. Luce, upon which was begun a building in the Gothic style, thirty by fifty feet, with a corner tower for a vestibule and belfry, the latter being thirty feet high. In the corner-stone were placed the names of the following persons, at that time members of the Ladies' Aid Society: Mrs. Lydia Blakeslee, president; Mrs. Alvina Hemstead, secretary; Mrs. Lucinda Luce, treasurer; Mrs. Hattie Fish, Mrs. Mary Sheldon, Mrs. Mary White, Mrs. Edith Jeffres, Mrs. Jennie Spence, Miss Laura Fish, Mrs. Hattie Osterhout, Mrs. Betsey Coggswell, Miss Lillie Blakeslee, Mrs. Eliza Safford, Mrs. Mary Blakeslee, Mrs. Hiram Fish and Lyman Coggswell. The society, as a body, raised $549.61, and $904.38 was raised by subscriptions through their efforts, a number of the ladies contributing generous amounts themselves. In addition, much labor was donated, so that the actual cost of the edifice was not far from eighteen hundred dollars. It was formally dedicated November 24, 1883, when the ladies transferred the property to the Methodist Church. In December, 1886, the belfry was supplied with a clear-toned bell weighing five hundred pounds, and the building is now one of the most complete in this part of the county. Mrs. Lucinda Luce was especially prominent in the erection of this fine building. Franklin Brooks is the leader of the class, which has twenty-two members, and Emory

Taylor superintends a flourishing Sabbath-school.

The Presbyterian Church of Springville is on the turnpike less than a mile above Lynn. It stands on an elevated lot of ground opposite the cemetery, which was opened as early as 1804. Although the congregation was organized in 1819, the church edifice was not completed for dedication until February 9, 1837, when the Rev. Sylvester Cooke was the pastor. The church had been built the preceding year by Justus Smith, Sr., Justus Smith, Jr., Lyman Avery and Dr. William Pride, as a committee, acting with the pastor. It was repaired in 1871, and is still in good condition. The structure is a frame, surmounted by a spire, which can be seen many miles around.

When the congregation was organized the Rev. Enoch Conger was the minister, preaching, before the church was built, in the school-house in this neighborhood. The next regular minister was the Rev. Sylvester Cooke, prior to 1836, and after him came the Rev. Archibald B. Sloat, B. Baldwin and James W. Raynor. The latter was the last installed pastor the church has had, the ministers since his leaving being supplies, preaching at irregular periods. The church never had a strong membership, and many of its members withdrew to connect themselves with congregations in the adjoining townships, leaving but very few belonging. Orrin Fish, the last ruling elder, removed, leaving Deacon H. G. Ely as the only surviving officer, and, as he is more than eighty-four years old, age has incapacitated him from active service. The church is mainly used for funeral services by those who inter in the cemetery opposite. This is inclosed with a substantial stone wall, and contains some neat monuments. A parsonage was formerly a part of the church property. It was secured through the efforts of the ladies of the neighborhood, but it has been sold, and the proceeds have been applied for the benefit of the church.

St. Andrew's Church, Protestant Episcopal, is the successor of an earlier organization of this faith, whose history was given by Miss Blackman as follows:

"ST. JUDE'S CHURCH.—Some time previous to 1815 several families from Waterbury and its vicinity, in Connecticut, removed to and settled in Springville Being mostly Episcopalians, they established a stated Sabbath meeting, some one reading the service from the prayer-book and a sermon from some published volume. They were visited by the Rev. George Boyd, of Philadelphia, during whose stay a church was organized, a vestry elected, and application made for a charter of incorporation. The charter was granted by the Governor 7th October, 1817, and Joel Hickcox, Amos Bronson, Thomas Parke, John Camp, Titus Scott, Randall Hickcox, Benjamin Welton, Spencer Hickcox, John Bronson and Leonard Baldwin were appointed the first vestry. The Society for the Advancement of Christianity in Pennsylvania sent the Rev. Manning B. Roche, who alternated for some months between Springville and Pike, occasionally preaching in other places. About 1825 the Rev. Samuel Marks was sent to Springville, where he resided several years, officiating occasionally throughout the county. He was a man of popular manners, made many friends and did much good."

The meetings were held at the house of Titus Scott and in the school-house, in the village, and there were but few communicants. In 1829 it was proposed to erect a church edifice, and a difficulty arising in relation to the election of the vestry, which was not settled for several years, Bishop Henry N. Onderdonk advised that a new charter be procured and a new organization be made under it. Accordingly, a new charter was obtained in May, 1832, with the name of "St. Andrew's Church," and a vestry was chosen as follows: Thomas Cassidy, Arad Wakelee, Myron Kasson, A. B. Prichard, Philonus Beardsley, Asa Packer and Amos Williams. A lot of ground was donated by A. B. Prichard, in the village of Springville, upon which a plain frame church with a belfry was built, mainly by the above-named vestrymen.

Arad Wakelee secured aid from friends in Philadelphia, and Asa Packer himself worked on the church as a journeyman carpenter. In the course of years a pipe-organ was supplied, and for thirty-five years Miss S. M. Wakelee was the organist. In 1851 a bell was placed in the belfry, and subsequently the church was repaired. It was destroyed by fire February 14, 1879. A movement was at once set on foot to rebuild the following spring, and the present neat chapel was erected by an executive committee composed of Dr. I. B. Lathrop, Isaac Meserole and Albert A. Root. The Rev. George D. Stroud, who served the church at that time, was untiring in his efforts to complete it—a task not easily accomplished, since the membership of the church had become very small. He served St. Peter's Church at Tunkhannock at the same time, and preached at Springville until 1885. Since that time there have been only occasional lay services, the parish having but twenty members and no regular vestry. Of the early ministers of the church, the Rev. Samuel Marks preached alternately at Montrose and Springville, and some time after 1830, removed to Carbondale. He was succeeded, at Springville, by the Rev. Willis Peck, who was pastor two years. In December, 1835, the Rev. Freeman Lane succeeded him, officiating in Springville and Pike, in Bradford County. In 1836 he taught a select school in the village, and during his rectorship a parsonage was built, in which he later taught a select school. This building is still church property, but for many years has not been used as a rectory. In 1842 he resigned, and the Rev. Richard Smith took charge of the interests of the parish, giving Springville two-thirds of his time and Montrose the remaining third. In 1846 the Rev. John Long came to the church for one-third of his time, giving Montrose and New Milford each the other two-thirds. He also organized the parish at Tunkhannock, with which the Springville Church was afterwards served. In September, 1848, the Rev. H. H. Bean became the rector, preaching with great acceptance the two years he remained with the parish. Then came as rectors the Rev. G. M. Skinner, about two years; the Rev. J. G. Furey, about seven years; the Rev. W. S. Heaton, about five years; the Rev. W. Kennedy until 1872; the Rev. Luther Wolcott until after the burning of the church, in 1879; the Rev. Horatio Howard a short time; and the Rev. George D. Stroud being the last minister in charge of the parish. The Rev. Luther Walcott still retains his residence near the church, but not in a ministerial capacity. While rector he served the parish six years, holding two services each Sabbath. The affairs of the church are not as prosperous as they have been, but there are prospects that its work will be revived so that it will again become a power in the community.

The cemetery at Springville village is located on the old Arad Wakelee farm, and is cared for by the community. It is in fair condition. The oldest cemetery in the township is on the right-hand side of the turnpike, opposite the Presbyterian Church, and was located on land donated by Jeremiah Spencer. Prior to 1804 there were already interred there Reuben Spencer, Ebenezer Carrier, Ashley Spencer and John Tuttle, son of Ezra, who died September 20, 1804. The death and interment of others occurred as follows: before 1810, Clarinda, first wife of Zophar Blakeslee. From 1810–20, Alfred and Thomas Brownson, John Taylor, the first Mrs. Elijah Avery, James Rosencrants, Mrs. Timothy Mix, Mr. and Mrs. Jonathan Strickland, Sr., and Ebenezer Fish. Joel Hickcox came in 1814 and died 1817. His widow survived him nearly thirty years, and saw a descendant of the fifth generation. From 1820–30, Gideon Lyman, Sr., J. Bullock's wife, Captain J. Spencer, Ezra Tuttle, Samuel Thomas, Sr., and wife, and Aaron Taylor, aged seventy-five years. From 1830–40, Rhoda Fish, Keziah Lyman, Daniel Spencer and Zophar Blakeslee.

The interments in subsequent years were proportionately more numerous, and several hundred persons have been there inhumed. On Strickland Hill a school-house, built by subscription in 1856, having been abandoned by the directors, has been fitted up as a place for public worship and funeral occasions when interments are made in the cemetery near by. Jacob, a son of John Strickland, was the first person interred here, some time in 1859. A number of fine monuments mark the places of the dead, and the cemetery appears to be well kept. It has a fine location.

CHAPTER XXV.

AUBURN TOWNSHIP.

THIS township occupies the southwestern corner of the county, and, prior to 1811, was known by the name of Braintrim. When Susquehanna County was formed its southern line bisected old Braintrim township, and the lower part retained the old name, while the upper part received the name of Auburn. This title had already been applied to a part of this territory in the Connecticut surveys, Braintrim being the Pennsylvania name. Auburn has retained its original dimensions, it being about eight miles from the Bradford County line on the west to Dimock and Springville on the east, and six miles from the Wyoming County line on the south to Rush township on the north. Its area is thus forty-eight square miles.

The Susquehanna River comes at one point within two and a half miles of the southern border of Auburn. The surface of the township, consequently, is broken by a series of hills, trending north and south, many of them elevated, but nearly all susceptible of cultivation. Some of them bear local names which distinguish them from other localities in the township, the principal ones being Taylor, Jersey, Craig, Frink and Shannon Hills. A few of them are covered with huge boulders, which give the country a somewhat rough appearance where these outcroppings are found. Others contain strata of excellent flag-stones, varying from half an inch to several inches in thickness. In a quarry in the eastern part of the township the layers have a horizontal position, showing that the deposit was not subject to any upheaval after having been formed in quiet waters. Marine shells and vegetable remains are sometimes found imbedded between these layers. In the central part of the township are slight surface indications of coal and other minerals, and in the summer of 1886 a shaft was sunk to the depth of two hundred feet, on the farm of John W. Lott, in quest of this wealth, without obtaining satisfactory results. Near West Auburn were found surface indications of oil, which were prospected, as is elsewhere related, and a temporary interest in petroleum sprang up, which subsided in the absence of encouraging returns.

All the streams of the township drain south or southwest. The principal one, having the latter course, is Tuscarora Creek, in the northwestern part of the township. One of its branches is the outlet of Kinney's Pond, the only body of water in the township having the appearance of a lake. Its head is in Rush, and the pond is nearly a mile long and has an average width of more than a quarter of a mile. The creek, having a constant flow, affords more water-power than any other stream in the township, and has been utilized to better advantage. South of the western border is Pochuck Creek, and farther south is an affluent of that stream. Flowing south, a little west of the centre, and rising in the northern part of the township, is the Little Meshoppen Creek; and east, beyond Jersey and Shannon Hills, is Riley Creek, with its tributary brooks, draining a larger section than any other stream in the township. In the southeastern part of the township is White Creek, a small stream draining the section between Craig Hill and the Springville line.

Along Riley Creek have been found several mineral springs of reputed medicinal virtues. One, discovered in 1871, attracted much attention on account of its supposed curative properties, and which appear to have been known by the early settlers:

> "All trace of the spring for the last twenty years was lost, until very recently. It has just been cleared and a barrel sunk in it, so that the water can be easily obtained. Many people are visiting the spring, and bringing away jugs and bottles of water to test its reported wonderful curative effects."

In later years the spring fell into disuse, though undoubtedly possessing efficacious waters, which would be better appreciated at a more accessible point.

Most of the soil of Auburn is a clayey loam, which yields generous returns when carefully tilled; and the township, taken as a body, is the richest agricultural section in the county. It is, also, pre-eminently a section of small or medium-sized farms, which are cultivated mainly by those owning them, hence prove more profitable than under a system of tenantry. The virgin soil was especially fertile, and adapted to growing winter wheat, and in some sections fields of more than fifty acres were cultivated; and in a large field at Cartertown, the grain grew so tall that the head of a man walking in it could hardly be seen. In the same section "John Tewksbury raised a stalk of buckwheat, in 1869, which measured six feet and three-fourths of an inch in length; he also had several specimens of oats grown on his farm which had heads two and a half feet long." In more recent years, greater attention has been paid to stock raising and the dairy business, and several public creameries are maintained with benefit to the people of the township. Most of the marketable products of the township are readily shipped from stations on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, within half a dozen miles from the lower part of Auburn, and the roads, though not as good as in some parts of the county, are being steadily improved.

In a primitive condition, heavy forests covered the surface of Auburn, making the work of clearing farms laborious, especially on the lowlands, where the ground was rich, and not so quick to respond to tillage as on the hills, where the soil was warmer, and the timber growth lighter. Hence, some of the first farms were located and opened on the hills, and, in consequence, the roads were also opened over them, instead of around them, or along their sides, as a view of the country would now suggest. The courses of some of the early roads have been much modified, and owing to the many changes which have taken place, a description of their original location would be of little benefit, except to show that the change had been made, and that in the later locations some of the hills have been actually avoided by following Nature's course along the streams.

The Pioneer Settlers of Auburn purchased their lands under the Connecticut title, and many paid their money in good faith to the agents of the Connecticut claims. After the final legal decision, made in favor of the Pennsylvania title, some who had paid their money and toiled hard to secure a home, gave up in despair and left the country.[1] Most of those who remained had but limited means, and were heavily in debt to Cope and Drinker (who became the principal land-holders in Auburn) for the lands they had to buy again or for the improvements they made. The township, consequently, did not settle up very rapidly, nor did the early improvements keep apace with those in other sections of the county. For nearly half a century after the first settler came some tracts of land were still in the hands of the original land-holders.

"The present wealth of Auburn is largely due to men who, though they came to the township within the last thirty-five years, might well be termed pioneers, since they cleared the farms they occupy, and reared log cabins too remote from others for neighborly comfort. Some of the late settlers are from New Jersey; but a larger number are of foreign birth. The names of Logan and Rooney are mentioned among the first Irish settlers here, in 1838. There are five hundred taxables in Auburn, about two hundred of whom are Irish. From being one of the poorest townships in the county, and one of the least in inhabitants, Auburn has become one of the richest and most populous."[2]

Lyman Kinney, from Litchfield, Conn., made the first clearing in 1797, in the northwestern part of the township, on a farm which was afterwards owned by Hamlet Hill. His land was a part of the three hundred acre tract which his father, Daniel Kinney, had bought under a Connecticut title. The Pennsylvania title for the same lands was held by Henry Drinker, of Philadelphia, who transferred it to Thomas P. Cope, also of that city. After the validity of the latter title was established, Lyman Kinney sold out his improvements to Thomas and Ambrose Morley, and left the county prior to 1814. Ambrose Morley was the oldest son of Thomas, who was not a taxable in 1816. Other sons were John, Thomas and Eben P.

In the eastern part of the township Lloyd Goodsell made the first clearing, in 1799. He lived on a farm which became the property of Curtis T. Russell in 1818, and where Frederick T. Russell now lives. Goodsell was married to a daughter of Isaac Brownson, of Rush, and afterwards moved to that township. Of the improvements he made, a few apple-trees remain in an orchard of trees he planted, after carrying them all the way on his back from the mouth of the Wyalusing. A frame barn he built also remains on the Russell place.

[1] Miss Blackman.

[2] Miss Blackman, in 1872.

Eleazer Russell settled in the same neighborhood, and both he and Curtis T. were permanent settlers. They were natives of Connecticut.

On the farm north, Myron Kasson began a clearing, perhaps a few months later, in 1799, than Goodsell, and both left for Litchfield, Conn., in the fall of that year. The following season they returned, and Kasson had his home with Goodsell. In 1802 he exchanged property with Chester Adams, the latter having bought a tract of land in Springville, to which he had never brought his family; and the following year Kasson may have taken up his abode in that township, on that tract of land.

Early in 1800 Ezekiel Avery and Benajah Frink, a single man, came from Connecticut, and were the first to spend a part of the winter in Eastern Auburn. The next spring the wife of Avery brought in the family. "On the journey one of the horses was lost, and they had to diminish their means of support by the purchase of another." Avery built a frame house near the forks of the road, northwest of Auburn Four Corners, which still stands, though unoccupied. He had two sons—David and George—and a daughter who married Jonathan Vaughn. The family adhered to the Baptist Church, and the oldest son, David, and the daughter used to go to the "Middle School-house," a mile below the south line of Montrose, twelve miles from their home, to hear Elder Dimock preach. She rode on horseback and he walked beside her. Later, meetings were held at Ezekiel Lathrop's, in Dimock, a mile south of the lakes. The Lathrops, in that part of Dimock, and Cyril Peck, in Rush, were looked upon as neighbors. The surviving members of the Avery family moved to the West.

Benajah Frink began his clearing on the hill near Auburn Four Corners, and, it is said, built the first frame house in the township, which stood on the site of the residence afterwards built by Jacob Titman. The clap-boards were made of pine logs, split and shaved by hand into boards. He is also credited with having built the first cider-mill. In February, 1805, he married the youngest daughter of Isaac Hancock, of Rush, and it is said that their son Orrin was the first male child born in Auburn. Other sons were Tracy, Isaac and William. Benajah Frink died in August, 1851, but his widow survived him a number of years, having spent sixty-one years of her life in Auburn. In the latter part of 1800 William Frink, the father of Benajah, began clearing up a farm on the hill between his son and Ezekiel Avery, and afterwards brought on his family, his son William being at that time a lad. He died in 1829 and was buried in the Frink graveyard, on the hill which bears the same name. But few of the descendants remain in Auburn.

Eldad Bronson, and his son Amos came to the township in 1801, but removed after 1814 and before 1816. They were also natives of Connecticut.

"According to the recollection of Mr. Paul Overfield, of Braintrim, Solomon Kinney came, in 1800, to the farm now occupied by J. Benscoter, two and a-half miles northwest of Auburn Centre. He was the first in that vicinity. It is said that, after harvesting a fine crop of wheat, he lost the whole by fire communicated to it from a fallow which he was burning, and from that to his house. He saved a few effects, and with his wife left the country, never to return.[1]

In 1801 John Passmore, at that time a minor, came from Rhode Island, and took up lands near the Corners, under a Connecticut title, but did not locate permanently until 1806, when he returned and built the first house at what is now Auburn Four Corners. The following year he married Elizabeth Overfield, of Braintrim. They reared four sons, named Norman, John, Nicholas, and Joseph, and had also seven daughters. In 1816 he was commissioned the first justice of the peace for Auburn, Rush and Middletown. He sold his place to Treadway Kellogg, and died March 12, 1835, aged fifty-three years. In April, 1841, David Bushnell, who came from Bridgewater, became the owner of the Passmore farm, and resided on it until his death, April 5, 1872, aged eighty-six years. Tirzah Bushnell, his wife, survived him, and in December, 1886, was in her ninety-second year. Joseph Passmore also came to Auburn before 1815.

[1] Miss Blackman.

In 1805 the first settlers came to South Auburn, Thomas Wheeler locating on the Dunlop farm, south of the hamlet, and Hiram Carter settling on the farm just below the main part of the hamlet. Both came in June, that year, from Black Walnut, in Wyoming County. The latter made some substantial improvements and lived on his place until his death. He had sons named John, Jonas, Theron B., Samuel, David, Daniel and Harry. The three last-named were pioneers in the locality called Cartertown or Retta, and their descendants still live in that locality.

Soon after the settlement of Wheeler and Carter, William Cooley, a son-in-law of Joshua Keeney, a pioneer at Black Walnut, came and settled on the Little Meshoppen, near where Carlin's mills were afterwards built. Some of his brothers—Robert, Stephen and Daniel—came to the township at a later day. The Carlin improvements were made by Joseph Carlin, who bought his land from the Cooley tract. In 1819 Edward Dawson, an Englishman, located near the hamlet, living on the farm where now resides G. F. Dawson. Francis Pepper came later from Rush, and cleared up a farm nearer the creek.

About 1805, or possibly a little later, Chester Adams, a native of Connecticut, came from Wyoming County, to occupy the place he had received from Myron Kasson in exchange for land he had purchased in Springville. In 1829 he had a farm-house built on this farm, on which Asa Packer worked as a journeyman carpenter. This building is still standing, and is now the property of E. L. Adams. The children of Chester Adams were five daughters and four sons, viz.: Cyrus, who moved to Iowa; Chester, Jr., who lived and died at Pittston; Thomas, who died at Binghamton; and Elijah, born in 1824, living on part of the homestead.

In 1807 John Riley located on the creek which bears his name, southwest of the Corners, and that year a road was laid out from his place to Cooley's farm, on the Little Meshoppen. The following year it was extended to Elk Lake. Riley was a native of Connecticut, and came from that State on foot. The last years of his life were spent on part of the land he cleared up, the farm of John M. Bushnell, who was married to one of the daughters. A son, Minot Riley, is a well-known citizen of Springville.

John Riley died March 10, 1880, aged ninety-two years.

"Eli Billings settled about 1805, on the Tuscarora Creek, at what is called New Laceyville. He had a son Eli, who made the first clearing where Elisha Cogswell now lives, and who died in 1815. Eli Billings, Sr., in 1839, sold to David Lacey. When he came to the place there was a man named Sesson on the farm now owned by Rev. Bela Cogswell (over the line in Bradford County) and one George Gamble where Oliver Warner now lives; and these were the only families between him and Abiel Keeney's saw-mill on the Tuscarora, two miles above Skinner's Eddy. The site of this saw-mill, some time between 1790 and 1800, was occupied by a saw and grist-mill, built by Elihu Hall. Nathaniel, second son of Eli Billings, made the first clearing and put up a log house on what is known as 'the James farm.' Hosea, the third son, had two sons, Eli and Nathaniel. Joseph and Henry Billings were sons of Eli, Sr. Most of the family moved to the West, and none are now in Auburn."

When Eli Billings settled at what is now West Auburn there were no roads in that section whatever. Black's mill, on the Wyalusing, was the nearest place where grinding could be done, and a path was the only way which led to the mill, the traveler being guided by marked trees. Said Hosea Billings: "Well do I remember, when a lad, my father sent me to mill, and as it was late when I got my grist and started for home, night overtook me on my way. When about one mile from home my horse stopped, and then I saw before me what looked like balls of fire—probably the eyes of a wolf. It would not give the path, so I had to turn out and go around through the woods. I lost my hat getting through the brush and went home bareheaded."

The clearing made by Nathaniel Billings became the property of Thomas W. James after 1816. He was a native of New Jersey, and had immigrated to this country with his wife, Hannah Smith, a few years earlier. He was a man of positive convictions and exerted a strong local influence. He donated the land for the first school-house in that locality, and at his house the early Methodist meetings were often held. When he first lived here he sometimes walked to Wilkes-Barre to mail and get his letters, again returning on foot the next day. In the privations and hardships of their pioneer life Mrs. James was a worthy helpmate. They reared ten children, among them being David M., who became a physician at Laceyville, in Wyoming County; Thomas Smith, who moved to East Rush, where he reared a large family; Abijah Smith, of Huron, Dak., who was a teacher for more than thirty years, and is the father of B. E. James, of Auburn Four Corners; and Thomas C., another son, who lives on the homestead. The elder James died in the fall of 1860, aged seventy-one years.

Before 1813 Abraham Lott settled on the road below the Centre, near where some of his descendants still live; and in the same locality lived Philip Haverly and his son George, all of whom remained in the township for a period of years. Near the same time John Oakley, Comfort Penney and John Ross came to Auburn, but remained only a few years.

In 1814, James Hines appears to have had the farm of John Ross, and Daniel Sterling that of Comfort Penny, who had removed. Robert Dunlap, Simeon Green, Larry Dunmore, Jesse and Josiah Wakefield were among the new-comers, as also, in 1815, were Elias and Amos Bennett, Lawrence Meacham, Palmer Guile and James B. Turrell. The last-named bought of Lloyd Goodsell. The assessment roll of 1816 contained the names of the following taxables in Auburn:

Chester Adams.	Palmer Guiles.
Ezekiel Avery.	Simeon Green.
David Avery.	George Haverly.
George Avery.	Philip Haverly.
Eli Billings.	James Hines.
Elias Bennett.	Abram Lott.
Amos Bennett.	Ambrose Morley.
Nancy Billings.	John Passmore.
Hiram Carter.	Joseph Passmore.
Stephen Cooly.	John Riley.
William Cooly.	Daniel Sterling.
Daniel Cooly.	James B. Turrell.
Larry Dunmore.	Josiah Wakefield.
Robert Dunlap.	Thomas Wheeler.
Benajah Frink.

Later, in 1816, Philonius Beardsley came from Litchfield County, Conn., and bought a tract of land of John Passmore, south of the Corners. The following year he brought in his family and resided here until his death, in 1833. The homestead is still owned by one of his sons, John B. Beardsley. A. Beardsley, the eldest son, remained in Auburn until 1827, when he moved to Springville village, where he still resides, at an advanced age. Charles, the second son, removed to Montrose, and later to New York City, where he established an extensive carriage manufactory. A daughter married Andrew Bolles, of Lathrop.

In the latter part of 1816, or the early part of 1817, came Charles Ashley, Julius Coggswell, Thomas W. James, Hiram Whipple, Solomon Dimock and Jabez Sumner; and within the next few years Curtis T. Russell, Edward Dawson, John Love and Waltrin Love.

"In 1820 there were thirty voters in the township. During the next five years Francis Pepper (from Rush), David Taylor, Daniel Gregory, George and Simeon Evans, Samuel Tewksbury and Milton Harris had arrived. The last-named and S. Evans had saw-mills. In 1826, and for five or six years following, Jonathan Kellogg, a cabinet-maker, Joseph Carlin (where he and his sons now live), Robert Manning, Thomas Risley, Caldwell McMicken, Richard Stone, William Sherwood, Elisha Coggswell, Jacob Low, Alden H. Seeley and Oliver C. Roberts, besides the sons of several early settlers and many temporary residents, appear among the taxables. William Overfield made the first clearing on Shannon Hill, in 1831." He was twice married, and reared a large family, some of whom still own the improvements he made. In the same locality Benjamin C. Crawford began clearing a farm in April, 1832, and it is claimed that he had the first cabin in this part of Auburn. His nearest neighbors were George Mowry on the south and Abraham Lott on the north. The first night he slept on his land his bed was made of hemlock boughs, and his slumbers were very much disturbed by the hooting of owls and the yelping of wolves. The latter ventured so near him that his life was endangered. He prepared the logs for his cabin in one day, and with the assistance of a few neighbors, rolled up the walls of his pioneer home. The following day, with the help of a neighbor, he made the shingles for the roof, and boards becoming scarce, he took the boards belonging to his sled to make a door. Benjamin C. Crawford died on his homestead, March 18, 1885, in the ninety-second year of his age. For nearly seventy-six years of his life he was a professed Christian, and helped to advance the religious interests of the township by his consistent life and praiseworthy conduct.

A dozen years later, Lawrence Meacham settled in the southeastern part of Auburn, coming from New Hampshire. His daughter informed Mrs Blackman that "The first night he stayed on his place was in January, and the snow was two or three feet deep. He slept on hemlock boughs beside a fire, which kept himself and a colored man from freezing. In the morning they began chopping, but the timber was so frozen that it broke their axes. They left, and father did not return till the next spring. In two or three years he moved his family to the little clearing remote from the roads and neighbors, and into a log cabin with a blanket for the door. Thick woods, howling wolves, deer, wildcats and wild turkeys were at that time in abundance. I have heard my mother say, 'I was so lonesome I was glad to see even a hunter's dog come along.'

"My father had often to be out late at night, when on his journeys for provisions, and mother was alone in the cabin with only a little boy; while from an hour before sunset until sunrise the next morning the wolves kept up a constant howling up and down the creek, which passes within half a mile of the door, and many a time was this so distinct as to seem within the clearing. Twice father had his little flock of sheep killed by them."

Julius Coggswell settled in the eastern part of the township, where he lived until his death, when his family removed. South of him lived Cyrus Avery, who was one of the early justices of the peace, and near by Dyer Bennett improved a farm, living on it until his death.

In 1833 Gershom Bunnell settled on a tract of land which had been contracted for by Wm. Kellogg, and upon which some slight improvements had been made. Here he lived until his death, in 1855. His only son was Jonathan Bunnell, still living on the homestead.

"Elisha Coggswell first settled on Tuscarora Creek, two and a half miles below New Lacey ville, in 1815, was married in 1816, remained there until the spring of 1833, when he removed to Auburn, where he and his wife still reside.

"He caught in one season seven bears and five wolves. Another time, while on a hill near by, two cubs were discovered; one was shot. With the first cry of pain the dam sprang from some bushes to its side. Hastily smelling the wound and divining the cause, she rushed with headlong fury on the aggressor, who, meanwhile, was hastily reloading his gun, and when she had nearly reached him, a bullet stopped her. Mr. C. completed his eightieth year April 18, 1872. He has been class-leader in the Methodist Episcopal Church nearly half a century, and still walks to church nearly, a mile, almost always attending evening meetings."

In South Auburn Samuel Tewksbury settled before 1830, and made good improvements on the farm, where he still lives, in his eighty-fifth year. Below him lived Daniel Gregory, who was killed many years ago by the kick of a horse on his temple. Nathan Osborn improved the last farm in the county, on that road. Nathan Green has been a resident of this part of the township since 1832, improving the farm on which he lives, and William Green cleared up the one next west. Ansel Gay began clearing up the farm where his son William now lives, about 1830, all the tract being dense woods; and Caldwell Mickens began work on what afterwards became one of the finest farms in the township, in 1831.

The locality called Jersey Hill, north of the Centre, was but slightly improved prior to 1835, when a number of energetic farmers came from Warren County, N. J., and settled in the neighborhood of the Protestant Church. Among these were Thomas R. White, the father of William, George, Joseph and Abraham White; Andrew S. Low, the father of I. R. and Cornelius Low; Joseph Pierson, the father of Benjamin and Charles Pierson. The Rev. Joshua Harris came somewhat later. Prosperity has rewarded the industry of these people, some of whom still reside in this part of the township, upon very superior farms.

TEWKSBURYS.—During one of those terrible convulsions of religious persecution and fervor which swept over the British Isles from John O'Groat's to the Land's End at frequent intervals during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, one John Tewksbury gave up his life for religion's sake and was burned at the stake in the market-place of his native town, Tewksbury, England. His ancestors had given their name to that town and his descendants were among the earlier settlers in New England.[1]

